
Chief Justice Warren: "The occasion for a great national debate."

Florida Justice Caldwell: Supreme Court "swallowing up" liberty.

But this nation's founding fathers tried the Confederation and abandoned it as unworkable. They recognized that even for a United States limited to thirteen states on the Atlantic seaboard, such a structure was completely impossible. Each state considered itself an independent sovereignty and decisions of Congress became little more than recommendations. In 1789, the adoption of the present Constitution did away with the state sovereignty provision and replaced it with Article VI, which contains a supremacy clause providing that every state be bound by the Constitution and that the laws of the federal government be the supreme law of the land.

The second proposal, to establish a "Court of the Union," would make the kind of deliberation and conference which is the essence of the judgment of the U.S. Supreme Court virtually impossible. It would transfer judicial power from a court whose members are responsible to the entire nation, are appointed for life and therefore immune from any kind of immediate political pressure, to an unwieldy fifty-man court whose members are responsible to individual states, who serve for limited periods and are answerable, in terms of re-election or reappointment, to state officials or the electorate of their own state. Furthermore, their service on the "Court of the Union" would have to be a sideline to their regular jobs as state chief justices.

The third amendment, to remove constitutional restrictions on state apportionment, would not only diminish constitutional guarantees under the "equal protection clause" of the Fourteenth Amendment, but would provide sanction for states to use "apportionment" as a guise for rank racial discrimination—in contravention of the spirit and purpose of the Fifteenth Amendment.

Adoption of this proposal would entrench existing abuses more deeply. Under-representation of urban and suburban areas and over-representation of rural areas would continue uncorrected, and without any means for correction. In addition, approval of the amendment would constitute the first diminution in American history of any constitutional guarantee of liberty, justice and equality.

ALL three proposed amendments are radical in the extreme, an out-and-out assault on the Constitution and democratic progress. The conservative forces backing them are using a device never before invoked—that of petitioning Congress to call a constitutional convention on the amendments. For this they need the approval of two-thirds (34) of the state legislatures. For a while they seemed well on their way to success until the campaign began attracting national attention—and opposition.

Last Spring, Chief Justice Earl Warren commented in a speech on the public's unawareness of the amendments. "Any serious effort to amend the Constitution of the United States," he said, "should provide the occasion for a great national debate." Since then, newspapers and other communications media began to note their swift progress in a few short months; various groups have taken a serious and critical interest; President Kennedy, at a press conference, spoke critically of the proposals; the American Bar Association has gone on record against the amendments. The most vociferous spokesman of those advocating the amendments has been Florida Supreme Court Justice Millard Caldwell, president of the Council of State Governments. The U.S. Supreme Court, he cries, is "swallowing up" the liberties of the people.

Fortunately, public awareness has not come too late. The amendments still face important tests in additional state legislatures—and the campaign to get them passed is no longer unreported and unnoticed.

Die-hards may see the amendments as their only salvation, but their scheme to turn history back almost two hundred years is doomed to failure—if state legislatures which have not yet tackled the proposals give them the short shrift they deserve.

the ADL bulletin

515 Madison Ave., New York 22

Vol. 21, No. 1 • September, 1963

Published monthly except July and August by Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y. Officers: Dore Schary, chairman; Henry E. Schultz, Meier Steinbrink, honorary chairmen; Leonard Abess, Barney Balaban, Harry Brandt, Samuel Daroff, Jacob K. Javits, Philip M. Klutznick, Herbert H. Lehman, Leon Lowenstein, William Sachs, Melvin H. Schlesinger, Mendel Silberberg, Jesse Steinhart, honorary vice-chairmen; William P. Bloom, David Coleman, Maurice M. Dannenbaum, David H. Litter, Max J. Schneider, Louis Zara, life members; Edward Goldberger, Moe Kudler, Alan R. Morse, Norman Newhouse, Burnett Roth, Mrs. Charles D. Solovich, vice-chairmen; Benjamin Greenberg, treasurer; Herbert Levy, secretary; Benjamin R. Epstein, national director; Paul H. Sampliner, chairman, executive committee; David A. Rose vice-chairman, executive committee; Label A. Katz, president, Maurice Bisgyer, executive vice-president, B'nai B'rith: Mrs. Leonard M. Sims, president, B'nai B'rith Women.

Editorial Board: N. C. Belth, chairman; Oscar Cohen, Benjamin R. Epstein, Arnold Forster, Alexander F. Miller, J. Harold Saks, Lester J. Waldman.

Subscription Rates: $1.50 for two years, Subscribers must report change of address giving old and new address and account designation. Second class postage paid at Post Office, New York, N. Y. Printed in U.S.A.

Editor: MORTON PUNER Managing Editor: JACOB SLOAN Art Director: EDWARD GOLDMAN Circulation: SARI GRILL

"A TEDIOUS, FRUSTRATING JOB . . . WITH THRILLING REWARDS"

Nineteen New York public schools prove problems of integration can be solved--when everyone cooperates.

By Lynne Ianniello

In one school there were only white students until Negro children were brought in as part of a Board of Education "open enrollment" plan. In another, though the community was white and middle class, the students were mostly Negroes and Puerto Ricans from underprivileged areas. In a third, English was a foreign language to a large proportion of students and most of their parents. For New York City school authorities, situations like these represent problems, and for communities sometimes an increase in tensions.

With neighborhoods and the neighborhood school concept undergoing rapid change, the New York City public schools face the challenge of meeting such situations honestly if they are to be dealt with effectively. Some of the problems and their solutions were revealed at the end of the school year in June when Superintendent of Schools Calvin Gross presented B'nai B'rith Human Relations Awards to nineteen schools for the best projects on improving intergroup relations. The city-wide Board of Education—Metropolitan Council of B'nai B'rith program was planned, organized and supervised by the Anti-Defamation League.

Probably the most unique project—described by the school's administration as "a slow, tedious, frustrating job with unimaginably thrilling rewards"—took place at P. S. 69, a small elementary school in the heart of Manhattan. The Negro children, transferred to P. S. 69, arrived by bus—complaints, hostility, and rumblings of resentment arrived by telephone, letter, and personal visits.

The white parents had their grievances. The school had a registration of only 248 children. The new arrivals from the outside would crowd sanitation and other facilities. Improvements promised by the Board of Education had not even been started when the school semester began. A small, almost intimate school suddenly was crowded with "strangers."

The Negro parents, also hostile, had other concerns: their children were being transported through the maze of Manhattan traffic with no adult supervision other than the harassed bus drivers; they were returning home with tales of real or imagined insults at the hands of their white schoolmates.

The lunch period—during which the children were formerly free to leave the building—was now chaos. There were too many children and too few "Safety Patrol" monitors—many had resigned. The school issued an order that no child could go home for lunch or eat in nearby restaurants without a note from his parents relieving the school of responsibility for his safety. The order brought almost totally segregated lunchrooms! Even neighborhood children who had always eaten in school now had their parent's permission to eat in nearby coffee shops.

The school administration decided to intervene directly. It began a "Noon Canteen," to ease friction and to make the lunch period more interesting and exciting. First to answer the calls for help were the businessmen in the area. One neighbor, Columbia Pictures, lent the school Mister McGoo films; another, the A & P, presented the school with supermarket carts, which became bookmobiles. The Board of Education installed electric outlets in the school yard so that hi-fi and microphone equipment could be utilized for shows. Children were enlisted to serve the two lunch shifts as hosts, hostesses, and "canteen aids" to set up and operate the equipment after a training period and test.

Next came auditions for the "Noon Canteen Theatre." There were skits, musical numbers, magic, jugglers—and suddenly, neighborhood children! They were running back after their away-from-school lunches; they were asking to eat lunch in school so that they too could operate the equipment or participate in the shows.

Children who had never looked at each other before became friends, teaching the Limbo dance, or magic tricks, or puppetry, or the art of juggling. There was a new atmosphere, a new sense of pride, a friendly enthusiasm that infected the parents, too.

Negro and white parents now assisted in the canteen. Neighborhood parents helped organize volunteer bus supervisors. Two Negro parents visited the school to tell what the experiment had meant to them. One said, "We never trusted you until now, but we see that you really mean to accept us and our children." The other, the father of a boy who had been a problem at the beginning of the year, said, "My boy has done more learning in this school than he ever did before." And the school knew its problems were really over when a neighborhood parent who had called the school "a jungle of bedlam" at the beginning of the year,

Continued on page 6

ANTI-SEMITISM WITHOUT JEWS

In its struggle for power, a Polish Communist faction exploits "Jewish bourgeois tendencies" in a country nearly devoid of Jews.

By Herman Singer

THE announcement on July 3 that Roman Zambrowski had resigned from the 11-man Politburo of the Polish Communist party due to ill health received little attention in the West. There had been earlier reports that Zambrowski was suffering from cancer. It was logical to conclude that he was no longer capable of performing his duties on the powerful body that is the real ruler of this Soviet-dominated country.

However, there is cause to be skeptical of the official Warsaw agency version. In recent years, Zambrowski had been the target of the "Partisan" faction within the Communist party. (It is so named because its leaders were partisans under the command of the Red Army during the German occupation of Poland.) The "Partisan" group advocates a "hard" line of neo-Stalinism; it is opposed to any relaxation of the Communist party's control of the country. Zambrowski, though no liberal, takes a more moderate position. But the differences between the "Partisans" and the group Zambrowski heads in the Communist party are not very great. Basically, he was the target of the "Partisans" because of his Jewish origin, rather than for ideological reasons. A member of the Politburo since the war, he was the only Jewish Communist left on that body.

To the "Partisans," Jewish Communists are automatically suspected of harboring "bourgeois tendencies." That is to say, the very fact that they were born Jews means they cannot be loyal to Moscow. They must have "international" commitments, inevitably be friendly to the capitalistic West. This in spite of the actual alienation of men like Zambrowski from their Jewish coreligionists.

HOWEVER, the deposition of Zambrowski does not necessarily portend a return to the dogmatic atmosphere of the era before the uprising of 1956, when Stalin's influence was uppermost in Poland. Nor does it mean that an anti-Semitic campaign is in the offing.

Herman Singer is associate editor of East Europe, a monthly published by the Free Europe Committee.

Gomulka

Zambrowski

Nowak

In the first place there are simply not enough Jews left in Poland for anti-Semitic slogans to be effective on a large scale, even within the confines of the Communist party. There are only 35,000 Jews throughout Poland, with one-third concentrated in Warsaw. (Before the war, there were some two million.)

Then again, the "Partisan" group is opposed by what, in Communist terms, might be considered a "liberal" wing. It has been the policy of Wladyslaw Gomulka, Communist party leader and real ruler of Poland, to play these two groups against one another. Most recently, his "neutrality" has favored the "Partisans" —the resignation of Zambrowski is obviously a victory for the "hard" line.

It is generally accepted that Gomulka does not share the anti-Semitic stand of the "Partisans," but he has done little to eliminate it as a tactic in the political in-fighting within Communist ranks. The "Partisans" had scored other successes, where they used anti-Semitism for political purposes, before they eliminated Zambrowski. Thus, before Christmas 1961, the Jewish journalist, Henry Holland, committed suicide, leaping out of the window of his apartment while it was being searched by the security police.

"Partisan" leaders hold dominant positions in the police apparatus. One of them, General Grzegorz Korczynski, chief of military intelligence, has a record of active anti-Semitism. Joseph Swiatlo, a Polish security officer who defected to the West in 1953, reported that Korczynski, an organizer of the Communist People's Guard in 1942, participated in the liquidation of two Jewish resistance units near Lublin during the war.

ANOTHER Communist party leader with a record of anti-Semitism is deputy premier Zenon Nowak. His tie with the "Partisans" is a continuation of his activities with the pro-Soviet Natolin group in 1956. In October of that year, when the Poles rioted against tight Communist control under Soviet domination, Nowak was one of those to call for total cooperation with Moscow in putting down the agitation. He argued that it was the Jews who were for loosening the ties with the Soviet Union—and that was reason enough to reject it! In 1956, Gomulka disregarded the advice of the Natolin Stalinist faction; in 1963, he seems inclined to let it have its head.

Still another striking victory for the "Partisans" was the Communist party decision to close down the Crooked Circle club. Named after the street where its headquarters was situated, this was the sole open forum where Polish intellectuals could still speak freely about the world they lived in. It was the last remnant of the limited freedom of speech achieved by the Polish uprising of 1956. Like anti-Semitism a usable political club in the hands of a Politburo, the Crooked Circle Club led a precarious existence. Finally, in January 1962, its protectors lost ground, and the Crooked Club was dissolved.

The dissolution of the Crooked Club incidentally led to the shedding of light on the political uses of anti-Semitism in Poland. One of the former Club's leaders, Witold Jadlicki, a Jew, migrated to Israel. There he wrote an article for a Polish emigre monthly, Kultura, which created something of a sensation in Poland. Jadlicki argued that the October 1956 revolt had not been a nationalistic uprising against Soviet domination, but primarily a struggle between leading Communists. And—Jadlicki added—the Natolin faction, the predecessors of the "Partisans," had used anti-Semitism boldly and openly in their conflict with the "softer," more nationalistic Communists like Gomulka.

OFFICIALLY, anti-Semitism is outlawed in Poland. On April 19, the government sponsored a memorial meeting at the monument to the heroes of the 1943 Warsaw Ghetto uprising. Premier Jozef Cyrankiewicz attended. At an earlier ceremony Politburo member Edvard Ochab presented decorations to Polish Christians who had aided Jews during the German occupation. Jews from some twenty countries were present at the commemoration. However, there were none from the Soviet Union, which was represented only by a journalist on assignment. Among those denied visas were two leaders of the Israel-Poland Friendship League, as well as a number of individual Polish Jews now resident in Israel. The limitation on foreign visitors was ascribed to the influence of the "Partisans." They were said to have gotten Moscow's consent to minimize the significance of the gathering—there was no desire to create too much sympathy for Jews.

Jews have almost disappeared as a community in Poland. Their influence in the Communist party and in government is negligible. They survive as a force only in the minds of those who remember the halcyon days in Poland, when anti-Semitism was a handy tool for a political faction.

It takes time and hard work, but facts, common sense and the American spirit force discrimination to give ground. ADL contributed to the results announced this month in two problem areas.

Commercial Banks

PROBLEM: In November 1961, newspapers reported ADL's "strong, almost incontrovertible evidence of religious discrimination" in New York City's eight leading commercial banks. The evidence was the result of a comprehensive ADL study of the banks' employment and promotion practices.

Of a total roster of 844 top executives in the 8 commercial banks, the study revealed, only 30—3.5 per cent—were Jewish. Of these 30, 22 were concentrated in 2 banks, 7 in a third. A fourth bank had one Jewish executive.

The League pointed out the anomaly of no Jewish executives in half of the commercial banks in a city where 25 per cent of the population is Jewish.

ACTION: These findings were presented to a special subcommittee of the House of Representatives' Committee on Education and Labor. Later, they were passed on to New York State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz.

Last month, after a series of conferences with the banks, the Attorney General announced: New York City's seven leading commercial banks (reduced from eight by merger) have agreed to employ qualified executive trainees and promote persons to executive positions "wholly without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin."

Furthermore, the banks will spell out their policy of nondiscriminatory recruitment to their own officers, department heads and personnel department employees—as well as to employment agencies and placement officials on college campuses.

The ADL, mission accomplished, hailed the announcement, and looked forward to its "vigorous and effective implementation."

Radio Station

PROBLEM: In Houston, Texas, a local FM radio station has been carrying a program called EXPRESSIONS, as a kind of forum for dissidents in the community. Listeners are invited to phone the station directly and talk about the topic of the day, or to make any general comments they wish. A weak, or indifferent moderator opened the floodgates for a flow of attacks on the President, the administration in general, the Supreme Court, certain public officials, and "moneylenders, international bankers, Zionists, integrationists, and Jews."

Most offensive as special guests were hatemongers Kenneth Goff and Gordon Winrod, who used the airwaves to spew out their venom against Jews. The moderator accepted the most violent and defamatory statements with a "Thank you for your expression."

ACTION: The ADL arranged to meet with the owner of the radio station. After expressing its concern for the rights of both the individual and the station to freedom of speech, the ADL went on to point out that the station was providing license to individuals venting hatred and bigotry.

The management acknowledged that past attacks on various religious and racial groups as well as individuals were neither fair nor in good taste. It agreed to more careful screening of callers; that free speech was no excuse for incitement.

Direct confrontation by the ADL with responsible management in a cooperative atmosphere resulted in the removal of a focal point for dissemination of anti-Jewish prejudice in Houston.

EXCHANGE OF CORRESPONDENCE

Why freedom of opportunity? A citizen complains; a governor explains.

A month after he had issued an executive order directing state agencies to prevent discrimination in public facilities, Governor Matthew E. Welsh of Indiana received a letter of protest from a small businessman. The order, he said, was an infringement of his rights.

Governor Welsh replied, courteously but firmly explaining the need to ensure freedom of opportunity for all citizens.

Dear Gov. Welsh:

I do not belong to any group or movement that are out to discredit our government in any way. I would not consider myself a leftist or rightist.

I love this country and am writing to you because I am concerned at what you and Mr. Kennedy and others like you are doing to it, and to me personally.

Why do I feel as I do?

Because I see my rights as a citizen destroyed to please a minority group. The Negroes have all the privileges for success and respect as any white if they simply want to work for it.

My government and state says I no longer have a right to live in the type of neighborhood I choose (which happens to be white).

My government and state says I no longer can send my children to an all-white school—we must integrate.

The government says we must integrate all public places.

And now you want to go one step further and admit them in establishments offering services. Which also includes me, because I am sole owner of a beauty salon.

If this isn't taking my rights away as a citizen, then what is it?

I wholeheartedly disapprove of what my state and government are doing. And I aim to stand up and be counted either by vote or by force.

I am aware of politicians who sit back and preach integration from a well-segregated neighborhood. And send their children off to private schools, tutors, and etc.

Politicians who are out for integration, are merely out to get votes.

Business men who are out for integration are merely after that almighty buck.

But what about people like me?

Now you tell me that I can not stay in business if I show discrimination.

I realize that I may be sticking my neck out by writing to you this way but I'm counting on this being a partly free country with freedom of speech and press still intact.

Mr. Welsh, I am not a nigger hater, you are so well educated, what am I to do? I am merely concerned about my rights and my family's rights.

I remain,

FREDRIC MARTAKIS

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

19 July 1963

Dear Mr. Martakis:

...It is true that government, as well as business, has extended new opportunities and rights to Negro Americans at an accelerated pace in recent years. It seems clear, however, that the majority of our citizens feel that all Americans will benefit in the long run if Negroes are given the same basic freedoms as other Americans enjoy and hold precious. These include the right to employment according to one's qualifications and interests, the right to service at any place of business licensed to serve the public, and the right to attend the school that is closest to one's home, or that has the courses one needs, or where one can get essential training and experience in getting along harmoniously with the other racial and nationality groups of the community.

Gov. Welsh

As the Negro is granted these rights which other Americans have enjoyed for years, some white persons will be inconvenienced or displeased. But the continued denial of these rights does not merely inconvenience and displease certain individuals; the denial is a deep-cutting insult to a quarter million Negro residents of this state and nearly 20 million in the United States...

...My children have been taught in classrooms with Negro students. Our family lives only a few houses from fine Negro families. My doctor and my dentist treat both white and Negro patients. The public places I patronize have Negro customers as well. I fail to see how the treating of Negroes as persons and in accordance with their individual merits or demerits interferes with any legitimate rights of myself and my family. I do see how it can help solve a problem of poverty, ignorance and crime that is tremendously costly to us all. I see also how this new policy may make the "American way of life" a good deal more acceptable to the peoples of the world who are trying to decide between democracy and communism. I believe it brings us a step closer to the religious and political principle of respecting every individual, not just those of a certain ancestry or nationality.

I hope you will come to feel that the changes that are taking place, instead of limiting your rights, actually will make them more secure.

Sincerely,

MATTHEW E. WELSH
Governor

A TEDIOUS, FRUSTRATING JOB ...WITH THRILLING REWARDS

Continued from page 3

brought in pictures she had taken at her son's party—to which three Negro classmates had been invited. "Look," she said, pointing to a picture of laughing children toasting marshmallows, "they all had such a wonderful time."

OTHER SCHOOLS with other problems were equally successful. Yorkville Vocational High School wanted to place its Negro and Puerto Rican girls in situations where they would both work with and demonstrate their worth to members of different ethnic groups. They did it through the school's Junior Red Cross organization.

Some of the girls worked as volunteer aids in neighborhood playgrounds; commercial students did clerical work in hospitals, clinics and similar centers. Nursing students gave volunteer assistance in nine city hospitals, helping patients and nurses. Others set up a nonprofit neighborhood nursery school providing for 25 children of pre-school age.

IN MANY New York City schools language is a problem for both students and parents. At George Washington High School, in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan, a Foreign Student Organization was organized by volunteer "Big Brothers"—foreign students here long enough to have mastered English but who also spoke another language such as Spanish, Greek, Italian. Giving up lunch periods and staying after school, the "Big Brothers" acted as tutors—in some cases translating math problems into Spanish to help students not yet at ease with English. They served as interpreters between teachers and students. They aided foreign students with planning their high school program and obtaining credit for subjects taken abroad. They interested them in the Student Government Organization to hasten assimilation through clubs, teams, and social events.

Several schools translated typical report card terms into Spanish, so that parents who were newcomers to the country could understand teachers' comments.

For a Manhattan elementary school, a former student assembled a simultaneous translating device so Spanish-speaking mothers and fathers could understand what was being said at Parents Association meetings.

Each of the winning schools in the ADL project received a plaque, and books and audio-visual material of their choice. More significantly all concerned—schools, students and parents—learned through doing that good human relations can be a normal and natural way of life.

TOM PAINES and UNCLE TOMS

One of the most thoughtful comments on the current situation in race relations appeared as an editorial in the Christian Century, the leading undenominational Protestant periodical. We are pleased to present it to ADL Bulletin readers, as well worth reflection.

THE CURRENT racial revolution in the United States, like every other revolution, needs its Tom Paines—resolute, contentious, obsessed leaders whose fixed idea and single-minded purpose make them indifferent to precedent and propriety, impervious to threats to their person and independent of those dilemmas and paradoxes which in more prudent and deliberative men paralyze action. Nothing short of such a spirit and nothing less than such a focused determination can seriously challenge the deeply imbedded racial patterns in the United States, shake members of both races out of their lethargic moderateness and in this generation bring the Negro into the mainstream of American life. A tragic and shameful history in which the white man alternately promises and postpones equal status to the Negro now makes revolutionary leadership indispensable for the solution of the Negro's problems and the satisfying of his grievances. And, once more, there are Tom Paines, Negro and white, who are equal to "the times that try men's souls." Wholly committed to one goal—justice for the Negro—they break cherished images, defy immoral legalities, slash the red tape of genteel parliaments, alarm and embarrass their friends and sometimes in ways which to other men appear absurd demand for Negroes elemental human and civil rights. To say No to their goal or to deny to them the exercise of their method is to misread the nature of the revolution and to repudiate the future.

IT IS ALSO a historical fact that the Tom Paines who make revolutions possible are seldom able to make the benefits of their revolutions permanent. And the ironic fact is that the very talents which make them superlative revolutionaries are the same ones which disqualify them for the building of new institutions on the ruins of the old. The true revolutionary has or soon develops an autocratic spirit. He insists that everyone adopt not only his ends but also his means. By demanding that others adopt his methods as well as his goals, that their zeal be as unruly as his own, he alienates the men who must put the pieces back together when the revolution ends. Moreover, the single-mindedness of the revolutionist, however well it may equip him for revolution, is not the stuff out of which communities are built. By fixing his whole being on one objective the revolutionary simplifies and sharpens the thrust of his own life. He does so, however, only by sacrificing other values which may be equal to his own but which his obsession precludes.

Life is relatively simple for the Negro and white Tom Paines who believe that racial justice is not only the most crucial issue in American society—as others would grant—but is indeed the only issue. Life is not so simple for those Americans—Negro and white—who view the racial struggle as the most important issue in a whole cluster of issues. To be at once committed to racial justice in all its ramifications and to peaceful protest against every kind of injustice and to an American community which offers more than mere peaceful coexistence between the races . . . —this is not easy, and the men and women who are so committed deserve better treatment than they sometimes receive from the Tom Paines who with them seek a common goal.

IT IS PURE bigotry to say, as some engaged in the racial struggle now do, that if one is not a Tom Paine in the racial battle he is necessarily an Uncle Tom. In addition to the tokenism, the gradualism, the groveling subservience of the white and Negro Uncle Toms on one end of the social spectrum and the white-hot rebellion of white and Negro Tom Paines on the other there are racial attitudes varying from depraved prejudice and ruthless discrimination to genuine commitment to a totally integrated society. Many Americans of both races who are not revolutionaries and who will not use revolutionary methods are nonetheless devoted to the Negro's cause—a devotion attested to by the fact that they sacrificed money, position, prestige and personal comfort to that cause long before it was respectable to do so. To reject such people as Uncle Toms because they will not support some particular technique in the racial protest, to let extremists set the pace and demand that everybody march to it or be humiliated, is to corrupt the revolution and postpone indefinitely the building of that new America which the revolution could make possible.

Who in the booing crowd has done as much as James Meredith to symbolize in personal courage and resolution the battle of a lone Negro against white politicians, white courts, white customs and white laws? Then why humiliate him and break his heart because he refuses to chant in approved terms what the crowd wants to hear? Who in the madding Harlem crowd has done as much as Martin Luther King, Jr., to lift the American Negro's hope for freedom and justice? Then why smear his car with stinking eggs because he . . . will not . . . resort to violence in the pursuit of justice? Bigotry remains bigotry however much it changes its color, and bigotry is particularly tempting to the absolutist, white or Negro.

The racial struggle needs Tom Paines who irritatingly stir and drive the people, fomenting and stimulating the necessary revolution, but it also needs Washingtons and Jeffersons who with sound judgment and the long view put a nation together. It needs Garrisons who stubbornly and everlastingly exasperate the people until they act for justice, but it also needs Lincolns who "with malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right . . . bind up the nation's wounds." We need both . . . simultaneously.

Cambridge, Md.: A prayer demonstration on the courthouse lawn to protest segregation.

THIS MONTH

SEPTEMBER

Washington Exhibit

VISITORS to Washington, D.C., this fall are advised to drop in on the Klutznick Exhibit Hall at the B'nai B'rith Building (1640 Rhode Island Ave., N.W.). In observance of ADL's 50th anniversary, a special exhibit, "The Story of Human Rights in America," is on display. It contains, among other items, a collection of notable documents highlighting the development of the ideas of human rights, brotherhood, and equality. The bogus Protocols of the Elders of Zion are there, as well as ADL's expose of the Protocols and Henry Ford's letter retracting the anti-Semitic charges in his Dearborn Independent. An impressive montage shows the wealth and variety of ADL's handsome library of popular and academic publications on human relations and intergroup relations.

This can be a worthwhile and informative visit.

ADL "Education for Democracy"

TV Spots

IN the face of widespread national demonstrations pressing for immediate equality of opportunity for Negroes, President Kennedy made a radio appeal, June 11, for a public country-wide discussion of the civil rights problem in the spirit of justice, conscience, and fair play. The ADL has responded by cooperating with the United Church Women of the National Council of Churches and the National Council of Catholic Men to sponsor a public service TV and radio spot announcement series on civil rights produced by Time-Life, Inc. Dore Schary, ADL national chairman, is featured as one of the speakers in the series. The spots are available free from Time-Life, Rockefeller Center, N.Y.C.

Legacy

SIX years ago, Boston industrialist Joseph Kaplan, long an ADL stalwart, set up a special fund in association with the Anti-Defamation League called the Joseph Kaplan Project in Intergroup Education. Its principal purpose: to found the One Nation Library of pamphlets devoted to human relations and designed for the secondary school level.

Author of one of the first pamphlets in the fine series was another Massachusetts man, winner of a Pulitzer Prize in biography and at that time the junior senator from his state: Title: "A Nation of Immigrants"—a thoughtful plea for the liberalization of this country's restrictive immigration law and for the elimination of the national origins quota system.

Kaplan

This month that junior senator, now the President of the United States, called on Congress to pass new legislation that would place the country's needs for skilled manpower above prejudice rationalized in false theories of racial superiority written into the present law. In his message to Congress President Kennedy quoted from his own work of five years ago. The President duly noted his authorship of "A Nation of Immigrants" and his long-term interest in the problem.

In its edition of August 4th the New York Times Magazine published an excerpt from the ADL pamphlet as an article by Mr. Kennedy. Publication of "A Nation of Immigrants" in book form is scheduled for this Fall by Harper and Row.

Joseph Kaplan who died more than a year ago would have been pleased by these fruits of his investment in human relations through the ADL . . .

Final note: President Kennedy asked Senator Philip M. Hart of Michigan to introduce the new immigration legislation in the Senate. The Senator had earlier introduced a reform bill of his own. His article describing it appeared in the June 1963 issue of the ADL Bulletin.

DO YOU CARE . . .

profoundly about human rights, not just for yourself but for your children and theirs?

. . . Do you care about the struggle in many arenas—the fight for better education and understanding among all Americans, the fight against anti-Semitism and the haters?

. . . If you care, find out how you can help — now and tomorrow. Write to:

ADL LEGACY DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE
515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.

Benemerenti

BENEMERENTI means "well-deserving" in Latin. It is also the name of the medal that Myer N. Sobiloff of Fall River, Massachusetts, a member of the ADL New England regional board, has received—a legacy from the late Pope John XXXIII. The award was instituted by Pope Gregory VI as a means of recognizing distinguished service to the community. Mr. Sobiloff has contributed much of his time and money to the betterment and development of Fall River—and in particular, its industrial resurgence. Pictured below is Mr. Sobiloff receiving the papal award from Most Rev. James L. Connolly, Bishop of Fall River.

Program Notes

RACE and segregation are the subjects of three important ADL publications just published, the first two together with the Southern Regional Council.

Nine years after the Supreme Court decided that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, 99.6 per cent of Negro students in eleven Southern states are still attending all-Negro schools. This is one of the melancholy statistics Professor J. Kenneth Morland of Randolph-Macon Women's College cites in "Token Desegregation and Beyond." He notes some 380 laws passed by state legislatures since 1954 in attempts to legally avoid compliance with the Supreme Court ruling. As a consequence, less than one-half of one per cent of Negroes in all the school districts of the eleven states are now attending desegregated schools.

Professor Morland attributes this tokenism to "fear of integration." That the fear is unwarranted is evident from Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, by Dr. Robert Coles. Dr. Coles' intensive study—the first of its kind—shows that white and Negro children in desegregated schools suffer "no medical or psychiatric damage," and "no breakdown in ability to work, study and get along with friends."

Finally, four distinguished social scientists writing on Race and Intelligence explode the myth of racial factors as determining intelligence. Scientific evidence bears out the ADL thesis that, given the chance, Negro children will do as well as white children in desegregated schools. Professor Melvin Tumin of Princeton is the editor of this pamphlet.

The three pamphlets are available through the League.

the ADL bulletin
515 Madison Ave., New York 22
Entered as 2nd class matter

the ADL bulletin
PUBLISHED BY THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

OCTOBER, 1963

How They React
(Page 4)

The Hard Way
(Page 7)

FORECAST FOR '64: PARTLY CLOUDY

Judging by the recent past, anti-Semitism and the smear will again be used in political campaigns.

By Bruce L. Felknor

One year from now America will be in the midst of its quadrennial phenomenon, a major election year. In the October madness that will descend on the land, American voters will be asked to choose a President, the governors of most states, a third of the Senate and all the representatives in the 89th Congress.

In too many cases, voters also will be asked to defeat some men because they are Jews, and to defeat still others because they are (falsely) alleged to be anti-Semitic. And, if experience is a reliable guide, in some cases Jews will be urged to vote against other Jews because they are not good Jews.

In such a welter of irrelevancy, what can the responsible citizen, concerned both with the quality of government and the quality of the campaigns that elect government, do?

For the hard-of-hearing, one answer is relatively simple: turn down the volume on the hearing aid. For others, selective listening is essential. The operating rule adopted by the Fair Campaign Practices Committee for evaluating electioneering is two-pronged: truth and relevance. Often it takes a bit of research to discover the truth; common sense, with a few moments for reflection and analysis, usually can pin-point relevance.

In most Presidential years, the overtones of the national contest drown out purely local issues, both valid and false. Such was the case in 1960. The spurious issue of Kennedy's religion took much of the play away from many congressional and state campaigns otherwise likely to have been dirty classics.

However, in 1960 religion in the Presidential campaign did complicate some state races where Catholics were candidates. Analogous problems, unfortunately, may arise next year. But let us examine, in the order listed above, some of the stormier indications for 1964.

First, there is straight-out anti-Semitism. The potential Presidential candidacy of Barry Goldwater could rally the bigots as dramatically as the Kennedy candidacy did in 1960. Anti-Semites are undeterred by logic; they are prepared to hate on a basis of religion, ethnic background, name and even change of name; it is not necessary for their target even to be Jewish or partly Jewish, as witness some of the scurrility directed at Eisenhower early in 1952, suggesting that the General was a part of what the lunatics like to call the "Jew-Marxist conspiracy."

Senator Goldwater was raised as an Episcopalian but his grandfather was Jewish. This is more than enough for the anti-Semite.

A principal worry of the Kennedy forces immediately after the 1960 Democratic Convention was that Nixon would subtly raise the religious question over and over by saying, in effect, "The fact that Senator Kennedy is a Roman Catholic is not an issue between us," thus underlining the Senator's faith to anyone who did not know it. (Actually, Nixon handled the matter with great integrity; when the question was raised he would dismiss it curtly and simply, "Religion has no place in this campaign.") But this, of course, did not deter rabid anti-Catholics from a fantastic outpouring of hate.

A comparable spectre now hovers over Goldwater's backers. It is the fear that the Democrats (or simply political anti-Semites) will use every opportunity to feed prejudice by seeming to disclaim it

Familiar Road

Reprinted by permission NEA.

Mr. Felknor is executive director of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee, a nonpartisan, citizens organization.

Nixon, Stratton, Levitt and Goldwater: All victimized by innuendo.

with expressions like, "It doesn't matter that Goldwater is a Jew."

Several such episodes have come to public attention already, one hinging on a success story related in one Congressman's newsletter. Comparing the immigrant careers of "Big Mike Goldwater," the Senator's grandfather, and of Patrick Kennedy, the President's grandfather, the letter suggested that "an itinerant Jewish merchant's grandson" could become a Presidential candidate only, in Harry Golden's phrase, in America.

The prospective Goldwater candidacy has ironic overtones, some funny, some not. Harry Golden is credited with having observed wryly that he might have known that the first Jew to become a Presidential hopeful would be an Episcopalian. To Senator Goldwater himself is attributed a story—probably apocryphal—about his being turned away by a restricted country club. "But I'm only half Jewish," he is supposed to have said. "Can I play nine holes?"

THE matter of Goldwater's Jewishness will of course be fanned by full-time anti-Semites before the GOP nomination is decided. Although San Francisco is not usually regarded as a habitat of the species, placard-bearing nuts will be parading around the Cow Palace next July, handing out crudely printed tracts and screeds in streets and hotel lobbies, and defacing banners and posters. Pre-convention maneuvering and primary campaigns are where some haters try hardest. For obvious reasons, the tactic is most common in local and Congressional primary and general elections.

It is virtually certain that 1964 will see some sly and some vicious attempts to attribute anti-Semitism falsely to men whose public and private lives have shown no trace of it. Former Vice President Nixon was dogged by such efforts, mostly stemming from a real estate deed with a restrictive covenant in its printed form, a clause Nixon knew to be without legal force and therefore meaningless. New York City's bitter mayoralty primary in 1961 produced an episode of reverse smearing in which an unauthorized supporter of one candidate, Arthur Levitt, apparently planted a leaflet supposedly issued by the Wagner forces calling for the election of Wagner to avoid being faced with a "choice between a Levitt and a Lefkowitz."

IN THE 1962 maneuvering in New York State for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination a classic example of unfounded accusation of anti-Semitism occurred. One contender for the designation was a Schenectady Congressman, Samuel Stratton. Anonymous anti-Stratton people resurrected a clipping from a college newspaper of twenty-six years ago in which Stratton, then an undergraduate at the University of Rochester, commented, at the school paper's request, on a trip to Germany. In the summer following his junior year, Stratton, then nineteen, had made a six-day bicycle and youth hostel jaunt through the Rhineland. He was generally impressed with the economic and material gains Germany had made in the early Hitler years.*

Midway in the article, after describing his first impressions, Stratton gave voice to misgivings. "Behind the gala show lie sinister forebodings, perhaps of war," he wrote. "What today may look so nice and shiny may some day become very ugly."

Near the end of the article, Stratton placed a paragraph that would come back to haunt him: "Anti-Semitism is one of the less attractive aspects of the administration. Violent persecution is rare; instead the feeling expresses itself in strong undercurrents of opinion among the people, which probably bring just as great pressure to bear. It would be foolish to attempt to justify such action. One can understand it, however, and can appreciate how it might spread to the extent it has."

THE AFFAIR did not cause any sort of flurry at the school. Stratton's piece appeared on October 2, 1936. A week later a German exchange student in an interview told the paper the facts about Germany were being distorted, and in passing sought to justify the practice of "repressing a minority."

The following week, October 16, a Jewish student at the University wrote a bitter letter refuting "the shining logic of Stratton, Soyez (the German student) & Co." Of fifteen paragraphs, he devoted fourteen to Soyez, saving one to demolish Stratton with a distorted quotation: "To Stratton 'anti-Semitism is less attractive . . . but one can understand and appreciate it.' Weasel words!" The critic thus implied that Stratton had expressed approbation and understanding of anti-Semitism, whereas in fact he had indicated neither justification nor approbation but did say one could understand the phenomenon and appreciate how it might spread in Germany.

So far as a careful perusal of the files of the paper for the balance of the school year reveals, the Jewish student's letter was the end of the controversy about Stratton's attitude—until twenty-six years

Continued on page 8

* William L. Shirer notes in The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich that oppression of Jews had been temporarily halted in this summer of 1936 and signs evidencing discrimination had been quietly removed from shopwindows in preparation for visitors to the summer Olympics.

the ADL bulletin

515 Madison Ave., New York 22

Vol. 20, No. 8 • October, 1963

Published monthly except July and August by Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y. Officers: Dore Schary, chairman; Henry E. Schultz, Meier Steinbrink, honorary chairmen; Leonard Abess, Barney Balaban, Harry Brandt, Samuel Daroff, Jacob K. Javits, Philip M. Klutznick, Herbert H. Lenman, Leon Lowenstein, William Sachs, Melvin H. Schlesinger, Mendel Silberberg, Jesse Steinhart, honorary vice-chairmen; William P. Bloom, David Coleman, Maurice M. Dannenbaum, David H. Litter, Max J. Schneider, Louis Zara, life members; Edward Goldberger, Moe Kudler, Alan R. Morse, Norman Newhouse, Burnett Roth, Mrs. Charles D. Solovich, vice-chairmen; Benjamin Greenberg, treasurer; Herbert Levy, secretary; Benjamin R. Epstein, national director; Paul H. Sampliner, chairman, executive committee; David A. Rose, vice-chairman, executive committee; Label A. Katz, president, Maurice Bisgyer, executive vice-president, B'nai B'rith; Mrs. Leonard M. Sims, president, B'nai B'rith Women.

Editorial Board: N. C. Belth, chairman; Oscar Cohen, Benjamin R. Epstein, Arnold Forster, Alexander F. Miller, J. Harold Saks, Lester J. Waldman.

Subscription Rates: $1.50 for two years, Subscribers must report change of address giving old and new address and account designation. Second class postage paid at Post Office, New York, N. Y. Printed in U.S.A.

Editor: MORTON PUNER Managing Editor: JACOB SLOAN Art Director: EDWARD GOLDMAN Circulation: SARI GRILL

A View From Abroad:

THE LONG HOT SUMMER

A French family watches the March on Washington via Telstar

The European view of our racial problems was getting better. Then came the fateful Sunday...

By Morton Puner

—PARIS

THE PREDICTION made early in the season was for a long, hot summer in American race relations—the fight carried into the streets with, possibly, riots and violence. But, from abroad at least, it seemed that planning for a great and successful March on Washington at the end of August, gave an outlet for some of the steam—and anger—of the drive.

The subject of America's treatment of its Negroes crops up all the time in political discussions with Europeans. The discussions tell a lot about the ideas and values that separate nations. —"Wasn't the Affaire Meredith terribly embarrassing to you?" asked the Parisian, an old friend of the United States. "And how could American college students be so bigoted as to join in the demonstration to keep a Negro out of a university?"

—"You're a nation of hypocrites," said the Portuguese lawyer. "Kennedy with his anti-colonial policy trying to win support of the new African nations. Look how you treat your own Negroes. Portugal has been happily multi-racial for years—no prejudice here. Look how much we're doing for our African provinces now. But you have to understand that black men are simply not ready for self-government."

—"Don't talk about press censorship under Franco," said the newspaper editor in Madrid. "Look at the dangerous nonsense your southern newspaper editors have to write in support of states rights and segregation of the races. They can't believe what they're saying. But they don't dare say anything else."

—And the British political leader: "Oh, we've always been far more civilized than you in our treatment of the darker skinned people."

So it goes. The conversations veer to the edge of anger born of national self-interest and pride. And close to the spirit of one of the oldest of anti-Soviet jokes still current. An Intourist guide was showing an American visitor through the Moscow subway system. They went down into a station where the guide described the art all about them: so many paintings of Marx and Lenin, so many mosaics, so many marble steps. The American asked: "But where are the trains?" Without answering, the guide led him upstairs, to the next station, and the same description of art, mosaics, and marble. They visited five stations and each time the American asked: "But where are the trains?" The Russian guide finally turned on the American and snapped: "And what about the Negroes in the South?"

THE VOICE of America long ago decided how to answer that question. It talks to the world about the Negroes in the South—and North—with frankness and honesty. In sum, the position is that yes, the racial situation in the United States is unfortunate and a tragic heritage from the past; that the weight of federal authority and most Americans is on the side of equal opportunity; that much progress is being made, at an ever greater rate; that the things happening today, no matter how bad they seem, are themselves evidence of progress and the birth of real freedom—and there is no birth without pain.

It is a true story but a difficult one to make stick. How do you tell Europeans that America's racial problems are unique only in shape but not in essence; that it was Europeans—and Africans too—who engaged in the slave trade that contributed to America's racial attitudes today; that England had its Notting Hill Gate riots and countless other expressions of anti-Negro prejudice, particularly since the post-war influx of West Indians; that the Portuguese attitude on race is benighted by the standards of an American liberal; that no people or nation is beyond reproach and the need to scapegoat appears to be universal; that Americans are trying hard and the American Negro is about to come into his birthright—as a free American.

The magnitude and meaning of today's American social revolution appear to be dimly understood here by people who have their own notions about the United States. Fifteen years ago, when the American Negro had an infinitely more hopeless situation, there was little discussion abroad of America's civil rights problems. Yet it is today that one hears the equation between Hitler's treatment of Jews

Continued on page 8

HOW SCHOOL DESEGREGATION AFFECTS CHILDREN

A psychiatrist finds that Southern youngsters of both races, despite all tensions, are able to learn a variety of lessons well--without emotional injury.

By Robert Coles

"It was rough at times, but I learned a lot and met some nice people, and I think they got to know us a little and we got to know them too."—Negro boy in desegregated school in Atlanta.

EVER SINCE the U.S. Supreme Court decision in 1954 that separate educational systems for white and Negro students were unconstitutional, the schools in the South, their teachers and students, exposed to the bright light of public opinion, have all been under tremendous psychological pressure.

How has this tension affected the feelings and attitudes of individual children and teachers? Have they been able to learn and teach effectively—or has the furor surrounding desegregation had damaging and permanent effects?

Our psychiatric study seeking to find answers to these questions took two years, from 1961 to 1963. It dealt primarily with six- and seven-year-old elementary school students in New Orleans, and adolescents of 16 and 17 in Atlanta. The major finding: Young children of both races were able to learn without any physical or emotional injury or collapse, given initial good health and a functioning school system.

FOR the Negro children, attendance at white schools in the South was stressful but not incapacitating. The best proof: they were promoted and graduated. This, despite the fact that some of them, walking through angry crowds outside the school, encountered silent reproach or noisy jeers inside.

This is excerpted from The Desegregation of Southern Schools: A Psychiatric Study, by Dr. Robert Coles of Atlanta. The pamphlet is published by ADL and the Southern Regional Council (50¢).

Desegregation at work in elementary and secondary schools in the South.

What kept these Negro students going? In the first place, they and their families were highly motivated, determined and willing to endure pain for goals which were important to them. Then, they were honored and respected in their own community, and given considerable attention and support. Lastly, ostracism and epithets were not new to these children—entering a desegregated school was hard, but it offered them hopes and opportunities they had never had before. So they were less vulnerable to suffering than one might have expected.

The younger children, in New Orleans, played with white children, naturally, and with no hindrance from them. At the height of tension in that city, the few white children and the Negro children went through streets of abuse, but had no trouble with one another in the school itself. In Atlanta, there was less ease and spontaneity for the older, high school children—partly because of fear or hatred, and partly because of the awkward silence natural to all adolescents. But in high schools children are in class most of the time, and this restricted opportunities for embarrassment or worse.

LIKE the Negro children, the white children in the desegregated southern schools suffered no medical or psychiatric damage, no breakdown in ability to work, study, and get along with friends.

Even under the worst situations outside, the children in the schools managed well together. Those white children who remained in the desegregated Frantz school in New Orleans thoroughly enjoyed the increased attention of their teachers, the excitement around them. They often urged their more timid or (justifiably) frightened parents to keep them in school. In 1961 one of the white children who returned to the almost totally boycotted Frantz school told a little colored girl that she would not play with her because her mother had forbidden this—and then, a few minutes later, did just that.

What the white child sensed and felt depended on the particular Negro child in the room, the particular white child, and how he saw the particular Negro child, and, most important, on what actually happened in the room between the Negro child and his white classmates.

THE school in Atlanta is instructive on this score: Here, where social and economic conditions were poorest, with people worried about jobs, income, security of home and place in society, two Negro girls went through a year of continued silence, isolation, occasional insult of word and even deed. When one of them, Martha, was ready to graduate she felt that she had no friends at all, and could really talk to one, although all year she had reported that many of her classmates would talk to her furtively in cloak rooms or empty corridors. At the same time, white children reported Martha's difficult times, and their own fears of talking with her, despite their impulses of sympathy, curiosity, or friendliness.

On the last day of school, Martha was approached by over 15 classmates who asked her whether they might autograph her yearbook. She was afraid, as the first child asked, because she felt that the autograph might be a means of attack and insult rather than an expression of good will. But Martha offered her book, and several of the comments speak for themselves:

One girl wrote:

> Martha, I admire your great courage in your great decision. I'm sure you've been subjected to much unpleasantness, but you've met it in a most gracious way.

A boy wrote:

> Martha, I cannot tell you how much I admire your courage and determination. After you had finished that little talk in English, in my eyes you were "nine feet tall."

"That little talk in English" . . . Martha had been badly heckled by a few students; the majority sat by, nervous and anxious. Sensing this, the English teacher simply asked Martha, suddenly, and with no advance notice, to tell the class how she felt about her several months' "stay" at the school. Martha did, in her quiet, plain and simple manner, and she was heard.

Continued on page 6

THIS MONTH

OCTOBER

Golden Anniversary

THE ADL Appeal launches the fall phase of its campaign for $3,940,000 this month with a Golden Anniversary Dinner honoring Sol Cantor. Mr. Cantor, who heads Interstate Department Stores, one of the nation's biggest and best-known chains, will be cited for "strengthening and expanding the American heritage of freedom." The dinner is set for October 23rd, at the New York Hilton Hotel. Joseph L. Eckhouse, dinner chairman, predicted "a heart-warming turnout of ADL's friends, supporters, and allies." Mr. Eckhouse is vice president and director of the Grand Union Company, and executive head of Grandway Department Stores.

Cantor

Good Response

THERE were angry outbursts when New York State's Regents' Prayer for public schools was declared unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court in the summer of 1962. The Regents' Prayer decision was attacked by some clergymen, newspapers, congressmen—all on the grounds that it represented some kind of threat to religion.

An ADL survey of reaction to the Court's latest decision prohibiting Bible reading and recital of the Lord's Prayer in the public schools indicates a heartening change in public response. The survey concluded that reactions were mostly calm, reasoned, and considerably more moderate in 1963. The biggest shift in the press took place in the Midwest, where almost three out of four newspapers polled supported the Court decision this year—last year's ruling was opposed two to one. And the Justice Department received only one-tenth as many letters of protest in 1963.

Among religious leaders, Catholics were less disturbed, more divided in their opposition to the Supreme Court's latest decision. Protestant leadership generally agreed with the Court, citing the National Council of Churches' statement that "teaching for religious commitment is a responsibility of the home and the community of faith (such as church or synagogue) rather than the public schools."

Jewish reaction to the new decision, as in 1962, was almost unanimously favorable. It was viewed as "a reaffirmation of the principle of separation of church and state."

Congressmen who reacted negatively were more restrained than in 1962. More than half of the nation's school districts were affected by the Bible reading and Lord's Prayer ban; most announced their decision to comply.

The ADL filed briefs amicus with the Supreme Court in both the 1963 and 1962 cases.

Sunday Opening

THE New York City Council this month passed a Fair Sabbath law, permitting small, family-operated businesses to remain open on Sunday if the proprietor observes another day as the Sabbath.

Passage of this law represents a victory for the position of the ADL and other human rights organizations. Sunday closing laws places Saturday Sabbath observers—including Orthodox Jews—at an economic disadvantage, since they must remain closed two days a week. The ADL has consistently argued that Sunday closing laws in force in many states thus violate the free exercise of religion clauses of the First Amendment.

The New York State legislature had this year passed an act enabling New York City alone to pass such an ordinance. The rest of the state remains bound by the New York State Sunday closing law—until the state legislature takes further action.

Janowska Road

THIS is a month of achievement for Leon Wells. His latest invention, an audio-visual record player that could put color film libraries into the average American home, will be introduced to the nation. That's his gift for the future. This month will also see publication of his record of the past, The Janowska Road—an autobiography of a teen-age Jewish boy under the Nazis. He was Leon Welickzer of Lvov, Poland, when the Germans came marching in. By the time he was twenty he had lived through internment in the Janowska concentration camp, assigned to its Death Brigade. Somehow he kept alive—to become one of the most impressive witnesses to testify at Eichmann's trial in Jerusalem. The Janowska Road is published by Macmillan.

Wells

Civil Rights Gains

DESPITE the tragedy of the current racial situation, 1963 has been a productive year for significant civil rights legislation on the part of individual states. A report prepared by ADL's Paul Hartman and Theodore Leskes of the American Jewish Committee said that the adoption of extended fair housing laws in Connecticut, Massachusetts and New York was the most important and far-reaching development in a series of actions taken in 1963 by states and municipalities in combatting discrimination in housing, public accommodations, employment and education.

Among other new legislation: California became the eleventh state to enact a fair housing law covering private housing. Maryland and South Dakota, and two cities, Louisville, Kentucky and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, enacted laws prohibiting discrimination in public accommodations. (Twenty-eight other states already have such laws.) And Michigan became the first state to adopt a constitutional provision establishing a permanent Civil Rights Commission.

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

Continued from page 5

ONE problem always facing a city's school officials is to select the age group of Negro students first to be introduced into the formerly all-white schools. Most educators would agree that from the viewpoint of teaching alone, it is obviously better to start with the first grades. At five, children are governed by needs of the moment: to play, to sing, or shout. They most certainly understand many of the meanings of skin color, because they hear the words and commands of their parents, but, except in rare cases, tensions and ideologies of the adult world will not undo what is, after all, their "childhood." Seeds of later attitudes are in them, make no mistake about that. But they will not flower until later, when the child thinks and hesitates more, is more responsive to the laws of society.

In the earlier grades, moreover, there are less fixed disparities of educational achievement than in higher grades, even though capacities will vary from the first moment of the first grade of school.

By high school, children have learned not only the new facts of reading and writing, but hope or despair, effort or sloth. By 14 so very much has happened. In those last few years of school there is little time or inclination for easy reversals of long-standing patterns.

DO CHANGES occur in the attitudes of white and Negro children as they go to school together? As days became weeks and weeks months, we saw the changes taking place. A firmly segregationist boy cannot but notice the difference between two Negro classmates, their separate manner, minds, attire. A Negro girl no longer sees, as she put it, "just white," but many separate individuals.

Teachers will meet many new situations, requiring careful thought and not a little introspection. "How can I be fair to them all, the Negroes and whites both?" We have heard teacher after teacher in the South ask this question. Glib answers are fast spoken, but useless. There are no rules except those already known: that classrooms are for learning; that each child is an individual, but at school, is mainly a pupil (or hopefully, a student); and that what is important is that this role, this opportunity be guarded in order to flourish.

HERE is a brief moment in Atlanta: "I think I bend over backwards to be fair with the nigra students, and sometimes I think they're getting away with too much." We told this sensitive, earnest lady that what Negro students wanted and deserved was a fair chance, not a new form of protected separation. She realized that perhaps she felt guilty about their past, or even still felt anxious to keep them "separate" in her mind and behavior. A year later she remarked: "When I forgot about skin, or mostly did, and treated them as children who either knew their grammar or didn't, it became better. I remember the first time I raised my voice at the nigra girl. . . . I knew then I'd solved a lot of my problems in teaching with nigras in my class."

THOSE children whose feelings are exceptionally strong about desegregation are, really, a special and rather small group. Our studies show that many people oppose desegregation, but also oppose the closing of the schools, mob behavior, or insulting or assaulting a fellow student, regardless of skin color. The particularly enraged person, be he teacher or parent, is relatively rare among millions of Southerners.

Any observer of child behavior knows how flexible children can be, how much they can grow and learn, given even far from optimal conditions. If we in America, in the South, deny our own plasticity and sensitivity, our own responsive capacities, we remove ourselves from our very nature as human beings. This, in truth, is a form of segregation. It is not merely undesirable, but, in a country such as ours, deadly.

AMERICAN TINTYPE

Simon Wolf: Pioneer Fighter for Human Rights

THE YOUNG LAWYER was furious, hurt, indignant. It was December 1862; just the year before, he had tried to enlist in the Union Army and had been rejected because of poor eyesight. He moved to Washington, D. C., and set up an office there—as a loyal citizen, he wanted to practice where he could be of most help to the Federal government.

And now to have his co-religionists, the Jewish citizens of the United States, publicly and officially maligned in this way! Simon Wolf reread the newspaper story: Order No. 11, issued by an assistant adjutant general at the behest of Major General Ulysses S. Grant, expelled all Jews from his department in the Southwest.

Wolf understood the background of this order. The military authorities were generally much annoyed by the traders who, under government sanction, followed the army to buy up cotton. Grant thought they were all dishonest. They were "a curse to the army." But why had he singled out Jewish traders for expulsion?

The order was unjust, and Simon Wolf was not one to suffer injustice. He was only twenty-six, and a newcomer to Washington, but he went straight to President Lincoln. Shortly thereafter, in January 1863, at Lincoln's instructions, General Halleck, then chief general of the Union Army, had Order 11 rescinded.

THUS BEGAN the notable public career of the German-born Jew who was to become "the spokesman of the Jews in the United States." Simon Wolf was not vindictive; afterwards, he accepted and publicized Grant's explanation that he himself had not issued the order. Wolf, who knew Grant intimately, may well have influenced his declaration in 1868 of the classic American credo: "I have no prejudice against sect or race, but want each individual to be judged by his own merit."

Wolf's career is closely linked with the early history of B'nai B'rith, celebrating its 120th anniversary this year. In 1870 Wolf took the lead in persuading Grant to appoint Benjamin F. Peixotto as U. S. consul to Bucharest, in an attempt to relieve the situation of the Jews of Rumania—they had been subjected to legal discrimination and mob violence for several years. Peixotto was a former grand master of B'nai B'rith; Wolf was B'nai B'rith's Washington representative. (He was to become B'nai B'rith's president in 1904-05.) This mission was unique in the history of American diplomacy. United States funds being unavailable, the consulate was supported chiefly by the B'nai B'rith, and Peixotto served without remuneration.

In 1871, at Simon Wolf's request, President Grant called a special cabinet meeting to consider a ukase expelling the Jews of Bessarabia. The U. S. Minister to St. Petersburg was instructed to protest. He did so, and the expulsion order was rescinded. In 1902 the note of John Hay, American secretary of state, denouncing Rumania for violating the Treaty of Berlin with respect to the Jews, was due, in part, to Wolf's efforts. So, too, were President Woodrow Wilson's plans for protecting the Jews of Rumania in the Treaty of Versailles.

In fact, from 1870 to 1923, no subject arose affecting the interest of American Jews in which Simon Wolf was not active.

IN 1918 Simon Wolf published a fascinating autobiography, Presidents I Have Known from 1860-1918. In it he told a typical story about his appointment as Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia in 1869 (he served until 1878). Wolf had at first been uncertain about accepting the post. But when he heard that some people were objecting to him simply because he was a Jew, he asked for the appointment, and received it. He was the first Jew to hold the important post of consul general in U. S. diplomatic service—he served in Egypt in that capacity in 1881.

Diplomat, counselor, B'nai B'rith leader for almost half of B'nai B'rith's 120 years, Simon Wolf always remained true to the American credo enunciated by President Grant: "I have no prejudice against sect or race, but want each individual to be judged by his own merit."

Zeidel hits the ice for the Hershey Bears.

"A GOOD TOUGH PLAYER"

Larry Zeidel, the only Jew in professional hockey, made it the hard way.

By Stan Fischler

Larry Zeidel unconsciously rubbed his finger along a scar sitting atop his eyebrow. He owns a scar for every one of the 20 years he marauded through organized hockey.

"When you're the only Jew in this bloody game," said the 35-year-old Montreal native, "you have to prove you can take the rough stuff more than the average player."

Since body contact is legal in hockey, opponents have been "running" at Zeidel with impunity since he first laced on a pair of skates. More often than not, Larry ran back at them with an abandon that left an indelible mark on his superstructure. Conservative estimates place his wounds (major variety) at a fractured skull, two concussions, torn ligaments in both knees, a nose broken about a dozen times, and a collection of miscellaneous wounds worth more than 300 stitches.

"Hockey is a game of survival of the fittest," explained Zeidel, who plays defense for the Hershey, Pa., Bears in the American Hockey League, second most important hockey league in the world. "Being a Jew I learned the ground rules for surviving earlier than most kids and it's helped me out ever since."

Larry, 5-11, 185 pounds, was raised in the rough Park Extension area of Montreal. The Zeidels were the only Jewish family in the neighborhood, a fact that literally was punched home to him at the age of five. "I got my first taste of anti-Semitism when I started school," he recalled. "The kids knew I was a Jew. They'd gang up on me. First it was one gang, then another."

Zeidel credits the neighborhood jungle for his reputation as one of the roughest skaters in the history of hockey. "A psychiatrist could have fun with me," he continued. "He'd say I got that tough on account of having to fight for my rights as a Jew. It makes sense when you think of it.

"I figured if I beat up the leader of the class gang I'd be in good shape. I kept doing this through public school and, pretty soon, I got a reputation and they left me alone. When I got into hockey I thought I'd use the same technique. I'd go for the bullies who'd try to run me outa the game and let them have it."

Zeidel's strategy worked in minor amateur hockey and proved successful when he turned pro with the Quebec Aces at the age of 20. By this time the fans had become as much a problem as opposition players. "In some of the towns like Valleyfield and Sherbrooke, the crowd would ride me," he said.

"What about the players?" he was asked.

"They might call me a 'Goddamn Jew' in a fit of anger," Zeidel explained.

Often, such taunts produced catastrophic results. During the 1952-53 season, while playing for Edmonton in the Western League, Zeidel and Jack Evans, an equally rugged defenseman for Saskatoon, clashed at center ice. Each broke his stick over the other's head; then they went on to engage in a bloody jousting exhibition that is regarded as one of the goriest in hockey history.

Zeidel's aggressiveness and ability—he has been one of the most proficient defensemen in pro hockey—won him contracts with the Detroit Red Wings and Chicago Black Hawks of the top-flight National Hockey League. After 92 games in the majors, he was sent to the minor pro leagues, where he has since excelled.

His career contrasts with that of Hymie Buller, another Jew who retired from hockey in the fifties at the prime of his career.

Buller was the antithesis of Zeidel. Slow to anger, Buller often did not counterattack when opponents molested him. Once this became general knowledge in hockey circles, more and more players attacked Buller, his efficiency decreased, and, many believe, his exit was prematurely accelerated. Zeidel considers that Buller failed because he didn't hit back.

"If Buller had belted those guys when they belted him, he'd have been a real star for years," Larry explained. "He had a lot of finesse, a lot of ability, but he always acted like a gentleman. You can't do that in this game. He shouldn't have taken all the rough stuff they gave him. I know I wouldn't have."

"What about the crowds needling you?"

"I don't hear them any more. I concentrate so much on the game I'm not conscious of what they yell in the stands. I look at it this way—anyone who shouts at me for being a Jew has got to be sick in the head. I figure he needs more help than I do. So, I don't pay any attention to them unless they do me bodily harm."

Usually, it's Zeidel who does the hurting. His aggressiveness led Hershey to

Continued on page 8

Mr. Fischler is a sports writer for the New York Journal-American.

FORECAST FOR '64

Continued from page 2

later. Then his 1962 campaign for the gubernatorial nomination found key sections of its support sagging as delegates from various parts of the state saw and heard about Stratton's sophomoric venture into international affairs.

Whether Stratton would have won the nomination but for the episode is at most debatable. But the implication that he was anti-Semitic and had been so since his youth hurt him badly. It should be noted that when Stratton was mayor of Schenectady, in 1958, he was named "Man of the Year" by the Jewish War Veterans, and was cited by B'nai B'rith for his successful efforts to hold a mayor's conference somewhere else than at the place scheduled—a discriminatory private club.

WHILE the more common campaign tactics involving anti-Semitism are efforts to rally an anti-Jewish vote, and to revolt men of good will by accusing a candidate of being anti-Semitic, occasionally there occur attempts to generate a "Jewish vote." Now and then a campaigner persuades the president of a congregation to write a letter of endorsement on synagogue stationery which is then reproduced in an effort to persuade voters that he is a better friend of the Jews than his opponent. This occurred in a New York assembly race in 1962 and, unless human nature undergoes a miraculous transformation, not for the last time.

Occasionally the biennial descent into the gutter still tempts some candidates, and their vastly more over-enthusiastic amateur supporters. Come October of even-numbered years, this results in spectacles which are at once ludicrous and depressing. In Long Island, last fall a Congressional candidate, himself Jewish, sought to dethrone his Jewish opponent, the incumbent Congressman. The hopeful bent every effort to cast his opponent in the role of a cynical opportunist who sought to use his religous affiliations to political advantage. One ill-advised supporter of the Congressman, while plastering posters on fences, store fronts and utility poles, stuck one on a Sukkoth booth for good measure.

The contender, who had already accused his opponent of suborning rabbis and congregation presidents to sing his praises as a devout Jew worthy of reelection, then began to berate him simultaneously as a desecrator of places of worship.

The incumbent won, the challenger lost. But, as is so often the case when dignity and common sense are forgotten until Election Day, the people lost something, too.

VIEW FROM ABROAD

Continued from page 3

and U. S. treatment of Negroes. Or hears a French intellectual—anti-Communist—tell an audience that "I wouldn't visit the United States because I couldn't stand to see the mistreatment of Negroes."

THE MARCH on Washington on August 28 was by far the biggest story of the week in the European press. Europeans also saw it on television via Telstar, saw the 200,000 people solemnly assembled, heard the speeches of Martin Luther King and others. The press treatment in various countries expressed some of the different concepts held by different nations—and some of the prejudices too. The West German press treated it soberly without much editorial comment—there is no point in Germans belaboring the United States for racism. Criticism of American racial problems has been muted in the Russian press in the last few months; treatment of the March on Washington was restrained too. The popular French press appeared to highlight the presence of such celebrities as Burt Lancaster, Charlton Heston, and Marlon Brando—missing a good part of the real drama of the March. And two of Great Britain's biggest circulation newspapers missed it completely in their headlines.

But still, on balance, the United States was ahead. The long hot summer was coming to an end and the biggest news in race relations had been the peaceful, mighty March on Washington.

Then came Sunday, September 15, and the shattering news of the killing of four Negro girls in a Birmingham church. The story spread as quickly as it had in the United States—only here there was neither the love nor understanding nor rationalization that Americans draw upon to explain themselves. The long hot summer had turned into complete disaster for the American image abroad. The combination—children murdered, on a Sunday morning, in church—made it an act of sheer savagery. This time there was no patience for sophisticated answer to the question: "What about the Negroes in the South?" Or to the angrier question, "You, American, what are you?"

GOOD PLAYER

Continued from page 7

playoff victories in the American League Calder Cup series with Baltimore last April. "Zeidel hit our stars so often they became timid," said Aldo Guidolin, coach of the Baltimore Clippers. "He was the guy responsible for putting us out of the series."

OUT of the arena Larry gives the impression of being the successful businessman. He regularly reads "Barrons" and the "Wall Street Journal," and works for a real estate firm in Harrisburg, Pa.

"My parents wanted me to go to college like my older brother, Sol," he says. "But I got so fascinated with hockey I couldn't see doing anything else. I guess my folks were disappointed at the time, but I've made the family proud of me with my hockey record."

His record is impressive. Larry was a member of the Stanley Cup (world) champion Detroit Red Wings and played on several championship teams in the Western and American Leagues, where he achieved All-Star recognition as well as the respect of players and coaches.

"In a sense Larry has had a tougher time than Jackie Robinson did when he broke into pro baseball," one well-known hockey expert explained.

"Robinson was the trail-blazer, but once he made it, hundreds of Negro ball players followed, and a Negro no longer is a curio in the sport. But Zeidel has been the only Jew in hockey for years. He has been a marked man with nobody else around to help him. He had to fight all by himself to establish a reputation and earn the respect of his friends and foes.

"With players clobbering him game after game, he had a much more difficult time than Robinson playing the relatively milder game of baseball."

But Larry proved himself so expertly he no longer bears the label of "the only Jew in hockey."

"They just know me as a pretty good tough player," Zeidel explained. "And that's the way it should be."

SUPPORT THE 1963 ADL APPEAL

the ADL bulletin
515 Madison Ave., New York 22
Entered as 2nd class matter

Free can be sit in Sat A.M.

[See EFV notes verso]

WISCONSIN STATE AFL-CIO

SECOND BIENNIAL CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS

Wisconsin Hotel, Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Friday and Saturday, November 1-2, 1963

FRIDAY
Nov. 1

8:30-9:30 a.m. REGISTRATION - Mezzanine

GENERAL SESSION - Ballroom
Peter Zagrodnick, Chairman, Wisconsin State AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, presiding.

INVOCATION - Rev. G. Aubrey Young

WELCOME - Mr. George A. Haberman, President Wisconsin State AFL-CIO

GREETINGS - Hon. Henry W. Maier, Mayor of Milwaukee

GREETINGS - Hon. John W. Reynolds, Governor of Wisconsin

→ ADDRESS - Hon. Fred Harvey Harrington, President of the University of Wisconsin

INSTRUCTIONS - Mr. Peter Zagrodnick

12:00 LUNCHEON - Circus Room

→ GUEST SPEAKER - Mr. James Farmer, National Director of CORE

Output 175-190

FRIDAY
1:30-4:00 P.M. WORKSHOP SECTIONS

#1. STRENGTHENING WISCONSIN CIVIL RIGHTS LAWS

MODERATOR: Mr. Ralph Koenig, Director of Citizenship and Education, Region X, UAW, Milwaukee

DISCUSSION LEADERS:

Mr. George W. Hall, Secretary-Treasurer, Wisconsin State AFL-CIO

Assemblyman Michael Barron, Milwaukee

Rev. G. Aubrey Young, Director, Governor's Commission on Human Rights

Mr. Mathias F. Schimenz, Chairman, Industrial Commission

#2. HATE GROUPS

MODERATOR: Mr. Aaron Aronin, Field Director, Jewish Labor Committee, Chicago.

DISCUSSION LEADERS:

Mr. Richard Humphreys, Education and Research Director, Allied Industrial Workers of America

Mr. Emory F. Via, School for Workers, University of Wisconsin

Bill Abbott
~~Mr. Darrell Smith, Area COPE Director, AFL-CIO~~

Mr. Saul Sorrin, Executive Director, Milwaukee Jewish Council, Regional Office of Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'rith

#3. LOCAL UNION PROGRAMS

MODERATOR: Mr. Russell R. Lasley, Vice President, United Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers, AFL-CIO

DISCUSSION LEADERS:

Mr. William H. Oliver, Co-Director, Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Department, UAW

Mr. Stanley J. Gregory, Administrative Assistant Region X, UAW

Mr. Harry Green, Sr., Business Agent, Loc. 65, Roofers

Mr. Francis C. Shane, Executive Secretary, Committee on Civil Rights, United Steelworkers of America

Mr. Milton Pyzik, Chairman Milwaukee County Labor Council Civil Rights Committee

#4. MINORITY GROUPS

MODERATOR: Mr. Hilton E. Hanna, Executive Assistant, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America

DISCUSSION LEADERS:

Mr. Tom Miglautsch, Member of Governor's Commission on Human Rights

Rt. Rev. Msgr. Franklin J. Kennedy

Mr. William F. Connolly, Bruce Publishing Co.

Mr. John W. Schmitt, Vice President, Wisconsin State AFL-CIO

SATURDAY
NOV. 2

9:30-11:45 a.m. WORKSHOP REPORTS AND DISCUSSION - Ballroom

PANEL CHAIRMAN - Mr. Boris Shishkin, Director Department of Civil Rights, AFL-CIO

12:15-1:45 p.m. LUNCHEON - Circus Room

CHAIRMAN: John W. Schmitt

GUEST SPEAKER: Hon. Myron L. Gordon, Justice State Supreme Court

oeiu 9 afl-cio kp

Radical Rt vs. Hate Groups —

Relation to Public Policy —

Success of Rad. Rt. related to C.P. Threat —

Unions
Elections (Berg.)
Coll. Barg.
Political Participation
Southern Organizing as integrat to nat'l labor standards
& to

Soc. Sec.
N.L.R.B.
Trade Income Tax

Fed Aid to Housing —
V.A.
F.H.A.

Resolutions: Acquire materials —
Watch dog Committee
Special Committee - state wide
Inform locals

Political Memo from COPE

COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION, AFL-CIO
815 16th STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

No. 24-63 December 2, 1963

John F. Kennedy

A leader has been lost, and the competence of words withers before the searing tragedy of events.

Let it be said, simply: There has been a death, a tragic death, in the family of man.

GEORGE MEANY, Chairman WM. F. SCHNITZLER, Secy.-Treas.

JOHNSON URGES PASSAGE OF JFK PROGRAMS; EMPHASIZES CIVIL RIGHTS AND TAX SLASH

President Lyndon B. Johnson, addressing a joint session of Congress, has called on the Congress to complete the work begun by the late President John F. Kennedy and on Americans to "put an end to the teaching and preaching of hate and evil and violence."

The President emphasized the two major bills that his predecessor had urged in recent months, civil rights and a tax cut. He said: "No memorial oration or eulogy could more eloquently honor President Kennedy's memory than the earliest possible passage of the civil rights bill for which he fought. We have talked long enough in this country about equal rights," Johnson said. "We have talked for 100 years or more . . . it is time now to write the next chapter—and to write it in books of law."

He called for passage of the bill to "eliminate every trace of discrimination and oppression based upon race or color."

Johnson asked, too, early approval of the tax bill, "a bill designed to increase our national income, our federal revenues, and our insurance against recession." He said the bill "means more security for those now working and more jobs for those now without them."

"This is no time for delay," President Johnson stated, and he urged "strong, forward-looking action" on aid to education "to help bring the light of learning to every home and hamlet in America"; youth employment, foreign aid, medical care for the elderly.

For his part, Johnson promised, "This nation will keep its commitments from South Vietnam to West Berlin. We will be unceasing in the search for peace; resourceful in our pursuit of areas of agreement even with those with whom we differ . . ."

He said he would continue this government's "unswerving support of the United Nations" and our "honorable and determined execution of our commitments to our allies." He vowed maintenance of military strength "second to none," expansion of foreign trade, continued programs of mutual assistance in Asia and Africa and continued support of the Alliance for Progress.

In the aftermath of President Kennedy's tragic death, President Johnson said, "The time has come for Americans of all races and creeds and political beliefs to understand and respect one another."

"Let us turn away," he urged, "from the fanatics of the far left and the far right, from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law, and those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream."

"Let us here highly resolve," he said in closing, "that John Fitzgerald Kennedy did not live—or die—in vain."

LEGACY

In his three years in office, the late President Kennedy created for millions of Americans a shining legacy of progress illuminated by his deep concern for the welfare and security of his fellow citizens and the people of the world. These are some of the monuments to his memory:

A nuclear test ban, a step back from the abyss of war and toward the goal of peace; a manpower retraining program to help the jobless learn new skills; aid to depressed areas to attack chronic unemployment; giant steps toward the achievement of equal rights for all Americans; increased compensation for the unemployed; increased social security benefits for the elderly; increased minimum wage; new programs in mental health; aid to medical school construction and scholarship help for doctors-to-be; the Peace Corps; the Alliance for Progress; housing; equal pay for women.

SILENT REBUKE TO EXTREMISTS

Words that were never uttered remain now as a silent rebuke to the extremists, far right and far left, who in recent years have poisoned the American political dialogue. The following paragraphs are excerpts from the speech President John F. Kennedy was to deliver in Dallas, Texas, but which was never made:

"In a world of complex and continuing problems, in a world full of frustrations and irritations, America's leadership must be guided by the lights of learning and reason—or else those who confuse rhetoric with reality and the plausible with the possible will gain the popular ascendancy with their seemingly swift and simple solutions to every world problem.

"There will always be dissident voices heard in the land, expressing opposition without alternatives, finding fault but never favor, perceiving gloom on every side and seeking influence without responsibility. Those voices are inevitable.

"But today other voices are heard in the land—voices preaching doctrines wholly unrelated to reality, wholly unsuited to the sixties, doctrines which apparently assume that words will suffice without weapons, that vituperation is as good as victory and that peace is a sign of weakness.

"We cannot hope that everyone will 'talk sense to the American people.' But we can hope that fewer people will listen to nonsense."

ROY REUTHER TO LEAD 1964 REGISTER-AND-VOTE DRIVE

Roy Reuther will direct the 1964 AFL-CIO register-and-vote campaign, President George Meany has announced. Reuther, who led similar drives in 1960 and 1962, is administrative assistant to the president of the United Auto Workers and heads the UAW citizenship department. He will be on leave of absence throughout the 1964 drive and will work within COPE.

In addition to mobilizing manpower, the drive will focus on reform of state and local laws which limit registration. These include poll taxes, discriminatory literacy tests, unreasonably limited hours for registration, unfair residency requirements. The campaign also will seek changes in permanent registration laws to prevent unnecessary dropping of voters from the poll lists.

WM. F. SCHNITZLER, Secy.-Treas.

COPE AWARDS EARNED BY 64 UNIONS

COPE awards were presented at the AFL-CIO convention to 64 national unions which met their full quota for the COPE voluntary dollar drive. Eighteen of the unions have a perfect record of meeting their quota eight years in a row, since the AFL-CIO merger. They are:

Asbestos Workers, Brewery Workers, Communications Workers, Elevator Constructors, Glass and Ceramic Workers, Glass Bottle Blowers, Flint Glass Workers, Lathers, National Maritime Union, Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, Photo Engravers, Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, American Radio Association, Rubber Workers, Theatrical Stage Employes, Stereotypers, Textile Workers Union of America, and the Typographical Union.

Other winners were: Seven-year awards—Horse Shoers, Papermakers and Paperworkers, Plasterers, Steelworkers. Six-year—Distillery Workers, Hatters, Plate Printers. Five-year—Auto Workers, Laundry and Dry Cleaning, Marine and Shipbuilding, Roofers, Tobacco Workers, Transport Workers. Four-year—Operating Engineers, Hosiery Workers, Retail, Wholesale and Department Store, Siderographers, Broadcast Employes and Technicians.

Three-year—Chemical Workers, Newspaper Guild, Packinghouse Workers, Sleeping Car Porters, Upholsterers. Two-year—Coopers, Furniture Workers, Window Glass Cutters, Insurance Workers, Mechanics Educational Society, Plumbers, Retail Clerks, Seafarers, United Shoe Workers, United Stone and Allied Products Workers, Street and Electric Railway Employes. One-year—Bricklayers, Brick and Clay Workers, Clothing Workers, Commercial Telegraphers, Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, Jewelry Workers, Leather Workers, Marine Engineers, Sheet Metal Workers, Transport Service Employes, Utility Workers, Meat Cutters.

COPE Memo is published every two weeks by the Committee on Political Education, 815 - 16th Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Subscription price $1.00 per year.

POSTMASTERS — ATTENTION. Notice to Publisher Form 3579 should be sent to C.O.P.E., 815 - 16th Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Second class postage paid at Washington, D. C.

ORDER BLANK FOR "POLITICAL MEMO FROM COPE"

Enclosed is $_____. Please send _____ subscriptions at $1 a year (25 cents a year each for 10 or more subscriptions mailed to one address) of the "POLITICAL MEMO FROM COPE" to:

Name_____

Address_____ City_____ State_____

Signed_____ Union_____

New? ☐ Renewal? ☐

Mail to: COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION
815 16th St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

EMORY F VIA
825 EXTENSION BLDG
UNIVERSITY OF WIS
MADISON WIS

Committee on Political Education, AFL-CIO
815-16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C., 20036

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AFL-CIO

political memo from COPE

GEORGE MEANY, Chairman WM. F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer AL BARKAN, National Director

NO. 2 — 64 JANUARY 27, 1964

GOP Sets Sights on Record Spending for '64 Campaign

The Republican Party is gearing up for its biggest money-raising effort yet. It plans to raise a record $12.1 million to finance its national headquarters activities for the 1964 elections. This is up $1 million from 1960 and exceeds by $2.1 million planned Democratic Party requirements.

According to a report in the Washington Star, GOP fund-raisers hope to collect $3.5 million from a 22-city closed-circuit TV $100 a plate dinner January 29 when the drive for dollars begins. Brief speeches by party leaders and contenders for the presidential nomination will be carried to diners. Speakers will be former President Eisenhower, Richard Nixon, Sen. Barry Goldwater, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, Gov. William Scranton, Gov. George Romney, Sen. Thruston Morton and GOP National Chairman Rep. William Miller. A similar affair is planned for July following the GOP nominating convention.

Another $1.7 million will be sought from $1,000 contributors, and $2.5 million is projected from $10 contributors. State and local dinners, direct mail and other fund-raising approaches are aimed at collecting the balance, to add up to $12.1 million.

Right Wing

Rightists Push Anti-Civil Rights Drive

Dixiecrats in Congress are bolstered in their fight against passage of civil rights legislation by prominent right-wing leaders, who have formed the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms, Inc., a lobbying organization. Its offices are right across from the Capitol.

Director of the committee is John J. Synon, former assistant director of Americans for Constitutional Action and a regular participant in political action conferences conducted by the rightist Human Events.

Secretary-treasurer is John Satterfield of Mississippi, segregationist leader, former president of the American Bar Association. He was once president of the Circuit Riders, which among other things, publishes lists of clergymen of all faiths, and of educators and editors it suspects of being subversive—a blacklist. Circuit Riders also has advertised in the John Birch Society magazine, "American Opinion."

President of the committee is William Loeb, publisher of the reactionary Manchester, N.H., Union-Leader, a major supporter of Sen. Joe McCarthy in the latter's hey-day. Loeb was on the national policy committee of the extremist For America, a member of the Congress of Freedom and an advisory board member of Young Americans for Freedom.

Of the $22,000 reported spent by the group in one quarter of 1963, $20,000 was provided by the Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission, which operates on public funds. In other words, Mississippi taxpayers' money—Negro taxpayers as well as white—is being used to underwrite the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms.

Medical Care, Anyone?

Since the third quarter of 1962, daily service charge in hospitals has soared 6.6 percent and the cost of hospital insurance by three percent, according to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Overall medical care prices have hit a record high of 117.2 (1957-1959 is base period of 100 percent), and hospital costs alone are 139.6, up nearly 40 percent from the base period. These orbiting costs hit hardest America's millions of elderly, but the American Medical Association continues to insist there's no need for President Johnson's proposed health care program under social security.

Public Backs LBJ Goals

Swift congressional action on a tax cut, civil rights and health care for the elderly, sought by President Johnson, has widespread public support. According to the Gallup Poll, these three issues top the list of "musts" among Americans. Aid to education and an attack on the unemployment problem also rate high on the list.

HEAR, HEAR!

Columnist Bill Gold, discussing super-patriot demagogues in the Washington Post: "The need in these times is for big men, not big mouths."

The Strange Case of AMPAC's Slipped Disc

The picture (below right) is a reproduction of a flyer printed by the American Medical Political Action Committee, political arm of the American Medical Association. The flyer has been distributed to some 2,600 persons, mostly doctors, throughout the nation, accompanied by a record which purports to be an actual recording of a meeting of Allegheny County (Pa.) COPE. AMPAC claims the voice on the record is that of Paul Normile, Director of District 16, United Steelworkers. The record portrays Normile using threats and coercion to collect COPE dollars. Normile says the record is a fraud. He has sued the AMA, which has assumed responsibility for AMPAC, for libel and invasion of privacy. The case is now being tried in U.S. District Court in Washington. Normile is prepared to prove "beyond reasonable doubt" that the voice on the record isn't his, with supporting evidence by an expert on linguistics.

Originally, AMA President Edward Annis insisted he knew the record was authentic and claimed he welcomed the suit. Later, however, he said his statement had been based on the belief the AMA "and the people with whom they work . . . would never do anything like this."

Subsequently, AMPAC ordered all its state chairmen to stop distributing the record, to recall any that had been distributed and to have circulation and playing of the record stopped.

The record originated in cloak-and-dagger circumstances in Pennsylvania. Walter Hughes, executive director of the state AMPAC affiliate, says in early 1962 a man he knew only as "Irv" presented himself as a disgruntled union member who would provide material for doctors in their fight against health care for the elderly under social security.

More than a year later, in March, 1963, "Irv" advised Hughes he had the material, and said Hughes would be contacted by a third party. The third party turned out to be a man who called himself "Cousin." He told Hughes of a tape recording he would sell for $20. Hughes bought it, and it was this tape that became the record AMPAC distributed. Hughes admitted he could not authenticate the tape, but AMPAC officials went ahead and reproduced it anyway and began distribution. About half of the 5,200 records AMPAC had pressed were sent out before Normile's suit was entered.

AFL-CIO President George Meany has labelled the AMPAC record "an absolute fraud" and Steelworkers President David McDonald called it "an electronic fabrication." McDonald pointed out the voice on the record, its inflections and choice of words were not Normile's. He cited other discrepancies in the record: The speaker on the record addresses those attending the meeting as "COPE leaders," yet there are no COPE leaders in USW, since the union has retained the title "Polictical Action Committee" (PAC) for the organization that seeks voluntary political contributions within the union.

Another example McDonald cited is the record's use of the term "shop steward," a phrase not used in the Steelworkers Union, which has "grievance committeemen" instead. Also, the speaker on the record refers to 146,000 USW members in Allegheny County. The actual number is about 90,000.

Stern criticism of the AMPAC record has come from Sen. Paul Douglas (D.-Ill.), who said: "If this most powerful and best-financed lobby in the country . . . is resorting to such tactics, I think that Congress has an obligation to investigate." He charged "obvious disparities between the record and fact" show the record "is a badly done forgery."

DOCTORS' POLITICAL PRESCRIPTION

The record you are about to play is the transcription of a meeting held early in 1963 by the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education (COPE) in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania. The speaker is Paul Normile, COPE Chairman of Allegheny Labor Council and Director of District 16, United Steel Workers.

AMPAC obtained this transcription from a COPE member -- a man who opposes, as many members of the labor movement do, the high pressure methods which COPE resorts to in its effort to dominate government at every level within the United States.

Voice of COPE

AMPAC

Having heard the record we think you'll agree that membership in AMPAC and your own state's medical political action committee is essential to the maintenance of freely practiced medicine under a system of constitutional government.

Sincerely,
DONALD E. WOOD, M.D. Chairman
Board of Directors, AMPAC

COPE Memo 1/27/64

Insurance Heads Back Health Care

Two private insurance company executives have testified that health care for the elderly under social security, rather than harm the insurance business, would actually help it. At House Ways and Means Committee hearings, Frank Blackford of Miami, former life insurance company president, testified the social security approach to health care "provides an answer with which the insurance industry not only can live, but at the same time would enable it to do an even better job."

Murray Lincoln, president of Nationwide Insurance, told the committee the proposed health care bill would give private insurance companies a better chance to "offer attractive supplementary plans." He said: "I am concerned about the poor, but I am also concerned about the responsible middle-class citizen who has a haunting fear that an expensive illness will wipe out a lifetime accumulation of savings, threaten the ownership of a home or make him submit to the humiliation of a means test."

Nixon Grabs Strong Lead In GOP, Harris Poll Finds

Richard Nixon, defeated for the presidency in 1960 and for governor of California in 1962, holds a commanding lead over other potential Republican presidential nominees, the Louis Harris poll contends. On the basis of a poll of the GOP rank and file, Harris says Nixon is the first choice of 43 percent. Sen. Barry Goldwater ranked second with 23 percent and New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller third with 22 percent.

Birchers Spend $2 Million A Year

The rightist John Birch Society spent $2 million last year peddling its line of discord and suspicion. JBS fuhrer Robert Welch revealed most of the expense was for printed material pouring out of the society's Belmont, Mass., headquarters. Latest JBS promotion: Stickers to be glued on envelopes, saying "Communism Killed Kennedy."

A Question of Morals

U.S. Chamber of Commerce president Edward Neilan made headlines recently, charging federal loans to areas hard hit by long-term unemployment are "immoral subsidies." Yet, reveals Rep. Wright Patman (D.-Texas), Neilan's Delaware bank enjoys what amounts to a federal subsidy of $590,000. This comes from $17 million deposited in the bank by the federal government, money on which the bank need pay no interest.

Patman points out, unlike the federal money deposited in Neilan's bank, area redevelopment loans, which help create jobs for the unemployed, are not interest-free but must be repaid with full interest to the Treasury.

COPE Memo is published every two weeks by the Committee on Political Education, 815 - 16th Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Subscription price $1.00 per year.

POSTMASTERS — ATTENTION. Notice to Publisher Form 3579 should be sent to C.O.P.E., 815 - 16th Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

17 17

Second class postage paid at Washington, D. C.

ORDER BLANK FOR "POLITICAL MEMO FROM COPE"

Enclosed is $..... Please send ..... subscriptions at $1 a year (25 cents a year each for 10 or more subscriptions mailed to one address) of the "POLITICAL MEMO FROM COPE" to:

Name.....

Address..... City..... State.....

Signed..... Union.....

New? ☐ Renewal? ☐

Mail to: COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION
815 16th St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

EMORY F VIA
R25 EXTENSION BLDG
UNIVERSITY OF WIS
MADISON WIS

LBJ Lays Facts on Line in Frontal Attack on Poverty

President Johnson and his Council of Economic Advisers have laid on the line the facts about poverty in the United States and have called for a coordinated "frontal assault" by federal, state, local and private forces to eliminate its roots and consequences. In his economic report to the Congress, the President said America's high standard of living is a "hollow achievement" to the one-fifth of our citizens who live "without hope" in poverty. He said 35 million Americans exist on per capita income of only $590, compared with the national average of $1,900.

Backing up the President's demands for a war on poverty, the Council of Economic Advisers urged a change in the entire national attitude toward the problem. "We must open our eyes and minds to the poverty in our midst," it said. The poor "inhabit a world scarcely recognizable, and rarely recognized, by the majority of their fellow Americans . . . isolated from the mainstream of American life . . . a world where Americans are literally concerned with day-to-day survival—a roof over their heads, where the next meal is coming from."

The Council report continued, "It is a world where a minor illness becomes a major tragedy, where pride and privacy must be sacrificed to get help, where honesty can become a luxury and ambition a myth.

"Worst of all, the poverty of the fathers is visited upon the children." In line with this, much of the President's attack on poverty centers on education.

Statistically, the Council reported 47 percent of the poor live in the South, 25 percent in the North Central region, 17 percent in the Northeast and 11 percent in the West. In addition, it pointed out:

- Nearly one-half of all non-white Americans live in poverty.
- More than 40 percent of all farm families are poor.
- More than 11 million children are raised in poverty.

Three Locals Win '64 Cope Honor Awards

Three local unions already have won COPE 1964 honor awards for contributing one dollar per member to the COPE voluntary dollar drive. They are OCAW Local 5-243, St. Louis; CWA Local 4372, Portsmouth, Ohio (this is the third year in a row Local 4372 has been first in CWA to reach 100 percent); OCAW Local 2-653, Riverton, Wyo.

Forty-four locals have reached the 100 percent mark for 1963: Ala.—Brewton, Pulp, Sulphite 941. Calif.—San Leandro, Chemical 733; So. San Francisco, Packinghouse 263. Colo.—Leadville, Fire Fighters 869; Longmont, Printing Pressmen 614. Conn.—New Haven, Brewery 37. Wash., D. C.—Street & Electric 689-A. Fla.—Jacksonville, Papermakers 636; Nichols, Chemical 36; St. Petersburg, Stereotypers 171. Ga.—East Point, Chemical 367; Griffin, CWA 3215; Valdosta, Packinghouse 429. Ill.—Chicago, Chemical 671; Taylorville, Allied Wrkrs. 898. Ind.—Jeffersonville, Chemical 728; Muncie, Papermakers 1044; South Bend, CWA 5802. Ka.—Kansas City, Packinghouse 36. La.—Mathews, Packinghouse 1420. Mass.—Fitchburg, Upholsterers 322; Housatonic, Papermakers 584; Worcester, Elevator Constructors 47. Mich.—Hazel Park, Horseshoers 19; Marshall, Papermakers 1022; Muskegon, Papermakers 813; Papermakers 1020; Plymouth, Papermakers 1001. Minn.—Brainerd, Papermakers 164; St. Paul, Brewery 97. Miss.—Vicksburg, CWA 3518. N.J.—Atlantic City, IATSE 310; IATSE 77; Newark, Packinghouse 747. N.Y.—Mineola, Packinghouse 456; Rochester, IATSE 25. N.C.—Winston-Salem, IATSE 635. Ohio—Springfield, CWA 4326. Okla.—Tulsa, Packinghouse 637. Pa.—Butler, IATSE 342; Devon, Papermakers 333; Philadelphia, IATSE 752. Tex.—Houston, Insurance Wrkrs. 24. Va.—Norfolk, Street & Electric 1177.

Two locals recently hit 100 per cent for 1962; Minn.—Winona, Packinghouse 305. Va.—Norfolk, Street & Electric 1177.

EDUCATION—Key to attack on poverty

GROUP RESEARCH REPORT

Vol. 3, No. 5 March 16, 1964

Opponents of Urban Renewal get together

A protest meeting at Rockford, Ill., against the urban renewal program of the federal government has flung into the national press an issue which has been worked for several years by the organized right wing. Reporters discovered a few days before the meeting—held March 6, under auspices of the Rockford Chamber of Commerce, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Illinois Manufacturers Association—that letters of invitation included signatures of three leaders of the John Birch Society—T. Coleman Andrews, Wm. J. Grede, and Robert Love.

The press was also stimulated by the fact that the idea for the meeting ostensibly came from a group of nine members of Congress. In spite of public disclosure—or because of it—eight of the Congressmen attended and delivered prepared speeches in a well-coordinated attack on urban renewal and general encroachment by the federal government. They were: John Dowdy (D-Tex.), Bruce Alger (R-Tex.), John Kyl (R-Iowa), George Huddleston, Jr. (D-Ala.), John Anderson (R-Ill.), William Widnall (R-N.J.), Frank T. Bow (R-Ohio), and Thomas Curtis (R-Mo.).

Some of these are very powerful where urban renewal is involved. Only a few weeks earlier Congressman Dowdy, who is Chairman of a Subcommittee investigating urban renewal, had an article in the Reader's Digest entitled "The Mounting Scandal of Urban Renewal," which friends of UR alleged was ghost-written for him by S. Howard Evans, the urban renewal specialist at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Both Evans and Dowdy have denied any ghost-writing, but at least one of the Congressmen who went to Rockford (Curtis) told the Washington Post that his introduction to the meeting was through Evans.

A sidelight of the Rockford meeting was a speech by William G. Barr, Executive Secretary of the Washington-based National Parking Association and candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress from an Illinois district. In the audience was one of his group's members, D. F. Antonelli, Jr., described by the Post as "a dominant landholder" in a District of Columbia project before it was set up for urban renewal. Dowdy noted Antonelli's presence as he told a "horror story" about the project.

Among the midwest businessmen who signed the call for the meeting along with the three Birch leaders were several who have contributed to right-wing activities. For example, John Burkhart, President of the College Life Insurance Co. of Indianapolis, contributed $100 to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists; was president of the Foundation for Voluntary Welfare, a subsidiary of the William Volker Fund which supports conservative academic projects; was a sponsor of Fred Schwarz's School of Anti-Communism at Indianapolis last fall; and contributed $100 to the Americans for Constitutional Action. Another participant, James Rogers, has been an instructor at The Freedom School, the ultra-right training ground near Colorado Springs.

Urban Renewal is an old target

Like other objects of extremist attack, such as the Supreme Court or the United Nations, urban renewal can also be criticized legitimately from all political directions. For instance, the use of the power of eminent domain to clear poor people out of slums is an exposed nerve which can be rubbed by social workers, property owners, dispossessed minorities, city planners, politicians and many others. The right-wingers have been rubbing it for several years, chiefly in the form of resistance against Federal encroachment. Here are some of the hard-core opponents of UR:

—Human Events, which published an attractive 16-page special supplement last April called "The Case Against Urban Renewal." Titles of articles included "Corruption Unlimited" and "Bulldozers and Boondoggles" (by Congressman Alger). In addition, the newspaper has almost made anti-UR articles a regular feature.

—Dan Smoot has devoted several entire issues of his Report to the subject, using titles such as "Urban Renewal and A Soviet America."

—The John Birch Society, which printed an article by Prof. Revilo P. Oliver last fall that included this statement: "Every observer of criminal activities must admire the neatness with which urban renewal simultaneously accomplishes its four objectives. . . . "

—Daughters of the American Revolution, which has distributed anti-UR material, some of it reprinted from Willis E. Stone, the chief advocate of repealing the Federal income tax through the "Liberty Amendment."

—Kent and Phoebe Courtney, publishers of The Independent American and numerous pamphlets, one of which says of UR: "Significantly, the abolition of the right to own private property is one of the goals set forth in the Communist Manifesto."

—We, The People!, which devoted part of a program last year to attacks on UR, one by Dr. Hugh Ramsey, who is active in numerous far-right groups and is a Birch endorser.

—The Congress of Freedom, a Nebraska-based group on the far-right who were among the earliest critics of urban renewal.

—H. L. Hunt's Life Line, which has devoted several broadcasts to UR.

—The Foundation for Economic Education, a conservative organization which publishes The Freeman, from which Reader's Digest reprinted an article in 1961 entitled "The Fallacy of Urban Renewal."

News of organizations

Young Americans for Freedom, the pro-Goldwater group, has started publishing Report on the Left, a newsletter by William Schulz, who has been an officer of YAF, member of the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, reporter for Human Events, and aide to commentator Fulton Lewis, Jr.

Dr. Fred Schwarz's Christian Anti-Communism Crusade is featuring a tape recording of Lee Oswald, the accused assassin of President Kennedy, made during Oswald's debate in New Orleans with Castro opponents. And Billy James Hargis, head of Christian Crusade, is touring with Carolos Bringuier, who debated Oswald.

The 20th Century Reformation Hour, run by Rev. Carl McIntire, is mailing pleas signed by his son, Carl Thomas, to pressure Congress into over-riding the Supreme Court's prayer decisions. The son signs for International Christian Youth and says contributions are tax deductible.

The National States Rights Party, meeting at Louisville, nominated arch-segregationist John Kasper as its Presidential candidate but politely ejected George Lincoln Rockwell, head of the American Nazi Party, because "he calls his group a national socialist party" and "anybody who is a socialist is also a leftist."

Thurman J. McCormick, Executive Director of the Association for Freedom of Choice, which led a drive in Kansas City, Mo., to force a public accommodations ordinance to a vote, admits he is a member of the John Birch Society. He says such proposals come from the Communists.

Intercollegiate Society of Individualists is the latest group to join the "Hall of Free Enterprise" building project at the New York World Fair, started by the American Economic Foundation. ISI continues to attract speakers from the right wing of the academic world to its numerous campus seminars.

Human Events, which has officially remained aloof from the Birch argument, is getting more ads from companies run by Birch leaders. Recent examples: Grede Foundries (William Grede), Rock Island Oil & Refining Co. (Fred C. Koch) and Spindale Mills (A. G. Heinsohn). The weekly is also featuring appeals for funds headed by a committee which includes many Birch stalwarts.

The Black Muslims have been split by the announcement of Malcolm X, a top leader of the Negro group, that he is forming a black nationalist organization aimed toward more political action and protest.

Manion Forum, Inc., which had failed for 8 years to file annual reports required by Indiana law (p. 81, 1963), has complied with the order to do so—at least to some extent. Reports have now been furnished for the years 1956-59. However, it is contended that since 1959 the radio program-newsletter have been operated through the Manion Forum Trust, instead of the corporate entity, and that the Trust is not required to file reports. The reports filed showed a steady growth in budget from $150,000 in 1956 to over $385,000 in 1959. While official figures for more recent years are not available, an article a year ago in The Progressive said the Forum's expenses "cannot run less than $600,000 a year by the most conservative estimate."

Eisenhower comments on Birch charges

General Eisenhower's attitude toward the pro-Birch activity of his former Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, has come to light in the form of a letter to Congressman Ralph Harding (D-Idaho), who criticized Benson late last year.

In the letter, published without permission, Eisenhower expressed gratitude for Harding's speech and said: "Your honest and unselfish effort to set the record straight is something that warms my heart." Harding had reproached Benson, a fellow Mormon, for refusing "to defend that courageous President" who had "defended him through 8 stormy years."

POLITICAL NOTES: Americans for Constitutional Action has published a special 20-page supplement to its "ACA-Index" asserting that President Lyndon Johnson "compiled one of the most 'liberal' voting records in the Congress during his last six-year term as a United States Senator." . . . The advertising firm selected by the Goldwater for President Committee—Fuller & Smith & Ross—was previously a volunteer agency for Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge . . . when Joseph Martin, Jr., resigned as Republican National Committeeman for California to work for Rockefeller, he said he had a desire to prevent the GOP in that state from "becoming a mere branch of the John Birch Society" . . . retired Navy Captain William R. Anderson, who resigned as Vice President of Freedoms Foundation to help set up a "domestic peace corps," is running for Congress in Tennessee . . . Congressional candidates from Maryland include two right-wingers, John H. Hiser and Brent Bozell. . . . Donald Jackson, former member of the House Un-American Activities Committee and now head of the Anti-Communist Voters League, is running in the GOP primary for Senator from California.

Group Research Report is published semi-monthly by Group Research, Inc., Room 422 1404 New York Ave., N.W., Washington 5, D. C.

Labor Fights The Enemies of Democracy

"Now, in regard to these extremists . . . They have justified their existence by the existence of the other fellow . . . The John Birchers try to justify their existence by pointing to the Communists; the Communists point to the John Birchers and the other right-wing groups in order to justify their own existence. They have a similarity of operation. They use smear and slander tactics . . . Organized labor, as represented by the AFL-CIO, rejects with equal fervor the John Birchers and the Communists as being equally repulsive to democracy and the ideals of democracy."

George Meany, President, AFL-CIO

The Enemies of Democracy

"Freedom and democracy are not mere words. The very strength of their meaning compels them to be living symbols against which the forces of tyranny must dedicate their every thought and action.

"Because of the overriding interest held by members of the American labor movement in the preservation of our free society and our democratic institutions, these few words are put down. They indicate not merely the policy of the AFL-CIO but also the direction of our attack upon those who seek to destroy us as a nation, as citizens, and as free trade unionists."

—George Meany

American Labor Fights for Freedom Against All Enemies of Democracy

Extract from an Address by President George Meany to the Conference on Extremism, Los Angeles, April 19, 1963

We are living in an age of phenomenal progress in science and technology. There has been a profound transformation in world power relationships. Recent years have seen a great awakening of many peoples and their achievement of national independence. Everywhere, we witness a growing determination on the part of great masses of people to share in the material and cultural benefits made possible by modern science. These revolutionary developments must be viewed in the light of the epochal conflict between freedom and dictatorship. The outcome of this conflict will decide whether these profound changes will advance, retard, or possibly destroy human freedom and well-being.

In this crucial era, American trade unions are active in the promotion of responsible citizenship. We are not mere onlookers. We are not neutral—either at home or abroad—in the struggle between the forces of progress and the ranks of reaction. Labor has a greater stake in the preservation and promotion of freedom than any other section of our national community. Without democracy, there can be no free trade unions; without free trade unions, democracy cannot last long. The Fascist, Nazi, Communist and Falangist—totalitarian regimes—have taught us that where free trade unions are outlawed and destroyed, there freedom is extinguished not only for the working people but for entire nations.

From its earliest days, organized labor in our country realized what was at stake for all the people, not only for the workers, in the struggle between democracy and despotism. The first resolution on foreign affairs adopted by the A. F. of L. Convention in 1896, championed national independence and democracy for Cuba and the Cuban people. A half century ago American labor protested against our government entering into an extradition treaty with Czarist Russia. Samuel Gompers considered the proposed treaty an insult to our country, because as a freedom-loving nation we could never trust the honor and good faith of a despotic regime which persecuted people for their religious beliefs and political ideals.

The ranks of organized labor grew through vigorous battle for greater democracy and better conditions at home. Thus strengthened, our interest and participation in the struggles between democracy and despotism abroad grew. The humanitarian character of our movement and the multinational origin of the American people and our early organizations provided fertile soil for this interest and activity.

Experience over the years has taught us certain valuable lessons.

We have learned that our country must have a progressive social and healthy economic fabric at home in order to overcome the domestic and foreign enemies of our democratic way of life. American democracy can never be fully secure at home, nor can it defeat the totalitarian enemy from without, as long as race discrimination, massive unemployment, and poverty plague millions of our citizens and weaken the foundations of our free way of life.

We have learned that dictators on the Right (Fascists, Nazis, Falangists) and the dictators on the so-called Left (Communists of every fashion or faction) make the trade unions their first target for domination and destruction.

We have learned also, without question, the utter futility of trying to appease any dictator.

We have learned that as citizens and as workers we must play a vital role in helping our country develop an effective democratic foreign policy for advancing freedom, human well-being.

We have learned that in our shrinking modern world we must work energetically to help build an international free trade union movement embracing the workers of every race and region. Only through such a labor movement can we protect and promote decent labor standards and human rights in Africa and Asia and Latin America, as well as in Europe and North America.

It is the rise of Hitler which greatly accelerated and expanded American labor's participation in international trade union relations and world affairs. The 1933 convention of the American Federation of Labor, held the year Hitler came into power, scathingly denounced the Nazis for their barbarous persecution of the Jewish population. We denounced with equal force Hitler's destruction of the trade unions and other democratic institutions in Germany. We lost no time in rallying moral, political and material support not only for the trade unionists but also for all other victims of the Nazi and Fascist terror regimes.

We worked tirelessly for an Allied victory over the Axis powers in World War II. We are proud beyond words of our contribution to this victory. But, throughout the war years, American labor never lost sight of the fact that the Soviet regime, momentarily allied with the democracies, was totalitarian and hostile to individual dignity and human freedom. We realized that the post-war years would be stormy and trying. The 1944 A. F. of L. Convention resolution, providing for the establishment of the Free Trade Union Committee, stated in part: "The coming years will be grave and solemn. At this critical period in the world's history—now that we are on the verge of a victory of arms—we must also fight with determination for a victory of ideas. Free trade unions by their very nature are the implacable enemies of dictatorship and injustice."

After the war ended, Moscow sought to exploit, for its own sinister ends, the vast goodwill it had gained during the war as a reluctant ally of the western democracies. It launched a major offensive to capture control of the trade unions and use them to prevent or paralyze the economic reconstruction and the political consolidation of the European democracies. The Soviet rulers set up the so-called World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU) in order to further their overriding aim of world conquest and communist transformation.

Today, the free world recognizes the tremendous service rendered to democracy by the A. F. of L. when it refused to associate with the W.F.T.U. and succeeded in exposing and breaking up this fifth column of the Communists.

American labor heartily supported the Marshall Plan. We rallied the European free trade union movement to defeat the Moscow-directed campaign against the rebuilding of the western democracies. American labor worked tirelessly to help our free trade union colleagues (especially in Western Germany, France, and Italy) defeat the Communist drive to capture their organizations after years of Nazi-Fascist terror. Fortunately for the cause of democracy, our fight was fully successful among the Western German and Berlin workers. Were it not for American labor help, the Communists would today have complete control of the trade unions in France and Italy.

Had the Communists been able to capture the entire free trade union movement of these countries, French and Italian democracy would be much weaker — if in existence at all. It is doubtful whether there would today be a healthy and strong democratic Federal German Republic, if American labor had not helped their trade union colleagues in Germany.

Today, American labor and the free trade unions of other lands, with a membership of 56,000,000 are joined within the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Through this free world labor body and our own channels, American labor aids the promotion of free trade unionism particularly in the developing countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

Likewise, the Alliance for Progress program has no stronger supporter than the AFL-CIO.

We have supported the UN from its very inception. In the drafting of the UN Declaration of Human Rights, American labor played a vital part. It was upon the initiative of the A. F. of L. that the Ad Hoc Committee on Forced Labor was established jointly by the UN and the ILO. In 1953, this Commission made a devastating indictment of the Soviet Union and an unequivocal condemnation of its slave labor system.

American labor's contribution towards working out the UN policy against forced repatriation of prisoners at the close of the Korean War won the warmest commendation of the United Nations leaders in the field.

American labor realizes fully the overwhelming importance of the conflicts between democracy and dictatorship. That is why it is sometimes shocking to realize the fuzzy thinking of some of our so-called liberals who look upon the Communists as misguided liberals—liberals who have gone wrong.

Surely they must know that months after Stalin's death, the Soviet Union, under Khrushchev, crushed the East German revolt, in June of 1953. They must know that in 1956—3½ years after Stalin's death — the Soviet dictatorship drowned the Hungarian democratic revolution in blood. Can it be that they never heard of Khrushchev's threat to use his rockets for blowing Britain and other free countries off the face of the earth? It is strange that this so-called liberal sector does not have a word to say about Khrushchev's part in the building of the Wall of Shame in Berlin.

Surely these people cannot really believe that Khrushchev served the cause of peace when he stealthily shipped his rockets and then denied having placed them in Cuba? Even Stalin was never this reckless!

The right wing and the left wing have one common purpose. They want to destroy the democratic way of life that we enjoy here in the United States. They want to subjugate the individual to some kind of state machinery. They want to deny completely the dignity and freedom of each individual human being.

They want to impose a dictatorship of the right or the left. Well, the first victims of these dictatorships have always been workers. This must be so because you cannot dictate the affairs of any country unless you control the means of production. It just wouldn't make sense to try to dictate the affairs of any country unless you had control of the means of production.

So, in the final analysis, it doesn't make a great deal of difference to the worker whether the dictatorship has a right-wing label on it or a left-wing label on it. The result from his point of view is the same. Mussolini, Franco, Hitler, Stalin, Mao Tse-tung, Khrushchev, all of them, destroyed the trade union movement and brought the workers into subjugation. So, the type of dictatorship doesn't make any difference to the trade unions. We know that we can't live under a dictatorship. We know that we can't carry on our trade union philosophy under a dictatorship.

Now, in regard to these extremists—I am delighted that this conference is calling attention to them. There is something about these extremists that somewhere along the line they meet, temporarily perhaps, because of the fact that they have a common objective, because of the fact that they see in one another a like mind with like ideas. This was true in Germany prior to the advent of Hitler. Perhaps it is not very well known, but the German Communist party, quite active in that day, teamed up with Hitler in the elections that were held prior to 1933. This was done with the common idea of defeating the Social Democrats, in other words, the people who believed in democracy, the people who believed in—let's call it—middle-of-the-road philosophy. They joined up, one with another, to defeat the Social Democrats.

Here we find also that they have justified their existence by the existence of the other fellow. In other words, the John Birchers try to justify their existence by pointing to the Communists; the Communists point to the John Birchers and the other right-wing groups in order to justify their own existence.

They have a similarity of operation. They use smear and slander tactics. Just as an example of this: back in the early days of 1940, the Jewish Socialist leaders of Poland, who created an obstacle for the Communists in control, were tried, denounced and executed as Nazi spies. Of course they were actually anything but Nazi spies, they were just as opposed to Hitler and the Nazis as anyone could possibly be, but it suited the momentary convenience of the Communists to accuse them of being Nazi spies.

Here we see the John Birchers throwing accusations all over the place. It was only a couple of years ago they accused President Eisenhower of being a Communist and a tool of the Communists. Secretary Rusk and many, many other prominent people have been accused similarly. So, the extremists use the same tactics.

Organized labor, as represented by the AFL-CIO, rejects with equal fervor the John Birchers and the Communists as being equally repulsive to democracy and the ideals of democracy.

Now, having said this, let me make it clear that while we believe they are equally detestable, that they are equally repulsive from our point of view as defenders of democracy, it would be rather foolhardy at this stage, to equate them as a threat to our way of life. This would be very foolish. The John Birchers and the right-wing extremists by whatever name are a nuisance, and they have money and they are going to continue to campaign; they are going to continue to find people who are willing to put their money into a group they think might destroy or render the trade union movement impotent, and which will try to stop all liberal, forward progress. But, they are not the menace at the present moment that the Communists are. The real menace—the real danger to our way of life at the present time—is the menace that is posed by the Soviet Union and its determination to spread the idea of Communism to the entire world.

This is the fountainhead of Communist power—the Soviet Union. And let us not underestimate this power. Remember, they have, under subjugation in Eastern Europe, in the satellite countries and in the Soviet Union, 300 million people. Add to that 700 million more under Communist control in China and then realize the military might of the Soviet Union. The power that it has developed in the field of rockets, the technological progress that it has made and finally, don't let us underestimate the Soviet Union; it's no longer the country with a tremendous high percentage of illiterates. This country is now using education as they use everything else—as part of their plan for world conquest.

This is their plan and when you look at it you say, "Why?". Why do they want to dominate the rest of the entire world? They have successfully imposed their Communist system on the Soviet Union, they have complete control of the people—there is no question about that.

The Commissars and the heads of the party now live in grand style in the palaces of the grand dukes of Russian royalty. And why is it that they want to extend Communism beyond their borders, why do they want to extend it to the rest of the world?

There is no secure future for Communism so long as freedom exists anywhere in the world. They know from experience that freedom is contagious, that in the hearts and breasts of all humans, no matter how long freedom is denied, there is always this inherent desire to be free. And the Soviets know that they cannot maintain their system if their people are exposed to democracy and to freedom.

Therefore, this is a relentless campaign to spread Communism throughout the entire world. It is not a sign of confidence on the part of the Soviets, to me it is a sign of weakness, a sign that they do not have confidence in their system. They are afraid to let it compete with the democratic free way of life. This is why we must look at their propaganda, try to measure it for what it really is. Take their propaganda of peaceful coexistence. They do not mean peaceful coexistence, because it is in direct contradiction to their philosophy which they have had from the early days of Lenin, through Stalin and Khrushchev; their philosophy is that it is not possible for Communism to coexist with the so-called free society.

If they really meant anything by this idea of peaceful coexistence, they had a wonderful opportunity in November 1956, to demonstrate this to the world.

Poor little Hungary decided they wanted to govern themselves, that they had had enough of the Communist Party governing them with the backing of the Soviet Union. So, they made a move and sought to develop a government under which they could govern themselves. And, for a few days, it looked like they might be successful.

Now, the Soviets, under a flag of truce, made a deal with them and then mowed them down with tanks—thousands of tanks. Thousands of people were destroyed, tens of thousands sent to Siberia.

Why were the Communists afraid to coexist with a free Hungary? Surely Hungary was no military threat to them. No economic threat to them. No threat to them in any possible way. The only reason they could not permit coexistence with Hungary was and is that they cannot afford to expose their own people to freedom on the borders of the Soviet Union; this, they felt, would be the stepping stone not only to the loss of Hungary as a satellite but quite rapidly the loss of many, many other satellites who were only waiting for similar opportunities.

The sum total of it was that they could not allow their own people to have a contact with freedom because if they did they might like it and they might have some ideas about the Soviet rulers and the Communist fraud.

The answer to Communism is democracy. The answer to Fascism is democracy. More democracy. Make the democratic system work, make it work better, provide full employment for America's people, wipe out the shame of racial discrimination, provide better educational facilities for our children, provide better homes for the people of America. This is the answer to Communism and the extremists of the right wing, and this is the answer that the American trade union movement is going to pursue. We know and the people of the free world see that we need not have any fear of the extremists' subversion providing we understand it and oppose it intelligently and resolutely. We must fight it and defeat it for what it is—the most dangerous enemy of human dignity, decency and freedom and of world peace.

American labor will continue in the forefront of this fight against all enemies of freedom, right or left. We will fight them because of our revulsion to what they stand for; we will fight all enemies of freedom because we cherish the great values of democracy which they seek to destroy.

Labor Fights The Enemies of Democracy

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

815 SIXTEENTH ST., N.W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

GEORGE MEANY
President

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
Secretary-Treasurer

PUBLICATION NO. 134
MARCH 1964

17 17

COPE
AFL-CIO

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AFL CIO

Committee on Political Education

GEORGE MEANY chairman WM. F. SCHNITZLER secretary-treasurer ALEXANDER E. BARKAN national director
815 16TH STREET, N.W. ★ WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006 ★ PHONE 393-0220

May 20, 1964

Mr. Robert Ozanne, Director
The University of Wisconsin
432 North Lake Street
Madison, Wisconsin 53706

Dear Mr. Ozanne:

Your letter of May 12 to the Union Label Dept. has been referred to this office. COPE printed the enclosed map and distributed it at our recent series of area conferences.

Unfortunately, weo do not now have it in quantity. However, it shouldn't be hard to reproduce.

I hope this is helpful to you.

Sincerely yours,

Ben Albert

Ben Albert, Director
Public Relations

BA:kc
oeiu #2
afl-cio

AFL-CIO Civil Rts Dept — Rehrer

Rehrer

November 3, 1965

Mr. Al Rehrer
Southern Area Director
AFL-CIO
Civil Rights Department
40 Marietta Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Al:

Three things since I am afraid that our travel schedules will prevent our having a phone chat. One, could you still send me a copy of the directory the union and state and local central bodies ~~published by~~ AFL-CIO? Two, do you still have ~~the apprenticeship~~ trades list, and when can I arrange to see it? If I am not in, and it is convenient for you to come by SRC, it could be duplicated by my secretary, Jan Shortt.

Three, George had indicated that he may get together with you to go to Athens to look over the rooming situation because his schedule and mine will not mesh. Your going with him suits me fine and I could live with any agreement that the two of you make. The University of Georgia will perhaps want final word to come from me to simplify its life. To keep the University from getting caught in the middle of this and other decisions, they know from Joe and from me to get final word from me. If the two of you are not in agreement, I'll talk with you both and come to a decision. If you agree on the spot, however, simply suggest that they tentatively set aside what it is you want and that I will confirm it with them as soon as we have talked.

The program committee will meet in Washington on November 10. I would be happy to have any last words from you prior to the meeting.

Thanks. Trust your Florida and Mississippi travels went well.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:js

22 December 1965

Miss Doris Gibson
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Doris:

I understand from Al Kehrer that you are working on a bibliography. I do not know if he has been in touch with you about using it at the NILE Southern Staff Institute. It could be useful in two ways. One, if it is now available it could serve as a guide for materials to have on hand in the Institute library, or if it is not complete perhaps you could send us a suitable selection for our purposes. Second, it could be distributed to the participants as a bibliography.

Let me know what the possibilities are.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

January 4, 1966

Mr. Donald Slaiman
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Dear Don:

Enclosed is a copy of the final program; I expect only minor changes. Also enclosed is a copy of a letter to George indicating a few items in each week that require attention.

You will note that I suggest that I shift you back to the morning spot rather than afternoon. We could still let you have afternoons, give Ray the Thursday evening and let him leave, and you and Walt hold forth on Friday morning. We can do what you like but I do believe it would run better to put you in the morning and Ray in the afternoon.

Let me know what you think.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures

NEWS DIGEST

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

W. Willard Wirtz, Secretary for EPW — Apprentices

Week of February 28, 1966

FIRST NEGRO MEMBERS TO BE TAKEN IN
BY STEAMFITTERS UNION IN ST. LOUIS

Washington, D. C.-- St. Louis, Mo.-- Ten Negroes will be among the forty new journeyment to be taken in immediately by the Steamfitters Union Local 562, in St. Louis, it has been announced by the Union Business Manager, John Lawler.

The Negro workers will be given on-the-job training by assignment to veteran Steamfitter journeymen; attend classes at Union Hall two nights each week; and draw full journeyman pay. They will serve a six-month trial period before being made members of the International. Any drop-outs will be replaced with other Negro workers.

The apprenticeship program, it was announced, will be activated within 30 to 45 days with at least two and probably six Negroes in the first class.

Mr. Lawler noted in his announcement that this program has been under consideration for months and has no relation to the "Arch project."

The U. S. Department of Justice, at the instance of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance of the U. S. Department of Labor recently filed a two-pronged suit aimed at preventing and removing any racial discrimination on the part of the St. Louis AFL-CIO Construction Trades Council and five of its member locals, especially as regards the St. Louis Gateway Arch project.

# # #

April 6, 1966

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Don:

I am very sorry that our schedules in Washington were such that we could not get some time together. I trust the next trip will work out better.

The enclosed letter and proposal to the Florida AFL-CIO indicates the kind of program we will be suggesting to a number of the state labor bodies. Al thought that you would like to see this copy. We would be most happy to have any reactions from you.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure

19 May 1966

Mr. E. T. Kehrer, Director
Southern Office, AFL-CIO
Civil Rights Department
40 Marietta Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Al:

Enclosed, finally, is your speech on populism. Emory and I enjoyed reading it, even though it did lead to some heated debate between us (our differences of opinion may simply be symptomatic of the over-and-under-thirty syndrome).

Thanks for letting us see it.

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning

JB

June 22, 1966

Mr. E. T. Kehrer
Southern Area Director
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
40 Marietta Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Al:

I note that the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union District # 3 will have its council meeting at the Henry Grady Hotel July 8-10. I will not be in town during that period, but it may be that this is a meeting which you could find a way to relate to if your schedule permits.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

File

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

August 4, 1966

Memorandum from:

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

The attached clippings should be of more than average interest.

DS:cr
attachments: 3
opeiu-2-aflcio

ARKANSAS GAZETTE, Sun., July 31, 1966.

COPE Backs Holt, Brands Justice Jim As Bad for State

The Committee on Political Education (COPE) of the Arkansas State AFL-CIO voted almost unanimously Saturday at Little Rock to endorse Frank Holt for governor.

Holt placed second in Tuesday's Democratic primary and will oppose Jim Johnson for the Democratic nomination in the primary runoff August 9. COPE did not endorse a candidate for governor in the July 26 primary.

COPE Saturday also endorsed Claude Carpenter over Joe Basore in the runoff for lieutenant governor. James H. Pilkinton, who ran third, had been endorsed by COPE in the first primary.

The sentiment at the meeting was more anti-Johnson than pro-Holt. There was no debate as such on the motion to support Holt, since no one spoke in Johnson's favor but several members of COPE made strong statements urging endorsement of Holt. They drew heavy applause.

Someone made a suggestion that COPE remain neutral but when the final vote came on the motion to endorse Holt, there were only three or four scattered "nays." About 220 delegates from around the state attended the meeting.

J. Bill Becker, state president of the AFL-CIO, said the decision to ask for endorsement of Holt was "the hardest decision I ever had to make. It's tough to make these decisions but sometimes in the history of the labor movement, you have to take a stand. We would be derelict in our duty if we put our head in a sand and watched this state, if this man is elected, go to hell."

Becker said the issues in the runoff were "larger than the minimum wage, larger than social security. These issues go to the core of our democratic institutions."

He said Johnson had a satisfactory labor record, perhaps better than Holt's, "but the issues are greater than just a labor record." "We've said we're citizens first and labor union members second, and it's time to demonstrate our belief in that statement," Becker said.

Becker accused Johnson of "spreading hatred" in campaign speeches around the state. "Justice Jim has gotten off on the wrong track," he said. "If he's elected we'll be set back 20 years."

J. S. (Bill) Weeks of Little Rock, president of Local 6508 of the Communications Workers of America, said there was "no other way for the labor movement to go," and it was up to the labor leaders to supply members of local unions with "some sense of direction" urging their support for Holt.

Ed Ball of Benton, sub-district director of the United Steel Workers, said that Johnson was "rabble-rousing the people of Arkansas, agitating their fears, prejudices and hatreds, so he can be elected governor."

Referring to Johnson's criticism of President Johnson's administration, Ball said, "What is this federal government that's so bad? It's the branch of government that has done the most for people like us."

Ball said Johnson was attracting the support of the John Birch Society, the Ku Klux Klan, the White Citizens Councils and other groups hostile to organized labor. "Those who are campaigning on state rights and socialism are attracting the support of our enemies," he said.

Says Labor Opposes Johnson's Platform

Herb Bingaman of North Little Rock, district director of the United Auto Workers, said, "Jim Johnson stands for the things we in labor are opposed to. He's for segregation and against the national administration and the federal programs. We in Arkansas are having a hard enough time as it is bringing the standard of living up."

At the close of the meeting, several other delegates urged that union members work hard to see that Holt is elected.

Johnson was one of six Democratic candidates for governor who spoke before the COPE convention last May and he told the delegates he would "love to have" the endorsement of organized labor. COPE gave him more applause than any other candidate but decided against endorsing anyone.

Remains Neutral On 4th District Race

As it had before the first primary, COPE decided Saturday not to endorse either candidate in the runoff for United States representative from the Fourth District. However, several delegates urged support for David H. Pryor of Camden and drew strong applause. Pryor is opposed by Richard S. Arnold of Texarkana.

Becker said the committee that recommended endorsements had decided that concentrating labor's efforts on the races for governor and lieutenant governor was "in the best interest of the total program," and that was why no endorsement was made in the Fourth District race.

COPE also decided against endorsing either Tom Gentry or John A. Fogleman in the runoff for the state Supreme Court, Position Six.

Joe Purcell, whom COPE endorsed for attorney general before the first primary, spoke briefly at the start of the meeting, thanking labor for its support and asking labor to "double your efforts" in his runoff with Attorney General Bruce Bennett.

COPE met at the Albert Pike Hotel.

Arkansas Gazette.

Established November 20, 1819

The Gazette Is the Oldest Newspaper West of the Mississippi

Published every day by Gazette Publishing Company, Gazette Building, Little Rock Second Class Mail Privilege authorized at Little Rock, Arkansas. Second Class postage paid at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Labor Statesmanship

At the time of the annual convention of the Arkansas AFLCIO's Committee on Public Education, in late May, we mildly chided the state labor organization for the circumstance that, while no formal endorsement was made in the governor's race, pending a close look at the kind of campaign the several candidates would make in the weeks that were to come, Jim Johnson appeared to have received the most delegate applause.

The criticism possibly was a little unfair, considering that COPE, after all, had not made any formal endorsement in the governor's race, and that it had endorsed a certified progressive, Joe Purcell, in the race for Attorney General—a three-man race where the alternatives were a great deal clearer than in the (at the time) eight-man race for the Democratic nomination for governor. The state AFLCIO leadership, at least, thought that our criticism was unfair, and said as much in an editorial in the Arkansas Union Labor Bulletin which, in the interest of fairness, we reprinted in toto.

This bit of very recent history may be necessary to a full appreciation of our statement now that COPE's firm rejection of Mr. Johnson, at its between-primaries meeting on Saturday, was labor statesmanship at its finest, as some of the language used by state AFLCIO President J. Bill Becker and officers of a number of affiliates was labor spokesmanship at its most eloquent—and, at times, at its bluntest.

Mr. Becker, for example, conceded at the outset that Mr. Johnson's record on issues affecting organized labor might be as good as that of his opponent—Frank Holt—and maybe a little better; but, he added, labor could not afford to isolate itself from the wellbeing of the community-as-a-whole in the way that a vote for Johnson would surely do:

> "We've said that we're citizens first and labor union members second, and it's time to demonstrate our belief in that statement."

Specifically, Mr. Becker went on, the issues involved in the gubernatorial runoff are "larger than the minimum wage, larger than social security. These issues go to the core of our democratic institutions * * *."

In our original editorial on the subject, we noted that our own suspicion was that Jim Johnson's heart was really with the descamisados (Juan Peron's "shirtless ones") of this world and against the "advantaged" classes. The unspoken stipulation then was that Mr. Johnson's heart was with the reasonably white descamisados of the world, and with the stipulation spoken out loud this time, the earlier description of the candidate still goes. We also remarked on the other occasion that if Mr. Johnson actually was formally called and chosen by labor (which we never for an instant really thought he would be), "he would bring to labor's service the triple-distilled venom that he has brought to other well-known causes in the past." And we concluded then:

> "The question is, how much more hatred can we here in Arkansas stand?"

This was the question that—in one form or another—was asked by Bill Becker and the other Arkansas labor leaders on Saturday.

There is, we suppose, a little of the nihilist in the most sedate of us, and there is a certain raffish attraction in the Outrageous Outsider as a type in politics.

Jim Johnson is a great deal more than that, however: He is the most dangerous radical to enter Arkansas politics in our time, and he could—given his head—bring to the class war some of the calculatedly divisive skills that he already has brought to what some of his followers clearly hope will be outright race war.

However, to argue that opposition to Mr. Johnson is confined largely to members of the threatened Arkansas Establishment (in the larger sense), one perforce must list the Committee on Political Education of the Arkansas AFLCIO as part of that establishment, which would certainly come as news to J. Bill Becker and his lieutenants.

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER, WEDNESDAY MORNING, AUGUST 3, 1966

Full Employment Key to Negro Woes, Bundy Asserts

Former Presidential adviser McGeorge Bundy told the Urban League National Conference here Tuesday that full employment is the best remedy for the ills besetting the Nation's Negroes.

Bundy, once adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson and now president of the Ford Foundation, told some 1400 delegates in the Sheraton that "no special economic measure and no compensatory program, however large and well designed, can do as much as full employment" to alleviate Negro social and economic ills.

"On this issue, in political terms," he said, "there can be common cause among working men, farmers, young people, the bolder businessmen — and the Negro."

He said he agrees with economist James Tobin of Yale University, who has said that "only an excessive fear of inflation and an obsessive concern for the balance of payments are preventing us from running the economy at such a rate that overall unemployment averages three percent."

He added that "if we do that well, then the evidence of history argues that we can cut the average rate of Negro unemployment in half."

Bundy charged that "often we're incapable of defining what are our own bests interests, so full unemployment would be hard to get.

"However, it can be done."

Turning his attention to the problems of large Northern cities, Bundy said that "nothing would be more foolish, for both white men and Negroes, than an angry assumption that the cities of the future are problems of one color only.

"Most Negroes," he said, "understand this proposition, I think. "I am not sure that white men do."

He said if the day of "utter degeneration" ever comes for the cities, "history will mark it as the white man's fault. And the white man's companies will have to take the losses.

"For the city is like the Negro in this: It is past the point where all it needs is equal treatment; what it needs now is what the farmer needed, and got, a generation ago . . . It needs help.

Earlier in the day a Harvard economist presented the plight of the American Negro in terms of sheer numbers.

Today, said Otto Eckstein, almost half of all Negroes enter the job market without a high school education and only 15 percent of the colored youngsters go to college—as opposed to about 30 percent of the young white population.

However, continued Eckstein, "much of the responsibility for insufficient education falls on the families of the Negro children."

His statistics were appalling.

Although Negro unemployment rates parallel those of whites, there is a great disparity in their significance: nearly twice as many colored people still are unemployed as are caucasians.

Even if present trends in filling job categories continue, by 1985 the picture will be that Negroes will still mak up 23.7 percent of all laborers, 38.4 percent of domestics and 24.6 percent of all farm workers.

This as cpposed to a 1965 figure of Negroes occupying 10.6 percent of professional and technical jobs, 8.4 of clerical positions, 6 percent of sales jobs and 8.8 percent of skilled craftsmen slots.

And as a chilling word of caution, Eckstein added that "The act of quitting (school) is only the final step of a long drama of failure on the part of the school system to devise a meaningful and valuable cirriculum for the student."

He hopes the recent legislation would remedy this.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

Rec'd 10/20/66

October 18, 1966

Ex Res

MEMORANDUM

FROM: Don Slaiman, Director DS
Department of Civil Rights

In response to the re-statement of principles and commitment to the cause of civil rights by national civil rights leaders appearing in the October 14th issue of the New York Times, AFL-CIO President George Meany sent the attached letter to AFL-CIO Vice President A. Philip Randolph.

Also enclosed, for your information, please find a copy of the Ad as it appeared in the Times.

WGD:ppo

opeiu #2 afl-cio

Enclosures

THE NEW YORK TIMES, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1966.

Crisis and commitment

No one can any longer doubt or ignore the depth of crisis which today confronts Negro Americans struggling to enjoy full and equal citizenship in their native land. The year's events have piled confusion and uncertainty on underlying racial prejudices in the majority population. The consequence has been intensified resistance to change at a time when the need for change is greatest. We consider it imperative, therefore, to make crystal clear to Americans of every origin and of every degree of commitment to justice the principles upon which the civil rights movement rests.

There is nothing new about these principles. What is new are the conditions which compel us to re-state them—not the least of which is their abandonment by some individuals and groups whose positions are nevertheless frequently interpreted as representing the civil rights movement.

I. We are committed to the attainment of racial justice by the democratic process. The force of law and its fulfillment in the courts, legislative halls and implementing agencies, the appeal to conscience, and the exercise of the rights of peaceful assembly and petition are the instrumentalities of our choice. We propose to win genuine partnership for all our people in the United States, within the framework of this nation's constitution.

II. We repudiate any strategies of violence, reprisal or vigilantism, and we condemn both rioting and the demogoguery that feeds it, for these are the final resort of despair, and we have not yielded to despair. Defense of one's family, home and self against attack is not an issue; it is a basic American principle and must not be perverted into a cover for aggressive violence.

III. We are committed to integration, by which we mean an end to every barrier which segregation and other forms of discrimination have raised against the enjoyment by Negro Americans of their human and constitutional rights. We believe that a sense of personal worth and a pride in race are vital to integration in a pluralistic society, but we believe that these are best nurtured by success in achieving equality. We reject the way of separatism, either moral or spatial.

IV. As we are committed to the goal of integration into every aspect of the national life, we are equally committed to the common responsibility of all Americans, both white and black, for bringing integration to pass. We not only welcome, we urge, the full cooperation of white Americans in what must be a joint endeavor if it is to prosper. It should go without saying, that, in seeking full equality for Negroes, we cannot and will not deny it to others who join our fight.

The reaffirmation of these principles must do more than simply distinguish between those who accept them and those who, for one reason or another, no longer choose to operate under them. For us, these principles are inextricably joined with obligations to which we have consistently devoted our meagre resources and our energies. We call upon the nation as a whole to assume the same obligations; its failure to do so will not only extend and perhaps complete the sabotage of our efforts, but will ultimately undermine domestic security and United States leadership in the world of nations.

It is not condoning riots to cry out against the conditions in the Negro ghettos which render some Negroes susceptible to the emotional gratification of pillage, looting and destruction. It is not condoning riots, but demanding the means to end them, that compels us to note the steady worsening of the average Negro's lot in the face of unprecedented general prosperity. It is not turning our backs on the need for education to note that the average Negro college graduate can expect a lifetime's earnings no greater than those of a white high school graduate. It is not an abdication of responsibility, but an affirmation of it, to say that society cannot perpetuate discrimination against Negroes and then blame the victims or their leaders for the outbursts of those who have been made desperate.

It is an obligation of the whole of American society to take the massive actions which alone can turn the downward tide of Negro economic status with its concomitant growth of frustration and bitterness. It is the special obligation of those who can see more clearly and feel more keenly than the rest to assume their own leadership burden and to spare no effort to bring their fellows to an equal comprehension. It is the obligation, in particular, of the mass media to moderate their obsession with sensation and conflict and to help create a climate of genuine knowledge and understanding in which perspective is restored.

The near-total absence of this perspective is reflected in the survey figures showing declines in public sentiment favoring civil rights. Has the nation forgotten, for example, that for every Negro youth who throws a brick, there are a hundred thousand suffering the same disadvantages who do not? That for every Negro who tosses a Molotov cocktail, there are a thousand fighting and dying on the battlefields of Vietnam? It is a cruel and bitter abuse to judge the worth of these larger numbers, the overwhelming preponderance of the Negro population, by the misdeeds of a few.

We cannot ignore the signs of a retreat by white America from the national commitment to racial justice. The inadequacies of enforcement of this commitment, which has been hammered out over long years of judicial, legislative and administrative pronouncement, have been a scandal; yet we have seen the United States Senate scuttling enforcement of antidiscrimination law and refusing to act on legislation to protect Negroes against racist assault. We have seen the appeal of bigotry elevated to a major political instrument, with votes being sought and won across the nation, by exploiting the so-called "white backlash." We have seen sometime friends pulling back in full retreat and yielding to the battlefield scavengers ground which could have been held if it had been fought for.

This trend can be disastrous to the nation's, as well as the Negro's, welfare if it is not checked, if our forces are not rallied and if the hard, demanding job of building lasting public support is not pressed forward now. It can be worse than disastrous for the generation of younger Americans, white as well as black, who would then indeed face a future without viable idealism. Thousands of them have been personally involved in the civil rights movement over the last few years, many in situations involving hazardous confrontations. They are needed now more than ever before, in work which, while seeming more routine and less adventurous, is in many ways harder and more vital. They can be effectively drawn to these new tasks only if they have assurance that the adult world is solidly engaged to the same purpose.

Ninety years ago, this nation permitted the democratic promise of Emancipation to wither and die before a rampant reaction which condemned the Negro to segregation, disfranchisement, peonage and death. Then, as now, the voices of temporary liberalism sounded discouragement and disillusionment with the capacity of the freedmen for full citizenship. Then, as now, the South capitalized on Northern weariness with the "race problem" and was enabled to shut off the hope of freedom. But the "race problem" remained, and today we are paying for yesterday's default.

We are determined that this history shall not repeat itself and we call upon all our countrymen, black and white, of all faiths and origins, to move with us.

DOROTHY HEIGHT Pres. National Council of Negro Women

A. PHILIP RANDOLPH Pres. Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, AFL-CIO

BAYARD RUSTIN Director, A. Philip Randolph Institute

ROY WILKINS Exec. Director, Nat'l Ass'n for the Advancement of Colored People

WHITNEY M. YOUNG, Jr. Exec. Director, National Urban League

AMOS T. HALL [illegible] Society Conference of Grand Masters, Prince Hall Masons of America

HOBSON R. REYNOLDS Grand Exalted Ruler, Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks of the World

NEWS from the AFL-CIO

NA. 8-3870

October 14, 1966

Following is the text of a letter sent today by AFL-CIO President George Meany to A. Philip Randolph, vice president of the AFL-CIO:

It was with warmth and enthusiasm that I read the advertisement in the New York Times this morning, signed by yourself and your fellow leaders of the Civil Rights movement.

Please extend to each of them my warm thanks and congratulations for they have in this restatement of principles and commitments summed up, in admirable fashion, the problems, the aspirations, the needs of America in this crucial moment in history.

I know that you need no reassurance of the AFL-CIO's intentions but I would appreciate it if you would convey to your colleagues the AFL-CIO's firm and unswerving determination to achieve full equality in America in all fields -- education, employment, accommodations, housing and justice.

Your restatement of commitment to the attainment of racial justice by the democratic process, your repudiation of the strategies of violence, reprisals or vigilantism, your reaffirmation of the goals of integration commends itself to every thinking American.

There is, in America today, a so-called "white backlash." It is deplorable. It was born out of the ability of demagogues to capitalize upon rioting. It stems from unreasoning fear stimulated by the reckless cries of "black power."

It thrives on the ignorance of many citizens as to the real issues involved in equal rights controversies.

You and I agree that extremism is the antithesis of democracy and extremism by advocates of justice for America's minority population cannot be countenanced any more than extremism by advocates of white supremacy. In my book, the advocates of black supremacy and white supremacy belong in the same camp and the American trade union movement opposes both equally.

I know we are also in agreement that the problems faced by the civil rights movement cannot be resolved in an economic vacuum. As the AFL-CIO has repeatedly said, equal opportunity in employment is meaningless unless there is full opportunity; equal housing is impossible until we eliminate the slums and build the homes America needs for all its population -- black or white; equal education is impossible until America puts its money where its mouth is and builds the kind of schools and supplies them with enough well-paid teachers to do the job of providing good education for every one of our children.

-more-

The AFL-CIO is dedicated to building the kind of America which will supply the answers to all of these problems. Our goal is to provide the schools, provide the jobs, provide the homes, provide the health care and provide the understanding that it is poverty and ignorance and despair that are the real root causes of all of America's domestic problems.

The AFL-CIO will not retreat from its commitment to the cause of civil rights any more than it would retreat from its commitment to abolish poverty, illness, suffering, and want in this nation.

You and I agree, I know, that a vital first step to the achievement of our goal must be a massive turnout of every registered voter on November 8, voting for those who back our program, voting in opposition to those who would delay or destroy it. We know both the friends and the enemies of the civil rights movement and of the labor movement in the Congress of the United States.

In the crucial elections of 1966, it behooves both the civil rights movement and the labor movement to support our friends and defeat our enemies. Those who counsel a boycott of the polls this year are either deliberately or mistakenly aiding only the enemies of both civil rights and the labor movements, and are playing into the hands of the demagogues who would use the white backlash to halt social progress in America.

No one could honestly pretend that the road to the achievement of full civil rights for all will be an easy one but it is a road America must traverse for it leads to a goal we must achieve.

In the achievement of that goal, the labor movement marches side by side with the leaders of the civil rights movement, like yourself, who joined in today's restatement of the policies and commitments of the civil rights movement.

Let me reiterate the AFL-CIO's position: We reject out of hand the concept that there can be any first-class or second-class citizenship in the United States. In our country there can be only one class -- citizen -- the highest and most meaningful title in a democracy.

-30-

Rel to

OE Paper

October 31, 1966

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Department
AFL-CIO
815 -16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Don:

I plan to be in Miami for your Southern Advisory Committee Meeting and to spend at least Monday with The Labor School.

Would there be a place in your crowded agenda (last count I heard was 22 items) for a few matters from my program? Hesitate not to say no.

I would like to have announced three types of programs to which SRC could give substantial support in terms of money, planning and administration. These are: (1) Joint Labor Leader-Civil Rights Leader, off-the-record conferences (state-wide or for an area); (2) One to five day institutes for local leaders and/or staff on Civil Rights, Race Relations or the Changing South coupled with basic union courses, if needed; and (3) "Speaker Training" programs for selective union leaders to expose them to the facts, techniques and the human understandings useful in talking about civil rights in local union situations.

I would also welcome a discussion about kinds of printed materials which might be useful for educational programs or more general distribution.

Feel free, of course, to decide how best to work such things in to your busy schedule or to throw them out altogether. It may well be that you will be discussing similar matters in any case, and certainly there is no need to duplicate such considerations with an SRC label on them.

The NILE Southern Union Staff Training Institute Report, revised, is now in Joe's hands.

Thanks for your helpful comments. I look forward to seeing you in Miami.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

cc Al Kehrer

AFL-CIO
Civil Rights
65-66

November 22, 1966

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO
815 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Don:

Thanks for the excellent good news in your phone call of the other day. You will hear from Paul as soon as he returns to the office. We greatly appreciate your assistance.

I am planning to distribute the November Federationist to a combination of SRC mailing lists. First, it will go to the New South subscribers which will include a fair cross-section of southern liberals concerned with racial relations. Beyond this the mailing will go to SRC's board members, to key media representatives, a large number of libraries, a sizable group of student newspapers and student council presidents, to a general group of academics who have shown interest in our concerns, and to a fair selection of regional inter-group relations representatives.

We look forward to receiving the copies for distribution.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

TELEGRAM

To: Mrs. W. Jackson
Natchez, Mississippi

It was with a deep sense of sorrow and regret that the Executive Officers of the United Rubber Workers International Union learned of the disaster suffered by you and your family. This unnecessary and unfortunate event should impress every god-fearing person of the evils of discrimination, hatred, bigotry and prejudice.

The United Rubber Workers will exert every possible effort to bring those responsible for this cowardly act to justice.

We extend to you and your family our deep and sincere sympathy in your hour of bereavement.

Signed/ Peter Bommarito

/jg
3/3/67

RESOLUTION

WHEREAS: Our brother, our member and fellow employee, Wharlest Jackson, met his death on February 27, 1967, at the apparent cowardly, vicious, dangerous and ugly hand of violence; and

WHEREAS: This cowardly, foolish, and useless act has rightfully caused much concern and indignation in this city and state and has broken the hearts of our good people here and everywhere; and

WHEREAS: Local 303 URCLPWA, AFL-CIO desires to assure its members, its friends, the family of the deceased, the city of Natchez and state of Mississippi, and working men and women everywhere that this union condemns, abhors and does not condone any acts of violence, the violation of law, and the destruction of human life; and

WHEREAS: It has always been the policy of this Union to strive for better wages, working conditions, hours of employment for its members, and for better improved economic conditions here and everywhere and to condemn exploitation and destruction of human life; and

Whereas: This Union under the law has no control over the hiring of employees at Armstrong Rubber Company and under the Mississippi, so called, "Right to Work Law" cannot require that any employee of the Armstrong Rubber Company become a member of this Union; and

Whereas: This Union points with pride to its service to the employees of Armstrong Rubber Company since its beginning in 1945, inasmuch, as that it has had a part in providing for its members, and employees at Armstrong Rubber Company not only the best wages, hours, and working conditions in the state of Mississippi, but the same compares favorably with any where in the United States of America; and

Whereas; This union has the sincerest desire to co-operate with all law enforcement agencies in the investigation and apprehension of the guilty party or parties involved in this despicable crime; and

Whereas; That this Union go on record as stating that no one has been denied any job under the collective bargaining agreement; and

Whereas; That this Union go on record that no one will be denied any job under the collective bargaining agreement; and

Whereas; that this Union go on record that there is no differential between jobs because of Race, Color, Religion, sex or National Origin; and

Resolved; That this Union go on record as offering all of its resources, co-operation and facilities in the speedy solution of this crime so that the guilty party or parties shall face the Bar of Justice : and be it further

Resolved: That the members of this Union, their families, its friends and the People of Natchez, Miss, use all of their best efforts to prevent the destruction of valuable things that this Union has worked so hard to build and preserve for the enjoyment of its members and the Community as a whole.

Resolved; That this resolution be inscribed upon the Minutes of this Union as a Memorial to Wharlest Jackson and that his family be furnished a copy of the same.

Thus Resolved. This First Day of March, A. D., 1967.

Executive Board, LOCAL 303, URCLPWA,AFL-CIO

Mississippi
FORMERLY: MISSISSIPPI LABOR COUNCIL AFL-CIO

AFL-CIO
133 SOUTH LAMAR STREET
JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI 39201
XXXXXXXXXXXXX
PHONE 948-0517

March 2, 1967

Statement by Claude Ramsay, President

For Immediate Release:

Yesterday afternoon, Local 303 of the United Rubber Workers Union at Natchez, Mississippi, adopted a resolution condemning the recent assassination of one of its members; Wharlest Jackson had been a member of the local forseveral years and had been active in the affairs of the local union.

In addition to calling upon all governing authorities to solve this heinous crime, the local offered its cooperation to the fullest extent. The resolution pointed out that the members of Local 303 enjoy the highest wages of any industry in the state, and that a contract provision provides that no discrimination be practiced because of race, religion or national origin.

The Mississippi AFL-CIO commends local 303 for taking this forthright action. In addition to supporting the resolution of the local union, the Mississippi AFL-CIO offers its condolences to the members of the bereaved family. The perpetrators of this dasterdly crime must be brought to the bar of justice. Until and unless this is done, no one will be free in Mississippi be he white or Negro.

from the
MA 3-5370

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE, FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1967

AFL-CIO President George Meany today wired the AFL-CIO's expression of "sorrow and horror" on the murder of Wharlest Jackson in Natchez, Missippi, to the Regional Director of the NAACP, Mrs. Ruby Hurley.

At the same time, Meany sent a copy of his wire to Acting Attorney General Ramsey Clark expressing the AFL-CIO's expectation that the Department of Justice would "investigate this atrocious act, arrest the guilty and prosecute them to the full extent of the law."

The text of Meany's wire to Mrs. Hurley follows:

The AFL-CIO joins with its affiliate, the United Rubber Workers, in expressing its sorrow and horror at the murder of Wharlest Jackson. We expect the Department of Justice to investigate this atrocious act, arrest the guilty and prosecute them to the full extent of the law. The AFL-CIO will continue its fight for stronger federal legislation against crimes like this and we will not rest until discrimination and prejudice are driven from every place in America. I am sending a copy of this telegram to Acting Attorney General Ramsey Clark.

-30-

January 24, 1967

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Department of Civil Rights
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Don:

Enclosed are copies of twenty-responses to the mailing of the November Federationist. Also included are excerpts from a number of other responses to that mailing.

You will note the enclosed memos which went out with my mailings. One went with the general mailing and the other to our labor list.

We have received orders for about 500 extra copies which have already been filled. Besides the orders contained in the copies of the letters which are enclosed there were orders from the State Councils on Human Relations in Virginia, Louisiana, North Carolina and Georgia. The mailing went to the SRC Board, Foundations, Intergroup Agencies, Libraries, the SRC Research List, Student Newspapers and Student Council Presidents and the New South mailing list.

I have been pleasantly surprised by the number of responses and their quality. I think it was a good joint effort. I believe that it was Al Kehrer who originated the idea but of course in any reporting of special distributions of the magazine SRC would be happy to receive a mention.

Thanks for your cooperation and quick response in getting the magazine to us.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

January 26, 1967

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Division
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street,.N.W.
Washington, D. C

Dear Don:

I note that the rather elaborate Machinist Non-Partisan League program scheduled for next week will include some spokesmen from minority group organizations. I would be interested in who they are and in having some reading as to the kind of impact they made on the group.

What else would you do with your time?

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

February 17, 1967

Mr. E. T. Kehrer, Director
Southern Office
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Division
40 Marietta St.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Al:

I don't think this is worth much or shows anything of value. It isn't even a very high grade mathematical manipulation.

Though I am not conversant with the real economic meaning of "imported value", it seems to have little meaning here.

P. 178, 2nd paragraph from bottom, first sentence nearly destroys any case they might build. I thank them for their candor, and again on p. 180, middle paragraph.

So we now know that right to work states are economically worse off than non-right to work states. And what else is new?

The attempt here is more sophisticated, therefore more misleading, than the labor movements own propaganda regarding rights to work and its economic impact.

I don't think it helps to get the cart before the horse in the matter of causation and it seems to me clear that a whole range of factors lead to the economic condition the states find themselves in and in turn they and other factors lead to right to work.

Thanks,

March 29, 1967

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Division
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Don:

I trust you got the five copies of the "Minimum Wage Campaign Kit". I appreciate Al's interest in bringing it to your attention and your response to it. I hope that in some places we will be able to get a cooperative program between unions and human relations councils or other civil rights groups.

I understand that you may be interested in revising the kit in some particulars and putting it out as a AFL-CIO publication. I see no obstacle to this although I would like to know what is contemplated. My guess is some of the items might be used with minor changes and it could be worth your while to consider having them printed here using the plates which are already available. For instance, I feel certain that the illustrated pamphlet, "More Money for You?", could have the script changed on individual pages and substitute the AFL-CIO imprint so that it could be obtained at a bulk rate price.

Our own interest here extends primarily to spreading what we consider a good idea, to use up one thousand copies of the kit, and to dispose of 10,000 copies of the illustrated pamphlet. Of course, we would like to minimize our loss.

Since my promotional material is already out, I would expect to receive some orders prior to the AFL-CIO having anything available. When you know when the AFL-CIO material will be ready I would start referring the union orders which come to me to the appropriate AFL-CIO department. However, I would much prefer to use up my own stock first.

Let me know what develops.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

cc: Mr. Al Kehrer

May 2, 1967

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Don:

A letter from Betty Miller (AFSCME) a couple of weeks ago indicated that you had not seen the pamphlet "Know Your Rights". Although it was prepared by the Georgia ACLU and the Georgia Council on Human Relations we gave them some assistance in the project and both V.E.P. and the Labor Program bought copies for distribution. The Labor Program has distributed around 3000 at this point.

I am enclosing a copy for you. It can still be obtained through the Georgia ACLU but our own supplies have been exhausted.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

May 25, 1967

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Don:

One small idea. I had about five hundred copies of the November "Federationist" left over from our earlier distribution. I sent a copy to each of three university labor education programs and suggested that I could supply them with one or two hundred for their summer sessions. The response was favorable. If you or Publications have an abundance of copies you might want to try some ~~othe~~ other schools with summer programs.

I hope to be in Washington on the 31st. If you are in I trust I will get a chance to see you.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

November 4, 1968

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Division
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Don:

This is just a note to catch you up on the conference sponsored by the local Urban League's LEAP program along with the Building Trades Council and Department of Labor. It is scheduled now for December 6, 1968. You may recall that I had spoken with you about the possibility of getting Haggerty to make the main presentation. The Urban League subsequently was in touch with Haggerty, and, I believe with an assist through your office, he agreed to send McSorley. Ray Marshall will also be on the program. Several workshop sessions round out the conference.

If my schedule holds, I will be in Washington November 23 and 24 for a portion of the AFT 189 meetings.

Tomorrow will tell us a great deal. The best of luck to us all.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AFL-CIO Civil Rights

LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE PROGRAM 11, SERIES 9

FOR RELEASE: A.M. PAPERS, WEDNESDAY, JULY 9, 1969

Although politics may be the main thrust of the organized labor-black community coalition in the immediate future, "decent jobs at decent pay" for all workers remains the long-range goal, the AFL-CIO's Director of Civil Rights declared today.

"This is not a power game played in order to divide up the spoils," said Donald Slaiman, but to get legislation and programs to help meet the problems. But, he said, effective operation of programs takes not only "people who will pass the right legislation," but "cooperative work in the community and in the workshop" as well.

Slaiman said that the coalition had "one of the better cooperative working relationships ever in registration and getting out the vote" in the 1968 elections. He said that the percentage of the vote was "higher for COPE-endorsed candidates than it ever was in the black community." As a result of its narrow margin of victory, the new Administration has "moved to the (political) right at a very, very slow pace." Slaiman appeared on LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE, a nationwide radio interview broadcast Tuesday at 7:35 p.m. (EDT), on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The unionist said that the "overwhelming majority of the Negro community" remains interested in integration and peaceful progress, and "is not moving toward separatism and nationalism." But, he cautioned, the civil rights movement and the labor movement -- as well as the militants -- know that"just ending discrimination will not solve the problems of poverty and deprivation, nor even the problems of integration."

"Unless we break up and disperse the ghettos," he said, "we not only will have an intensified apartheid in our major cities, but we will also have a deterioration of the hubs of our total society." And if that happens, he warned, "not only will the Negro youth be lost, but the country will be lost."

Slaiman said that integration of apprenticeship programs is a "very rapidly improving picture," noting that since 1960, the level of black apprentices in registered apprenticeships has nearly tripled. That, he said, is a "more rapid increase on minority participation and a higher absolute percentage than in almost any well-paid part of the labor force throughout the country."

Reporters questioning Slaiman were Frank Swoboda, Washington correspondent for United Press International, and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Incorporated.

- 30 -

(Text of LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE is available at Public Relations Department, AFL-CIO, 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C., room 405)

LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE
Mutual Broadcasting System

PROGRAM 11, SERIES 9
Tuesday, July 8, 1969

SUBJECT : Labor -- Black Community Coalition

GUEST : Donald Slaiman, director of the Civil Rights Department, AFL-CIO

REPORTERS: Frank Swoboda, labor correspondent, United Press International Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Incorporated

MODERATOR: Frank Harden

HARDEN: LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE. Welcome to another edition of LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE, a public affairs program brought to you by the AFL-CIO. LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE brings together leading AFL-CIO representatives and ranking members of the press. Today's guest is Donald Slaiman, director of the AFL-CIO's Department of Civil Rights.

The long-standing coalition between organized labor and the black community has been a key factor in molding much of the nation's social and economic progress in recent decades. Here to question Mr. Slaiman about the factors leading to the formation of that coalition, how it functions today and what role he thinks it will play in the years ahead, are Frank Swoboda, labor correspondent for United Press International, and Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Incorporated. Your moderator, Frank Harden.

And now, Mr. Conn, I believe you have the first question?

CONN: Thank you, Mr. Harden.

Mr. Slaiman, perhaps the civil rights movement has been pushed off the front pages in recent years by the rush of militant events around the country, but, is there a civil rights movement in operation?

SLAIMAN: Very definitely. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is still the largest mass organization.

It has more than 1,500 branches.

It has the chief civil rights lobbyist in the country, Clarence Mitchell.

And, it has on-going influence that doesn't always hit the front pages of the newspapers and television news, because it's not news unless it's dramatic and negative, these days.

CONN: Would you say that the NAACP is the single most influential organization pushing for civil rights today?

SLAIMAN: Yes. Without question.

SWOBODA: Mr. Slaiman, what has been the effect of the black militant movement on the NAACP and on the whole national effort?

SLAIMAN: Well, I think there is a very mixed effect.

The rise of militancy, especially in the very early days of the direct action movement, did a lot of shaking up -- thawed some glaciers.

In more recent times, the effect tends to be more negative, divisive and confusing. These days, unless you identify the speaker, you sometimes can't tell which side he is on. This can be very harmful.

In addition, some of the militant activity has intensified the backlash of people who were already moving toward accepting integration.

However, the fact that there is a good deal of obvious discontent -- that there are obvious problems that people are reacting to -- is not all negative, because complacency is also a big danger.

CONN: Mr. Slaiman, as Mr. Harden noted, there is this working relationship between the civil rights movement and the AFL-CIO. What are you doing in this working relationship?

SLAIMAN: Well, look at the last election -- the last Presidential election -- 1968. It appeared for a while that the old coalition was disintegrating. The liberals -- many of them -- were off in the one-issue area. Many blacks were getting publicity by saying, don't vote -- it doesn't make any difference -- go fishing -- or vote for some splinter candidate like Dick Gregory or Eldridge Cleaver. Yet, we probably had one of the better cooperative working relationships ever in registration and getting out the vote, through the A. Philip Randolph Institute's activities with Negro trade unionists, with the NAACP and other civil rights groups.

The precentage of the vote -- in spite of all the agitation and in spite of all the negative publicity -- was as high or higher for COPE-endorsed candidates than it ever was in the black community. The result was, against great odds, we almost won the election with that old coalition of Negroes, and Mexican-Americans, and old people, and youth, and labor, and liberals.

We almost put together a winning combination.

CONN: Are some examples of this coalition in some of these mayoral races? I'm thinking of how close Bradley came to winning in Los Angeles -- something like 46 or 47 percent of the votes And there was Charles Evers' victory in Mississippi -- Mayor Stokes' in Cleveland -- Mayor Hatcher's in Gary, Indiana. Are these all products of the coalition?

SLAIMAN: They are not exactly alike.

Bradley is the clearest example of what you are talking about, Mr. Conn. There was a liberal -- Negro -- Mexican-American -- labor coalition, with some enlightened businessmen and other people of good will voting far stronger for Bradley than they did a few earlier on the fair housing referendum -- far, far higher.

So, although Bradley didn't win, there is no doubt that with only a very small percentage of the vote being Negro -- some 17 or 19 percent--

Bradley got a big percentage of the white vote.

SWOBODA: Mr. Slaiman, you said that the coalition worked so well in the 1968 election that it almost won. But, it didn't win. As a result, we have a new Administration. What has been the impact of this Administration on the civil rights movement?

SLAIMAN: Well, although we didn't win, we almost won. For that reason, the Administration has moved to the right at a very, very slow pace. In fact, the biggest criticism one can have is, it doesn't move at all-- not that it has moved so sharply to the right. Although it has made some hesitant steps here and there to accommodate Senator Strom Thurmond, (R-S.C), he has never really arrived. That is, the pressure of public opinion, the coalition and the fact that the country really didn't move sharply to the right, has maintained, if not a sharp move forward, at least some forward momentum toward implementing civil rights laws as well as maintaining them.

SWOBODA: Do you think the labor-black coalition can keep this pressure going for the next four years?

SLAIMAN: Well, I can't predict that we will be totally successful, but I think we will keep the pressure going.

Clarence Mitchell said at the recent AFL-CIO Community Services Conference, that we should "welcome the support and cooperation of church groups, and business associations, and other constructive organizations. However we must never forget that we -- that is, labor and the civil rights community -- are the foundation upon which the house of freedom is built. If we crumble and fall apart, the whole structure may well collapse."

So, while I can't predict success, I can agree with Mr. Mitchell, that if we don't at least partially succeed, freedom in this country will be jeopardized.

CONN: Mr. Slaiman, I think there is a question on a lot of peoples' minds as to exactly what direction most of the black population is directing itself. Is it directing itself to the established approach of fighting discrimination -- working for peaceful integrated communities? Or, is the great bulk of the Negro population moving toward separatism, black nationalism, and black militance?

SLAIMAN: Well I would say that the overwhelming majority of the Negro community is not moving toward separatism and nationalism. I would say that most are still interested in integration and peaceful progress.

But, the problem is a little more complicated than just maintaining a push toward integration and ending discrimination.

Not only the militants who are frustrated realize that this isn't enough. The civil rights movement, as well as the labor movement, is also aware that just ending discrimination will not solve the problems of poverty and deprivation, nor even the problems of integration.

As Bayard Rustin said, just after the Civil Rights Bill was signed that unless the Negroes in coalition with labor and other groups, move toward solving the basic economic and educational problems of this country -- on the political scene, primarily -- we would enter a period of frustration and turmoil.

And I think he was right.

The problem of reaching the goals of the integration movement -- that is, equality, not only on paper, but in reality -- is much more complex than just eliminating discrimination. To the degree that we do not see results of progress -- where we see an intensification of housing problems in the ghettos -- we see the high rate of unemployment among Negro youth even after we have a federal Fair Employment Practices law -- this frustration leads to the troubles -- the riots -- the tendency towards separatism. But, it also means that unless we solve these basic problems, we aren't doing what we thought we would be doing when we started down the civil rights path.

CONN: Well, what you are saying then, is that unless the Negro youth finds a job -- finds a place in the community -- and has some hope of being able to raise a family -- has a home and is able to live the type of life that most all of us what to live -- that unless he has some hope of doing this, we are going to lose him as part of the basic American community.

SLAIMAN: I would say so. But, even more important than that. Unless we break up and disperse the ghettos, we not only will have an intensified apartheid in our major cities, we will also have a deterioration of the hubs of our total society.

We are an increasingly urban civilization. If that urbanized civilization -- that is, its centers -- are nothing but deteriorating segregated ghettos, it's not only the Negro youth who will be lost, but the country will be lost.

I think that we have as big a problem with white middle-class youth in our colleges as we have with Negro youth in the ghettos, if not bigger.

SWOBODA: Mr. Slaiman, you talk about the main thrust being politics. Is this what you see as the main thrust of the labor-black coalition in the immediate future -- the work of the political system to bring about these changes? Or, are there other programs -- other involvements?

SLAIMAN: The main thrust starts with politics, but that is not an end in itself.

This is not a power game played in order to divide up the spoils -- divide up jobs.

The purpose of politics is to get programs and legislation that will do something about the problems.

In the area of jobs, our first priority is the O'Hara Bill, to assure that the government will be the employer of last resort -- that people who can work, even if they don't have the education, will get decent jobs at decent pay, as a starter.

Of course, just passing legislation is not the solution -- this isn't the early New Deal. We have to put the programs into operation at the grass-roots level -- at the local level -- at the state level. This requires not only a coalition to elect people who will pass the right legislation, but it also takes cooperative work in the community and in the workshop, seeing to it that the good laws that are passed attain the goals for which they were intended.

CONN: Mr. Slaiman, if there is one thing that the labor movement knows, it is jobs. Of course, that is crucial in this whole picture. What, specifically, is the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions doing now to bring about equal opportunity for jobs among all people?

SLAIMAN: Well, there are several areas. They are all important.

One is legislation, both on the anti-discrimination front and on the job-creation front.

Two, programs to implement these laws. Here again, we have an on-going program to involve our affiliates in ending discrimination within their own locals and resolve complaints on a constructive basis.

We also have the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute, which is putting manpower specialists to work at the local level in a number of programs. They are cooperating with those companies that are hiring the hard-core unemployed, and developing buddy systems to see that our locals cooperate and that our members don't backlash to the hiring of what are generally under-qualified minority group workers.

This is a new program, Mr. Conn. We already have recruited a national staff and 50 field staff -- that is, in 50 major cities there are now Human Resources Development Institute field representatives working with the central bodies, with the National Alliance of Businessmen, and with local unions, helping them develop buddy systems. In the future, these men and women will be working with other manpower programs, many of them union-instituted manpower programs -- in construction and other industries.

Beyond what the employers do, the unions are developing their own manpower programs to up-grade the skills, as well as find job opportunities for minority-group youth and for older workers.

SWOBODA: Mr. Slaiman, I don't think there is any doubt about the attitude and actions of the AFL-CIO and the civil rights movement at the top. What about the rank-and-file? How is the acceptance of these programs at that level?

SLAIMAN: Well, when you say the rank-and-file, you are talking about 14 million people. There is no monolithic rank-and-file.

We have every range of opinion within our membership. You really have to talk about how various levels of the labor movement are reacting to various programs.

If you start politically, we find that there was an alarming percentage -- not as big as many people thought -- but to us an alarming percentage of our rank-and-file reacting to Wallace's siren calls. By election time, we had reduced that percentage quite significantly. Our rank-and-file, I would say overwhelmingly -- 60% to 70% -- supports the candidates and the general programs of the labor movement. But, that other 30 to 35 percent is a large group to work on. As you go up the ranks of our leadership, you get a higher and higher percentage identifying with the objectives of the national labor movement. But it is not monolithic -- it is just a higher percentage.

So, when we talk of implementing a program, or educating our people about a program, we start from the position that we have to increase support for the labor movement's objectives. Sometimes we have to be strenuous, otherwise, it can seriously damage our impact. At other times, we just keep doing it to make progress.

We are never in a position to be complacent -- sure that everything is going to turn out alright, because our members are wonderful people.

They are human beings -- they are American citizens -- they need to know the issues -- they need some leadership -- and they need an opportunity to participate with and become part of leadership in the community.

CONN: Mr. Slaiman, there have been some very confusing statistics abroad in recent years as to the amount of integration in apprenticeship training programs. Many people try to use this as a barometer of how much, particularly the crafts, are integrating. From the information you have, what is the picture?

SLAIMAN: It is a very rapidly improving picture.

In 1960, the statistics showed that of registered apprenticeships, slightly more than two percent were non-white. As of the end of 1968, the figure had risen to 7.2 percent -- that's about triple.

Another figure that the Labor Department released shows that in the first half of 1968, 9.4 percent of the entrants were non-white. That means that although we haven't reached an average of the percentage of the population in this most difficult skilled-level -- where there was, in many of the programs, very little minority participation -- we have seen a more rapid increase in minority participation and a higher absolute percentage than in almost any well-paid part of the labor force throughout the country.

Now, this isn't the end of the road. We still have a long way to go.

But, if people want to measure the labor movement's intentions and results by looking at apprenticeships, I think the record in the last few years has been excellent.

SWOBODA: Mr. Slaiman, do you think the economic realities of such programs as Model Cities will speed this even further?

SLAIMAN: If the money that has been talked about is invested and we can get the follow-up on the kind of solid programs that the construction unions have endorsed in principle, I think it will.

But, there are a couple of "if's."

So far, very little actual money is going into construction programs in Model Cities. We have only the pilot programs in which to show results.

SWOBODA: Do you hold out any hope that you will get that money?

SLAIMAN: That is a political problem -- with an Administration that holds the strings and a public attitude that affects what they do.

CONN: Mr. Slaiman, is a key part of this apprenticeship training pre-apprenticeships for those who just can't measure up to the what it takes to enter an apprenticeship -- prior training to enable them to meet the standards?

SLAIMAN: Yes. There is a need for compensatory preparation to make up for education gaps and access gaps.

CONN: And this has accounted for the difference?

SLAIMAN: I think that in large measure, it has. Yes.

HARDEN: Thank you, gentlemen, Today's LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE guest was Donald Slaiman, director of the AFL-CIO's Department of Civil Rights. Representing the press were Harry Conn, editor of Press Associates, Incorporated, and Frank Swoboda, labor correspondent for United Press International. This is your moderator, Frank Harden, inviting you to listen again next week. LABOR NEWS CONFERENCE is a public affairs production of the AFL-CIO, produced in cooperation with the Mutual Broadcasting System.

- 30 -

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

September 2, 1969

Dear Friend:

Enclosed are several items which may be of interest to you.

The booklet on A. Philip Randolph's 80th birthday dinner contains attractive photographs and memorable speeches praising the career of the labor and civil rights leader.

The key manpower arm of the AFL-CIO, the Human Resources Development Institute, is active in developing job and training programs for the disadvantaged. Our new and informative pamphlet answers many questions about the Institute.

Theodore White's latest effort, Making of the President 1968, was recently published. From his book I am submitting an excerpt highlighting the AFL-CIO's role in the election.

The article by John Roche puts into perspective recent contributions of the organized labor movement.

Through Apprenticeship Outreach there has been a progressive assimilation of minority group youth into apprenticeship programs. A Federationist reprint, Outreach: Skills for Minority Youth, describes the evolvement of this effective program.

(EV)

With all good wishes!

Sincerely yours,

Don Slaiman

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

bfc
opeiu #2 afl-cio
enclosures

See attached publications

Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI

MANPOWER ARM OF THE AFL-CIO

- What is HRDI?
  The Human Resources Development Institute is a new, non-profit corporation established by the AFL-CIO executive council in September 1968.

- What does HRDI do?
  HRDI works at the community level to develop more effective job and training programs for the disadvantaged through greater union participation.

- How does HRDI operate?
  HRDI has field representatives in 50 cities with severe hard-core unemployment problems. They analyze the job and training needs of their communities and work with unions, industry and the government to design programs which meet their needs. Where the need is not being met, HRDI encourages unions to sponsor innovative manpower programs of their own.

- Who are the HRDI field representatives?
  HRDI has recruited an integrated staff of men and women from 27 different national unions. They have been involved in a wide range of civic and community organizations. They share a commitment to the job of bringing America's disadvantaged into full economic citizenship.

- Who are the disadvantaged?
  They are men and women who have trouble finding—or keeping—decent jobs because of a combination or race, age, lack of skill, poor health, inferior education or problems.

- Are the hard-to-employ all members of minority groups?
  No. However, unemployment among non-whites today is twice what it is among whites.

- What is the relationship of HRDI to the AFL-CIO?
  HRDI was set up to be the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO. It is governed by an 11-member board of trustees, all of whom are members of the AFL-CIO executive council. AFL-CIO president George Meany is chairman of HRDI's board and Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO department of urban affairs, is president of HRDI. HRDI is headquartered in the AFL-CIO building in Washington, D.C.

- What is HRDI's relationship to the labor movement locally?
  The HRDI field representative is an integral part of organized labor in his city. He works closely with all the local unions in his community. In most cities, the central labor body provides office space for HRDI in its headquarters. This cooperation makes it possible for HRDI to achieve its goal.

- What is HRDI's relationship to the business community?
  HRDI works closely with the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) in its Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program for hiring and training the disadvantaged. An AFL-CIO representative serves full time as labor liaison to NAB at NAB headquarters in Washington. Local HRDI representatives work closely with local NAB staff wherever possible.

- Is the AFL-CIO's interest in manpower new?

No. The labor movement played a key role in passing the Employment Act of 1946: this law stated for the first time the government's responsibility in achieving the goal of full employment.

AFL-CIO was instrumental in winning support for the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 which for the first time committed substantial federal funds to training and upgrading the nation's work force.

AFL-CIO was a strong advocate of programs for training the disadvantaged under the Economic Development Act and the Economic Opportunity Act.

AFL-CIO continues to press for adoption of a coordinated federal manpower policy to make better use of all the nation's human resources—including the disadvantaged.

- Have AFL-CIO unions sponsored any training programs?

Yes. Many unions have been sponsoring On-the-Job Training (OJT) programs under the Manpower Development and Training Act (MDTA). Some unions conduct training programs of their own without federal assistance. In 52 cities, local building trade councils are cooperating with minority group organizations and the Department of Labor in programs to recruit and prepare minority youth for entry into apprenticeable crafts.

What federal manpower programs is HRDI involved in—and how?

- Job Opportunities in the Business Sector

HRDI cooperates with the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) in their program to hire, train and upgrade the hard-to-employ.

In plants where the disadvantaged are hired, HRDI recruits workers who act as volunteer "buddies" to help the new employees adjust.

- Apprenticeship Outreach

HRDI representatives actively promote programs to recruit more minority youth for jobs in the apprenticeable trades.

HRDI cooperates with the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, the National Urban League, the Workers Defense League-A. Philip Randolph Institute and the U.S. Department of Labor in promoting these programs.

- Model Cities

HRDI representatives work out local agreements between unions and community groups that make it possible to hire and train area residents for jobs in rebuilding their neighborhoods.

HRDI representatives play an active role in Model City planning groups wherever possible.

- On-the-Job Training

HRDI representatives encourage local unions to sponsor their own training programs for the hard-to-employ under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

- Concentrated Employment Program

HRDI representatives work closely with local CEP programs which are designed to give the disadvantaged in slum areas the individual help they need to get and keep a decent job.

- Cooperative Area Manpower Planning System

HRDI representatives present labor's point of view on local and state CAMPS committees. These committees develop manpower blueprints for effective use of all federal manpower programs to meet local job and training needs.

A Human Resources Development Institute

has been set up by the AFL-CIO to involve more unions in job training programs to help the disadvantaged.

The AFL-CIO has long maintained that the best way out of poverty is a good job at a decent wage.

For many Americans, however, this way out has not been available. Because of skin color, lack of skills, poor health, inferior education, age, language problems—or a combination of these—there are men and women in this country who cannot find consistent, meaningful employment. . .
These are the "disadvantaged" and the "hard-to-employ."

Our economy is expanding. Our capacity to produce has been increasing steadily since 1961. In the last five years, some 7½ million new jobs have been created—an average of 5,000 new jobs each day. Yet hundreds of thousands of Americans have been unable to share in this economic growth. . .
These are the "disadvantaged" and the "hard-to-employ."

In 1968, a survey of our 50 major cities indicated that there were 500,000 men and women who had serious employment problems or who had never had a job at all living in the slums of our metropolitan centers.

Because the AFL-CIO believes that human resources are a nation's most valuable asset, it has established a Human Resources Development Institute to operate in the 50 cities where the problem of hard-core unemployment is most severe.

HRDI's task is a critical one: to tap the talent and experience available within the labor movement to develop more effective programs for helping the disadvantaged find—and keep—good jobs at decent wages.

Through HRDI, the AFL-CIO is developing a staff of community-based employment specialists who come from and understand the labor movement, who understand manpower programs and who understand the needs and problems of the hard-to-employ. Their expertise provides a new and important element in the nation's effort to use its human resources more effectively.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board

JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President

HAROLD JACK
Secretary-Treasurer

MERLIN L. TAYLOR
Executive Director

Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Photo by Irene Fertik

Outreach: Skills for Minority Youth

by Robert M. McGlotten & Doris Gibson Hardesty

A unique and imaginative program, Apprenticeship Outreach, is producing evidence that it is helping to crack one of the nation's toughest problems—enabling minority group youngsters to acquire skills and obtain good-paying jobs.

The U.S. Department of Labor recently reported that, of the 225,000 persons in registered apprenticeship programs in 1968, the number of non-whites totaled 16,200 or an increase to 7.2 percent.

A more refined measure of recent progress is that, of the 26,156 apprentices newly-enrolled in the first half of 1968, approximately 9.4 percent came from minority groups.

These figures reflect a systematic and combined effort on the part of the labor movement, the government and private organizations to recruit and place more minority youths in skilled trades. And the rate of progress also reflects the crucial factor of strongly-motivated youngsters seeking to improve themselves.

The extent of the achievement may be appreciated by glancing back at 1960 census statistics. They showed that non-whites made up 2.5 percent of a total 85,682 apprentices in the United States. Thus minority representation has tripled in eight years and continues to increase.

This overdue improvement occurred against a larger economic and legislative backdrop. The nation has enjoyed an unprecedented period of economic growth which has reduced the rate of unemployment. And the 1964 Civil Rights Act, specifically Title VII covering fair employment practices, has helped to desegregate many areas of employment.

But this is not the entire story by far. There had been a painfully gradual improvement in minority participation in apprenticeship programs before (from 1.9 percent in 1950 to 2.5 percent in 1960). The sharp increase of the past few years can only be explained, given favorable economic conditions, by an intensive coordinated effort to achieve progress.

Two major innovations were the Apprenticeship Information Centers (AICs) created by the government to attract minority youth and Apprenticeship Outreach, an even more significant concept. The aim of these two approaches was to deal with the complex problem of bringing minority group youngsters into the skilled trades of the construction industry. One effect of the past history of the craft unions and the industry had been the stifling of the interest and desire of young Negroes in acquiring skills.

This point was elaborated by Professor Ray Mar-

ROBERT M. McGLOTTEN and DORIS G. HARDESTY are with the AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights. McGlotten is a staff representative and Mrs. Hardesty is an administrative assistant.

Apprenticeship Outreach Programs Funded

Bedford-Stuyvesant (NYC)	Knoxville
Harlem (NYC)	Albuquerque
Buffalo	Salt Lake City
Cleveland	Miami
Newark, N. J.	Wyoming (statewide)
Westchester	New Orleans
Detroit	Akron
Baltimore	Portland
Los Angeles	Fort Worth
Gary	Lexington
Oakland (4 counties)	San Antonio
Philadelphia	Milwaukee
Trenton	Chicago
San Francisco	E. St. Louis
San Diego	St. Louis
Cincinnati	Columbus
Omaha	Jacksonville
Boston	Minneapolis-St. Paul
Phoenix	Houston
Oklahoma City	Colorado Springs
Dayton	Nashville
Tulsa	Rochester
Denver	Kansas City, Mo.
Atlanta	Tampa
Dallas	Flint
Pittsburgh	Los Angeles (Mexican-American)

Journeymen upgrading programs

Buffalo	Boston
Oakland	St. Louis

shall in his book, "The Negro and Apprenticeship." Marshall found that minority group youngsters for the most part simply were not applying for existing apprenticeship programs and he sought the reason why.

One reason Marshall found was that they rarely had a model or example of successful craftsmen among their families or friends. Also, high school counselors seldom advised youngsters to enter what was generally considered a blue collar field, even though salaries were often higher and the future brighter than in many white collar jobs. Finally, minority youngsters were too often told by friends and counselors that they couldn't get into the trades anyway.

A successful approach to resolving this problem was developed in New York City in 1963 and 1964 after a court case involving Sheet Metal Local 28. The New York State Commission for Human Rights had charged the sheet metal local with discrimination based on a complaint from an apprentice applicant. The Commission maintained that not once in the local's 76-year history had a Negro been either apprentice or journeyman, thus proving a pattern of discrimination.

The case eventually went to the New York Supreme Court and a ruling was handed down that the next Sheet Metal Workers' apprenticeship class was to be open to all applicants and selection made on an objective basis.

The Workers Defense League, a human rights group which had been involved in earlier apprenticeship cases, helped to recruit minority youngsters for the first class scheduled in the spring of 1965. The union's admission examination was to be given by New York University. The WDL recruited 28 Negro applicants. A total of 340 applicants took the test for a class which would contain 65 apprentices.

Although the WDL tutored its candidates briefly, the highest scorer was 68th. The next highest was 97th. Three white youngsters who placed ahead of the 68th scorer dropped out and Local 28 had its first Negro in an apprenticeship program.

Six months later, in the fall of 1965, Local 28 began its next class for 65 apprentices. Of the top 30 candidates accepted, 11 were Negro and Puerto Rican youngsters who had benefited from WDL's improved recruiting and tutoring techniques.

Of the original group of 12 minority group apprentices accepted in 1965, the Sheet Metal Workers graduated eight Negroes as journeymen in January of 1969. Of the other four apprentices, one is deceased, one is in military service, one dropped out and one was demoted but is expected to graduate as a journeyman.

Today, over 20 percent of the Sheet Metal Workers' apprentices in Local 28 are Puerto Rican and Negro youngsters.

The Workers Defense League had learned a lesson after its attempt to recruit minority youngsters for the Sheet Metal Workers' program in 1965. It learned that recruitment is not always easy and that merely supplying "bodies" to take the examination didn't produce results. The WDL's success in placing youngsters with Sheet Metal and other craft union apprenticeships in the following years stemmed from new techniques and approaches.

The success of the WDL program is largely due to Ernest Green, present director of WDL's apprenticeship program. An M.A. graduate from the University of Michigan, Green was one of the "Little Rock 9," the first Negroes to attend Central High School there in 1957. He joined WDL as assistant director of the program in 1964 when WDL received its first grant from the Taconic Foundation to do apprenticeship work.

In mid-1966, Dennis Derryck took over the tutoring component of the program. A mathematician out of the Yonkers, N.Y., school system, Derryck devised the remedial and upgrading teaching methods which have made WDL-tutored youngsters top scorers in most entry aptitude tests.

The first step to success, WDL learned, was to know the precise requirements for entrance into programs—such as whether the youngster needed his high school diploma and/or high school transcript, the age and residence requirements, the basic tools needed for the trade, the existence of an aptitude test or oral examination or both and whether a medical certificate was required.

Recognizing an educational lag between the inner city schools of New York and their suburban counterparts, WDL recruited minority youngsters who could compete with applicants from better school districts.

Most of the WDL apprenticeship candidates come from academic high schools. WDL staff found early that the vocational high schools produced youngsters less able to compete in this job market.

They also recognized the need for intensive tutoring before the examination. Many of the youngsters did not know the simple techniques of taking tests and were unduly frightened by them. They practiced repeatedly on basic aptitude tests given by WDL staff. The tutoring concentrated on mathematics and reading comprehension.

Tutorial programs frequently require 6 to 12 weeks and the admission procedure will sometimes stretch this time period into six months. In order to wait out the interim, WDL staff helped locate young men in unskilled and semi-skilled jobs. The Ladies' Garment Workers Union, in particular, as well as other local New York unions, helped supply these jobs.

Motivation has always been considered a difficult problem in gaining entry to a skilled trades training program. WDL staff members frequently found themselves providing transportation from home to union hall for the youngsters, checking on why they may have missed a tutoring class and counseling them on personal problems.

While attending classes they are taught what to expect as an apprentice on a job. The hazing of new apprentices, a longstanding ritual in some craft unions, was mistaken as discrimination by some minority youngsters until they learned to expect it as a custom in particular unions.

Some unions have oral interviews as a part of their entrance procedures. Youngsters prepared by WDL received a lot of practice in going through oral interviews—interviews which were frequently more demanding and frightening than the actual experience.

When birth certificates, high school diplomas and health records were needed, WDL staff helped youngsters to secure them. They also provided the candidates with loans for tools and registration fees. Finally, the WDL followed its apprentices onto the jobs and was available for consultation on problems during the first weeks at work.

Young men prepared by the WDL enter apprenticeship programs knowing the value of the union and how it is structured. While the general drop-out rate for apprentices in the skilled trades is above 30 percent, youngsters who have gone through the WDL training programs have maintained a drop-out rate of less than 10 percent.

Photo by Irene Fertik

Photo by James Gilbert

From apprentice to journeyman. Part of the group which moved successfully through a training program to become journeyman members of Sheet Metal Workers Local 28 in New York City. Seated, from left: Charlie Saunders, William Murphy, Bennie Newton, Robert Alston, Christopher Wiley. Standing: Herbert Hall; Charles Brenner, WDL assistant program director; Ernest Green, WDL program director; Scott Green.

Don Slaiman, director of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department, has served as a consultant to the WDL apprenticeship program since its inception in 1964 and has helped it to grow. In early 1967, with the support of the Civil Rights Department, WDL negotiated its first contract for "Outreach" with the U.S. Department of Labor. The contract called for two years of funding to expand further the League's Brooklyn program.

At this time, the A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund joined the Workers Defense League as a co-sponsor under the official title of "Joint Apprenticeship Committee, Workers Defense League—A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund."

Today, they maintain programs in cooperation with local building trades councils in 10 major U.S. cities. Since receiving their first Labor Department grant in 1967, they have placed 930 minority youngsters.

But Outreach did not stop there. In early 1966, Whitney Young, executive director of the National Urban League, appeared before the AFL-CIO Executive Council and recommended a joint Urban League and labor program to help bring more Negroes into the labor movement. The Council voted to assist this program and donated $30,000 for a three-year period. This grant was renewed for another three years at the February 1969 meeting of the Executive Council.

Out of the Urban League and AFL-CIO venture came LEAP (Labor Education Advancement Program). It adopted the technique introduced by the WDL and secured its first grant for Outreach in July of 1967. Today, LEAP, with building trades cooperation, sponsors Outreach programs in 21 cities. As of January 31, 1969, LEAP had placed 861 youngsters.

At its 7th constitutional convention in 1967, the AFL-CIO officially endorsed the Outreach concept in its civil rights resolution, stating:

"The AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department, with the cooperation of the Department of Labor, the Building and Construction Trades Department and building trades councils throughout the country, have concentrated their efforts in working with the Joint Apprenticeship Committee (Workers Defense League/A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund), the Urban League's Labor Education Advancement Program (LEAP), the Trade Union Leadership Council, the Opportunities Industrialization Center (OIC) and other groups. All of these have developed programs for recruiting, tutoring and counseling apprentices who qualify in meeting existing standards for apprenticeship programs.

"The U.S. Labor Department has already made grants to programs of these kinds in 16 cities. The AFL-CIO endorses these programs and recommends that they be studied and emulated in other cities."

In February 1968, in a letter to then Secretary of Labor Willard Wirtz, President C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department pledged:

"1. To foster, with the cooperation of appropriate management organizations: (a) Programs of recruitment of qualified applicants for apprenticeship from the Negro population and other minority groups, and (b) Programs for special attention to deficiencies affecting the full qualification of Negro and other minority group applicants. . . .

Photos by Irene Fertik

"2. To endorse and support projects such as Outreach and LEAP."

All Outreach programs operate with the cooperation and approval of local building trades councils. Because of this, relationships between the minority community and building trades councils have improved considerably over the past three years.

For instance, in a recently released study for the National Manpower Policy Task Force concerning equal opportunity in apprenticeship, Professors Ray Marshall and Vernon Briggs report:

"The WDL has . . . become the chief referral channel through which virtually all minority applicants pass if they desire entry into an apprenticeship program in New York City. Indicative of this understanding is the fact that most of the major unions, which are under no legal compunction to do so, notify the WDL in advance of the dates that entrance tests are to be given so that minority applicants can be assured of an opportunity to apply."

Building Trades Council presidents like Peter Brennan of New York have welcomed and encouraged Outreach. In 1967, Brennan told the New York Building Trades: "I hope our unions will have a greater understanding and will cooperate with the WDL." He reported the WDL applicants had proved to be "good apprentices" and that "the League is not trying to push in kids that aren't interested or aren't qualified."

Department of Labor Photo

Today, thanks to cooperative efforts of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department, the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, the Joint Apprenticeship Committee, LEAP, other community organizations and the Department of Labor, Outreach programs are operating in 52 cities.

The Workers Defense League sponsors the program in 10 cities. LEAP has 21, building trades councils maintain them in 14 and other organizations like the Trade Union Leadership Council and the Opportunities Industrialization Center sponsor the remaining seven. As of January 1969, over 2,500 minority youths have been apprenticed in programs.

As Marshall and Briggs conclude: "It should be emphasized that although not more than 5,000 Negro youngsters are likely to reach journeyman status each year through apprenticeship training, these are good jobs—often paying more than $10,000 a year and leading to supervisory or entrepreneurial positions."

The Outreach program has demonstrated the ability of the skilled trades unions to rapidly recruit more minority apprentices. For example, there were only six Negro apprentices in five of Cleveland's building trades programs in 1966. An Outreach program was launched late in 1967 and, by the end of 1968, there were 21 in the electrical program, 26 in the ironworkers program, 31 in the plumbing and steamfitting trades and 11 in the sheetmetal trades. A total of 142 Negro apprentices were placed in Cleveland in a year.

Nor did the Outreach concept stop with programs to recruit apprentices. In November 1968 in Boston, the local Building Trades Council and the Workers Defense League expanded their program to include upgrading the skills of older minority workers.

The AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department paved the way for this expansion in July 1968 when the presidents of the 18 building trades unions adopted a policy on employment of older workers in Model Cities and urban rehabilitation programs.

The statement supported remedial training for non-journeymen so they could achieve journeyman status and specialized and remedial training for workers with non-union construction experience so they might qualify for trade union acceptance.

Skill upgrading programs now exist in cooperation with building trades councils and community-based organizations in four cities: Buffalo, Oakland, Boston and St. Louis. Negotiations are under way for similar programs in 12 of the 52 cities involved in Outreach.

In addition to skill upgrading programs for older workers and Apprenticeship Outreach, building trades unions also are engaged in other programs to help minority youngsters who cannot immediately qualify for entry into apprenticeship.

This young man, a Choctaw Indian, is an apprentice wireman in Brotherhood of Electrical Workers' Local 1141, Oklahoma City.

Photo by Irene Fertik

One such program is "Project Build" in Washington, D. C. Funded under a Manpower Development and Training Act contract signed by the Greater Washington Labor Council and the Department of Labor, out-of-school youths 17 to 23 years of age are recruited for a year of instruction and practical work experience in housing rehabilitation and construction.

During the classroom period, they are paid $56 a week to help meet living expenses. Once on the job, their wages begin at $1.90 per hour. The program is directed to preparing the youngsters for apprenticeship. If a young man still cannot qualify after his year of training, the unions are committed to finding him a job under a collective bargaining contract with a union membership card.

Building trades unions, in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department and the newly established AFL-CIO Urban Affairs Department, are continuing their efforts to improve and expand opportunities for minority workers in the skilled craft areas.

The progress already achieved has surpassed all expectations of even a few years ago and minority participation in the building industry grows steadily.

Those concerned and involved in these programs feel they not only benefit minority workers and strengthen trade unions, but that the nation gains as well.

Photo by Irene Fertik

A. Philip Randolph Institute

260 Park Avenue South
New York, N.Y. 10010
(212) 533-8000

A. Philip Randolph
President

Robert W. Gilmore
Treasurer

Bayard Rustin
Executive Director

Norman Hill
Associate Director

National Advisory Board

Dorothy Height
John Lewis
Roy Wilkins
Whitney Young

Executive Board

David T. Bazelon
John C. Bennett
Charles Bloomstein
Irving Bluestone
Ralph Bunche
Kenneth B. Clark
Samuel Cook
Ossie Davis
Walter Davis
Michael Harrington
Gordon Haskell
Ralph Helstein
Vivian Henderson
Tom Kahn
Kivie Kaplan
Leon Keyserling
Jim Lawson
Benjamin E. Mays
Isaiah Minkoff
Rev. Gregory Mooney
John Morsell
Emanuel Muravchik
Pauli Murray
Eleanor H. Norton
Frederick O'Neal
Rabbi Joachim Prinz
L. D. Reddick
Albert Shanker
Donald P. Slaiman
Gus Tyler
C. Vann Woodward
Andrew Young

Staff

Rachelle Horowitz
Administrative Secretary

Emma Thomas
Office Manager

September, 1969

Dear Friend,

I hope you have had a pleasant summer.

The A. Philip Randolph Institute has just published two pamphlets, the first of which is called A. Philip Randolph at 80--Tributes and Recollections. It contains speeches made at the birthday celebration in his honor by George Meany, Roy Wilkins, Coretta Scott King and others, and it is well illustrated. I think it is a significant historical document.

The second pamphlet, Three Essays by Bayard Rustin, contains three short pieces on current issues entitled "Myths of the Black Revolt," "The Role of the Negro Middle Class," and "The Union Card and the Ballot Box."

Please use the attached form in ordering these pamphlets.

Also enclosed is a flyer advertising a timely pamphlet on black studies published by the Randolph Educational Fund. I think you will find the essays by Martin Kilson, C. Vann Woodward, and others to be both interesting and relevant.

Best wishes,

Bayard Rustin

Bayard Rustin
Executive Director

Clip and send to: The A. Philip Randolph Institute
260 Park Avenue South 6th floor
New York, New York 10010

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

/__/ Check enclosed /__/ Please bill me (orders of 5 or more)

1 copy 25¢
10 or more 20¢ per copy
100 or more 17¢ per copy
1000 or more 15¢ per copy

The A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund
announces the publication of pamphlet No. 6

"What is meant by 'black studies'? . . . Is black studies an educational program or a forum for ideological indoctrination? Is it designed to train qualified scholars in a significant field of intellectual inquiry, or is it hoped that its graduates will form political cadres prepared to organize the impoverished residents of the black ghetto? . . . And finally, does it offer the possibility for better racial understanding, or is it a regression to racial separatism? The power – and also the danger – of 'black studies' as a slogan is that it can mean any or all of these things to different people . . . .

"To find the reality behind the slogan is the purpose of this pamphlet."

– from the Introduction by Bayard Rustin

RATES

1 copy 50¢
50 or more 40¢ per copy
100 or more 30¢ per copy
1000 or more 24¢ per copy

A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund
260 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10010

Please send me_____copies of pamphlet No. 6

☐ Please add me to your mailing list
☐ Please send me information about your other pamphlets

Name _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY STATE ZIP CODE

☐ Check enclosed ☐ Please bill me (orders of 5 or more)

AFL-CIO-Civil Rights
(see Union-Civil Rts.

CIVIL RIGHTS

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE 8TH AFL-CIO CONVENTION-OCTOBER 1969

Fifteen years ago, the Supreme Court ruled that racial segregation in schools violated the Constitution and called for its ending with all deliberate speed. But compliance with the law came very slowly. After ten years, only 1% of Negro children were going to integrated schools in the South. Today, the figure is still far from satisfactory.

During the Kennedy-Johnson Administration, Congress passed comprehensive civil rights legislation to end discrimination in all aspects of American life—public accommodations, voting, education, employment, housing and in the administration of justice.

Today, we can see the results in substantial progress not only in this fight against discrimination but in bringing minority group citizens into the mainstream of American life.

But despite this progress, there are no grounds for complacency. The increasing crisis proportions of problems in our cities, the abnormally high rates of unemployment among Negro and other minorities and the remaining pockets of discrimination are festering sores. It would be idle and tragic to ignore them or pretend that they will go away.

Indeed, it cannot be stressed too strongly that the country as a whole, and we in the labor movement in particular, must pay greater attention at every level—national, state and local—to bring about sound, effective and democratic solutions to these problems.

In fact, since the last election, the momentum for sound progress has slowed.

It is no exaggeration to say that the great gains that have been made as a result of the efforts of the civil rights movement, the American labor movement and religious and liberal organizations are in peril today.

The Nixon Administration has failed to provide forthright and unambiguous support or adequate and consistent implementation of the laws.

The United States Civil Rights Commission recently observed that "for the first time since the Supreme Court ordered school desegregation, the Federal Government has requested, in court, a slowdown in the pace of desegregation."

This is no isolated incident. In failing to oppose the Whitten Amendment in the House of Representatives and by moving from established, successful regulations to complete reliance on the courts, the Nixon Administration is permitting a major retreat in the struggle to achieve meaningful school desegregation.

Another example is in the area of voting, where the Voting Rights Act of 1965 aided by vigorous implementation by the Department of Justice under President Johnson resulted in 800,000 new Negro registered voters in those states where voting discrimination had been most onerous. But here too, the Administration has failed to press for a simple five-year extension of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 that would insure that the clock not be turned back.

Nixon Administration officials are covering this retreat in civil rights enforcement by trying to make a whipping boy of unions, especially those in the building trades. They have resorted to an unsound double standard in attempting to deal with the legitimate problem of expanding the opportunities for minority group workers in higher paid skilled and technical jobs.

It is part of a calculated strategy of accommodating conservative elements in the South while, at the same time, trying to divide minorities, labor and liberals who have been the backbone of the effort to achieve progress in the civil rights area.

The unity of these forces for equality is vitally necessary today to maintain the gains that have been made and to start a new march forward toward the goal of an integrated society with equal opportunity and equal justice for all.

The AFL-CIO is proud of its record in the struggle for civil rights and we have particularly sought to end discrimination in employment. The AFL-CIO played a major role in getting a Fair Employment Practice section into the Civil Rights Act of 1964 which covered unions as well as employers. It has worked with its affiliates to attain compliance with the law. Today, it strongly supports efforts to strengthen the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission by giving it cease-and-desist powers needed to make it more effective. The Administration is opposed, seeking enforcement in the federal district courts. Here as in the school desegregation situation, the Administration moves in a direction that the civil rights movement can only view as dilatory and ineffective.

The AFL-CIO has not limited its efforts to the legislative front. It has taken the initiative to work with affiliates in developing affirmative action programs on a sound basis that would bring significant results, whether required by law or not.

Specifically in the construction industry, the AFL-CIO has worked with the Building Trades Department, international unions, local building trades councils and groups like the Workers Defense League, A. Philip Randolph Education Fund, the Urban League's LEAP Program and other community groups. The results obtained speak for themselves.

By July of 1969, 4,248 minority group apprentices were placed by Outreach Programs. Of these, 3,958 were in building and construction trades apprenticeship programs. The bulk of these were not in the so-called "trowel trades". Electricians, carpenters, iron workers, plumbers, steamfitters and sheet metal workers accounted for 2,293 of these apprentices.

Minority group apprentices in the construction industry have moved from less than 2.5% in 1960 to 7.2% in 1968. The majority of regular apprentices in federally serviced programs are in the construction industry. The percentage of minority apprentices is higher than in metal manufacturing, non-metal manufacturing and public utilities and transportation.

At its last Convention, the AFL-CIO endorsed the Outreach Programs that then existed in 16 states and recommended that these programs be emulated in other states. Today, Outreach Programs for recruiting, motivating and preparing youngsters for building trades apprenticeship programs have been funded by the U.S. Department of Labor in 55 cities after agreement by local building trades councils for full cooperation.

This is an excellent example of a sound policy being designed and implemented with effective results.

The AFL-CIO is encouraged by the policy statement of the Executive Council of the Building and Construction Trades Department, which was passed unanimously at its recent 1969 Convention. This statement reaffirms the Building Trades policy of non-discrimination and calls for the acceleration and extension of apprenticeship Outreach Programs which have proved successful in actual operation. Moreover, it does not limit itself to these successful programs.

It also outlined a program for increasing minority group participation outside of the apprenticeship route, saying:

> "We make flat and unqualified recommendation to local unions throughout the United States that for a stated period of time they should invite the application of qualified minority journeymen for membership in their respective local unions and should accept all such qualified minority journeymen provided they meet the ordinary and equally administered requirements for membership."

It also recommends for study by local unions the establishment of training programs for minority workers who are not either qualified journeymen or eligible for apprenticeship. The statement says:

> "We also recommend that the local unions and the local council explore and vigorously pursue training programs for the upgrading of minority workers who are not of apprenticeship age. Such programs should be developed in such manner as to prevent undercutting the established apprenticeship programs. The recommendations which have been previously made on model cities should furnish an appropriate guideline for development of these journeymen training programs."

The implementation of this excellent statement is a sound basis for bringing increased participation by minority group workers in skilled jobs in the construction industry, especially in those locals which now have low participation rates. The use of quotas is a bad substitute for sound, effective programs. It is not only of questionable legality under the Civil Rights Act, but it does not even insure permanent skilled jobs for minority workers.

The Administration's so-called "Philadelphia Plan" sets up unsound procedures used in no other industry, segment of the labor market or in government itself. The excuse for this is the low percentage of Negroes and other minorities in the construction industry. In most cases, the figures that have been used for justification have been erroneous. For example, in Philadelphia, government officials implied that less than 2% of building trades membership were minority group workers. The facts are that over 30% of Philadelphia Building Trades members are Negro, and excluding Laborers, 12% of all journeymen are Negro.

Government figures on white collar occupations and in industries, such as textile, banking and newspaper, show far less overall minority group participation than in construction and no higher percentages in skilled categories. In these industries, employers unilaterally do the hiring. Unions have little if any say. There is no excuse for the Administration to play a "numbers game" as they did in the Philadelphia Plan publicity. Falsely portraying the facts won't help minorities get jobs or end discrimination.

The AFL-CIO urges that vigorous efforts be made to expand opportunities for minority group youth and workers in the better-paid and more skilled jobs throughout our economy, including the building and construction trades industry. But we urge that it be done on a sound, fair, effective, continuing basis and we are opposed to making a political football out of an issue as important as the issue of ending discrimination in employment everywhere, in all kinds of employment for all time.

Discrimination and deprivation are problems not only of the American Negro, but of other minority groups. Americans of Mexican descent are the second largest minority. Puerto Rican, Indians, Japanese, Chinese, Eskimos and Aleuts today face problems of discrimination.

Some of the Spanish-speaking minorities have a disproportionate number of people unemployed, under-educated, and below the poverty line in income.

The AFL-CIO especially and its state federations in those areas where these minorities are concentrated must pay increasing attention to their special problems. We are proud of our efforts and those of our affiliated unions in helping the farm workers, under the leadership of Cesar Chavez, to bring dignity and an end to exploitation to this segment of the working poor. The AFL-CIO is also proud of the increased participation by minority group workers in the trade union movement and of the contributions that they are making.

The AFL-CIO reiterates its dedication to the principle established in its Constitution—when the merged federation was founded—equality and equal benefits of union membership for all workers regardless of race, creed, national origin or sex. We urge that all international unions, state federations and central bodies insure that their civil rights committees be active and work with the Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO toward the end of eliminating any vestige of discrimination that may remain in labor's house.

We must—and we will—continue our fight for full civil rights.

We will continue to measure progress and not seek to hide it. We will continue to delineate shortcomings and move to eradicate them. We will continue the unity of labor, liberal and civil rights forces.

We stand firm in the conviction that has brought us this far—our belief in the dignity of a man, the worth of an individual, the classlessness of citizenship.

The answer is the keystone of the trade union movement—brotherhood.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
815 16th Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

GEORGE MEANY
President

LANE KIRKLAND
Secretary-Treasurer

Publication No. 8F

Slaiman

November 7, 1969

Mr. Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Paul:

President Meany forwarded a copy of your telegram to me re our statement supporting the Supreme Court desegregation ruling. We appreciate your message.

It reminded me that we have not gotten together for what seems like an awfully long time. I wish you would let me know the next time you plan to be in Washington. Perhaps we can have lunch together.

I will be in Atlanta on November 25 to speak at a student government conference. If you will be in town then, maybe we can get together.

Cordially,

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

cc: Emory Via

bfc
opeiu #2
afl-cio

December 9, 1969

Mr. Don Slaiman, Director
Civil Rights Department
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Don:

It was good to see you in Washington. I want to thank you for your time and interest regarding the tax bill.

I trust Al duly delivered Paul's and my apologies for having schedule difficulties which prevented our seeing you on your visit to Atlanta. Paul was especially disappointed since he had agreed to meet with you and then had to be out of town for survival reasons related to the tax bill.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

THEODORE H. WHITE

THE MAKING OF THE PRESIDENT 1968

NEW YORK
ATHENEUM PUBLISHERS
1969

But an even more formidable force than public opinion was coming to bear on the Wallace movement in October: the power of organized labor. Labor's support and labor's money had been essential to every Democratic national campaign since 1936—but never did those who lead labor perform more effectively, more skillfully, with greater impact, than in 1968. In the near-miracle of the Humphrey comeback in October, no single factor was more important than the army of organized labor, roused to the greatest political exertion of its history.

In a sense, the challenge of Wallace had been a challenge to the leadership of labor itself. Their own membership polls had, as early as midsummer, shown Wallace picking up 25 percent of the labor vote in Pennsylvania, 32 percent in Connecticut, in Maryland even higher. By September, in Flint, Michigan, at the large Buick plant there, a poll of the 8,000 autoworkers in Local 599 showed Wallace outstripping both other candidates with 49 percent of the total; in Norfolk, Virginia, the Wallace challenge within the union was the springboard in an attempt to overthrow the local's internal leadership; in Pennsylvania, in Baltimore, in Gary, steelworkers were breaking to Wallace. Totally dismayed by the early confusion in Humphrey's headquarters in Washington, the AFL/CIO leadership considered its support of the Democrat and its drive against Wallace almost a mission of its own. "We had to do what we did," said Lane Kirkland, executive assistant of the AFL/CIO's president, "because the Party was bankrupt intellectually and financially. I reached the point where I said I'd never go into Democratic headquarters. I'd go in feeling good and come out feeling terrible. The only useful thing they did was television, in the last couple of weeks; and beyond that they didn't do a god-damned thing except cry."

Refusing to cry, the AFL/CIO set out immediately after the convention, therefore, for a classic exercise. The strategy was homely and time-honored: to register working people, then get them out to vote. But the results, effort and techniques were staggering. Volunteers card-punched names of union members across the country, by state, county and precinct. Computers in Washington digested names, spewed them out broken down by walking lists, arranged by street numbers; volunteers, trained by the Communications Workers Union, manned telephones; others rang doorbells. Appalled at the official Party's disarray, the AFL/CIO assumed responsibility for getting out the black vote—and set up special units, grinding out special literature and special appeals in thirty-one black communities across the nation. The dimension of the AFL/CIO effort, unprecedented in American history, can be caught only by its final summary figures: the ultimate registration, by labor's efforts, of 4.6 million voters; the printing and distribution of 55 million pamphlets and leaflets out of Washington and 60 million more from local unions; telephone banks in 638 localities, using 8,055 telephones, manned by 24,611 union men and women and their families; some 72,225 house-to-house canvassers; and, on election day, 94,457 volunteers serving as car-poolers, materials-distributors, baby-sitters, poll-watchers, telephoners.

Wherever an "unexpected" Humphrey surge developed, there, underbracing it, was the effort of COPE (the AFL/CIO's Committee on Political Education): in Pennsylvania, 492,000 voters were registered by COPE, 4,000 unionists were enlisted for house-to-house canvass detail; in Michigan, 690,000 voters were registered by COPE, and thirty phone banks with 275 telephones manned by 550 volunteers urged workingmen to vote Humphrey. One could trace labor's efforts all across the country: steel workers, packinghouse workers, auto workers in Illinois; auto workers, machinists and service trades in California; oil workers in Texas; garment workers, building trades and electricians in New York. (In New York, one of the afternoon rendezvous points of one group of union leafleters and canvassers was the front door of Nixon's headquarters on the corner of Park and 57th.) Though labor's expenditure of money was impressive—perhaps $10,000,000 for all political activity in 1968—more impressive, more useful for Humphrey were the manpower and the message.

By late October, labor's effort had begun to ravage the Wallace base in the North. Wallace as a "friend of the workingman" was a phony, ran the theme of the 20,000,000 pieces of specifically anti-Wallace literature distributed—his state was sucking off union plants from the North to fill them with non-union workers in the South; Alabama's child-labor laws were a mockery of decency; his Alabama was one of only sixteen states in the union with no minimum-wage legislation; his state ranked forty-ninth in the union in welfare payments to dependent children; his highway patrol was a union-busting outfit. If you're a bus driver, said the literature, you'd make thirty bucks less a week in Birmingham than in a Northern city; if you were a carpenter, you'd make forty bucks less a week; if you were a schoolteacher, you'd make $2,000 to $4,000 less in Alabama's schools than in the North. Thus, as Hubert Humphrey appealed to the consciences of white workingmen in the public squares and on radio and TV, labor's leadership drove home the split in conscience Humphrey's eloquence had wedged open by more direct appeal. A workingman could choose to go with racist George Wallace—but to do so he must desert all other traditional loyalties and his own interests; or he could choose to go with Hubert Humphrey and swallow Humphrey's attitude to the blacks. The argument began to tell on thousands; by the end of October even Flint's Local 599 had reversed itself and come out for Hubert Humphrey.

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dept

JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE

HERMAN D. KENIN

FREDERICK O'NEAL

Roster of Standing Committees Includes Four New Chairmen

A new roster of AFL-CIO standing committees has been announced by Pres. George Meany. It includes four new committee chairmen.

Vice Pres. Frederick O'Neal, president of Actors' Equity Association, has been named chairman of the Civil Rights Committee. He succeeds former Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge, president-emeritus of the Retail Clerks, heads the Community Services Committee, succeeding Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers, had earlier been named chairman of the International Affairs Committee.

Vice Pres. Herman Kenin, president of the Musicians, has been appointed chairman of the Ethical Practices Committee. He succeeds the late George Harrison.

Nat Goldfinger, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, has been named chairman of the Research Committee succeeding Schnitzler.

All other committee chairman were reappointed. They are: Economic Policy, Vice Pres. I. W. Abel, president of the Steelworkers; Social Security, Vice Pres. Maurice Hutcheson, president of the Carpenters; Veterans Affairs, Vice Dennis, Railway Clerks; Charles West, Machinists; Raymond L. Gray, Government Employes; Ivor Morris, Retail Clerks.

COMMUNITY SERVICES: William H. McClennan, Fire Fighters; Patrick Gorman, Meat Cutters; A. Philip Randolph, Sleeping Car Porters; Andrew A. Pettis, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers; Sal B. Hoffman, Upholsterers; Newton Black, Glass Bottle Blowers; Sullivan of Service Employes; Keenan, IBEW; A. J. Rohan, Printing Pressmen; Guinan of Transport Workers; E. V. Lewis, Musicians; Francis S. Filbey, Postal Clerks; James H. Rademacher, Letter Carriers.

ECONOMIC POLICY: Ralph Helstein, Meat Cutters; Pollock, TWUA; Hall, SIU; Beirne, CWA; Selden, Teachers; O'Neal of Actors; S. Frank Raftery, Painters; Joseph N. DePaola, Barbers; Kenneth J. Brown, Lithographers & Photoengravers; John Martin, State, County & Municipal Employes.

ETHICAL PRACTICES: Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers; Jennings, IUE.

HOUSING; Ben Fischer, Steelworkers; Hutcheson of Carpenters; Lyons of Iron Workers; Morris Pizer, Furniture Workers; George Miller, Communications Workers; Peter Fosco, Laborers; Haggerty of Building Trades; Edward J. Leonard, Plasterers & Cement Masons; Ronald F. Roley, Woodworkers; Ward of Plumbers; Peter J. Brennan, N.Y. Building Trades Council; Thomas J. Murray, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers;

Pres. Lee W. Minton, president of the Glass Bottle Blowers; Legislative, Meany; Political Education, Meany; Education, Vice Pres. Peter Schoemann, president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; Housing, Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, secretary of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Organization, Vice Pres. Paul Hall, president of the Seafarers; Public Relations, Kenin of the Musicians; Safety & Occupational Health, Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh, president of the Stage Employes.

The full roster of other committee assignments is as follows:

CIVIL RIGHTS: Minton; Charles Zimmerman, Ladies' Garment Workers; Louis Simon, Clothing Workers; Keenan, IBEW; Robert Powell, Laborers; David Sullivan, Service Employes; Thomas Murphy, Bricklayers; William Bowe, Sleeping Car Porters; Paul Jennings, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Joseph P. Molony, Steelworkers; William Pollock, Textile Workers Union of America; Max Greenberg, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union; Hunter P. Wharton, Operating Engineers; Martin J. Ward, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; Jerry Wurf, State, County & Municipal Employes; Matthew Guinan, Transport Workers; C. L. Jennings, IUE; Greenberg, RWDSU; Shoemann of Plumbers; Louis Stulberg, Ladies' Garment Workers; Floyd E. Smith, Machinists; Dennis of Railway Clerks; James T. Housewright, Retail Clerks; Charles Luna, United Transportation Union; John H. Lyons, Iron Workers; Peter Bommarito, Rubber Workers; Charles H. Pillard, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Joseph P. Tonelli, Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers; Howard Coughlin, Office & Professional Employes; Wurf, SCME.

SOCIAL SECURITY: Harry Sayre, Papermakers & Paperworkers; Pollock, TWUA; Zimmerman, ILGWU; Pillard, IBEW; Karl F. Feller, Brewery Workers; Walter Burke, Steelworkers; Minton, GBBA; Anthony Weinlein, Service Employes; Morris Weisberger, Seafarers; C. L. Dellums, Sleeping Car Porters; John F. Griner, Government Employes; John M. Elliott, Amalgamated Transit Union.

VETERANS AFFAIRS: Ed S. Miller, Hotel & Restaurant Employes; Hutcheson of Carpenters; C. J. Haggerty, Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Fred Fulford, Furniture Workers; Martin Hughes, Communications Workers; Edward Todd, Textile Workers Union of America.

LEGISLATIVE: AFL-CIO Executive Council.

POLITICAL EDUCATION: AFL-CIO Executive Council.

EDUCATION: William Elkuss, Clothing Workers; Keenan, IBEW; Felix Jones, Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers; Helmuth Kern, Meat Cutters; John Brumm, Machinists; Gus Tyler, Ladies' Garment Workers; Carl Griepentrog, Allied Industrial Workers; Maywood Boggs, Metal Trades Dept.; Griner of Government Employes; David Hoffman of Upholsterers; Hank Brown, Texas AFL-CIO; Edward F. Carlough, Sheet Metal Workers; James Turner, Rubber Workers.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS: Greenberg, RWDSU; Randolph of Sleeping Car Porters; Keenan, IBEW; Joseph Curran, National Maritime Union; Walsh of Stage Employes; Suffridge, RCIA; Hall, SIU; Abel of Steelworkers; A. J. DeAndrade, Printing Pressmen; Minton, GBBA; Feller of Brewery Workers; Stulberg, ILGWU; A. F. Grospiron, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers; Kenin of Musicians; Thomas W. Gleason, Longshoremen; Executive Officers.

ORGANIZATION: Suffridge, RCIA; Potofsky, ACWA; Keenan, IBEW; Pollock, TWUA; Bommarito of Rubber Workers; Grospiron, OCAW; Minton, GBBA; Sullivan of Service Employes; Fosco of Laborers; Gleason of Longshoremen; Executive Officers.

PUBLIC RELATIONS: Keenan, IBEW; Beirne, CWA; Minton, GBBA.

RESEARCH: Lazare Teper, Ladies' Garment Workers; Otis Brubaker, Steelworkers; James Noe, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Vernon Jirikowic, Machinists; Vera Miller, Clothing Workers; William Gary, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

SAFETY & OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH: Elwood Swisher, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers; Curran of NMU; Wharton of Operating Engineers; Frank Burke, Steelworkers; Keenan, IBEW; Ralph Reiser, Glass & Ceramic Workers; A. H. Chesser, United Transportation Union; McClennan of Firefighters; Gleason of Longshoremen; Smith of Machinists; Daniel E. Conway, Bakery & Confectionery Workers; William J. Pachler; Utility Workers; Boggs, Metal Trades Dept.

Jobless Benefit Rolls Show Sharp Jump

The number of workers applying for and receiving unemployment insurance for the week which ended Dec. 20 was up substantially from the comparable period of the previous year, the Labor Dept. reported.

Total insured unemployment was up 58,000 from the previous year, to 1,251,000. The number of new claims that week was 289,400, which was 45,900 or 15.8 percent higher than the previous year.

MEMO FROM

DONALD SLAIMAN

FEB 26 1970

Mr. Emory Via

F.Y.I.

MERKLE PRESS INC.
832-6420

AFL-CIO
Civil Rts. Dept.

Report of Civil Rights Department to the Executive Council

Bal Harbour, Florida
February 23, 1970

At this time when further progress is essential, the civil rights gains of the sixties are in jeopardy. This is not to say that the country will reembrace those practices of discrimination and segregation that have been eliminated or at least reduced. But forward momentum has already slowed down and some gains are in danger of being undermined.

There are three main reasons for concern.

The first is government policy regarding the implementation of laws already passed by the Congress and decisions made by the courts. We are not merely faced with a more conservative approach but what seems to be the results of a "southern strategy."

For example, the poor caliber of appointments to the Supreme Court are primarily not due to administration ineptitude but follow from a deliberate attempt to woo southern segregationist political support by holding out the promise of changing the character of the Supreme Court from one which has been a guardian of equal rights for all citizens.

Should South remain the whipping boy?!

The same pattern can be discerned in the refusal by the Administration to endorse an extension of the 1965 Voting Rights Law -- a law which together with effective implementation by the Justice Department had played a major role in adding millions of Negro voters to the rolls. Discrimination in the application of literacy tests and other devices had been a major factor in keeping access to the vote -- a major item in a democratic political system -- from most Negroes in some areas.

An attempt to mask this refusal to extend the 1965 Voting Rights Law was made in the form of a proposal to ban all literacy requirements whether they were the means by which Negroes were kept from registering as a substitute for what was needed to maintain the progress already made. It did not fool responsible civil rights leaders.

A similar strategy of undermining effective progress by seemingly attacking northern, as well as southern problems, is now developing in regard to school desegregation. The Stennis amendment which equates de facto school segregation with the maintenance of racially separate schools contrary to the clear directives of the Supreme Court and the 1964 Civil Rights Act passed by the Congress is not an attempt to grapple with the problems of de facto school segregation but a gambit to slow down government efforts to speed up the end of the dual school systems in the south.

-more-

If the Administration is not in cahoots with this move it certainly provided no leadership against it.

Its own record of going into the Courts and asking for a slowdown in the pace set by the Courts was certainly an encouragement for those who would turn back the clock 15 years after the Court had decreed the end of the dual school systems with "all deliberate speed."

The second major reason for concern is national economic policy. This may not be directed against Negroes but the result of the deliberate attempt to slow down the economy is higher unemployment which will, inevitably, have a serious impact on the opportunities for minority citizens, especially the so-called "hard core" unemployed.

Many of those hired by the efforts of large corporations such as in the auto industry have already been laid off and others will follow.

Full and fair employment was the slogan of the 1963 March on Washington. Giant strides toward both these goals were made in the years that followed. This played a major role in advancing the economic position of Negroes and other minorities.

Between 1965 and 1968, the income gap between Negroes and the rest of the country had begun to narrow for the first time since the recession of 1957.

A projected increase of unemployment to 4.3 percent as predicted by Administration economists and higher as predicted by other economists, not only bodes ill for further forward progress but can seriously threaten the well-being of thousands who have already begun to move into the mainstream of American economic life through the combined efforts of government, business, labor and voluntary private agencies.

The third major area of concern is confusion among some in both the minority community and among whites who had been part of the civil rights movement as to whether integration itself is desirable.

Few have descended to the level of the head of CORE in consorting with Governor Maddox of Georgia in a mutual effort to resegregate southern schools. But the temporary revival of separatist demands within the black community even by a small minority have concerned the responsible leaders of the civil rights movement as well as ourselves.

It prompted Bayard Rustin to say to black trade unionists at the last AFL-CIO Convention "this means steering clear of all the separatist nonsense that parades as militancy including the reactionary concept of dual unionism. Let us leave the separate but equal stuff to George Wallace and some of the misguided young people on campus."

-more-

But confusion is not restricted to a small number of black militants. Legitimate challenges to societies present wrongs have been diverted into all sorts of useless blind alleys. So that many well-intentioned and some not so well-intentioned people have found themselves moving in opposite directions from the goals of the civil rights movement. Many others have weakened their resolve to achieve integration through the democratic process. Integration has not failed, it just hasn't been tried enough.

In the labor movement, as well as in society as a whole, significant progress was made in the sixties in eliminating discrimination and segregation and expanding opportunities for minority group workers. Here, too, the job is far from finished and leadership is needed to maintain the direction and pace of forward progress.

A review by the civil rights committee under its new chairman, AFL-CIO Vice President Frederick O'Neal, confirms that all elements of AFL-CIO Civil Rights programs have shown significant results. The elimination of segregated locals, opening of apprenticeship opportunities to minority group youth, removing barriers to upgrading of minority group workers, involving minority group trade unionists in the policy making process, providing equal benefits of union membership to all workers regardless of race or national origin. All these have received greater effort and attention from affiliated international unions. The results are there to be seen.

Increasingly, the internationals and their locals are developing affirmative action programs to hasten this process. We in the AFL-CIO have no policy of slow-down either in organizing those minority group workers who are without the benefits of unionism or in expanding the opportunities of those already in unions. The American labor movement has had no second thoughts on the value of integration and the elimination of segregation.

These efforts are being made by industrial unions, service unions, white collar unions, government employee unions, maritime unions and building trade unions. The federation itself now has an urban affairs department and a full-time manpower operation to work with affiliates and central bodies in the development of affirmative action programs. The numbers of international unions and state federations and central bodies which are developing their own full-time staff programs is increasing.

The building and construction trades for years have been particularly singled out -- partially because of high wages and a high proportion of skilled jobs in the industry's labor force (it contains 50 percent or more of registered apprentices in the country) -- partly because of the high proportion of public funds -- partly because its work is out in the public view -- and partly because it has become a favorite whipping boy.

-more-

As elsewhere in the labor movement, the building trades have had discrimination and segregation in its ranks. As elsewhere in the labor force where Negroes had been permitted to enter an industry, they still remain concentrated below the most skilled and white collar positions. This is true at least equally, if not more so, in the non-union sector of the industry as is usual everywhere else.

The building trades unions have made efforts just as others have to change this situation.

In the area of apprenticeship, special efforts have had signal success. Since 1965, Outreach programs have spread to 58 cities. They contacted over 40,000 minority group youngsters and placed more than 5100 in building trades apprenticeship programs. Approximately 60 percent of these were not in the so-called trowel trades. Three thousand are electrician, carpenter, plumber, steamfitter, iron worker and sheet metal apprentices. This is up from 1200 at the time of the 1967 AFL-CIO convention here in Miami in December.

General Motors recently released a report on its efforts to increase job opportunities for minorities. In the last year, the number of minority group apprentices and trainees for skilled work rose from 1168 to 1546 nationally -- an increase of 32 percent. This contrast with the increase in building trades apprenticeship of over 400 percent in 2 years.

The same General Motors report tells us that 9700 or 15.3 percent of its workforce is made up of minority groups and 3.5 percent of the salaried group are minority workers. The last government figures on construction of labor contractors on federal contracts showed minorities to be close to 20 percent with less than 3 percent in the white collar end.

It is interesting to note, too, that there are no low-paid workers in construction. The Laborers Union contains all the semi-skilled classifications and union laborers in construction are highly paid relative to most blue collar jobs. In Philadelphia, the minimum laborers scale is $4.65 per hour, Washington, D. C. $4.00 an hour. In New York City over $5.00 an hour.

At its last Convention, while criticizing the Philadelphia Plan, the Building and Construction Trades Department adopted a 3 point program for a standing minority group opportunity in the construction industry.

1. It reendorsed the concept of Outreach and called for its expansion.

2. It called on all construction local unions to invite all minority group journeymen, not now in unions, to join on an equal basis.

-more-

3. It recommended that local building trades councils and local unions explore and establish on-the-job training programs for those too old to become apprentices, especially those with construction experience who are not yet qualified journeymen.

All three parts of this program have already begun to move into operation. Approval for new apprenticeship Outreach programs has already been voted in North and South Carolina and for a number of cities like Toledo, Ohio, El Paso, Texas and Seattle, Washington by local building trades councils.

Some international unions have already sent out detailed guidelines on how best to recruit existing journeymen and some apprenticeship Outreach programs have already been recruiting and referring minority journeymen to local unions. In most instances they have been taken in although the numbers are small.

A few journeymen training programs in Oakland, Buffalo and St. Louis existed prior to the 1969 building trades convention. Since then, agreements have been ratified in Chicago, Pittsburgh and Boston, in which such journeymen training programs are contemplated.

We are also encouraged by the recent program entered into by the plumbers and some national contractors to train some 500 minority workers with some experience in that trade but who are not now qualified as journeymen.

The Civil Rights Department and HRDI are presently discussing similar programs with the building trades department and building trades councils in other cities. We hope to follow the pattern developed in apprenticeship outreach. That is, the evaluation of pilot projects within the policy guidelines of the building trades, followed by a systematic campaign to encourage local unions and building trades councils in other cities to study successful programs. And then to adapt such programs to the needs of the situation in their own communities.

The building trades department and the affiliates of the AFL-CIO resent the attempt of the Administration to take credit for what they are doing with the recent obvious political ploy of announcing that it would "install a Philadelphia-type plan in 19 cities" if acceptable area-wide agreements are not forthcoming. Again the building trades have been singled out from all other industries with a type of treatment and with a plan that is both of questionable legality and is practically useless.

The main result may be to maximize opposition of union membership and its main purpose seems to be to divide civil rights and liberal critics of the Administration from the labor movement.

-more-

Here too confusion is maximized and it is impossible to square the statements of the Vice President recently that the quota approach for college admissions and job advancement is a "form of madness" with the Postmaster General's support for a piece of legislation to embody this same quota approach.

We believe, however, that the best course to follow would be for the building trades to continue to develop the type of affirmative programs which they have voted for and are putting into practice rather than react to this provocation.

The Civil Rights Committee also feels that the goal of the labor movement and the civil rights movement for full and fair employment remains the most healthy basis for continuing our efforts for full opportunity for all citizens.

-30-

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
LANE KIRKLAND, SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
HERMAN D. KENIN
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

April 16, 1970

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

On behalf of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department and the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center, I want to thank you for your participation in our recent civil rights seminar.

The union representatives attending the seminar expressed their satisfaction with the sessions and found them most valuable and informative. The Civil Rights Department Staff and those at the labor center were pleased both with the content of the seminar and the input of the participants.

Again, many thanks for your cooperation and help.

Yours sincerely,

Don Slaiman

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

P.S. Your materials arrived the day following your presentation and were distributed. The mails did not fail completely!!

bfc
opeiu #2
afl-cio

Unions - Civ RD -

The American federationist

July - 70

The Role of the Black Trade Unionist

by Frederick O'Neal

U.S. Negroes are a working people. The labor movement has been the home of the working man—traditionally the only haven of the dispossessed.

That brief credo, which A. Philip Randolph has used to sum up the reason for his life's work, still serves well as the answer to the questions many blacks are asking about their role in today's society. We are a nation of working people and black people are workers. And it is in the trade union movement where blacks have both a job to do and a great future.

The black trade unionist can play a creative and essential role in three identifiable areas:

• First, he must be a militant integrationist and an advocate of militant non-violence. As part of an integrated trade union movement, the black worker knows well the folly of separatism. As part of a movement that has won real and concrete gains for black Americans, he knows that frustration politics is merely a form of psycho-therapy which can lead only to a dead-end. And he knows that violence will sooner destroy the black community than contribute to its salvation. His willingness to stand firmly on the principles of integration and non-violence are particularly essential in this very difficult period we are living through, when so many despairing elements within the black community are advocating strategies of withdrawal and recklessness.

• Second, the black worker must articulate a sensible economic strategy as an alternative to the fanatical ideas that are currently gaining popularity in some quarters. Several facts are elementary to this strategy: Black capitalism will not help the black worker; tax incentives will only mean more profits for the rich; there is absolutely no land on which to build industry in the ghetto; community control over an impoverished ghetto will be that and only that—it will not provide jobs for the unemployed, homes for the ill-housed, doctors for the sick and better teachers for the uneducated. The black worker must understand and publicize the principle that the fundamental division in America is not between white and black but between rich and poor, that there can be no cure for black poverty in the absence of an attack on white poverty and that the racial problem in America requires an economic solution.

The black worker, who has been educated to a sophisticated economic point of view as a result of his participation in the trade union movement, must now speak out against psychological solutions to economic problems. And he must also speak out against deceptive programs which divert people's attention from the real objectives. Those objectives are outlined in A. Philip Randolph's Freedom Budget and in the economic program of the trade union movement. They are full employment, the redistribution of wealth and the resconstruction of our cities.

• Third, the black worker has an enormously significant political role to play. He must continually point out that the source of funds for a genuine war on poverty lies in Washington and that if liberal-thinking men are to be elected to national office, black people must vote. The kind of voter education and registration campaigns that Negro trade unionists carried on in all of the major American cities in 1968 must

FREDERICK O'NEAL has been president of Actors Equity since 1964 and recently became president of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America, which is made up of six theatrical unions. He is an AFL-CIO Vice President and chairman of the federation's Civil Rights Committee.

bers belong to integrated locals. All the southern state and local central bodies are integrated and most work closely with NAACP branches and other similar organizations in the Negro community. Joint campaigns to register voters and get out the vote are widespread. In labor disputes involving the predominantly black sanitation workers in Memphis and the predominantly black hospital workers in South Carolina, there was a huge outpouring of local support from other unions in the area.

In recent times we have seen the top officers of the Mississippi AFL-CIO file taxpayers suits to stop state funds from being spent on the State Sovereignty Commission; we have seen the Louisiana Labor Council use ads in the daily press to defend having the president of the Louisiana NAACP as one of its vice presidents. The South Carolina labor convention adopted a resolution in support of the lunch counter sit-ins. We have seen the trade union movement fighting against segregation in the school crisis in Little Rock, New Orleans and Norfolk.

And on the national scene we have seen the unions and the civil rights movement working together to achieve the civil rights legislation of the 1960s—legislation which opened public accommodations, established a federal fair employment practices law and helped enfranchise hundreds of thousands of black voters previously denied that right.

It was a labor-liberal-black coalition that increased minimum wage, expanded federal aid to schools and established Medicare in the 1960s.

And most recently it is to the credit of labor and the civil rights organizations that the U.S. Senate rejected two nominees to the Supreme Court who would have done untold damage to our fight for civil rights and civil liberties in the United States. The defeats of Judges Clement F. Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell proved that a viable, effective coalition exists—despite popular reports to the contrary.

While we can find in the past, and even in the present, enough internal discrimination, segregation and prejudice to give all of us plenty of work to do, we can also say that the labor movement has been the most advanced of all mass membership institutions in American life in the degree to which it has stood up for the equal rights of the Negro, practiced integration within its own ranks and regarded the Negro as an equal.

These acts do not stem from any high principle of the broad membership of the trade union movement. In fact, their significance is greater because the membership of the trade union movement is simply a cross section of the American people, incorporating all of their prejudices and all of their ignorance.

And discrimination exists within this cross section. But we must not allow that discrimination to be used as a wedge to divide the Negro-labor coalition. Make no mistake about it, anti-labor forces have much to gain by such a division. Construction unions have borne the brunt of this attack with a segment of the black community seemingly always available to shout racism rather than tackle the problem with constructive, permanent solutions.

> "Unity must be re-established between the economically deprived and the economically insecure in their common struggle against the economic elite. And no group in America is in a better position to bring about this reconciliation than the black worker."

The real solution lies in increased Negro and other minority-group membership in those unions and some outstanding progress has been made through Outreach and similar programs. That progress must be continued.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. once said, "Our needs are identical with labor's needs: decent wages, fair working conditions, livable housing, old age security, health and welfare measures, conditions in which families can grow, have education for their children and respect in the community. This is why Negroes support labor's demands and fight laws which curb labor. That is why the labor-hater and labor-baiter is virtually always a twin-head creature spewing anti-Negro epithets from one mouth and anti-labor propaganda from the other mouth."

To maintain that alliance, we do not have to forego one ounce of principle or practical criticism of each other. But we do have to maintain the basic attitudes of allies when criticizing each other, which involves a mutual acceptance of the sincerity of the other.

If we want to direct biting criticism at some repugnant element in the other group, we must direct it at those specific elements, not at the whole group and certainly not at those in the group who are actually fighting these same elements.

If we think that the leaders are not doing an adequate job on a given problem, then we have to propose a better way and try to convince them that it is better. If we don't succeed, we ought not to impugn their motives for not agreeing with us. The rules of united action are really quite obvious and we must follow them if we are to move rapidly toward full civil rights. We must not allow ourselves to be held back by the debris thrown at us by the prophets of divisiveness. The confusion that they have sown must be removed before we can see the real tasks before us. We will have difficulties with each other, but none that cannot be met by serious analysis, honest discussion and sweat.

These differences must be placed in their proper context while we turn our primary attention to the common tasks and challenges that lie ahead. And there are many. Among them: decent low-cost housing; full employment; health care and other welfare needs; quality education for all; adequate pensions for retired persons; standard unemployment insurance. All of these problems, and more, must be solved if we are to restore hope to the hopeless communities.

remain a model for similar political activity in the future.

But even more important, the black trade unionist must never cease reminding his brothers and sisters in the ghetto that Negroes represent only 11 per cent of the American population. Therefore, Negroes cannot go it alone. Any positive action coming from Washington will come only through a coalition of Negroes, liberals and the entire trade union movement. The black worker must be a forceful spokesman for unity within this coalition and he must speak out firmly against any activities which promote racial polarization. He must become an agent of reconciliation who will break the bitter connection between black rage and white fear. Unity must be re-established between the economically deprived and the economically insecure in their common struggle against the economic elite. And no group in America is in a better position to bring about this reconciliation than the black worker.

Today there are over 2 million black trade unionists and this number is increasing daily. More Negroes are also moving up through the ranks of their local unions to positions of power and influence. This latter development is particularly essential if there are to be more voices in the trade union movement speaking for the black worker and if the trade union movement itself is to be more effective in its efforts to solve our country's social and racial problems.

Today, despite all the progress we've made, the unemployed are filling our ghettos, the inner cores of our cities are literally rotting, health care is primitive and our schools are ill-equipped to serve the enormous needs of children bred in poverty. And the situation is growing worse daily, for automation is transforming the character of labor. Unskilled jobs are being eliminated, muscle power is no longer in demand and as always, black workers suffer most from these changes.

Over the past 100 years, since Negroes first entered the trade union movement in America, many mistakes have been made. One of the most serious errors was the enforced pattern of segregated unions and the tolerance of segregated jobs in the plant.

Now, from the vantage point of history, we can examine the mistakes of the past and try to correct them. We can learn from the great debates that have taken place within the black community between the separatists and the integrationists, between the economic conservatives and the economic radicals.

A. Philip Randolph has continuously told us that there is no hope for the black worker outside the American trade union movement, that a Negro-labor alliance must be made a firm and enduring reality. It must be made a reality simply because the black man has been dispossessed in this country and the labor movement is the primary vehicle through which the dispossessed can advance themselves economically.

Discrimination and segregation still exist within certain areas of the union movement. There is no attempt here to close our eyes to that situation. Discrimination is there, perhaps less than in many other major American institutions, but it's still there and must be opposed.

But because it exists, we should not take the foolish path of the separatists. We should not employ the distorted logic which says that the existence of discrimination justifies separatism and further segregation. These mistakes have been made repeatedly during the long history of the black struggle for equality. They have been rooted in justified anger and frustrations. But they have also been rooted in opportunism, and the result has always been the further exploitation of the exploited and the further enrichment of the enriched. The economic liberation of the black American can best be achieved through his participation in the trade union movement.

Alliances between black workers and trade unionists do not always come easily. With just cause the black community is impatient with America—11 years after anti-discrimination laws were enacted in New York City, few private apartment buildings are integrated; 15 years after the Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation, many Negro children still attend all-black schools.

Similarly, the existence of lily-white local unions and separate seniority lines are a source of dissatisfaction on the part of blacks. In fact, if you read only the public accounts, you would be convinced that the relationship between the Negro community and the labor movement is not good at all.

And in such an emotion-charged atmosphere one can easily become blinded to the positive efforts and accomplishments of the labor movement in the racial and social areas that are a benefit to us all. There are certain elements, whether consciously or unconsciously, sowing seeds of mistrust and divisiveness in the black community—some of it through misinformation and some through deliberate distortion. As a result both civil rights forces and the trade unionists often find themselves confused, frustrated and their work seriously hampered.

It is important that we separate fact from fiction, not because the historical record is necessarily so significant, but so that we can stop wasting time and address ourselves to the real problem.

The history of the southern labor movement, for instance, is rich in episodes of black and white workers fighting together—in the coal mines, on the docks, at the plants—all in defiance of community traditions, practice and law.

In the South today the vast majority of union mem-

"A Negro-Labor alliance must be made a firm and enduring reality. It must be made a reality simply because the black man has been dispossessed in this country and the labor movement is the primary vehicle through which the dispossessed can advance themselves economically."

A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund

A. Philip Randolph
President
Dr. Robert Gilmore
Treasurer
Bayard Rustin
Executive Director

260 PARK AVENUE SOUTH / NEW YORK, N.Y. 10010 / (212) 533-8000

June - July 1971

Dear Friend,

I thought you would be interested in having a copy of the enclosed article which appeared in Harper's magazine. "The Blacks and the Unions" was written in an effort to destroy a very popular myth. First, that the white worker has become affluent and conservative, that he feels his security threatened by the demand for racial equality, and consequently, the primary function of the labor movement is to protect the white worker from the encroaching black.

I argue, on the contrary, that the labor leadership understands that discrimination hurts the entire movement and that anything which divides the workers makes it more difficult for them to struggle together for common goals: decent wages, better working conditions, livable housing, old age security, health and welfare measures. Further, I believe the trade union movement is more progressive today than at any other time in history. The article trys to prove this thesis.

I hope you enjoy the article. I would certainly be interested in hearing your comments. Individual copies cost 25¢, quantity prices are as follows:

10 or more 20¢ per copy
100 or more 17¢ per copy
1000 or more 15¢ per copy.

Enclosed also is a flyer describing our latest pamphlet, The Neglected Black Majority. This pamphlet contains excellent articles by Andrew F. Brimmer, Charles V. Hamilton, John A. Morsell and Thomas Sowell.

I hope you will use that flyer to order copies of both publications for your colleagues and friends.

Have a pleasant summer.

Sincerely,

Bayard Rustin

Bayard Rustin
Executive Director

BR/hh

Norman Hill, Associate Director
Rachelle Horowitz, Administrative Assistant
E. R. McKinney, Assistant to the Executive Director
Emma Thomas, Staff Associate

The A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund
announces the publication of

pamphlet No. 7

During the past five years there has been a proliferation of literature about every extremist group which has caught the imagination of the people who control the media. This pamphlet is designed to right the balance of attention and to provide some reasonable perspective on black America. Each essay highlights a different aspect of the subject and represents a significant contribution to our current literature about Negroes. Charles V. Hamilton's broad overview is an indispensable guide to understanding the black community. Andrew F. Brimmer provides an enormous amount of economic data to substantiate and supplement many of Professor Hamilton's contentions. Thomas Sowell has done a great service by puncturing some of the myths about black youth and decrying the tendency to admit into college "authentic" ghetto types who are not as academically well prepared as other blacks who get turned down. John A. Morsell's article is a brilliant polemic against the advocates of reparations.

RATES

1 copy 50¢ — 100 or more 30¢ per copy
50 or more 40¢ per copy — 1000 or more 25¢ per copy

A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund
260 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10010

Please send me
_____copies of pamphlet No. 7
_____copies of pamphlet No._____
_____copies of "The Blacks And The Unions" (25¢)

Name _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP CODE _____

☐ Check Enclosed ☐ Please bill me – only on orders of $5.00 or more

Via

The Blacks And The Unions

by Bayard Rustin

Reprinted by the
A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund
260 Park Avenue South
New York, N.Y. 10010

25c

Bayard Rustin

THE BLACKS AND THE UNIONS

Which way will the blacks choose—to fight to eliminate all segregation in the trade unions, or to become pawns in the conservatives' games of bust-the-unions?

ONE OF THE MAIN ARTICLES of faith in liberal dogma these days is that the interests and objectives of the American trade-union movement are in fundamental conflict with the interests and objectives of black America. One can hardly pick up any of the major journals of liberal opinion without reading some form of the statement that the white worker has become affluent and conservative and feels his security to be threatened by the demand for racial equality. A corollary of this statement is that it is a primary function of the labor movement to protect the white worker from the encroaching black. Furthermore, the argument runs, since there are no signs that the blacks may be letting up in their struggle for economic betterment, a hostile confrontation between blacks and the unions is not only inevitable but necessary.

It may well be that historians of the future, recording the events of the past five years, will conclude that the major effect of the civic turbulence in this period has been in fact to distract us from the real and pressing social needs of the nation. And perhaps nothing illustrates the point more vividly than the whole question of the relations between blacks and the unions.

This question itself, however, cannot be properly understood except in the larger context of the history of the civil-rights movement. Negro protest in the Sixties, if the movement is in its turn to be properly understood, must be divided into two distinct phases. The first phase, which covered something like the first half of the decade, was one in which the movement's clear objective was to destroy the legal foundations of racism in America. Thus the locale of the struggle was the South, the evil to be eliminated was Jim Crow, and the enemy, who had a special talent for arousing moral outrage among even the most reluctant sympathizers with the cause, was the rock-willed segregationist.

Now, one thing about the South more than any other has been obscured in the romantic vision of the region—of ancient evil, of defeat, of enduring rural charm—that has been so much of our literary and intellectual tradition: for the Negro, Southern life had precisely a quality of clarity, a clarity which while oppressive was also supportive. The Southern caste system and folk culture rested upon a clear, albeit unjust, set of legal and institutional relationships which prescribed roles for individuals and established a modicum of social order. The struggle that was finally mounted against that system was actually fed and strengthened by the social environment from which it emerged. No profound analysis, no overriding social theory was needed in order both to locate and understand the injustices that were to be combated. All that was demanded of one was sufficient courage to demonstrate against them. One looks back upon this period in the civil-rights movement with nostalgia.

During the second half of the Sixties, the center of the crisis shifted to the sprawling ghettos of the North. Here black experience was radically different from that in the South. The stability of institutional relationships was largely absent in Northern ghettos, especially among the poor. Over twenty years ago, the black sociologist E. Franklin Frazier was able to see the brutalizing effect of urbanization upon lower-class blacks: "... the bonds of sympathy and community of interests that held their parents together in the rural environment have been unable to withstand the disintegrating forces in the city." Southern blacks migrated north in search of work, seeking to become transformed from a peasantry into a working class. But instead of jobs they found only misery, and far from becoming a proletariat, they came to constitute a Lumpenproletariat, an underclass of rejected people. Frazier's prophetic words resound today with terrifying precision: "... as long as the bankrupt system of Southern agriculture exists, Negro families will continue to seek a living in the towns and cities of the country. They will crowd the slum areas of Southern cities or make their way to Northern cities, where their family life will become disrupted and their poverty will force them to depend upon charity."

Out of such conditions, social protest was to emerge in a form peculiar to the ghetto, a form which could never have taken root in the South except in such large cities as Atlanta or Houston. The evils in the North are not easy to understand and fight against, or at least not as easy as Jim Crow, and this has given the protest from the ghetto a special edge of frustration. There are few specific injustices, such as a segregated lunch counter, that offer both a clear object of protest and a good chance of victory. Indeed, the problem in the North is not one of social injustice so much as the results of institutional pathology. Each of the various institutions touching the lives of urban blacks—those relating to education, health, employment, housing, and crime—is in need of drastic reform. One might say that the Northern race problem has in good part become simply the problem of the American city—which is gradually becoming a reservation for the unwanted, most of whom are black.

Bayard Rustin

THE BLACKS AND THE UNIONS

IN SUCH A SITUATION, even progress has proved to be a mixed blessing. During the Sixties, for example, Northern blacks as a group have made great economic gains, the result of which being that hundreds of thousands of them were able to move out of the hard-core poverty areas. Meanwhile, however, their departure, while a great boon to those departing, only contributed further to the deterioration of the slums, now being drained of their stable middle and working class. Combined with the large influx of Southern blacks during the same period, this process was leaving the ghetto more and more the precinct of a depressed underclass. To the segregation by race was now added segregation by class, and all of the problems created by segregation and poverty—inadequate schooling, substandard and overcrowded housing, lack of access to jobs or to job training, narcotics and crime—were greatly aggravated. And again because of segregation, the violence of the black underclass was turned in upon itself.

If the problems of the ghetto do not lend themselves to simple analyses or solutions, then, this is because they cannot be solved without mounting a total attack on the inadequacies endemic to, and injustices embedded in, all of our institutions. It is perhaps understandable that young Northern blacks, confronting these problems, have so often provided answers which are really non-answers; which are really dramatic statements satisfying some sense of the need for militancy without even beginning to deal with the basic economic and political problems of the ghetto. Primary among these non-answers is the idea that black progress depends upon a politics of race and revolution. I am referring here not to the recent assertions of black pride—assertions that will be made as long as that pride continues to be undermined by white society—but to the kind of black nationalism which consists in a bitter rejection of American society and vindicates a withdrawal from social struggle into a kind of hermetic racial world where blacks can "do their thing." Nationalists have been dubbed "militants" by the press because they have made their point with such fervent hostility to white society, but the implication of their position actually amounts to little more than the age-old conservative message that blacks should help themselves—a thing that, by the very definition of the situation, they have not the resources to do.

BOB ADELMAN

The same is true of black proposals for revolution. For to engage in revolutionary acts in contemporary America—where, despite a lot of inflammatory rhetoric, there is not even a whisper of a revolutionary situation—not only diverts precious energies away from the political arena where the real battles for change must be fought, but might also precipitate a vicious counterrevolution the chief victims of which will be blacks.

The truth about the situation of the Negro today is that there are powerful forces, composed largely of the corporate elite and Southern conservatives, which will resist any change in the economic or racial structure of this country that might cut into their resources or challenge their status; and such is precisely what any program genuinely geared to improve his lot must do. Moreover, these forces today are not merely resisting change. With their representative Richard Nixon in the White House, they are engaged in an assault on the advances made during the past decade. It has been Nixon's tragic and irresponsible choice to play at the politics of race, not, to be sure, with the primitive demagoguery of a "Pitchfork Ben" Tillman, say, but nevertheless with the same intent of building a political majority on the basis of white hostility to blacks. So far he has been unsuccessful, but the potential for the emergence of such a reactionary majority does exist, especially if the turbulence and racial polarization which we have recently experienced persists.

What is needed, therefore, is not only a program that would effect some fundamental change in the distribution of America's resources for those in the greatest need of them, but also a political majority that will support such a program. In other words, nothing less than a program truly, not merely verbally, radical in scope would be adequate to meet the present crisis; and nothing less than a politically constituted majority, outnumbering the conservative forces, would be adequate to carry it through. Now, it so happens that there is one social force which, by virtue both of its size and its very nature, is essential to the creation of such a majority—and so in relation to which the success or failure of the black struggle must finally turn. And that is the American trade-union movement.

ADDRESSING THE AFL-CIO CONVENTION in 1961, Martin Luther King observed: "Negroes are almost entirely a working people. There are pitifully few Negro millionaires and few Negro employers. Our needs are identical with labor's needs —decent wages, fair working conditions, livable housing, old-age security, health and welfare measures, conditions in which families can grow, have education for their children and respect in the community."

Despite the widely held belief that the blacks and the unions have not the same, but rather irreconcilable, interests—and despite the fact that certain identifiable unions do practice discrimination—King's words remain valid today. Blacks are mostly a working people, they continue to need what labor needs, and they must fight side by side with unions to achieve these things.

Bayard Rustin

THE BLACKS AND THE UNIONS

Of all the misconceptions about the labor movement that have been so lovingly dwelt on in the liberal press, perhaps none is put forth more often and is farther from the truth than that the unions are of and for white people. For one thing, there are, according to labor historian Thomas R. Brooks, between 2,500,000 and 2,750,000 black trade unionists in America.* If his figures are correct, and other estimates seem to bear them out, the percentage of blacks in the unions is a good deal higher than the percentage of blacks in the total population —15 per cent as compared with 11 per cent, to be precise. And since the vast majority of black trade unionists are members of integrated unions, one can conclude that the labor movement is the most integrated major institution in American society, certainly more integrated than the corporations, the churches, or the universities.

Moreover, blacks are joining unions in increasing numbers. According to a 1968 report by Business Week, one out of every three new union members is black. The sector of the economy which is currently being most rapidly unionized is that of the service industries, and most particularly among government employees, such as hospital workers, sanitation workers, farm workers, and paraprofessionals in educational and social-welfare institutions. This category of worker is, of course, both largely nonwhite and shamefully underpaid.

Like other workers, blacks have gained from the achievements of their unions in the way of higher wages, improved working conditions, and better fringe benefits. To be sure, in some unions whites still possess a disproportionate number of the higher-paying jobs and there is not yet adequate black representation at the staff level and in policy-making positions. But the question of what continues to account for the perpetuation of such inequities cannot properly be answered by the fashionable and easy reference to racial discrimination in the unions. Statistical surveys have shown that the participation of blacks in the work force is no higher in nonunionized occupations than in unionized ones. Indeed, as Derek C. Bok and John T. Dunlop have pointed out in their remarkably informed and comprehensive study, Labor and the American Community, even in the automotive and aero-space industries, where the unions have been known for dedication to racial justice, the percentage of blacks, particularly in the skilled jobs, is not appreciably higher than in other industries.

THERE HAVE, THEREFORE, TO BE far more fundamental social and economic reasons for present inequalities in employment. Primary among these reasons are certain underlying changes within the entire society which are being reflected in the evolving character and composition of the work force itself. The upsurge of union organization of minority-group workers in the fields of education, sanitation, and health care, for instance, is the result of the rapid expansion of the service sector of the economy.

Another crucial factor here is government economic policy. The tremendous growth in the economy from 1960 to 1968 increased nonwhite employment by 19 per cent, 4 per cent higher than the increase for whites, and during the same period the unemployment rate for nonwhite adult men dropped from 9.6 to 3.9 per cent. A large number of these new black workers entered unions for the simple reason that they had jobs. And now many of them are out of jobs, not because of union discrimination, but because the Nixon Administration's economic policies have so far caused a sharp increase in unemployment.

All of which is not to exonerate the entire labor movement of any possible charge of wrongdoing. It is rather to put the problem of economic inequality into some useful perspective. The inequalities which persist within the unions must of course be corrected. They are in fact being corrected through the work of the labor movement itself—the role of the Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO is particularly noteworthy here—the civil-rights activities of the federal government, and the efforts of black trade unionists who are taking over leadership positions in their locals and are playing more of a role in determining union policy. The union drive against discrimination was exemplified by the fight made by the AFL-CIO to have a Fair Employment Practices section written into the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Both President Kennedy and Robert Kennedy were opposed to including an FEPC section because they thought it would kill the bill, but George Meany pressed for it. He did so for a simple reason. The AFL-CIO is a federation of affiliates which retain a relatively high degree of autonomy. The parent body can urge compliance with its policies, but the decision to act is left up to the affiliates. Meany felt that the only way the AFL-CIO could deal effectively with unions practicing discrimination would be to demand compliance with the law of the land. He testified before the House Judiciary Committee that the labor movement was calling "for legislation for the correction of shortcomings in its own ranks." And the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act greatly speeded the process of this correction.

Most labor leaders, I believe, are opposed to discrimination against the blacks on moral grounds. But they also have highly practical grounds for their position. They understand that discrimination hurts the entire labor movement as much as it hurts blacks. They know from long experience as unionists that anything which divides the workers makes it more difficult for them to struggle together for the achievement of common goals. Racial antagonisms have undermined solidarity during strikes and have been exploited by management as a means of weakening unions. The following passage from the classic study, The Black Worker, written in 1931 by Sterling D. Spero and Abram L. Harris, may not be typical of every company's approach to its work force, yet it describes a practice commonly in use till this very day:

*"Black Upsurge in the Unions," Dissent (March-April, 1970).

> The Negro is now recognized as a permanent factor in industry and large employers use him as one of the racial and national elements which help to break the homogeneity of their labor force. This, incidentally, fits into the program of big concerns for maintaining what they call "a cosmopolitan force," which frees the employer from dependence upon any one group for his labor supply and also thwarts unity of purpose and labor organization.

People no longer lend much credence to the idea that management continues to think and operate in such convoluted terms. But it does, and so does labor. Indeed, such terms as "labor solidarity" or "labor disunity" are standard tools of the trade in labor-management relations. A further error is to imagine that unions might from such reasoning increase unity within their ranks by excluding blacks. On the contrary, given the character of the American working class, the only possibility for genuine labor solidarity is for the blacks to be fully integrated into every level of the trade-union movement. If they are not, then they will continue to exist outside the unions as a constant source of cheap labor exploitable by management to depress wages or to break strikes.

Another notion which has passed into vogue among some blacks as well as some whites is that the whole problem of integration can be finessed by organizing the workers into dual unions. This is not a new idea; nor is its feasibility any greater today than was evidenced by a record of impossibility in the past. For were there to be racially separate unions, it would naturally follow that the interests of blacks would be diametrically opposed to those of whites, with whom they would be in competition. And once again, no matter how innocently or unintentionally, the blacks would remain in the role of being a reserve army that could be called into action whenever companies felt the white workers needed a good kick in the pants.

Of course, the blacks would also be victims in this situation since they would be at the beck and call of management only if they were chronically unemployed. Thus, exploitation is as much the effect of poverty as its cause. It is only the poor, those who are needy and weak, who can be manipulated at the whim of the wealthy. This introduces another notion concerning the welfare of black and white workers about which there has grown up a misplaced skepticism—namely, the function of the supply of labor. Put very simply, it is in the interests of employers for the supply of labor to be greater than the demand for it. This situation obtains when there is high unemployment or what is often called a "loose" labor market. Under these conditions, the bargaining position of the unions is weakened since labor, which is after all the product unions are selling, is not in high demand, and also because there are a lot of unemployed workers whom the companies can turn to if the unions should in any way prove recalcitrant. Generally speaking, an excess of supply over demand for labor exerts a downward pressure on wages, and, vice versa, there is an upward pressure on wages when the demand for labor outpaces the supply. In addition, this dynamic of supply and demand affects the level of racial antagonism within the work force. If supply exceeds demand, i.e., if there is a high level of unemployment, there will be tremendous competition for jobs between white and black workers, and racial tensions will increase. Under conditions of relative full employment, there will be little job competition and greater racial harmony. As George Lichtheim recently pointed out: "If economic conflict as a source of political antagonism is ruled out . . . the residual cultural tensions . . . need not and doubtless will not fall to zero; but they can be held down to a tolerable level."*

THESE IDEAS SHAPE THE CONCEPTUAL universe as well as the behavior of many of the principal actors in our country's economic conflicts. The fact that they tend to be ignored in so much current discussion of blacks and unions is as much a testimony to the naïveté of liberal journalists as it is to the public-relations skills of corporations. A good example of what I mean is the press treatment accorded the terrible racial conflict in the building trades and the Administration's policies in this area.

Racial discrimination exists in the building trades. It is unjustifiable by any moral standard, and as to the objective of rooting it out there can be no disagreement among people of good will. How truly to achieve this objective is another matter. An important distinction here is often overlooked. One cannot set varying moral standards in judging the performance of institutions; the same standard must be applied equally to all—to the unions, the corporations, the churches, etc. But beyond the realm of moral judgment is the crucial question of social utility. Blacks could attack Jim Crow in the South without regard to the welfare of the lunch counters, the hotels, or whatever, because they had little or no stake in them. This is not the case with the trade-union movement, a social force in which blacks do have a stake. If blacks attack the unions in such a way as to damage them irreparably, they will ultimately harm themselves. As it happens, certain presently self-styled friends of the Negro are in fact not at all averse to such a possible development.

Writing in the New York Times, Tom Wicker reflected the views of many liberals when he described the Nixon Administration's strong and forthright position on the building-trades issue as "remarkable." Wicker's analysis, however, never advances beyond this point. He never asks why the Nixon Administration—particularly Attorney General Mitchell, and most particularly given other Administration policies—would suddenly take such an interest in the welfare of blacks. The question is neither gratuitous nor idle. Why, in fact, would a President who has developed a "Southern strategy," who has cut back on school-integration efforts, tried to undermine the black franchise by watering down the 1965 Voting Rights Act, nominated to the Supreme Court men like Haynsworth and Carswell, cut back on funds for vital social programs, and proposed a noxious crime bill for Washington, D.C.—which is nothing less than a blatant appeal to white fear—why indeed would such a President take up the cause of integration in the building trades?

*"What Socialism Is and Is Not," The New York Review of Books (April 9, 1970).

To begin with, Mr. Nixon's Philadelphia Plan—which requires contractors to make a commitment to hire a certain quota of black workers on a job where over $500,000 of federal funds are involved—actually does nothing for integration. In order to meet this commitment, a contractor could shift the required number of black workers in an area onto a particular job, a procedure known in the trade as checker-boarding. He would thus satisfy federal requirements for that job, but no new jobs would be created for blacks and no Negroes would be brought into the building trades. In fact, the contractor can even achieve compliance simply by making an effort of good faith, such as contacting certain people in the area who are concerned about black participation in the building trades. If those people do not produce any workers, the contractor has done his job and can get the federal money. The Philadelphia Plan makes no provision for training, nor does it provide a means for blacks to attain the security of journeyman status within the unions. It is geared only to temporary jobs, and even in this area it is deficient. It is designed primarily to embarrass the unions and to organize public pressure against them.

In simple truth, the plan is part and parcel of a general Republican attack on labor. The same Administration which designed it (as well as the Southern strategy), has also sent to Congress a measure that would increase federal control over internal union political affairs. Republican Senators and Representatives have introduced dozens of antilabor bills: one of which, for example, would create a right-to-work law for federal employees; another would restrict labor's involvement in political activities. Moreover, the Administration has turned the heat on labor at the same time that it has cooled pressure against discrimination by the corporations.

The advantages to the Republicans from this kind of strategy should be obvious. Nixon supports his friends among the corporate elite and hurts his enemies in the unions. He also gains a convenient cover for his anti-Negro policies in the South, and above all, he weakens his political opposition by aggravating the differences between its two strongest and most progressive forces—the labor movement and the civil-rights movement.

The Philadelphia Plan and related actions are also part of the Administration's attempt to pin onto labor the blame for inflation in construction costs. The Wall Street Journal has suggested that contractors welcome the thrust for integration in the building trades since this "might slow inflation in construction by increasing the supply of workers." There is reason to believe that Mr. Nixon thinks in these same terms. It will be remembered that on almost the very day he proposed the Philadelphia Plan, he also ordered a 75 per cent reduction in federal construction—thereby reducing the number of jobs available in the industry and producing the twofold effect of exerting a deflationary pressure on wages and increasing competition among workers over scarce jobs. When Nixon finally freed some of the construction funds some months later (a move no doubt designed to improve the economic picture for the 1970 elections), he warned that "a shortage of skilled labor runs up the cost of that labor." He said he would issue directives to the Secretaries of Defense; Labor; and Health, Education, and Welfare to train veterans and others toward the goal of "enlarging the pool of skilled manpower."

It should be pointed out in passing that the President's approach to the problem of inflation in construction costs cannot succeed since he has made the typical businessman's error of identifying wages as the major inflationary factor. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, on-site labor costs as a percentage of total construction costs decreased between 1949 and 1969 from 33 per cent to 18 per cent. During the same period, the combined cost of land and financing rose from 16 per cent to 31 per cent of the total cost, Thus land and financing, not labor, have been the major causes of inflation in construction. Nevertheless, the President continues his crusade against "wage inflation."

The concern with increasing the supply while reducing the cost of labor is what motivated the Nixon Administration's most recent act in the construction field—the suspension of the 1931 Davis-Bacon Act. Here the "deflationary" intention is more evident than in the case of the Philadelphia Plan, but the similarity between the two moves is striking, particularly with regard to the anti-union role envisioned for the unorganized Negro worker.

The Davis-Bacon Act requires contractors on federal or federally assisted projects to pay all workers, union or nonunion, the prevailing union wage rates. The suspension of the Act will not directly affect the wages of unionized workers who are protected by their contract. It will, however, enable contractors to cut the wages of nonunion workers, and this, in turn, should encourage the employment of these workers instead of the higher paid unionists. Thus, there will be fewer jobs for organized workers (there is already an 11 per cent unemployment rate in the construction industry), and the bargaining power of the unions will be weakened. Since many of the unorganized workers are nonwhite, it might be argued that this is a boon to their fortunes since they will be more likely to find work. Aside from the fact that they will be working for lower wages, the question is again

"Racial antagonisms have undermined solidarity during strikes and have been exploited by management as a means of weakening unions."

Bayard Rustin

THE BLACKS AND THE UNIONS

raised whether it is in the interests of blacks to let themselves be used by employers to hurt unions. I do not think that it is. Their interests lie in becoming part of the trade-union movement. Ironically, the current attack on labor may speed the process of their entrance into the labor movement, for in situations where union standards have been threatened by open shops, unions have been spurred on to fully organize their industry.

It should be emphasized that this would only encourage changes that have already been taking place for a number of years as a result of pressure from civil-rights groups and union leaders.

Seventy-nine Outreach programs now operate in as many cities and have placed over 8,000 minority-group youngsters in building-trades apprenticeship training programs. Sixty per cent have been placed in the highest paying trades—the plumbers, electricians, sheet-metal workers, carpenters, pipe fitters, and iron workers. This is far from sufficient, of course, but within the past two years, these programs have expanded by over 400 per cent, and they are continuing to grow. The role of civil-rights activists should be to continue to see that they grow.

THE BLACKS HAVE A CHOICE. They can fight to strengthen the trade-union movement by wiping out the vestiges of segregation that remain in it, or they can, knowingly or unknowingly, offer themselves as pawns in the conservatives' games of bust-the-unions.

The choice must be made on the basis of a critical assessment of the current economic plight of blacks. More than any single factor, the Nixon Administration's policies of high interest rates, "fiscal responsibility," and economic slowdown are undermining the gains which blacks made during the past decade. Dr. Charles C. Killingsworth, a leading manpower economist, predicted some months ago that within a year the unemployment rate is likely to go up to 8 per cent. We could expect the rate for blacks to be twice as high. Nixon's managed recession may calm the fears of businessmen, but it will do so at terrible cost to blacks and to all other working people. There are, no doubt, many well-meaning people who are concerned about the plight of unemployed workers under Nixon, but it is only the labor movement that is fighting every day for policies that will get these workers back on the job.

Thus, it is clear why unions are important to black workers. What may perhaps seem less obvious and must also be sharply emphasized is that the legislative program of the trade-union movement can go a long way toward satisfying the economic needs of the larger black community. The racial crisis, as we have seen, is not an isolated problem that lends itself to redress by a protesting minority. Being rooted in the very social and economic structure of the society, it can be solved only by a comprehensive program that gets to the heart of why we can't build adequate housing for everybody, why we must always have a "tolerable" level of unemployment, or why we lack enough funds for education. In this sense the racial crisis challenges the entire society's capacity to redirect its resources on the basis of human need rather than profit. Blacks can pose this challenge, but only the federal government has the power and the money to meet it. And it is here that the trade-union movement can play such an important role.

The problems of the most aggrieved sector of the black ghetto cannot and will never be solved without full employment, and full employment, with the government as employer of last resort, is the keystone of labor's program. One searches in vain among the many so-called friends of the black struggle for a seconding voice to this simple yet far-reaching proposition. Some call it inflationary, while to others, who are caught up in the excitement of the black cultural revolution, it is pedestrian and irrelevant. But in terms of the economic condition of the black community, nothing more radical has yet been proposed. There is simply no other way for the black Lumpenproletariat to become a proletariat. And full employment is only one part of labor's program. The movement's proposals in the areas of health, housing, education, and environment would, if enacted, achieve nothing less than the transformation of the quality of our urban life. How ironic that in this period when the trade-union movement is thought to be conservative, its social and economic policies are far and away more progressive than those of any other major American institution. Nor—again in contrast to most of the other groups officially concerned with these things—is labor's program merely in the nature of a grand proposal; there is also an actual record of performance, particularly in the area of civil rights. Clarence Mitchell, the director of the Washington Bureau of the NAACP and legislative chairman of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a man more deeply involved in Congressional civil-rights battles than any other black in America, has said, "None of the legislative fights we have made in the field of civil rights could have been won without the trade-union movement. We couldn't have beaten Haynsworth without labor, and the struggle against Carswell would not have been a contest."

Labor's interest in progressive social legislation naturally leads it into the political arena. The Committee on Political Education of the AFL-CIO, the Political Action Committee of the UAW, and the political arm of the Teamsters were active in every state in the last election registering and educating voters and getting out the vote. This year trade unionists were more politically active than they have ever been during an off-year election. The reason for this is clear. With so many liberal Senators up for reelection, and with political alignments in great flux, 1970 presented itself as a year that would initiate a new period in American politics—a period which would see the regrouping of liberal forces or the consolidation of a conservative majority.

One of the important factors determining the kind of political alignments that will emerge from this period of instability will be the relationship between the trade-union movement and the liberal community, and today this relationship is severely strained. Differences over the war in Vietnam are frequently cited as a major cause of this division, but there has been a great deal of misunderstanding on this issue. The house of labor itself is divided over the war, and even those labor leaders who support it have enthusiastically backed dove Congressional candidates who have liberal domestic records, among them such firm opponents of the war as Mike Mansfield, Edward Kennedy, Vance Hartke, Philip Hart, Howard Metzenbaum, and Edmund Muskie.

A better understanding of the trade-union movement by liberals may be developing, but for the present the antagonistic attitudes that exist cast an ideological pall over the chances for uniting the democratic Left coalition. It must be said that the vehement contempt with which the liberals have come to attack the unions bespeaks something more than a mere political critique of "conservatism." When A. H. Raskin writes that "the typical worker—from construction craftsman to shoe clerk—has become probably the most reactionary political force in the country"; or when Anthony Lewis lumps under the same category the rich oilmen and "the members of powerful, monopolistic labor unions"; or when Murray Kempton writes that "the AFL-CIO has lived happily in a society which, more lavishly than any in history, has managed the care and feeding of incompetent white people," and adds, "Who better represents that ideal than George Wallace"; or when many other liberals casually toss around the phrase "labor-fascists," one cannot but inevitably conclude that one is in the presence not of political opposition but of a certain class hatred. This hatred is not necessarily one based on conflicting class interests—though they may play a role here—but rather a hatred of the elite for the "mass." And this hatred is multiplied a thousandfold by the fact that we live in a democratic society in which the coarse multitude can outvote the elite and make decisions which may be contrary to the wishes and values, perhaps even the interests and the prejudices, of those who are better off.

It is difficult not to conclude that many liberals and radicals use subjective, rather than objective, criteria in judging the character of a social force. A progressive force, in their view, is one that is alienated from the dominant values of the culture, not one which contributes to greater social equality and distributive justice. Thus today the trade-union movement has been relegated to reactionary status, even though it is actually more progressive than at any time in its history—if by progressive we mean a commitment to broad, long-term social reform in addition to the immediate objectives of improving wages and working conditions. At the same time, the most impoverished social group, that substratum which Herbert Marcuse longingly calls "the outcasts and the outsiders," has been made the new vanguard of social progress. And it is here that liberals and New Leftists come together in their proposal for a new coalition "of the rich, educated, and dedicated with the poor," as Eric F. Goldman has admiringly described it, or in Walter Laqueur's more caustic phraseology, "between the Lumpenproletariat and the Lumpenintelligentsia."

THIS POLITICAL APPROACH, KNOWN AMONG liberals as New Politics and among radicals as New Leftism, denotes a certain convergence of the Left and the Right, if not in philosophy and intent, then at least in practical effect. I am not referring simply to the elitism which the intellectual Left shares with the economic Right, but also to their symbolic political relationship. Many of the sophisticated right-wing attacks on labor are frequently couched in left-wing rhetoric. Conservative claims that unions are anti-black, are responsible for inflation, and constitute minorities which threaten and intimidate the majority reverberate in the liberal community and are shaping public opinion to accept a crackdown on the trade-union movement.

While many adherents of the New Politics are outraged by Nixon's Southern strategy, their own strategy is simply the obverse of his. The potential for a Republican majority depends upon Nixon's success in attracting into the conservative fold lower-middle-class whites, the same group that the New Politics has written off. The question is not whether this group is conservative or liberal, for it is both, and how it acts will depend upon the way the issues are defined. If they are defined as race and dissent, then Nixon will win. But if, on the other hand, they are defined so as to appeal to the progressive economic interests of the lower middle class, then it becomes possible to build an alliance on the basis of common interest between this group and the black community. The importance of the trade-union movement is that it embodies this common interest. This was proved most clearly in 1968 when labor mounted a massive educational campaign which reduced the Wallace supporters among its membership to a tiny minority. And the trade-union movement remains today the greatest obstacle to the success of Nixon's strategy.

The prominent racial and ethnic loyalties that divide American society have, together with our democratic creed, obscured a fundamental reality—that we are a class society and, though we do not often talk about such things, that we are engaged in a class struggle. This reality may not provide some people with their wished-for quotient of drama, though I would think that the GE strike or the UAW strike against GM are sufficiently dramatic, and it may now have become an institutionalized struggle between the trade-union movement and the owners and managers of corporate wealth. Yet it is a struggle nonetheless, and its outcome will determine whether we will have a greater or lesser degree of economic and social equality in this country. As long as blacks are poor, our own struggle will be part of this broader class reality. To the degree that it is not, black liberation will remain a dream in the souls of an oppressed people. □

"Today the trade-union movement has been relegated to reactionary status, even though it is actually more progressive than at any time in its history. . . ."

Current Educational Fund Publications

2/New Careers 50¢
A Basic Strategy Against Poverty by Frank Riessman
Introduction by Michael Harrington

5/Separatism or Integration / Which Way for America? 50¢
A dialogue between Robert Browne and Bayard Rustin.
Introduction by John A. Morsell

6/Black Studies / Myths and Realities 50¢
Essays by Andrew F. Brimmer, Kenneth B. Clark, Norman Hill, Thomas Sowell, Roy Wilkins, C. Vann Woodward

7/The Neglected Black Majority 50¢
Essays on the Attitudes and Concerns of Some Forgotten Americans by Andrew F. Brimmer, Charles V. Hamilton, John A. Morsell and Thomas Sowell. With an Introduction by Bayard Rustin.

A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund
260 Park Avenue South
New York, N.Y. 10010
Telephone 533-8000

Officers
A. Philip Randolph
President
Robert W. Gilmore
Treasurer
Bayard Rustin
Executive Director
Norman Hill
Associate Director

Quantity Rates
50 or more 40¢ per copy
100 or more 30¢ per copy
1000 or more 25¢ per copy

equal rights for

...the AFL-CIO program

AFL-CIO Civ Rts

Civil Rights: Facts vs. Fiction

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 is a new bill of rights for everyone, regardless of race, creed or color.

This basic fact has been overlooked, ignored or distorted by those who are opposed to equal rights for anyone.

This is—in capsule form—what the act provides:

JOBS: Starting in July 1965, discrimination and segregation in employment, or in unions, is forbidden. Complaints will be processed through state agencies; the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission acts only if a state fails to act.

PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS: Effective at once, every hotel, restaurant, theater or other facility catering to the general public must do exactly that. Thirty-one state laws, already in effect have even stronger provisions.

SCHOOLS: The Attorney General of the United States has greater power to implement the Supreme Court decision of 1954 prohibiting segregation in public schools.

VOTING RIGHTS: Both the federal courts and the Attorney General are instructed to make sure registration and voting rights are safeguarded under uniform, reasonable standards.

There are other provisions in the law; a detailed analysis is available free of charge from the AFL-CIO. But these are the basic points.

Enemies of civil rights, enemies of labor, enemies of democracy itself are spreading lies about the terms of the act in order to play upon the fears of homeowners, parents, employers and workers. Here is the truth about the kind of lies that are told:

FICTION: "If you sell a house, you have to sell to a Negro."

FACT: The AFL-CIO believes that discrimination in housing should be ended. But there is no reference whatever to housing in the Civil Rights Act.

FICTION: "Your children will be sent out of the neighborhood to some Negro school."

FACT: Local school boards in some cities, operating under state and local statutes, have instituted pupil transfers in an effort to achieve better racial balance in their schools. But there is no such requirement in the Civil Rights Act, which provides only that schools must not be segregated.

FICTION: "A certain number of Negroes will have to be hired on every job, even if white people have to be fired to make room for them."

FACT: This is a myth. The law will properly put an end to discrimination in employment —including discrimination in seniority systems. But it does not in any way interfere with existing job rights. There are no "quotas" established. As a matter of fact, "inverse discrimination," even if intended to offset past evils, would actually be a violation of the law.

In short, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, in letter and spirit, is dedicated to justice—to the principles of democracy and fair play which are in the highest American tradition.

American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations
815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006.

Sixth Constitutional Convention

AFL-CIO

Resolution No. 167

CIVIL RIGHTS

The passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 -- both strongly supported by the AFL-CIO -- represent major accomplishments in the continuing effort to abolish racial discrimination in this country. But much more needs to be done before equality is a fact in this land.

The impact of the Civil Rights Act is already apparent. Widespread desegregation of public facilities and accommodations is a reality in 53 cities of over 50,000 population in Southern states. Among the important new tools provided by the Act are Title VI which prohibits discrimination in all programs receiving federal financial assistance, and Title VII which establishes a national Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

But good laws by themselves do not automatically solve problems, as we in the labor movement know from our own experience. The passage of the Wagner Act enabled unions to expand organization and increase their effectiveness in representing workers. But the laws had to be backed up with hard work. The unions could not and did not sit back and consider their job was done by the law.

That is just as true of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Vigorous and effective enforcement by government is mandatory if these laws are to be useful tools for eliminating discrimination and opening opportunities for minority group citizens. We intend to see to it that there is effective and vigorous enforcement.

Education:

We take particular note of the situation with regard to education in the South. The United States Office of Education reports that the percentage of Negro children attending desegregated schools in the 11 Southern states has tripled this year. On the other hand, data compiled by the Southern Regional Council indicates that the increase from 1964 to 1965 may have only doubled. Even the 7.5 percent figure of the U.S. Office of Education, however, represents meager progress 11 years after the Supreme Court decision required public school desegregation.

There must be an accelerated pace of school desegregation. Already, children, who entered the first grade after that decision, are about to graduate from high school, having spent their entire shool life in Jim Crow schools -- making a mockery out of that trail-blazing decision of the Supreme Court.

The U.S. Office of Education must not accept "freedom of choice" plans at face value. Frequently there is no free choice for Negro parents and children, who face threats and harassments if they select a previously all-white school.

We contend the U.S. Office of Education must be given sufficient funds to employ adequate staff and provide adequate services to obtain compliance with the law. Where local officials fail to comply, federal funds must be cut off in accordance with procedures outlined in the Civil Rights Act.

Equal educational opportunity must be a national goal. It is an achievable goal. We must make it a reality. The challenge of de facto segregation in the North must be faced. President Johnson has ordered the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights to undertake a study of de facto school segregation. We look to the Commission for positive recommendations to deal with this problem.

But we insist the problem in education is too crucial for additional delay. What America needs and must have is high quality education in its schools, both North and South, on a basis of true equality.

To achieve that goal, we reiterate President Meany's proposal, made immediately after the Supreme Court's school decision: That the United States authorize a special multi-billion dollar school fund to aid affected communities to meet this challenge. North and South alike could benefit from this proposal.

We must no let money stand in the way of eliminating segregation and discrimination in education -- every place in America.

Housing:

A serious and important factor in the spread of de facto school segregation in the North is the discriminatory housing practices that have fostered huge Negro ghettos, which we have long deplored and against which we will continue to battle until we have achieved equality in housing.

Executive Order 11063, issued by the late President Kennedy, banning discrimination in federal and federally-assisted housing, broughtthe weight and prestige of the Federal Government into this vital area. But this is not enough.

We urge President Johnson to extend the 1962 Housing Executive Order to cover not only Federal Housing Administration and Veterans Administration insured mortgages but also mortgage activities of all federally-assisted or federally-insured bank and savings and loan companies and to insure its vigorous implementation. Certainly the money of all Americans must not be used to deny housing to millions of them.

Equal Employment Opportunity:

The establishment of a national Equal Employment Opportunity Commission under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 provides a new and vitally important tool to strengthen labor's program to insure fair and equal employment opportunity. Better job opportunities for minority workers will enable them to break out of the vicious circle that confines them to slum housing and their children to overcrowded, substandard schools. The new law as a declaration of public policy will help us to speed achievement of our policies of the AFL-CIO of equal opportunity on the job.

As we have told the Congress, Title VII needs strengthening. We intend to support legislation to strengthen this section. Until we achieve that improved law, we intend to make Title VII work.

In anticipation of the establishment of the Commission under Title VII, President Meany requested all international unions to assign an international officer towork with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and other government agencies to obtain intelligent and effective compliance with the letter and spirit of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has adopted the following procedure in regard to complaints involving local unions and/or collective bargaining agreements of AFL-CIO affiliates:

A. In states which do not have a FEPC, after initial investigation by a Field Representative and at the time a complaint is sent to the local union involved, a copy will be sent to the national or international office of the union and to the Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO.

B. In states where there is a FEPC, the Commission has recommended that the state agency make a similar agreement with the AFL-CIO and its affiliates.

To implement this effort, we urge all national officers assigned to this task to give prompt attention to the processing of complaints received under this procedure and to call upon the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department for aid and assistance.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has ruled segregated local unions and separate lines of seniority and promotion based on race are a violation of the Act -- a position exactly comparable to the AFL-CIO position.

We call upon all affiliates with the few segregated locals that remain in existence to merge such separate locals without delay and to adopt contractual clauses that will eliminate barriers to equal opportunity for promotion and seniority for all workers.

In keeping with the five-point program adopted by the Executive Council on August 4, 1964, we also call upon all affiliates and assigned national officers to develop and accelerate programs to eliminate discriminatory practices within their industry and union, utilizing and strengthening established machinery of collective bargaining:

1) by negotiating non-discrimination clauses in all collective bargaining contracts and utilizing these clauses in all stages of the collective bargaining procedure;

2) by sensitizing the collective bargaining machinery to the problems of eliminating discrimination and providing equal employment opportunities.

Voting:

The Voting Rights Act provides the means to end discrimination at the ballot box. Since its passage, over 166,000 Negroes have registered to vote in Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina, states covered in whole or in part by the Act. In the four months since the law became effective, the Justice Department has sent federal examiners into only 32 counties. That is just not good enough.

Congress has provided the means for the elimination of voting discrimination. If the 1966 elections are to take place without disenfranchisement of Negroes, the Justice Department must act promptly.

We urge the Attorney General to move without further delay to implement the will of this nation -- that all its citizens have a right to vote.

Equal Administration of Justice:

The administration of justice on an equal basis for all citizens is fundamental in a democratic society. Inequality in the administration of justice moreover can be a major barrier to the implementation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

After long and bitter years, in which Southern juries have denied simple justice to Negroes, there have now been two instances in which justice has been served.

But still the murderers of William L. Moore, Medgar Evers, four young girls in a Birmingham church, James Chaney, Michael Schwerner, Andrew Goodman, Colonel Lemuel Penn, Jimmy Lee Jackson, Reverend James Reeb and Jonathan Daniels remain unpunished. We insist that this mockery of our judicial system be halted.

We demand justice in our courts -- equal justice, for all men must be equal in our courts if there is to be justice in our land.

Fundamental to this goal is the total elimination of segregation and discrimination in our jury system. The right to trial by a jury of one's peers is basic to democracy. But a jury must consist of peers; it must not be "for whites only." Therefore, be it

RESOLVED: That the AFL-CIO facilitate and insure increased labor participation in the achievement of these objectives; we urge every affiliate to establish a functioning Civil Rights Committee. These committees are crucial in the implementation of labor's civil rights program: providing technical assistance to workers filing complaints under Title VII; establishing basic educational programs reaching the rank and file member; forming cooperative relationships with responsible civil rights groups, religious and other community organizations, for the purpose of obtaining compliance with existing civil rights laws, and aiding local labor leadership to resist Ku Klux Klan and John Birch Society infiltration.

For equal rights and equal opportunity to be meaningful, we must have a society of full opportunity. Therefore, the AFL-CIO and its affiliates participated with outstanding Negro leaders, scholars and experts in a recent national planning session called by President Johnson.

In outlining the need for this conference, President Johnson said: "We seek not just legal equity, but human ability -- not just equality as a right and a theory, but equality as a fact and equality as a result."

This has always been the goal of the AFL-CIO. We pledge ourselves to the achievement of national programs to meet the educational, housing and community needs of all citizens. Such programs will both meet the social needs of our country and its cities and create jobs urgently needed to insure employment opportunities.

Such measures, plus a higher minimum wage, extended minimum wage coverage, and the establishment of national standards for quality integrated education and training will aid Negroes and other minorities to translate legal rights into absolute equal opportunity.

America has made great progress in civil rights in the past two years. We are proud of our role in this worthy battle.

But too much remains to be done for any of us to pause for self-congratulations. The unresolved problems are many and great. They can be met; they must be solved; they will be conquered.

Our goal is true and absolute equality of opportunity throughout America. We shall not rest until we achieve it.

(Not printed at Government expense)

United States of America

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 87th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

The John Birch Society

SPEECH

OF

HON. MILTON R. YOUNG

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, March 8, 1961

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. President, for the past year or more I have been deeply concerned about the increased membership and spreading influence of a relatively new organization called the John Birch Society.

It has gained considerable membership in several of the major cities in North Dakota. In one city alone, it has at least four cells. This organization is ultraconservative in nature and has among its members some of the most able and influential people in each community. Strangely enough, most of its criticism is leveled, not against liberal public officials, but against the more middle-of-the-road, and even conservative, Republicans.

They have accused me of being about every kind of a scoundrel, including a Communist or pro-Communist. This gives me little concern, as I am certain no sane person would believe there is the slightest substance to such a charge. In fact, from a practical political point of view, such charges actually are of some help. It is a sort of medicine to some liberal thinking people who have often accused me of being a reactionary conservative.

I have been aware for a long while that the head of this organization, Mr. Robert Welch, has made accusations against the President of the United States and other top officials far beyond anything the late Senator Joe McCarthy ever thought of. I quote a part of a story appearing in the Chicago Daily News of July 26, 1960:

However, new members are not told about a book written by Welch. Its title is "The Politician." It is about President Eisenhower, and for 302 pages tries to prove that the President is a conscious, dedicated agent of the Communists.

It maintains that the present administration is controlled by the Communist Party.

In this fantastic document Milton Eisenhower is described as Ike's superior in the Communist Party. Even Neil McElroy, former Secretary of Defense, is pilloried as "doing the Communists' work for them with assurance and determination."

Mr. President, I hesitated to give further publicity to this dastardly attack. It is unbelievable that any sane person would make such accusations against President Eisenhower, who has devoted his life to the service of this country and who led all of the allied forces in the European theater during World War II. The only reason why I am reluctantly giving publicity to the vicious charges made by the leaders of this society is that I believe it will serve to give needed information to people in my State and elsewhere who may be influenced by this organization.

Communism represents a serious menace to freedom-loving people everywhere. It is the same international conspiracy it has always been, seeking to enslave the entire free world. To label some of our most loyal and dedicated people as Communists plays right into the hands of the Communist movement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article appearing in the Chicago Daily News under date of July 26, 1960, entitled "Strange Threat to Democracy," and also an article appearing in this week's issue of Time magazine, entitled "The Americanists."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily News, July 26, 1960]

STRANGE THREAT TO DEMOCRACY—ANTI-RED GROUP HITS LEADERS

(By Jack Mabley)

Robert Welch, the leader of thousands of conservative Americans in the John Birch Society, not only believes that President Eisenhower is a Communist, but he takes a dim view of democracy.

"Democracy is merely a deceptive phrase, a weapon of demagoguery, and a perennial fraud," he told founders of the John Birch League in 1958. He has continued to maintain this in a booklet given to new members.

Welch, a prominent Boston businessman, a former board member of the National Association of Manufacturers, has 25 lines of biography in "Who's Who in the East."

He is the absolute boss, the authoritarian head of the John Birch Society, which ostensibly is an organization dedicated to fighting communism.

This league has thousands of members throughout the country, and a goal of a million members.

Wealthy conservatives support Welch. He lists as members of the advisory "Council" Cola G. Parker, Ernest G. Swigert, and William J. Grede, all past presidents of the National Association of Manufacturers, Clarence Manion of the Manion Forum, the late James Simpson, Jr., former Illinois Republican Congressman, and a number of other well-known conservatives.

LOFTY AIMS ARE MOST ATTRACTIVE

Welch is a persuasive speaker. Many responsible people are attracted to the Birch Society by the lofty aims expressed by Welch and "coordinators" who lead local groups.

It is made clear to new members that the organization is monolithic, that it operates under complete authoritative controls at all levels. And Welch is the undisputed boss.

However, new members are not told about a book written by Welch. Its title is "The Politician." It is about President Eisenhower, and for 302 pages tries to prove that the President is a conscious, dedicated agent of the Communists.

It maintains that the present administration is controlled by the Communist Party.

In this fantastic document Milton Eisenhower is described as Ike's superior in the Communist Party. Even Neil McElroy, former Secretary of Defense, is pilloried as "doing the Communists' work for them with assurance and determination."

This book is supposed to be seen only by leaders of the society. Recently a meeting in Glenview was disrupted when the book was brought up in open discussion by someone in the audience.

Stillwell J. Conner, leader of the meeting, had told a member that giving the book to a member of the society before he became "qualified" was like telling a first-year medical student to go out and cure cancer.

ROOSEVELT, H.S.T. USED BY COMMIES

Welch writes that Roosevelt was used by the Communists. He says that Truman also was used by them, but with his knowledge and acquiescence because "they made him President." In the third stage of the Communist conspiracy, writes Welch, "the Communists have one of their own actually in the Presidency."

It may be questionable judgment to give these incredible statements the dignity of publicity. But Welch is persuasive.

Quietly he has been gaining strong support among both prominent conservatives and thousands of ordinary people who seek to fight communism.

They should know the thinking of the man to whom they are pledging their energies and loyalty.

[From Time magazine, Mar. 10, 1961]

ORGANIZATIONS

THE AMERICANISTS

Among the U.S. brotherhoods dedicated to the fight against communism, nothing is quite like the John Birch Society. Except for an elite corps of leaders its members shun personal publicity and their names are held by the society in strictest secrecy. Its cells, of 20 to 30 members apiece, take orders from society headquarters, promote Communist-style front organizations that do not use the John Birch name. Carefully avoiding normal channels of political action, the society accepts the hard-boiled dictatorial direction of one man who sees democracy as a "perennial fraud" and estimates that the United States is 40 percent to 60 percent Communist controlled. In other times, other places, the John Birch "Americanists"—as they call themselves—might seem a tiresome, comic-opera joke. But already the society admits to cells in 35 States, and its partisans have made their anonymous and unsettling presence felt in scores of U.S. communities.

In Wichita, Kans., student members of the society are trained to tell their cell leader of any "Communist" influence noted in classroom lectures; by phone, parents belabor the offending teacher and his principal for apologies and admissions of guilt. A Wichita businessman who planned to make a modest contribution to a University of Wichita fund was dissuaded because members of the society were demanding that certain professors and books be thrown out. "My business would be wrecked," said he, "if those people got on the phone and kept on yelling that I am a Communist because I give money to the school." Society members in Nashville, Tenn., started telephone campaigns to warn homeowners that some of their neighbors were suspected Reds. The project with current top priority is the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren, and activities in a dozen cities range from the "spontaneous" circulation of petitions to a rash of letters to newspapers, and a "Help Impeach Earl Warren" banner strung across the main street of Pampa, Tex. (and taken down by the police a few hours later).

The Red plot

All society activity comes under the firm thumb of a balding, deceptively mild-mannered, retired businessman from Belmont, Mass., named Robert Welch. Son of a North Carolina farmer, Baptist Welch, 61, spent 25 years as an executive with Cambridge's famed candymaking James O. Welch Co. (run by his brother). After the war, Welch began to bone up on Communist literature; eventually he decided that such schemes as social security and Federal income tax laws were part of a Red plot to ready the United States for Soviet conquest. Welch left candy for full-time anti-Communist pamphleteering in 1957. He founded the John Birch Society the next year, naming it for a U.S. Navy captain killed by Chinese Communist guerrillas after V-J Day.

Welch's Mein Kampf is a masterpiece of invective called "The Politician." Shown only to close friends, the book is now being withdrawn from circulation, largely because its judgments on contemporary leaders repelled more people than they attracted. Some Welchian estimates:

The Eisenhower brothers: "Milton Eisenhower is actually Dwight Eisenhower's superior and boss within the Communist Party. * * * For [the former President] there is only one possible word to describe his purposes and his actions. The word is 'treason.' "

CIA Director Allen Dulles: "The most protected and untouchable supporter of communism, next to Eisenhower himself, in Washington."

The late John Foster Dulles: "A Communist agent."

Rightwing names

For public consumption, Welch has kept his vitriol well enough in check to avoid libel suits. A prolific author, he has turned out reams of Red-baiting copy, including the Blue Book that guides the society's actions. He puts out the monthly American Opinion, as well as a bulletin that informs all dues-paying ($24 a year for men, $12 for women) members of the society's monthly aims. Despite the ill-fame of "The Politician," Welch has been highly praised as a freedom fighter by a horde of familiar rightwing names, e.g., Actor Adolphe Menjou, Lawyer Clarence Manion, ex-Diplomat Spruille Braden, who grace the society's council and have the right to appoint his successor.

Not all conservatives are so sanguine about Welch. Many object to the society's contempt for dissent from its views, feel that its militant words and thoughts are barely a goosestep away from the formation of goon squads. "This is the kind of thing that does violence to everything we're trying to accomplish," says one Chicago conservative who backed away from Birchism after a glimpse at "The Politician." It siphons a lot of well-meaning, respectable people off into a lunatic fringe run by Welch, at the same time giving anti-Communist efforts a black eye. It hurts us much more than it helps us."

oeiu42aflcio

IS THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY ANTI-COMMUNIST?

by

Harry Fleischman

The John Birch Society is so vehement in claiming that it hates Communism that I was intrigued into wondering how the John Birch Society itself would fare if its program and that of the Communist Party were compared. The results are illuminating:

1. Communist program -- Weaken NATO so that it would be unable to check any possible advance into Western Europe.

John Birch Society program --Take U.S. troops out of NATO. This would enable the USSR to march into Western Europe without real opposition.

2. CP -- Weaken or wreck the United Nations by insisting on Soviet veto power in the administration of the United Nations.

JBS -- Take the United States out of the United Nations. This would leave the Communists in full control of the UN.

3. CP -- Urge underdeveloped nations to refuse American economic or military aid on grounds that it would make those countries puppets of America.

JBS -- Withdraw American economic and military aid from foreign nations, thus allowing Communist nations to fill the vacuum.

4. CP -- Try to convince Americans that the Communist nations pose no external military threat to America and world peace.

JBS -- "Although our danger remains almost entirely internal, from Communist influences right in our midst, and treason right in our government, the American people are being persuaded that our danger is from the outside, is from Russian military superiority." Blue Book.

5. CP -- Persuade the American people to cut the defense budget as not needed since there is no Communist threat to peace.

JBS -- Abolish the income tax, which provides the wherewithal to pay for defense needs.

6. CP -- Convince Africans and Asians that America does not merit their support because of alleged growing racism.

JBS -- Impeach Chief Justice Earl Warren because of Supreme Court decisions for civil liberties and desegregation, argue for states' rights against the Court.

7. CP -- Give protective coloration to real Communists by charging that all who stand for social reform are attacked as Communists.

JBS -- Attack all who stand for social reform -- even very moderate-- as Communists.

8. CP -- Use front groups to promote the party's objectives; infiltrate union, civic and political groups; attack and smear as "Fascist" all opponents, insist that the end justifies the means.

JBS -- Use front groups to promote the John Birch Society's objectives; infiltrate unions, civic and political groups; attack and smear as "Communist" all opponents; insist that the end justifies the means.

Under the John Birch Society's own rules of "logic," wouldn't this record make the Society qualify as at least "Comsymps," to use Robert Welch's inelegant invention?

Nevertheless, I must confess, I prefer J. Edgar Hoover's temperate warning that "The label of 'communist' is too often indiscriminately attached to those whose views differ from the majority" and that "attributing every adversity to communism is not only irrational, but contributes to hysteria and fosters groundless fears."

No, the John Birch Society is not Communist (unless the Communists are even more Machiavellain than I think they are), but if the John Birch Society did not exist, the Communists might have had to invent one.

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

To _____

Date _____ Time _____

WHILE YOU WERE OUT

Mr. Mueller Travel

of _____

Phone _____

TELEPHONED		PLEASE CALL HIM
CALLED TO SEE YOU		WILL CALL AGAIN
WANTED TO SEE YOU		RUSH

Message Your reservations are all confirmed to New York

_____

PARTY RECEIVING CALL

Answers from
Wis. Union Staff
at AREA COPE
Conference April, 1964

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Take a ~~lot~~ half truth & expand it recklessly - prey on prejudice & ignorance

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____ (at least difference in degree

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) J. Birch Society (b) B. J. Hargis

   (c) Minute Men (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Anti Civil Rights

   (b) Abolish Income Tax

   (c) Restrict ~~rights~~ civil liberties of "communists"

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) School Integration

   (b) Spiritual Prayers

   (c) Pro civil liberties decisions e.g. ~~re~~ affecting Communists

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant ___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ~~least~~ most False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

We should be more ~~appr~~ aggressive in assuming the ultra right. Should not simply treat them as harmless crackpots.

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Infiltration, oversimplification of issues, hate

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch Society (b) Christian Crusade

   (c) AMPAC (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Anti-UN

   (b) Purity-rod, work etc

   (c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) Schools-desegregation

   (b) No religion in schools

   (c) Protect 5th Amend.

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

_____ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

_____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

_____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

_____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

X Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education

815—16th Street, N.W.

Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? _____

_____

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) John Birch (b) _____

(c) Barry Goldwater (d) _____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) No Income tax

(b) [illegible]

(c) _____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) Prayer Decision

(b) Civil Liberties

(c) _____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes ____ No X

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True ____ False X

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

X Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

17 17

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Newspaper, Radio T.V. - for the purpose of innuendo

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch (b) _____

   (c) _____ (d) _____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) _____

   (b) _____

   (c) _____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) _____

   (b) _____

   (c) _____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ____ False X

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

X Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

X Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

X Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

already done Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

X Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Extreme pressures - work on school and church groups.

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch Society (b) Nt'l Assoc. of Manufacturers

   (c) American Medical Society (d) _____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Right to Work

   (b) Opposition to Medi-Care

   (c) _____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) _____

   (b) _____

   (c) _____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

X Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Use of Films "And Women Must Weep" & Counter with "Anatomy of a Lie"

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? divide & conquer

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch (b) Lifeline

   (c) ACA (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Prayer Decision Medi-care

   (b) Civil Liberties

   (c) Right To Work

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) Validity of Agency Shop Clause

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ____ No X

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

_____ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

_____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

X Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

X Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? FALSE. STATEMENTS, + DIFFER PEOPLE, AND DIFFERENT IDEAS FOR DIFFERENT GROUPS

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ✓ False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch Society (b) BERRY GOLDWATER

   (c) A.M.A (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) ELIMINATING OF GRADUATED INCOME TAX

   (b) GOV. TO BIG, + FED AID

   (c) PROPERTY RIGHTS

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) PRAYER IN SCHOOL

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ✓ False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant✓)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ____ No ✓

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ✓ False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

_____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

_____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

PUT RIGHT WING GROUPS ON DEFENCE
BY TELLING PEOPLE THIS GROUP IS WORST
THEN THE COMMUNIST PARTY

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Call to the veterans Civil Groups. Infiltrate Union meetings.

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch Society (b) ____

   (c) American Medical Asso (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Right to Work &

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ____ False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none X little ___ significant ___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ____ No X

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

X Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Continual Education of Union Members at meetings

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Call all Social Education and Labor Legislation as communist Equate every dissentor or opposition to their ideas as unpatriotic.

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True ✓ False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) John Birch Society (b) Right to Work Committee

(c) Association for Constitutional action (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) Opposition to Civil Rights ~~Solel~~ State Rights

(b) ____

(c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) Reapportionment

(b) ____

(c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True ✓ False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little✓significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes ✓ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True ____ False ✓

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

✓ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

✓ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Mainly The Big Lie Continued distortion —

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True X False ____ But the so-called honest conservative finds out to late

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) John Birchers (b) Right To Work Com.

(c) Financial Groups. (d) Medical group largely doing dirty work

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) Right To Work — Repeal 20 Century —

(b) Establish Taxation on Ability instead of ability to pay

(c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) Desegregation — Reapportionment — Labor Acts in general

(b) ____

(c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True ____ False X Repeated Big Lie has some appeal

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none X and little X significant ____)influence on your members. on informed members

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes X No ____ Using otherwise better groups

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True ____ False X

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

#1 _____ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

2 _____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

3 _____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

4 _____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

5 _____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

6 _____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

7 _____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

8 _____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

9 _____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

10 _____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? PROPAGANDA DISSEMINATED, EVERYWHERE

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ✓ False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) BIRCH (b) AMER. FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOV'NT

   (c) CRUSADERS (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) SEGREGATION

   (b) RIGHT TO WORK

   (c) TAFT-HARTLEY - LANDRUM-GRIFFIN, LAWS

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) SEGREGATION DECISION

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ____ False ✓

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant ✓)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ✓ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ____ False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

✓ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

✓ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

✓ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

MORE USE OF T.V. TO PRESENT LABORS POSITION!

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? malicious and vicious

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) Goldwater (b) ~~Amica~~ AMPAC

(c) John Birch Society (d) BIPAC

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) Right-To-Work law

(b) Repeal of Tax

(c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) Prayer

(b) Integration

(c) Reapportionment

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant X)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

_____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

X Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

_____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

X Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

More time should be spent on the education of our members in regard to ~~them~~ what the "right-wings" are actually doing against them. There are many films now being shown at clubs, schools etc that support the "right-wings", and only one side is being shown

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Slanted Communications, Front Groups, Terror, Blackmail, Falsehood

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) AMPAC (b) John Birch Society

   (c) BIPAC (d) Billy James Hargis

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) ~~Rep.~~ Right to work

   (b) States Rights

   (c) Aid to Ed.

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) Prayer

   (b) Integration

   (c) Reapportionment

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant X)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

X Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

X Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Purchase T.V. & Radio Time for AFL-CIO Films

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Always promoting FREEDOM

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch (b) Billy Hargis Group

   (c) FREEI (d) Citizens' White Group

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Tax measure

   (b) Against U.N

   (c) States rights

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) Prayer decision

   (b) Reapportionment

   (c) Aid to education only to tax supported schools

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant X)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

X Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

X Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

GROUP RESEARCH IS GOOD, BUT IT SHOULD BE PUT INTO EASIER READING.

GET CHURCH GROUPS TO UNDERSTAND MOTIVE OF RIGHT WING GROUPS

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? untrue statements slander

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True ____ False X

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) John Birch (b) ____

(c) Goldwater (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) Civil Rights

(b) Untruth statements on medicare

(c) Tax measure

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) ____

(b) ____

(c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little✓___significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes ____ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True ____ False ✓

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

X Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Have a registration drive and get out the vote like we never had before

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Attempt to slander by inference — Repetition of lies until they see it

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) Americans for Constitutional Liberties (b) Birch Society

(c) Freedom Committee (d) _____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) Loss of Seniority — three passages of C.R. Bill

(b) Fight the Communists

(c) _____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) Integration of Schools

(b) _____

(c) _____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes ____ No (Haven't noted as yet)

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

✓ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Do a good job on Cope so Rt wing politicians don't win —
Be alert to Radio + TV programs
(I don't believe in picketing a rt wing speaker — It just gives him more publicity —

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

2

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Propaganda - to divide other people

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch Society (b) ACA Society.

   (c) Klu Klux Clan (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Reapportionment of Voting Areas.-

   (b) Repeal of Income taxes.-

   (c) Civil Rights

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ~~Reapportionment of Voting Areas~~.

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little X significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

_____ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

_____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

_____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

_____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

On Item 10, the local could do all of these but the problem is to get members to work at them.

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Fear, Half-Truths & Deception

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ✓ False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) Birchers (b) AMA.

   (c) NAM (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ____ False ✓

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little✓significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ✓ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ✓ False ____

✓

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

✓ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

✓ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

✓ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

✓ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

✓ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

attempt to find a way to convince AFL-CIO members of the importance for survival of the labor movement that they must involve themselves in politics as much as does the politicians.

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Fear + Hate

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch (b) ____

   (c) Goldwater (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Right to Work Laws

   (b) Repeal Income Tax

   (c) abolish U.N.

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) De segregation of schools

   (b) reapportionment

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant X)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ____ No ____ ?

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

X Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

X Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

X Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? TELL UNTRUTH.

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ____ False ✓

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birchers (b) Americans for action.

   (c) ____ (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Right to Works

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ✓ False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant ✓)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ✓ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ____ False ✓

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

_____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

17 17

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? disruptive

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

(a) John Birch Society (b) John Manson

(c) Ampac (d) Bepac

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

(a) Liberty Amendments

(b) National Right to Work Laws

(c) Against the Civil Rights bill

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

(a) Anti Segregation decision, "Schools"

(b) Reapportionment

(c) Aid to Education

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant X)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

True X False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

X Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

X Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

X Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

X Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

X Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

X Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

X Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

X Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

X Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

X Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Get some of our people into the schools to explain Labors role in the community. Also the history of the Labor movement and its contributions to the real building of America.

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Communist Propaganda

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch (b) Pifac

   (c) Maf. Association (d) ____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) States rights

   (b) Segregation

   (c) Right to work

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant X)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes X No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ____ False X

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

✓ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

✓ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

✓ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Propaganda in the papers Radio & TV.

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True ✓ False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) John Birch (b) ____

   (c) Gold Water (d) Wallace

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Against Unemployment Ins. Med. Care

   (b) For Right to Work laws

   (c) Against Unions & Union shops

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True ✓ False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ✓ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ✓ False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

✓ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

I believe the we should get more into the family (home) and school before the Cancer hath alt. on

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? Hate & False information

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True X False ____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) Birch (b) Goldwater

   (c) Wallace (d) Nixon

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) Civil Rights

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) ____

   (b) ____

   (c) ____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True X False ____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant ✓)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes ✓ No ____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True ✓ False ____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

✓ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

✓ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

✓ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

✓ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

✓ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

✓ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

Yes ✓ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

Yes ✓ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

✓ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

✓ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

Make it Policy for members to be voters. Would discuss this issue here if given the chance as a point for discussion

AFL-CIO Committee On Political Education
815—16th Street, N.W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Notes for Discussion Leaders

Climate Contributing to Rise of Extremism

1. FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover	"The cause of communism is well served by the hate-mongers, the lunatic fringe and the other rabble who preach a doctrine of malice and intolerance toward their fellow man. They are carriers of a highly infectious disease. "They clutter the streets and the mails with their slanderous obscenities, urging impressionable teen-agers and unstable adults to acts of hate, terror and intimidation. "They have brought forth the bombs and ignited the flames that have killed decent Americans and even innocent children and destroyed churches and other temples of worship." Washington Post, 12/5/63
2. Henry Steele Commager (historian)	"The assassination of President Kennedy, and the killing of the chief suspect, have dramatized for us the lawlessness and violence, the fear and suspicion and hatred which lie so close to the surface of American life." Washington Post 12/1/63
3. Herbert Block (Pulitzer Prize cartoonist)	"Many sections of the press, including some of our most widely read national magazines, have fostered the idea that the United States Government somehow does not belong to the people but is the enemy. Not corruption, injustices or inequities in representation, but the Federal Government itself, and most particularly the Executive and Judical branches, is made out to be some kind of enemy." Washington Post 12/4/63
4. Chief Justice Earl Warren	"If we really love this country, if we truly love justice and mercy, if we fervently want to make this Nation better, we can at least abjure the hatred that consumes people, the false accusations that divide us, and the bitterness that begets violence." Capitol Memorial
5. Dr. Eugene CarsonBlake (United Presbyterian Church)	"Those who have been making irresponsible attacks upon him and his policies are as responsible for his death as the one who pulled the trigger." Washington Post 11/24/63
6. Joseph D. Quillian, Jr. (Dean of Perkins School of Theology, SMU)	"The fact that the accused particular criminal (Lee Oswald) turned out to be a Marxist made no difference, for the contribution of our city to hatred, lawlessness of attitude and violation of human rights and values was still perfectly clear to us--and still is." St. Louis Post-Dispatch 12/19/63

7. Maurice I. Carlson (former Dallas Republican Chairman)	"Freedom of thought and expression are opposed in Dallas by those who hold power in this city. Thomas Jefferson would find things pretty rough in Big D. He would be regarded as too controversial to be respectable." St. Louis Post-Dispatch 12/19/63
8. Leroy Collins (former Governor Florida-now head of the National Association of Broadcasters)	--urged Southerners to tell the "bloody-shirt wavers to climb down off the buckboards of bigotry ...How many Sunday School children have to be dynamited to death? How many Negro leaders have to be shot in the back? How many Governors have to be shot in the Chest? How many Presidents have to be assassinated? NY Times 12/4/63
9. William R. Matthews (editor of Tucson Arizona Daily Star)	"I was in Dallas last week at a meeting of men from all over Texas. I was discouraged and alarmed over the violence of the hatred expressed not only against Jack Kennedy but at Lyndon Johnson...The haters and the name-smearers have reaped what they preached." Drew Pearson Washington Post 11/29/63
10. J. (Bud) Nelson, letter of resignation as Chairman of Tacoma, Washington, White Citizens Council	"Though it was a left-wing Communist who wantonly assassinated our President...I feel that every radical left and right, had his hand on the rifle butt and finger on that trigger. We are all guilty (morally) of fomenting hatreds of one sort or another, thus guilty of a common act of cruelty." Washington Post 11/27/63
11. Thomas G. Aaron, letter of resignation as Chairman of Kentucky Young Americans for Freedom	"I am satisfied that the climate of political degreneracy and moral hysteria masquerading as 'true Americanism' bears substantial culpability for the murder of the President of the United States." He said the group was "more a vehicle of political impovrishment than one of loyal and legitimate opposition." NY Times 12/1/63
12. Richard Ely, President, Memphis Citizens Council	"I firmly believe Mr. Kennedy died a tyrant's death. President Kennedy did nothing to harm or set back communism but he has done so many things to help communism." Washington Post 11/27/63
13. Ted Desley (publisher of the Dallas News)	---accused Mr. Kennedy of running the nation as Caroline rode her tricyle. Pearson Washington Post 11/27/63
14. American Opinion (Birch Society publication)-Novemeber issue article by Charles C. Tansel	in re disarmament proposal--" It is amazing that resolutions of impeachment were not introduced at once in the House of Repesentatives, and it is a clear indication of how far the last three Administrations have gone toward the destruction of American patriotism and devotion to our flag and our country." NY Times 12/18/63

15. Robert Welch, founder of the Birch Society in December issue of the Society's Bulletin

"In the course of the awakening of America... there was a rapidly rising identification of the policies of the Kennedy Administration with the plans of the Communists. There was even an increasing awareness of the fact that steps and measures of the Administration which were specifically presented to the American people as means of fighting Communism were in fact helping the Communists and had been cunningly designed by somebody behind the scenes for that purpose." --In the same article Welch charged that President Kennedy had been assassinated by a Communist acting under orders. NY Times 12/25/63

16. "On Target", publication of the Minuteman, Norborne, Mo. March 15, 1963

"The Minutemen heartily endorse the use of a variety of weapons, from pistols to poison to target rifles, in the pursuit of their goals... Thus the publication states: 'Traitors beware! Even now the cross hairs are on the back of your necks.'"...
Madison Capitol Times 1/24/64

17. Letter from Paul Revere Associated Yoemen Inc. New Orleans, La.

"There is still a bare possibility that we can save our country from complete socialism coming in 1965...

"We must defeat the liberals in the Senate. It can be done as follows - the only way.

"There are 19 sparsely populated States with 38 Senators: 18 of whom are ultra-liberals. They must be concentrated upon - and defeated. They are: "Alaska, Bartlett and Gruening; Arizona, Hayden; Arkansas, Fulbright; Hawaii, Inouye; Idaho, Church; Maine, Muskie; Nevada, Bible and Cannon; New Mexico, Anderson; North Dakota, Burdick; South Dakota, McGovern; Oregon, Morse and Neuberger; Rhode Island, Pell and Pastore; Utah, Moss and Wyoming, McGee." Inserted in Cong. Record by Senator Morse, January 20, 1964.

Not for circulation
Probably has [illegible]

ILLINOIS

Act Fast WILMETTE Box 292

American Action Counsel, Inc. CHICAGO Box 435

Leona Scannel is Executive Secretary of this anti-labor group. Merwin K. Hart and Upton Close were active in its founding.

American Council on Relations CHICAGO

This group was organized in 1961.

Americans for Constitutional Action ARLINGTON HEIGHTS (see cover sheet)

Americans for Constitutional Action LAKE BLUFF (12th Congressional District) (see cover sheet)

Americans for Constitutional Action VILLA PARK (see cover sheet)

American Security Council CHICAGO 123 N. Wacher Drive

This organization maintains a large file of "subversives" for blacklisting. John Fisher is President. Their Washington publication: "Washington Report."

American Security Education Program PARK RIDGE 1321 Park Ridge Road

Libby A. Krejci is Chairman of this 60 member group. L

American Vigilant Intelligence Foundation CHICAGO Box 144

Americans Will Vote, Inc. CHICAGO 8 S. Michigan Avenue

Anti-Communist League of America PARK RIDGE Box 365

John Crippen is the Executive Secretary of this group. It was recommended by Robert Welch in the John Birch White Book.

Anti-Communist Society SPRINGFIELD

Wilfred Stock is the leader of this group. It has 15 members. L

Associated Industries of the Quad-Cities ROCK ISLAND 616 20th Street

C. W. Anderson is the Executive Vice President of this group.

"Bible News Flashes" GALVA Box 141

The editor and publisher of this sheet is W. D. Herrstrom.

The Bookfinders ROCKFORD 341 N. Main Street

F. L. Mill is active in this group.

ILLINOIS

Cardinal Mindzenty Study Group EAST ALTON 164 Norwood Place

Vivian Wall is President of this 6 member group. L

Champaign County Taxpapers CHAMPAIGN 910 W. Springfield Avenue

L. L. Von Patterson is President of this 50 member group. L

Christian Anarchist Guild CHICAGO Box 5270 3323 Michigan Blvd.

This group publishes the "American Spectator," Wyman Port is its editor.

Christian Citizens For America STERLING

This group was begun in 1961.

Christian Patriotic Crusade HINSDALE Box 147

F. Allen Mann is active in this group. It publishes an anti-semitic, anti-negro organ, "The Revere."

Church League of America WHEATON

National Headquarters. Major Edgar C. Bundy is President.

Church Schools Service, Inc. CHICAGO 10119 Lafayette Avenue

Citizens v. Fluoridation, Inc. CHICAGO 6633 S. Lowe Street

Committee for the Repeal of the Income Tax EVANSTON

Ruth O'Connell is active in this group.

Conference of American Small Business Organizations CHICAGO 407 S. Dearborn St.

R. Harland Shaw of this group was quoted as "out to fight the Reuther recession."

"The Conservative" CHICAGO 6750 Stony Island Avenue

This publication is put out by the Naconle Company. William Waddington, Jr., is the editor. It has reprinted columns from "Human Events" and Life Lines."

The Conservative Club ST. CHARLES

Conservative Clubs of America CHICAGO 2020 W. Montrose Avenue

Robert Bent Taft is the Secretary of this group.

Constitution Clubs of Illinois, Inc. DEERFIELD

Constitution Party of Illinois CHICAGO

ILLINOIS

Constitutional Research Association CHICAGO 3150 N. Sheridan Road

Council of Women Citizens CHICAGO 316 S. Clark Street

"Destiny of America" CHICAGO Box 5164

This radio broadcast is by Robert B. Record.

DuPage Patriots WHEATON Box 506

Education For American Security GLENVIEW

This local group was founded in 1960.

Evanston Panel, Inc. EVANSTON Box 872

This group publishes "Your America" which criticized NEA and UNESCO.

Faith and Freedom Forum WHEATON Box 55

Federal Party BARRINGTON Box 315

CHICAGO 401 S. LaSalle Street

The Chicago group was established in 1952.

First Principles HOLLAND 366 E. 166th Street

For God and Country Study Group CHICAGO 6310 S. Claremont Avenue

Foundation For Foreign Affairs, Inc. CHICAGO 64 E. Jackson Blvd.

Free Enterprise Federation CHICAGO 111 N. Wabash Avenue

Harry Everingham, Thomas O'Conner and Judge John Unger are Trustees of this group. Publish "Free Enterprise," edited by H. Everingham.

Freedom Bookshelf LOMBARD Box 303

The Freedom Bookshelf began in 1960. It recommends tapes by Hargis and Schwarz, among others.

"Gentile News" CHICAGO

Eugene Flitcraft is the publisher of this paper.

George S. May International Company CHICAGO

This company sponsored a Young Americans for Freedom rally.

"The Gospel Truth" CHICAGO Box 1963

James Kurtz is the editor of this organ.

ILLINOIS

Grass Roots Association CHICAGO 2020 W. Montrose Avenue

A. Edwin Allbaugh is the Executive Director of this 6,450 member Association. It has a national staff of 5, with 16 State groups and 92 local groups. GRA was founded in 1948. Same address as Conservative Clubs of America.

Help Fight Communism, Inc. CHICAGO P.O. Box 1119

Austin Folett is President and Phillip R. Gates is Vice President of this group.

The Heritage Foundation, Inc. CHICAGO 75 East Wacher Drive

Arthur Conrad is President of this Corporation. It publishes and distributes the "Case For Right-To-Work Laws" and Rudd's "Bending the Twig."

Hinsdale Study Group HINSDALE 301 Chanticleer

Mrs. Calvin E. Race is active in this group. L

Hinsdale Women's Republican Club CLARENDON HILLS 3 Iroquois Street

Mrs. Eugene Alsaugh is President of this 160 member group.

Illinois Right-To-Work Committee CHICAGO Dearborn Street

Ira H. Latimer is the Executive Vice Chairman of this group.

Institute for American Strategy CHICAGO 7 S. Dearborn Street

This group of industrialists conducts cold war seminars with military leaders.

Intercollegeiate Society of Individuals (ISI) CHICAGO P.O. Box 4309

This group publishes the New Individualists Review. (See cover sheet) Frank Chodorov is President.

International Intelligence DALTON Box 42

Kankakee County Taxpayers Association KANKAKEE Rt. #1

Mrs. Kenneth W. Elliott is Secretary of this 250 member group. L

Mayflower Descendents CHICAGO 231 S. LaSalle Street

The Governor-General of this group is Waldo M. Allen. It was established in 1807.

McHenry County Citizens Information Center WOODSTOCK Box 282

ILLINOIS

Mid-America Research Library CHICAGO 205 W.Monroe Street, Room 300

Miller Fluid Power BENSENVILLE No. 15 York Road

Frank Flick and Dorothy Reed of the Personnel Division of Flick-Reddy Corporation are active here.

National Association of Christian Schools CHICAGO 10201 S. State St.

This group publishes the "Christian Teacher," edited by Mark Fakkema.

National Association of Evangelicals WHEATON

George Ford is the Director of this group which distributed anti-Catholic literature during the Kennedy campaign.

National Committee For Economic Freedom BENSENVILLE Box 562
c/o Frank Hick (Ready Education Association) 7 No. 15 York Road
(see Miller Fluid Power address above).

Affiliate of the National group organized for repeal of the income tax.

National Committee for Support of American Patriots LIBERTYVILLE
Box 334

This group is headed by former Army Major Arch E. Roberts who was dismissed from the Army after disobeying orders and making a smear speech before the DAR at its Washington convention in 1962.

National Federation of Independent Businesses, Inc. CHICAGO North Shore
Bank Building

Ed Wimmer is Vice President for Public Relations and George J. Berger is Vice President for Legislative Activities of this 190,000 member group. It is anti-union, and anti-medicare in its philosophies.

National Labor-Management Foundation CHICAGO 101 E. Ontario Street and 757 N. Michigan Blvd.

Maurice R. Franks is the President, Dr. Alfred Haabe is First Vice President and George Peck is the 2nd Vice President of this organization. It publishes a monthy magazine, "Partners."

National Laymen's Council of the Church League of America WHEATON
1407 Hill Avenue

This group was recommended by Robert Welch in the John Birch White Book. George C. Bundy is the Director. Publish "News & Views."

ILLINOIS

National Sunday School Association CHICAGO 175 N. Franklin Street

This group held a Sunday School convention in Denver in October '62 at which Herbert Philbrick spoke. It also publishes a pamphlet quoting Schwarz. The President is Dr. Lloyd Knox, the Vice President is Dr. Harold Etting, the Secretary is Rev. Lawrence Swanson and the Treasurer is Mr. Hal W. Coup.

The North Side Young Conservatives CHICAGO

Pan American Forum CHICAGO 530 Arlington

A. B. McAllister is the Director of this 100 member group. L

Patriotic Research Bureau CHICAGO Box 659

Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling is active.

Patriotism, Inc. BUSHNELL Box 12

T. M. Armstrong is President of this 14 member group. L

Political Science and Debate Society PRAIRIE CITY Box 265

Michael Young is President of this 30 member group. L

Realpolitical Institute CHICAGO Box 1785

Max Nelson, Manager. Publish "Frontier," an extreme racist, anti-semitic bulletin.

Right-to-Know Association CHICAGO 175 W. Jacks

Edwin Albaugh, Executive Director.

Rockford Citizens Committee to Warn of Communist Imports ROCKFORD 125 N. Church Street

Sears, Roebuck and Company CHICAGO

Sponsored Fred Schwarz's show, and has made repeated contributions to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists and other groups.

Senate Studies WILMETTE Box 292

Loraine Hill is Secretary of this 38 member group. L

Sound Money Foundation CHICAGO Box 7781

Emmett C. Barr is President of this group which believes that "the United States Government is hopelessly insolvent."

State of Illinois Anti-Subversive Committee CHICAGO 1313 West Randolph Street

Ed Clamage, Chairman.

ILLINOIS

Students Committed to Accurate National Representation EVANSTON

Sunday Afternoon Club CHICAGO 2430 S. State Street Room 704

S. A. Davis is active.

"Surplus Record and Index" CHICAGO 20 N. Wacher Drive

Published by Thomas P. Scanlon.

Taxpayers, Inc. GALESBURG

Cooperates with the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies.

We, the People! CHICAGO 111 N. Wabash

National headquarters of this group (see cover sheet). Publish "The Fact Finder," edited by Harry Everingham who founded the organization.

White Circle League CHICAGO Box 531

Founded by Joseph Beauharnais.

White Youth Corps CHICAGO Box 6253

"Women's Voice" CHICAGO 537 S. Dearborn Street

Lyrl Clark Van Hyning is active in the publication of this anti-negro, anti-semitic paper.

QUESTIONNAIRE ON "THE EXTREMISTS"

1. What kind of tactics does an extremist group use? _____

_____

2. There is a difference between an honest Conservative and the Extreme Right-Wing.

   True _____ False _____

3. List three right-wing groups or individuals.

   (a) _____ (b) _____

   (c) _____ (d) _____

4. List some of the issues supported by right-wing groups which seem to appeal to some AFL-CIO members.

   (a) _____

   (b) _____

   (c) _____

5. List three Supreme Court decisions which some AFL-CIO members and right-wing groups object to.

   (a) _____

   (b) _____

   (c) _____

6. Solutions to present day complex social, economic, and international problems are so difficult that simple right-wing slogans have an effective appeal.

   True _____ False _____

7. Right-wing groups are having (check one: none___little___significant___)influence on your members.

8. Has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in your schools?

   Yes _____ No _____

9. Right-wing groups are gaining strength by exploiting the background of the alleged assassin of President Kennedy.

   True _____ False _____

continued.....

Questionnaire on "The Extremists" continued

10. How can we overcome the political strength of the right-wing in the 1964 elections? (Check any item that you think your local could do.)

_____ Educate AFL-CIO members on controversial political and economic issues.

_____ Work with other liberal groups on this problem.

_____ Help distribute Group Research to community opinion makers.

_____ Order "The Target Is You" for use in your local union.

_____ Compare COPE voting records with ACA voting records on candidates.

_____ Check school libraries for right-wing pamphlets and films.

_____ Disclose right-wing candidates supporting anti-labor legislation like "right-to-work laws."

_____ Use films, THE EXTREMISTS and JOHN F. KENNEDY'S LAST WORDS TO LABOR, at local union and community meetings.

_____ Listen to local right-wing radio commentators as a basis for asking for equal time to reply.

_____ Purchase and read "Men of The Far Right" by Richard Dudman. Pyramid. 192 pp. 50¢.

List your ideas:

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

THE TIME HAS COME

We believe that the president of the United States has been murdered by a Communist within the United States.

It has been pointed out by the Hon. Martin Dies, since the assassination, that "Lee Harvey Oswald was a Communist," and that when a Communist commits murder he is acting under orders. The former Congressman, head of the original Dies Committee, is probably second only to J. Edgar Hoover in first-hand knowledge acquired from early and long experience in investigating Communist activities.

The Hon. J. Edgar Hoover said in a speech on October 18, 1960: "We are at war with the Communists, and the sooner each red-blooded American realizes that the better and safer we will be." He emphatically repeated this statement on December 3, 1963 - - ten days after the assassination. And this is none the less war because the Communists conduct it according to their usual methods, without regard to civilized rules or human decency.

Nor is it in character for the Communists to rest on this success. Instead, we can expect them to use the shock, grief, and confusion of the American people, resulting from the assassination of our President, as an opportunity for pushing their own plans faster. Also, we shall be subjected to an ever greater barrage of distortions and falsehoods, aimed at imposing on the nation a completely false picture of the situation and of the forces at work. They have to subvert our minds as well as our institutions.

For five years The John Birch Society has said that, regardless of the external threat, Communism was a serious internal menace in the United States. And we were right. We believe that this has now been proved, tragically but conclusively, to the deep sorrow, but also to the profound alarm, of all good Americans. The time has come for those good Americans to join us in this fight against the powerfully organized "masters of deceit." For, as Edmund Burke once wrote: "When bad men combine, the good must associate; else they will fall one by one, an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle."

The John Birch Society is an educational army, and our only weapon is the truth. But George Washington stated our problem well: "Truth will ultimately prevail where there is pains taken to bring it to light." We take tremendous pains in proportion to our numbers and our strength, and all we need to win is that enough other patriots join us in our determination and our labors. For there is nothing the Communists fear so much in the whole world today as having the American people learn, too soon, the truth about their purposes, their methods, and their progress.

If you oppose the Communist conspiracy by learning and spreading the truth, you may expect to be smeared as viciously as we have been for five years. But you will be helping to save your family and your country from the same cruel tyranny that has already been imposed on a billion human beings.

The time has come for every red-blooded American to react as such. If you have the willingness to learn and the courage to support the disturbing truth, use the coupon below. It will be without any obligation on your part, and we shall not contact you further unless or until you request us to do so.

THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY

Belmont, Massachusetts 02178

Exec. Comm.: Wm. J. Grede, A. G. Heinsohn, Jr., Fred C. Koch, Clarence E. Manion, R. W. Stoddard

Please Note

If you agree with this statement, and are willing to help us put this message in as many newspapers as possible across our country, send us your contribution now. Make your check out to Special Advertising Fund, and mail it directly to:

THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY,
Belmont, Massachusetts 02178

The John Birch Society
Belmont, Massachusetts 02178

Gentlemen:

☐ Please send me, without cost or obligation on my part, a sheet of preliminary information about the Society.

☐ For the enclosed one dollar, please send me your Introductory Packet of THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY.

(Name) _____

(Address) _____

_____

(Check the box that applies.)

☐ For the enclosed five dollars please send me your Special Packet, containing the basic materials from which I can obtain a thorough understanding of what The John Birch Society is, how it works, and what it hopes to do.

Sincerely,

This ad, sponsored by the John Birch Society, was printed in major daily newspapers the week of December 15, 1963, at an estimated expense to the Society of $35,000.00.

AFL-CIO
Film Discussion Guide
DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, AFL-CIO ★ 815 16TH ST., N.W., WASHINGTON 6, D. C.
GEORGE MEANY, President WM. F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

THE EXTREMISTS

AFL-CIO, 25 min., 1964. B/W Filmstrip.

SUMMARY:

The wide range of extremist organizations that comprise the radical right-wing in the nation today are described in this filmstrip. It explores the goals of the right-wing, the range of propoganda activities, political and economic programs and the source of funds. Behind the facade of patriotism and anti-communism emerge violent attacks on labor, social legislation, political leaders and the Federal government. How the right-wing uses political action to support right-wing goals is explained.

INTRODUCTION :

The filmstrip which we are about to see describes some of the activities of the radical right-wing in this country. In their appeal for support, these groups reach all members of the community with their denunciation of the Supreme Court, the President, the Federal Government and the labor movement. During most periods in our history, no organization could get away with calling former President Dwight Eisenhower a conscious, dedicated agent of the Communist conspiracy and charging the late President Kennedy with treason.

Throughout our history groups that impugned the honor of our country's leaders would either be ridiculed and laughed at as annoying crackpots or people would soon rise up and demand that they stop defaming the elected representatives of a democratic nation. Let's spend some time discussing what makes many people react so differently today. The extremists in America today are not rejected or rebuked for their verbal and physical attacks on our distinguished statesmen. Instead, they are listened to by many people. Their strength appears to be growing. The money continues to flow in to support the stream of propaganda they produce and the right-wing rallies they sponsor.

Why are many segments of the American public receptive to these prophets of disaster? What is their appeal to union members? What conditions help the cause of those who operate through rumors, lies, and secret meetings? Let's take a look at this filmstrip and discuss some of these questions.

NOTE TO DISCUSSION LEADER:

After the film has been shown, take two or three minutes to set the stage for the discussion by summarizing the issues involved and raising a few provocative questions.

It may not be possible for you to cover all of the questions in this discussion guide in the period available for discussion. We think that you will find that some sections may take only 10 or 12 minutes to cover because of lack of information and other sections, because of problems in that region, may merit extended discussion.

We suggest that you adapt this discussion guide to your needs, covering as much of the content as possible and always allowing time to cover the final section regarding what can be done to combat right-wing groups. Be sure to terminate the discussion no matter where you are when you are nearing the last 10 minutes and proceed to Section VI -- the program for action.

To help you judge the time to be devoted to each section, a time limit has been indicated. Adjust this to meet the needs of the group. The time limit is only to serve as a guide and can be extremely flexible so that you can devote more time to the areas you feel are most significant in terms of that particular group.

Additional space has been left beneath the suggested answers in each question. You may wish to make your own notes regarding approaches to each particular problem.

Section I is intended to identify some of the right-wing groups in the area of the conference participants and what their activities are in the local and state-wide area.

Suggested Time: 15 minutes

1. What right-wing groups are you familiar with in your state?

2. Can you list some of the goals and activities of right-wing groups in your state?

3. How has the right-wing tried to make its influence felt in the schools?

   - It has portrayed young people as gullible and easy victims of Communist propaganda. Therefore, it has called for -- screening of text and library books to weed out subversive ideas inclusion of right-wing propaganda in materials to educate youth on the menace of Communism

   - It has raised doubts about the loyalty of teachers who speak out against the right-wing or who support liberal legislation or independent ideas.

   - In some areas right-wing groups have persuaded the school system to allow them to telecast their anti-communist message into the schools on educational TV stations.

   - Right-wing groups have encouraged teachers and students to participate in panels at their schools and, in some cases, to write themes on the right-wing rally in that city.

4. What organizations in your community have been active in opposing right-wing groups?

   - PTA - League of Women Voters - Farm Groups

5. We have seen in this film that right-wing groups are working around the clock to promote their ideas. How can we counteract their efforts and reach some of the groups they are influencing?

   - Get respectable people in the community to speak out against the right-wing groups operating in your area.
   - Educate union members on the goals of the right-wing.
   - Work with other community organizations to develop programs on issues raised by the right-wing so that people will have the facts.
   - Actively support AFL-CIO legislative programs and work for candidates who will support these programs.
   - When the John Birch Society or other right-wing groups have programs in your area watch for any attempt to project their activities into the schools or get support from the church or other organizations you belong to. Be ready to organize a protest movement, if this should happen.

Section II is designed to build recognition of the fact that right-wing groups are influencing union members and how they are doing it.

Suggested Time: 15 minutes

1. Are right-wing groups influencing our members?

   - Many union members do not know anything about the right-wing organizations, what they are, what they stand for or against.
   - Union members are sometimes taken in by the patriotic, religious appeals of these groups with their highly emotional arguments.

2. What are the issues promoted by the right-wing groups which seem to appeal to our members?

   - Emotional anti-communist position, appeal to patriotism
   - Cut taxes, get rid of the income tax
   - Return power to the state and the individual (state's rights)

- End the welfare state and all the programs which cost money and are socialistic

- Suspicion about the kind of things that are taught in the schools -- socialism, communism -- and the loyalty of the teachers

- Too much money spent abroad on foreign aid and on the U. N.

- Government is going too fast and too far on the race issue

3. How do these extremist groups reach local union members?

- Well publicized meetings and rallies sometime featuring movie stars

- Radio and TV programs. More than 6,000 right-wing messages are broadcast weekly.

- Stories in the press and magazines. Books and pamphlets circulated by the right-wing.

- Right-wing schools are set up in various communities and people are invited to come in and learn about communism and the dangers of subversion.

- Through the PTA and the school board, right-wing groups influence people on education.

Section III. These questions are intended to develop discussion of the real goals of the right-wing groups hiding behind the cloak of anti-communism.

Suggested Time: 10 minutes

1. Do you really think that the wealthy men and corporations behind right-wing groups are really afraid of communism or are they using this as a smoke screen?

- Undoubtedly many people active in right-wing organizations are really frightened of the meance of communism and their fears are played upon by right-wing leaders.

- Right-wing leaders use the anti-communist issue to get support for legislative policies which will benefit the people who support them.

- Some big industrialists give large amounts of money to the right-wing. In addition to being anti-communist, the right-wing also happens to be strongly anti-labor and anti most progressive legislation which helps working people.

2. What are some of the major issues which the right-wing is most actively promoting? (List these on the board as the group names them and then ask -- Who would benefit most if we did this?)

   - Abolish the income tax
   - Abolish Social Security
   - Return the power to the states and the individual
   - Abolish the union shop

Section IV is intended to help the group understand the nature of our radically changing world and the frustrations inherent in change which cause resistance and sometimes result in ultra-reactionary ideas.

Suggested Time: 20 minutes

1. What are some of the background forces which have combined to contribute to the growth of the right-wing in the last 10 years?

   - Rapid changes in our way of living and in international relationships make people uncomfortable and they long to return to the good old days.
   - We have been living through a politically unstable world since 1945. Peace and security have been continuously threatened by the Cold War. The tensions of this stalemate produce frustrations between nations and among the people within nations.
   - High rate of unemployment creates serious problems and fears.
   - Growing movement to win equal rights for all Americans creates fear of competition for too few jobs, fear of loss of money invested in property and fear of loss of social status.

2. Right-wing groups have coined the slogan "Get the U. S. Out of the U.N. and get the U.N. out of the U.S." Do you think this is a solution to any of the problems we face today?

   - The U. N. has been praised by leading Republicans and Democrats as an important agency in keeping peace between nations. By providing a forum where all nations can talk out their differences, the U. N. resolves many problems between nations which might otherwise lead to war. For example, Korea, the Congo.

   - U. N. specialized agencies -- WHO, UNICEF -- give medical care and food to sick and starving children.

   - A leading Republican, Wendell Wilkie, said some 20 years ago, "It's either one world or no world." Today the U. S. is a leading power. We can't return to the good old days when life was more simple. We can't pretend the atomic or hydrogen bomb doesn't exist or that rockets and space flights aren't part of our world. We have to get along with other nations or we will destroy the entire world.

3. The right-wing is constantly attacking the U. S. Supreme Court and Chief Justice Earl Warren. What are some of the things which the right-wing groups are most critical of?

   - 1954 school desegregation decision which held that separate schools are inherently unequal

     This marked the beginning of the continuous attack on the Supreme Court and rallied the racists to the right-wingers. Extremists opposing social change now joined forces against the Supreme Court and from time to time called for the impeachment of the Chief Justice.

   - The decision banning prayers from public schools as a violation of the separation of church and state provided for in our Constitution

   - Reapportionment -- the court held that the division of seats in state legislatures is subject to judicial review

   - The decision outlawing state sedition laws and reserving this area to the Federal government

4. Why do you think that the right-wing continually supports state's rights and attacks the Federal government and the Supreme Court?

- This is part of a massive campaign to undermine confidence in the Federal government and call for a return to state's rights.

- State legislatures are more easily controlled by special interest groups within that state and are seldom forerunners of social progress.

  It is the Federal government that is responsible for the minimum wage law, social security, unemployment compensation, Wagner Act.

Section V is devoted to defining what we mean by radical right-wing and indicating the difference between honest conservatives who genuinely differ from our point of view and the extremists groups.

Suggested Time: 15 minutes

1. Is there a difference between an honest conservative and the extreme right-wing?

Right-wing --

Plays on emotions and tries to develop hate, fear, suspicion of our leadership and our institutions

Masks its real objectives by rallying public support on front issues (like opposition to floridation, communism) in order to promote its reactionary programs

Attacks and would destroy American institutions

Honest conservative --

His goals are different from ours. He may oppose most social legislation and even be anti-union BUT...

He works within the democratic framework, plays the role of the loyal opposition -- staunchly opposing liberal legislation and new ideas but not seeking to impugn the loyalty of our leaders and foster fear and suspicion.

Which Senators and Representatives in your state might be characterized as

a) honest conservatives

b) extremists

2. In what way are the extreme right-wing and the extreme left-wing similar?

- Both desire to destroy our democratic institutions
- Both use the same methods -- secrecy, infiltration, spying, rumors, lies, playing on emotions
- Both mask their real objectives with front issues which attract widespread support

3. How are the right-wing groups exploiting the assassination of the President for their own purposes? What have responsible leaders said about the role of the radical right in creating the climate which culminated in the assassination of the President?

- John Birch Society ran a full page ad in papers across the country saying in effect -- We told you the Communists were a menace in this country, now one has killed the President -- send money to help us fight the Communist menace.
- Other right-wing organizations seem to be using the President's assassination as confirmation of their long-time warnings against the evil of Communism and the dangers of the subversive decisions of the Supreme Court. See Group Research Report, December 13, 1963.
- Chief Justice Earl Warren said, "What moved some misguided wretch to do this horrible deed may never be known to us, but we do know that such acts are commonly stimulated by forces of hatred, and malevolence such as today are eating their way into the bloodstream of American life."
- President Johnson told the nation that we must "turn away from the apostles of bitterness and bigotry, from those defiant of law, and those who pour venom into our nation's bloodstream."

Section VI. These questions are intended to stimulate discussion of an action program in the community in which this discussion is taking place.

Suggested Time: 10 minutes

1. What kind of political candidates do right-wing groups support?

   - Candidates who are anti-labor and against social legislation such as:

     Senator Barry Goldwater, Senator Dirksen, Senator Mundt, Senator Curtis, Rep. Colmer, Rep. Howard K. Smith, Rep. Arends.

2. What can union members do to combat the right-wing in your community?

   - Support liberal political candidates who will fight for legislation which will help all Americans.
   - Discuss the issues so that the right-wing groups can no longer thrive on misinformation and distortion of the facts.
   - Work with other community groups to limit the influence of these groups in your community. See that able representatives are on the school board to fight any attempted take-over by right-wingers.
   - Be alert for any attempt to use your church group or veterans' organization as a forum for radical right-wingers.

What Did Firm Say?

What kind of local politics Liberty

Am. Xn Crusade — anti Union

When support pol. action depends on who endorsed

H. L. Hunt — anti Left Lines

White Citizens Council

Nat'l Pt to work Com. Dillard also JBS.

AM OP.
J.B.S.
Slick

Repeal Income Tax

Union Monopoly — anti-Trust

Censors in Ed.

Social Welfare Seges.

Racial Separatist

World view
UN attack
Foreign aid
NO Negotiations
Use war —

Nat'l States Rts Party

more Sophisticated

Human Events

National Review

Am Med Pol. Act Com —
Not left — but reactionary
Wis. $

BI PAC (NAM)
Business — Industry PAC
5 of 13 T[o] lied to reaction

Why

This is labor battle

Survival of unions
Takes effort

Rt. Wing -

What appeal

"Individualism" ("Conformity" willingness to stand

Anti-Bigness

Disatisfaction with a particular act - decision

Security — Simplistic Answers in a Complex world
└ Unemployment
Civil Rts

Prejudice - hate

Rationale of
1) family budget vs. national budget
2 wrongs of govt

Unwillingness to face real shortcomings of U.S. — Pick on "faults" of others

Power without responsibility.

(Map & List)

Growing Size

ADL - 282 org (121 in 1961 alone)

only 20 survived from Joe McCarthy Days

List — for Illinois

Threat -

Politics of percentages

info vs. mis-info

Publications

How To Meet; Energy — money —

Political & Economic Understanding

Solid political Org.

Influx without response.

Read the sign of weakness fewer people listen to someone hatred

wanted for Treason

UN —

attacks on Court — Warren

Racial hatred — Velsey.

$25 M

J.B.S. $3/4 M
100,000
Robert welch —
40 90 20m. Total control

Am for Court & Action

Tie in with J.B.S.

WHEREAS; THE ORGANIZED LABOR MOVEMENT IS COMMITTED BY DESIGN AND NEED TO WORK FOR EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY FOR THE STRENGTHENING OF THE DEMOCRATIC WAY OF LIFE AND TO GIVE HUMAN RIGHTS THE PRIORITY OVER PROPERTY RIGHTS FOR PEACE FOR THE SECURITY AND WELFARE OF ALL THE PEOPLES OF OUR COUNTRY AND OF THE WORLD FOR USING ALL THE RESOURCES OF OUR SOCIETY TO HELP EACH AND EVERY INDIVIDUAL, AND

WHEREAS; THERE ARE ACTIVE ORGANIZATIONS COMMITTED TO OPPOSE THE OBJECTIVES OF THE ORGANIZED LABOR MOVEMENT BY CONDEMNING THE VERY PHILOSOPHY OF DEMOCRACY BY FIGHTING AGAINST EQUAL RIGHTS AND EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL BY SPREADING HATRED AGAINST VARIOUS ETHNIC GROUPS IN OUR SOCIETY, BY STRIVING TO DESTROY THE ORGANIZED LABOR MOVEMENT, USING SUCH METHODS AS THE SO CALLED RIGHT-TO-WORK LEGISLATION, BY FIGHTING AGAINST SOCIAL LEGISLATION PASSED IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY, BY OPPOSING THE RESOURCES OF OUR OTHER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT THAT ARE USED AND CAN BE USED TO HELP UNDER-PRIVILEGED PEOPLE, AND

WHEREAS; SUCH ORGANIZATIONS ARE OFTEN HEAVILY FINANCED FOR NATIONWIDE PROMOTION OF THEIR REACTIONARY IDEAS AND CAMPAIGNS TO ENACT LEGISLATION IN THE STATE GOVERNMENTS TO IMPLEMENT THEIR PROGRAMS AND TO FIGHT CIVIL RIGHTS, LABOR AND SOCIAL LEGISLATION, AND TO SPREAD HATRED, BE IT

RESOLVED; THAT THIS CONFERENCE RECOMMEND TO THE WISCONSIN STATE AFL-CIO THAT IT PARTICIPATE ACTIVELY IN THE EFFORTS OF THE AFL-CIO AND ITS AFFILIATES TO ALERT THRU ITS COMMUNITY MEDIA THE EXPOSING OF THESE GROUPS AND THEIR ACTIVITIES; AND BE IT FURTHER

RESOLVED; THAT THE WISCONSIN STATE AFL-CIO INITIATE THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMMITTEE WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS DEVOTED TO THE DEMOCRATIC WAY OF LIFE TO DO RESEARCH ON CURRENT ACTIVITIES OF HATE AND REACTIONARY GROUPS IN WISCONSIN AND TO PUBLICIZE THEIR FINDINGS REGARDING THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE.

DON'T BE FOOLED . . . . THE TARGET IS YOU

A new and ominous challenge confronts American trade unions and threatens their security. Everywhere, the forces of the right wing are churning distrust of free democratic institutions, unions among them. No community escapes right wing activity, whether open or secret. Hate literature floods the land, attacking liberal church groups, slandering government officials, disrupting school systems, smearing labor.

Combatting the right wing at the national and local level is imperative if organized labor is to meet this challenge successfully. The battle must be waged in cooperation with other groups under attack. Working with teachers, clergymen, PTAs, liberal farm groups, youth movements, minority and civil liberties groups, and many others, unions can counteract right wing activity and, by doing so, encourage broader understanding in the community of labor's rightful place in it.

A leaflet produced and distributed by Billy James Hargis, a star performer for the right wing. Between the covers, a flood of distortions adding up to a massive lie.

A heavy dose of the right wing's special brand of poison has been injected into the bloodstream of American life in recent years. Hotheads and hate-mongers have rallied to the call of preachers of discord who reap fat profits from false patriotism. (Example: The ultra-rightist Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, headed by Dr. Fred Schwarz, grossed nearly one million dollars in 1962. Schwarz, who freely advises citizens how to be "good Americans," is not himself an American citizen.)

Today, more than 1,000 right wing organizations blanket the nation. They claim to represent more than four million active members. Most of them espouse these goals:

- Prevent new social welfare and liberal legislation, weaken or repeal already enacted laws;
- Undermine our public schools and turn them into indoctrination grounds for future rightists by censoring textbooks, gagging teachers;
- Impeach Earl Warren, Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court;
- Wreck the United Nations;
- Repeal the income tax;
- Maintain rigid segregation.

Most of these are far-fetched and unattainable. But the one goal all rightists share is well within the range of possibility: further laws aimed at the ultimate destruction

What Right-Wing Leaders Say About Unions

". . . in the majority of union convention resolutions, we see the Communist Party line followed closely (and) support of all unconstitutional socialistic schemes. . . . Millions of American working men blindly follow the propaganda of the Big Labor bosses . . . and vote for the dangerous radical politicians the bosses instruct them to support."—Billy James Hargis, head of the Christian Crusade.

". . . any person of intelligence has great reason for concern when workers can be compelled to join organizations, contribute their money, and obey the leadership imposed by a small group." —Dr. Fred Schwarz, head of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade.

Organized labor not only is undermining America, according to one way-out writer, it's socializing the rest of the world.

of strong, effective trade unions.

Thus, their principal target is YOU . . . you and your union.

Don't be fooled when they wrap themselves in the flag and claim all they want is to "preserve freedom."

Don't be fooled when they twist the Bible to their own ends.

Don't be fooled when they attack our public school system or honorable government leaders.

Don't be fooled when they shout "treason" at everyone who disagrees with them.

Don't be fooled, because you are their first target.

Their blueprint is clear: clamp anti-trust restrictions on unions; ram through a so-called "right to work" law at the federal level; kill off the Walsh-Healey and Davis-Bacon Acts.

* * * *

How strong are the forces of the right wing, and what are their prospects?

Politically, they have scored alarming successes. In the 1962 elections, in at least six contests for the House of Representatives and the Senate, right-wingers defeated incumbent liberals. Four admitted members of the John Birch Society each polled more than 40 percent of the vote in losing campaigns for the House. Two of them, John Rousselot and Edgar Hiestand, drew 46 and 45.5 percent despite the fact their areas had been redistricted against them. An ultra-conservative was elected governor of Oklahoma. In New York State, the newly-formed Conservative Party secured enough votes (110,000) to ensure a place on the ballot in future elections.

Economically, the right wing has a powerful base in big industry and big finance. Its leadership interlocks substantially with leadership of the National Association of Manufacturers and U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Strategically, the right wing is better organized and it commands more money and more know-how than ever before. For the first time, it is doing a strong recruiting and selling job at the community level, with unprecedented success. (The John Birch Society now boasts chapters in 48 states, members in all 50. It has 38 paid full-time organizers, 70-part-time, hundreds of volunteers.)

Overall, the right wing is a far more powerful, more influential movement than at any time in recent years. It claims more than 50 outright supporters in Congress. A study of voting records shows this estimate is conservative. The right wing thus is a potent threat to the welfare of trade unions. As such, its close connection with one key anti-union movement is worth examining in detail.

THE HISTORY OF TRICK-TITLED 'RIGHT TO WORK' LAWS

In the middle of any anti-labor activity, the demagogues of the right will be found, either as prime movers or as noisy front men for the quieter men of power and influence who remain off-stage but throw the actors their lines.

No example of right wing involvement in anti-union campaigns is more glaring than in the history of so-called "right to work" drives.

They began with the grand-daddy of conservatism, the National Association of Manufacturers, in 1903 when the NAM stated in a Declaration of Principles: "No person shall be refused employment or in any way discriminated against on account of membership or non-membership in any labor organization."

Not to be outdone by its Siamese twin of reaction, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in 1921 joined the NAM crusade. Its president declared: "We stand for the principle of the open shop."

Through the years, the phony "right to work" movement launched by the NAM and Chamber has been a magnet for ultra-reactionaries. Indeed, without them it would be as dead as vaudeville, for it is the ultras who today carry the load for state RTW movements.

A professional right-winger, Vance Muse, was among the first to employ the phrase "right to work" as a full-blown slogan. In Florida (1944) and Arkansas (1947), the first two states to pass open shop laws, Muse played an important role, with help from Dupont money and finances from Alfred Sloan of General Motors.

Two Presidents Speak Out . . .

"The discordant voices of extremism are heard once again in the land. They find treason in our finest churches, in our highest court . . . Let our patriotism be reflected in the creation of confidence rather than crusades of suspicion."

—President John F. Kennedy.

"I don't think the United States needs super-patriots . . . those people that are more patriotic than you or anybody else . . . those who would go back to eliminate the income tax from our laws and the rights of people to unionize . . . those who make radical statements and attack people of good repute."

—Ex-President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

In the thick of the Arkansas open shop battle, too, was strong-arm man James Karam who ran a professional strike-breaking organization. He had the support and cooperation of a powerhouse of today's right wing, George S. Benson, president of Harding College, Searcy, Ark. Benson and his college are the fountainhead of rightist films, literature, strategy.

Ten years after the war, 17 states had adopted RTW, and the time was ripe for formation of a national front group. Thus, in 1955, founding of the National Right to Work Committee was announced. Its character can be judged by the heralds who trumpeted it onto the scene. One was North Carolina industrialist E. S. Dillard, presently an endorser of the John Birch Society and of the extremist, violently anti-union Manion Forum. The other was ex-Rep. Fred Hartley, Jr. whose name endures as the far end of the Taft-Hartley Act. Hartley himself once was listed as sponsor of a political action conference organized by the late Merwin K. Hart, a holy name in right-wing circles.

Joining NRTWC in 1961 as vice president and director of information was Glenn A. Green who had put in 12 years as chief assistant to the previously mentioned George S. Benson. Under Benson at Harding College, Green produced propaganda films widely circulated by the John Birch Society and other rightist groups. Green is an admitted member of JBS.

TIES TO NAM AND CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

NRTWC enjoys close and permanent family ties with the NAM and Chamber of Commerce.

The Chamber, in 1961, set up its own Special Committee on Voluntary Unionism, describing its policy "to spearhead and stimulate a drive for an end to compulsory unionism wherever and in whatever form it may exist."

One-fourth of the Chamber's committee members are directly connected with NRTWC.

Heading the committee is Chamber Treasurer Wofford B. Camp, former director of the California Farm Bureau and member of the rightist American Good Government Society. Among other committee members are two Manion Forum endorsers and at least one member of the John Birch Society.

The NAM also has set up a special committee which embraces RTW in its jurisdiction, the Center for the Study of Union Power. It is an offshoot of an earlier NAM Study Group on Monopoly Power Exercised by Labor Unions, formed in 1956, coincidentally only a year after NRTWC was launched.

Members of the first "study group" included William J. Grede

Below, tracts put out by the National Right to Work Committee. The message: trade unions and their leaders constitute "a deadly power over freedom."

U.S. Chamber of Commerce publications. More temperate than those of the ultra-rightists, but the pitch is the same: a tighter noose around labor's neck.

"A Business Man Looks at Communism," and guess what he finds? Among other things, because of union security clauses, "dictatorship is just around the corner." The businessman, Fred Koch of Wichita, Kansas, happens to be a leader of the John Birch Society.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS BARE TRUTH ABOUT RIGHT WING

"In the name of preserving freedom, they (right wingers) subvert it more effectively by their reckless attacks on the churches, the press and constitutional government than the communist conspiracy has been able to do."—General Council of the United Presbyterian Church.

". . . rational discussion is being corrupted by the hatred and fear fomented by ultra-right wing groups."—General Assembly of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

"A virulent form of disunity is weakening us in the world struggle against communism and is performing this disservice in the name of militant anti-communism."

—Father John Cronin, assistant director, National Catholic Welfare Conference.

"Extremists really destroy the freedoms and the country they love while they think they are protecting them."—J. Irwin Miller, National Council of Churches.

BIG BUSINESS AND THE ULTRA-RIGHT

The money that keeps the right wing going comes straight from the coffers of big business and industry, according to Alan Westin, a Columbia University government professor. He states: "A cautious estimate . . . would show that the business community contributed about $10 million to the Radical Right" in 1961. From the evidence, the figure is going up, up, up.

Westin says hundreds of national firms help circulate right wing literature and films, and claims 25 "bluechip" corporations back Dr. Fred Schwarz' so-called Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, among them Richfield Oil, Schick Safety Razor Co., Technicolor Corp., and Allen-Bradley Co.

One example of how big business money keeps the right wing going: When anti-semite Merwin K. Hart formed the National Economic Council, he got $34,513 from one of the DuPonts, $7,000 from Gulf Oil, $13,350 from Lone Star Cement, $9,532 from the Texas Company, $9,585 from W. H. Regnery, right wing publisher.

Another: A $300,000 donation from Alfred Sloan of General Motors helped Dr. George Benson start his right wing machine at Harding College, Ark. Here, major rightist films, books and other propaganda are produced.

RIGHT-WING TENTACLES COVER NATION

Right wing campaigns get strong support from a network of radio stations that cover the country.

The Manion Forum radio network has outlets in 245 communities. The Forum is headed by Clarence Manion, founder of the Committee for Equal Anti-Trust Law Protection, organized to back the drive to slap unions under anti-trust. Two former NAM presidents and the national fuehrer of the John Birch Society, Robert Welch, are part of Manion's committee.

Billy James Hargis produces a weekly radio program used by stations in 200 cities.

Other right wing leaders reach deep into the hinterlands with weekly radio and TV shows.

(former NAM president) and Robert Stoddard, now members of the John Birch Society executive committee; two endorsers of the Manion Forum, and Lemuel C. Boulware, General Electric's biggest anti-union weapon.

Among the members of the new NAM "study group" are reactionary ex-Rep. Graham Barden (N. C.); the legislative assistant to right-wing Senator John Tower (R.-Texas); a member of the national advisory board of the extremist Young Americans for Freedom; and Godfrey Schmidt, endorser of Manion Forum and luminary in other right wing groups.

JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY AND RTW

John Birch Society members have always been prominent in the open shop movement in general and the NRTWC in particular. This is most evident at the state level, and the pattern in Kansas, where the law was approved in 1958, is typical.

A Washington Post reporter who studied operation of the John Birch Society in Wichita ("under open colors") wrote that "The leadership of the Birch Society overlaps heavily with the leadership of the organizations that successfully campaigned in 1958 for a right-to-work amendment to the State Constitution." Two of these leaders were principal speakers at NRTWC's National Seminar in Chicago in 1961. One of them is a JBS field coordinator and is chairman of the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce's Labor Relations Committee. The other is a member of the JBS National Council and was for five years a director of the National Association of Manufacturers.

At least four other Birch Society leaders were active in the open shop fight in Kansas and JBS chieftains also have been active in state "right-to-work" movements in Missouri and Indiana.

WHAT YOU CAN DO. . . .

So the pattern becomes clear: the right wing is entrenched in the so-called "right to work" movement. It has roots, too, in other anti-union vendettas. It works in concert with the NAM and Chamber of Commerce at the national and state levels. It is substantially financed by big business.

Its trouble-making capacity cannot be underestimated. The legions who march under its banners are militant, dedicated and . . . busy.

Trade unions must respond to the threat by reaching out into the community and working with other like-minded organizations to overcome the onslaught from the right. Failure to do so can only result in calamity.

Your Check-List for Counter-Attack . . .

Every central council and State Federation office receives regular reports from COPE covering background and activity of right wing organizations and leaders. Check with your central council and read this material. Urge that it be reproduced and distributed more widely among union members and civic groups. Then, armed with the facts about extremist groups, help take the lead in fighting them.

- Alert democratic groups, PTAs, League of Women Voters, church, school, and other civic leaders, to the reality of right wing activity in the community. Establish a committee of concerned community leaders.
- If a public right wing meeting is scheduled, prepare and release to the press, radio and TV in advance of the meeting a statement by your committee exposing the nature and intent of it.
- Attend right wing meetings that are open to the public. If you get the chance, ask questions of the speakers. Invariably, they speak in generalities. Most of them are ill-informed. Often, they can be embarrassed and exposed for what they are simply by demanding specific answers to questions on their policies and programs.
- Action after a right-winger has disrupted the community is more difficult. It hinges on getting at least a few community leaders to stand up, speak out and be counted. Labor can provide real leadership in such a maneuver. Often, well-meaning community leaders are intimidated by right-wingers. It's up to you to help them fight.
- Editors and broadcasters should be provided with facts about right wing groups and leaders. They should be urged to publish these facts.
- Develop a pool of well-informed, readily-available speakers to address church groups; fraternal, civic and service organizations; schools. Indeed, be willing to use any reasonable forum.
- If a right wing spokesman appears on local radio or television in an interview, request equal time to rebut him.
- If you have access to a labor-sponsored or liberal farm organization-sponsored radio or TV program, use it to alert the community to right wing activity.
- Use the letters-to-the-editor column of your local newspaper when the occasion arises.
- Urge your minister, priest or rabbi to make right wing activity a sermon topic and to join your committee to combat the extremists.
- Undoubtedly, right wing literature is on the shelves of your community and school libraries. Try to get countering literature placed there as well.
- Beware of efforts to involve you and your union in some high-sounding project. Investigate it carefully before lending yourself to it. In many communities, right-wingers have tried to embroil union members and leaders in their programs.

* * * *

Begin now in your community to establish a coordinating committee to combat the right wing. Any and all of the above steps can be effective counter-blows against the ultra-reactionaries who want to destroy your union. If further information or suggestions are needed, please write to National COPE. Alert us to what the right wing is doing in your community. Send copies of the literature right-wingers are distributing and send any news clippings dealing with their activities.

The challenge has been hurled at us by men and organizations determined to wreck the trade union movement. It can be ignored only at our own risk.

AFL-CIO COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL EDUCATION

AFL-CIO BLDG., 815 - 16th ST., N.W., WASHINGTON, D. C.

GEORGE MEANY, Chairman
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

COPE Publication No. 130

6,000 TIMES A WEEK, RIGHT WING MESSAGE BEAMED OVER RADIO, TV

Every week, in more than 500 communities, right wing propaganda is beamed into the homes of Americans over radio and television. In all, more than 6,000 rightist messages are broadcast weekly—attacking the federal government, the Supreme Court, the United Nations, the public school system, labor unions, the civil rights movement, liberal groups and individuals.

This map shows where these programs are carried. It includes most of the programs heard over multi-station networks. Not included are broadcasts by America's Future and by Harding College, both of which have numerous outlets.

Of those shown on the map, Carl McIntire's Twentieth Century Reformation Hour is heard over approximately 530 stations; Life Lines, underwritten by oil billionaire H. L. Hunt, 324; Manion Forum, 313; Billy James Hargis, 200; Howard Kershner, 148; Dan Smoot, 133; Church League of America, 14. Some, like McIntire and Life Lines, run five-day-a-week programs of 15 minutes or half-hour duration. Below are quotes which typify the material broadcast into millions of homes by right-wingers:

". . . Earl Warren is a socialist who thinks government has unlimited power to tax and spend for anything. . . . He has the same attitude toward the Constitution that communists and all other socialists have. . . . There are ample grounds for impeachment, not only of Warren, but of all nine Supreme Court Justices."—Dan Smoot

"That amendment (16th amendment to the Constitution providing for an income tax) is the very prescription given by Karl Marx in his Communist Manifesto for income taxation to destroy private property and establish socialism throughout the world. . . . The tax law will go. . . . It cannot be enforced. The communists want it. Our political liberty is endangered by it."—Manion Forum

"The . . . United Nations has through the years been used as a forum to advance communism . . . the UN has become a monster violating its own charter in a manner so dangerous that every American should be deeply concerned about its actions and about the actions of the Mistaken who are promoting these UN excesses."—Life Lines

". . . since the end of the Civil War, the Negro has been treated on the basis of individual merit. . . . The arrogance of contemporary Negro leaders, the widespread violence against whites . . . are creating a general resentment of whites against Negroes. . . . The Negro in America will soon realize that liberal politicians and agitators have led him into disaster. The whole nation will suffer."—Dan Smoot

GHT WING BROADCASTS

LIST OF RIGHT WING PROGRAMS

ILLINOIS

CITY	STATION	PROGRAMS
Aurora	WKKD	Life Line, Christian Crusade, Church League of America
	WKKD-FM	Life Line, Christian Crusade
Chicago	WBEE	Manion Forum
	WGES	Life Line
	WVON	Life Line
Decatur	WTVP-TV	Life Line
Dixon	WIXN	Christian Crusade
Evanston	WEAW	Manion Forum, Life Line (2), Rev. Carl McIntire
	WEAW-FM	Manion Forum
	WNMP	Chruch League of America
Harrisburg	WEBQ	Rev. Carl McIntire
	WEBQ-FM	Rev. Carl McIntire
La Grange	WTAQ	Manion Forum, Life Line (2)
La Salle	WLPO	Manion Forum
Lawrenceville	WAKO	Rev. Carl McIntire
Lincoln	WPRC	Howard Kershner
Marion	WGGH	Howard Kershner
Mt. Vernon	WMIX	Manion Forum
Murphysboro	WINI	Rev. Carl McIntire
Ottawa	WCMY	Howard Kershner
Paris	WPRS	Life Line
Peoria	WPEO	Life Line
Rock Island	WHBF	Manion Forum (twice a week)
	WHBF-TV	Life Line
Rockford	WJRL	Manion Forum, Life Line
Sterling	WSDR	Manion Forum

MINNESOTA

Austin	KOAO	Dan Smoot
Benson	KBMO	Christian Crusade
Fairmont	KSUM	Howard Kershner
Minneapolis	KEVE	Manion Forum, Rev. Carl McIntire
	WPBC	Howard Kershner
	WPBC-FM	Howard Kershner
Rochester	KWEB	Rev. Carl McIntire
St. Paul	KSTP	Life Line
	WMIN	Life Line
Thief River Falls	KTRF	Christian Crusade (Sunday only)
Windom	KDOM	Howard Kershner

WISCONSIN

Appleton	WHBY	Manion Forum
Ashland	WATW	Manion Forum
Baraboo (Greenfield)	WWCF-FM	Manion Forum, Rev. Carl McIntire
Beloit	WGEZ	Manion Forum
Eau Claire	WEAQ	Manion Forum
Fond du Lac	KFIZ	Manion Forum
Green Bay	WJPG	Manion Forum
Janesville	WCLO	Manion Forum
Kenosha	WAXO	Manion Forum
LaCrosse	WKBT-TV	Life Line
Madison	WRVB-FM	Howard Kershner, Rev. Carl McIntire
Milwaukee	WMIL	Manion Forum, Life Line, Howard Kershner
	WTOS-FM	Rev. Carl McIntire
	WUHF-TV	Life Line
	WXIX-TV	Life Line
Neillsville	WCCN	Manion Forum
Plymouth	WPLY	Christian Crusade (2)
Poynette	WIBU	Manion Forum, Rev. Carl McIntire
Racine	WRJN	Manion Forum
Reedsburg	WRDB	Manion Forum
Shawano	WTCH	Manion Forum
Sheboygan	WHBL	Manion Forum
Watertown	WTTN	Manion Forum
Wausau	WSAU	Manion Forum
Wauwatosa	WTOS-FM	Howard Kershner
Wisconsin Rapids	WFHR	Manion Forum

INDIANA

Anderson	WHUT	Life Line
Bloomington	WTTS	Manion Forum
Boonville	WBNL	Rev. Carl McIntire
Connersville	WCNB	Howard Kershner
Elkhart	WCMR	Manion Forum, Howard Kershner, Rev. Carl McIntire
Evansville	KFIE-TV	Life Line
	WGBF	Manion Forum, Life Line
Fort Wayne	WGL	Manion Forum
Goshen	WKAM	Manion Forum
Hammond	WJOB	Manion Forum
Indianapolis	WFBM	Howard Kershner
	WFBM-TV	Life Line
	WIBC	Manion Forum, Christian Crusade
	WIRE	Life Line
	WTTV-TV	Life Line
Lafayette	WFAM-TV	Life Line
La Grange	WTAQ	Life Line (2)
La Porte	WLOI	Life Line
Michigan City	WIMS	Manion Forum
Muncie	WLBC	Life Line
	WLBC-TV	Life Line
North Vernon	WOCH	Rev. Carl McIntire
Portland	WPGW	Manion Forum, Howard Kershner
Richmond	WVOE	Howard Kershner
	WVOE-FM	Howard Kershner
South Bend	WSBT	Manion Forum
Terre Haute	WBOW	Life Line
	WVTS-FM	Howard Kershner

GROUP RESEARCH REPORT

Vol. 3, No. 5 March 16, 1964

Opponents of Urban Renewal get together

A protest meeting at Rockford, Ill., against the urban renewal program of the federal government has flung into the national press an issue which has been worked for several years by the organized right wing. Reporters discovered a few days before the meeting—held March 6, under auspices of the Rockford Chamber of Commerce, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Illinois Manufacturers Association—that letters of invitation included signatures of three leaders of the John Birch Society—T. Coleman Andrews, Wm. J. Grede, and Robert Love.

The press was also stimulated by the fact that the idea for the meeting ostensibly came from a group of nine members of Congress. In spite of public disclosure—or because of it—eight of the Congressmen attended and delivered prepared speeches in a well-coordinated attack on urban renewal and general encroachment by the federal government. They were: John Dowdy (D-Tex.), Bruce Alger (R-Tex.), John Kyl (R-Iowa), George Huddleston, Jr. (D-Ala.), John Anderson (R-Ill.), William Widnall (R-N.J.), Frank T. Bow (R-Ohio), and Thomas Curtis (R-Mo.).

Some of these are very powerful where urban renewal is involved. Only a few weeks earlier Congressman Dowdy, who is Chairman of a Subcommittee investigating urban renewal, had an article in the Reader's Digest entitled "The Mounting Scandal of Urban Renewal," which friends of UR alleged was ghost-written for him by S. Howard Evans, the urban renewal specialist at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Both Evans and Dowdy have denied any ghost-writing, but at least one of the Congressmen who went to Rockford (Curtis) told the Washington Post that his introduction to the meeting was through Evans.

A sidelight of the Rockford meeting was a speech by William G. Barr, Executive Secretary of the Washington-based National Parking Association and candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress from an Illinois district. In the audience was one of his group's members, D. F. Antonelli, Jr., described by the Post as "a dominant landholder" in a District of Columbia project before it was set up for urban renewal. Dowdy noted Antonelli's presence as he told a "horror story" about the project.

Among the midwest businessmen who signed the call for the meeting along with the three Birch leaders were several who have contributed to right-wing activities. For example, John Burkhart, President of the College Life Insurance Co. of Indianapolis, contributed $100 to the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists; was president of the Foundation for Voluntary Welfare, a subsidiary of the William Volker Fund which supports conservative academic projects; was a sponsor of Fred Schwarz's School of Anti-Communism at Indianapolis last fall; and contributed $100 to the Americans for Constitutional Action. Another participant, James Rogers, has been an instructor at The Freedom School, the ultra-right training ground near Colorado Springs.

Urban Renewal is an old target

Like other objects of extremist attack, such as the Supreme Court or the United Nations, urban renewal can also be criticized legitimately from all political directions. For instance, the use of the power of eminent domain to clear poor people out of slums is an exposed nerve which can be rubbed by social workers, property owners, dispossessed minorities, city planners, politicians and many others. The right-wingers have been rubbing it for several years, chiefly in the form of resistance against Federal encroachment. Here are some of the hard-core opponents of UR:

—Human Events, which published an attractive 16-page special supplement last April called "The Case Against Urban Renewal." Titles of articles included "Corruption Unlimited" and "Bulldozers and Boondoggles" (by Congressman Alger). In addition, the newspaper has almost made anti-UR articles a regular feature.

—Dan Smoot has devoted several entire issues of his Report to the subject, using titles such as "Urban Renewal and A Soviet America."

—The John Birch Society, which printed an article by Prof. Revilo P. Oliver last fall that included this statement: "Every observer of criminal activities must admire the neatness with which urban renewal simultaneously accomplishes its four objectives. . . . "

—Daughters of the American Revolution, which has distributed anti-UR material, some of it reprinted from Willis E. Stone, the chief advocate of repealing the Federal income tax through the "Liberty Amendment."

—Kent and Phoebe Courtney, publishers of The Independent American and numerous pamphlets, one of which says of UR: "Significantly, the abolition of the right to own private property is one of the goals set forth in the Communist Manifesto."

—We, The People!, which devoted part of a program last year to attacks on UR, one by Dr. Hugh Ramsey, who is active in numerous far-right groups and is a Birch endorser.

—The Congress of Freedom, a Nebraska-based group on the far-right who were among the earliest critics of urban renewal.

—H. L. Hunt's Life Line, which has devoted several broadcasts to UR.

—The Foundation for Economic Education, a conservative organization which publishes The Freeman, from which Reader's Digest reprinted an article in 1961 entitled "The Fallacy of Urban Renewal."

News of organizations

Young Americans for Freedom, the pro-Goldwater group, has started publishing Report on the Left, a newsletter by William Schulz, who has been an officer of YAF, member of the Intercollegiate Society of Individualists, reporter for Human Events, and aide to commentator Fulton Lewis, Jr.

Dr. Fred Schwarz's Christian Anti-Communism Crusade is featuring a tape recording of Lee Oswald, the accused assassin of President Kennedy, made during Oswald's debate in New Orleans with Castro opponents. And Billy James Hargis, head of Christian Crusade, is touring with Carolos Bringuier, who debated Oswald.

The 20th Century Reformation Hour, run by Rev. Carl McIntire, is mailing pleas signed by his son, Carl Thomas, to pressure Congress into over-riding the Supreme Court's prayer decisions. The son signs for International Christian Youth and says contributions are tax deductible.

The National States Rights Party, meeting at Louisville, nominated arch-segregationist John Kasper as its Presidential candidate but politely ejected George Lincoln Rockwell, head of the American Nazi Party, because "he calls his group a national socialist party" and "anybody who is a socialist is also a leftist."

Thurman J. McCormick, Executive Director of the Association for Freedom of Choice, which led a drive in Kansas City, Mo., to force a public accommodations ordinance to a vote, admits he is a member of the John Birch Society. He says such proposals come from the Communists.

Intercollegiate Society of Individualists is the latest group to join the "Hall of Free Enterprise" building project at the New York World Fair, started by the American Economic Foundation. ISI continues to attract speakers from the right wing of the academic world to its numerous campus seminars.

Human Events, which has officially remained aloof from the Birch argument, is getting more ads from companies run by Birch leaders. Recent examples: Grede Foundries (William Grede), Rock Island Oil & Refining Co. (Fred C. Koch) and Spindale Mills (A. G. Heinsohn). The weekly is also featuring appeals for funds headed by a committee which includes many Birch stalwarts.

The Black Muslims have been split by the announcement of Malcolm X, a top leader of the Negro group, that he is forming a black nationalist organization aimed toward more political action and protest.

Manion Forum, Inc., which had failed for 8 years to file annual reports required by Indiana law (p. 81, 1963), has complied with the order to do so—at least to some extent. Reports have now been furnished for the years 1956-59. However, it is contended that since 1959 the radio program-newsletter have been operated through the Manion Forum Trust, instead of the corporate entity, and that the Trust is not required to file reports. The reports filed showed a steady growth in budget from $150,000 in 1956 to over $385,000 in 1959. While official figures for more recent years are not available, an article a year ago in The Progressive said the Forum's expenses "cannot run less than $600,000 a year by the most conservative estimate."

Eisenhower comments on Birch charges

General Eisenhower's attitude toward the pro-Birch activity of his former Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, has come to light in the form of a letter to Congressman Ralph Harding (D-Idaho), who criticized Benson late last year.

In the letter, published without permission, Eisenhower expressed gratitude for Harding's speech and said: "Your honest and unselfish effort to set the record straight is something that warms my heart." Harding had reproached Benson, a fellow Mormon, for refusing "to defend that courageous President" who had "defended him through 8 stormy years."

POLITICAL NOTES: Americans for Constitutional Action has published a special 20-page supplement to its "ACA-Index" asserting that President Lyndon Johnson "compiled one of the most 'liberal' voting records in the Congress during his last six-year term as a United States Senator." . . . The advertising firm selected by the Goldwater for President Committee—Fuller & Smith & Ross—was previously a volunteer agency for Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge . . . when Joseph Martin, Jr., resigned as Republican National Committeeman for California to work for Rockefeller, he said he had a desire to prevent the GOP in that state from "becoming a mere branch of the John Birch Society" . . . retired Navy Captain William R. Anderson, who resigned as Vice President of Freedoms Foundation to help set up a "domestic peace corps," is running for Congress in Tennessee . . . Congressional candidates from Maryland include two right-wingers, John H. Hiser and Brent Bozell. . . . Donald Jackson, former member of the House Un-American Activities Committee and now head of the Anti-Communist Voters League, is running in the GOP primary for Senator from California.

Group Research Report is published semi-monthly by Group Research, Inc., Room 422 1404 New York Ave., N.W., Washington 5, D. C.

October 1, 1965

Mr. George Guernsey
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

A quick note on two items. One, your work on the NILE program looks good. I'll be sending something from my end soon. Kehrer and I will go to Athens on October 4 to see Leathers, new coordinator Watkins, facilities, and to meet a few faculty members on whom we have promising leads.

Secondly, I wanted to let you know that I will be in Hot Springs for the first part of the week of the Advanced School. I will sit in on Don's Advisory Committee meeting. It also seems like a convenient time to see you, Don, Kehrer, and Marshall regarding the staff institute. I am mainly interested in just sitting in on sessions to watch the general give and take, but if you come up short-handed and need my kind of help, let me know. All I ask is time to prepare since I have a testimony against labor educators not doing so.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:js

Guernsey —

October 8, 1965

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director of Education
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Orgs.
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Dear George:

Glad to hear about Jewell.

Could you send me about twenty copies of the Federationist reprint on the staff institute?

Will a little stimulation of interest, for students, with CWA, UAW, and ILGWU upset anything you already have going?

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:js

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
WM. C. BIRTHRIGHT
DAVID J. McDONALD
JOSEPH CURRAN
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
PAUL HALL
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
EMIL RIEVE
MAURICE A. HUTCHESON
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
O. A. KNIGHT
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
HERMAN D. KENIN
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. L. McFETRIDGE
A. J. HAYES
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
KARL F. FELLER
L. M. RAFTERY
JOHN J. GROGAN

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

GEORGE MEANY
WALTER P. REUTHER
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID J. McDONALD
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. F. SCHNITZLER

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C. NATIONAL 8-3870

October 6, 1965

Mr. Emory Via
Director of the Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I'm glad you'll be able to come to Hot Springs. I haven't spoken to Don Slaiman about his meeting on Sunday; I'm not sure I can get in on time for it. I'm assuming that you will be staying for a couple of days and that we can get together and talk about the NILE program.

I've been able to get Professor Malcolm Jewell to do a session, probably on Monday night, in Hot Springs on "Politics of Reapportionment in the South." I spoke to Sam Ezelle and found that Jewell had taught at the Kentucky Labor School, so we start with someone who has had some contact with the labor movement. And he seemed quite anxious to come.

I'll see you in Hot Springs at the Avanelle Motor Hotel.

Fraternally yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director of Education

GG:cme
oeiu #2 afl-cio

Have you checked on Tibbetts or Rusk Allen. a letter should go to Dan Pallett and Ray Marshall.

File

10 December 1965

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

I now have your letter of December 6. I think your suggestion in it and by phone last night about the number of changes -- implying that something is going on beyond the agreed upon framework -- is unwarranted.

Our earliest conversations on program said that we would have labor law, civil rights, Southern labor history, arbitration, organizing, and reading as main topics. All of these items were included and still stand. Beyond that we had agreed to use Marshall for a second week. We had hoped to use Allen the same way and this was the only reason for my agreeing to drop Tibbetts even though I hold Russ in very high regard. Subsequently, and I think quite unfortunately for our program, Allen has flunked out during the second week. We later agreed that there should be economics (which was really understood all along) and Southern economic problems. Both of these are in the program and with the people we thought best to fill the slot. The agreement on subject areas is confined by your September "Preliminary Program Announcement". We have, as of now, only omitted the matters that we had hoped Feister would handle and the session(s) on trends in collective bargaining which we wanted Russ to do. Perhaps whoever comes from Research can supply this latter session.

At our last meeting we agreed, though you now make it appear that you did not accept that agreement, that Don would have the responsibility for the civil rights part of the program and I for the political sections. We had asked for suggestions and received some. Further than this, it was recognized that though it was not the most desirable way to handle a course that we would be able to use a variety of people in the political courses with me as coordinator and that this would give us flexibility in the program and still keep some continuity. The guidance given by you and Don, and accepted by me from the first, was that sufficient time be spent on legislative issues, the campaigns in 1966, and on practical problems of coalitions. All of this is in the program as it now stands. I continued in the program the matter of an introductory political science session simply titled the American Political System. We agreed to as much in Washington. I also have scheduled a session on state governmental problems. This, too, was agreed on.

This brings us to the point of having now two topics that had not been agreed on since fairly far back in the planning. One is the speech by Roy Wilkins and the other is the matter of Southern justice. The latter is clearly within the purview of the political science end of the program. The former is a substitute for the appearance of Woodward who declined to come. The choice of Wilkins was a matter of a good bit of deliberation and since it was in the civil rights area, a matter of detailed discussion with Don. We, of course, do not know that he will accept.

As to Nat's participation. I have agreed all along that it would be the best answer to our problem in handling the general presentation on economic policy. We scheduled him for the final week which had general agreement as a matter of program balance from you and Don. When you said that he had to come prior to the 18th, I shifted his participation with the organizing, and only changed it back after our phone conversation in which you agreed that it broke the balance in the program and that you would reapproach Nat to see what could be done or else take an acceptable substitute. Based on this conversation, I changed the schedule just before sending it to you and the others. Though we will clearly survive changing it back, I have a strong feeling that the balance of the program and the timing of the more practical courses is better served by having organizing in the first week and economics at some other time. Though I want Nat and would have hoped that you had reapproached him, I personally think it would be better to keep organizing early and take a really good substitute out of the Research Department. Your suggestion that we attempt to get Powell and Weightman into the program at an earlier date for pruposes of their getting to know the group is well taken. Similarly, the suggestion to not have Ramsey and Henry come so late as to not give time for recouping if necessary is a good one. I will attempt to do what I can about this, but wish that one of us had caught this problem at the time we were agreeing that the political courses would fall mainly in the last week.

I hope that this letter helps get us all in agreement as to where we now stand and as to what remains to be done. I strongly urge that we do as little juggling as possible and not tamper with schedules that have already been agreed to by the faculty. We are dealing with a basically good program that we have all contributed to in thought and energy. Let's settle the remaining matters within the limits of schedule and funds and get the remainder of the program set.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via

cc: Joe Mire
Don Slaiman

10 December 1965

Miss Jill Guernsey
83 Pemberton
Cambridge, Massachussetts

Dear Miss Guernsey:

At your father's request we are sending to you copies of our magazine, New South and copies of various other of our publications. These publications are being sent under separate cover via third class mail.

Yours truly,

Joan C. Browning
Secretary, Labor Program

/jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
WM. C. BIRTHRIGHT
DAVID J. McDONALD
JOSEPH CURRAN
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
PAUL HALL
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
EMIL RIEVE
MAURICE A. HUTCHESON
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
O. A. KNIGHT
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
HERMAN D. KENIN
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. L. McFETRIDGE
A. J. HAYES
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
KARL F. FELLER
L. M. RAFTERY
JOHN J. GROGAN

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

GEORGE MEANY
WALTER P. REUTHER
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID J. McDONALD
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. F. SCHNITZLER

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C. NATIONAL 8-3870

December 8, 1965

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Rm 201
Atlanta 3, Georgai

Dear Emory:

I wonder if you would send my daughter, Jill (83 Pemberton, Cambridge, Massachusetts) back copies of the magazine New South.

And, can you arrange for her to be placed on a mailing list of the New South, free of charge?

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director of Education

GG:cem
oeiu #2
afl-cio

Joan:
Send 4-5 back issues plus
Encounter with the Future, Southern Justice and publications list.
E.Z.V.

..... ETU:

Book is now being toiled & troubled over by B. Morrison of Research;

RA is making check, to be signed Monday by P. A.

JB

ok File

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
WM. C. BIRTHRIGHT
DAVID J. McDONALD
JOSEPH CURRAN
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
PAUL HALL
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
EMIL RIEVE
MAURICE A. HUTCHESON
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
O. A. KNIGHT
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
HERMAN D. KENIN
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. L. McFETRIDGE
A. J. HAYES
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
KARL F. FELLER
L. M. RAFTERY
JOHN J. GROGAN

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

GEORGE MEANY
WALTER P. REUTHER
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JAMES B. CAREY
HARRY C. BATES
DAVID J. McDONALD
DAVID DUBINSKY
WM. F. SCHNITZLER

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C. NATIONAL 8-3870

December 14, 1965

Mr. Emory Via
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Rm 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

Under separate cover we've sent you a copy of the paperbound edition of Toil and Trouble. You now owe me $1.30.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director of Education

GG:cme
oeiu #2 afl-cio

Joan:
See Ruth A. about paying this. Make check to Geo. G. Charge to Labor Program. Have back stamped SRC (in Ref.) and returned to me. Thanks,
E.F.V.

February 10, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Associate Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

Would you send me such charges as you have to make against N.I.L.E. funds regarding the Institute. I am thinking specifically about the cost of the two books, Toil and Trouble and Congressman from Mississippi. To whom should the money go?

We will of course be charging the reading manual and the notebook against the registration fee. I now assume that there will be money enough for a further book, but request that you hold off until I have all of the University's bills in and Joe and I have compared notes.

Things continue awhirl here but my sense of a basically successful Institute remains. It was good working with you on it.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

January 3, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Associate Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

The enclosed letter and indicated enclosures has gone to each of the persons on the attached list except Wallace and Early.

At Joe's request I am sending copies of the items enclosed and of my letter for him to send to the new registrants.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures

February 14, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Associate Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N W
Washington, D C

Dear George:

Please send 30 copies of "Education in the Fifty States"
They will be most useful.

The Hangmen's following seems most enthusiastic though a trifle expensive. Best of luck to them and you.

Sincerely,

Emory F Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

File

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

February 11, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W., Rm 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

I'm enclosing a copy of "Education in the Fifty States" which I used in my two sessions. I didn't have enough copies at the NILE Institute to give you one.

By the way, more of these are available if you would like them for your state people.

I'm enclosing a copy of a story on my son's record.

Fraternally yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio

Also a "News"

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

February 17, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

Under separate cover I'm sending you 30 copies of the publication "Education in the Fifty States."

The pictures arrived this morning, thank goodness. I'm talking to PAI about doing a story for the Labor Press and hope to have a story worked out by the middle of next week for the News. It may take a couple of weeks to get the kind of picture story which I think would be most effective.

I'm sending out this week a copy of the enclosed reprint from the Saturday Evening Post and the mimeographed article on the Norfolk training project to the NILE delegates.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio
Enclosures: 2

The Watkins letter!!!

Counseling Helps Trainees and Wives Adjust Better

Mrs. Ewing went beyond counseling and referring. She organized the trainees' wives into a club; helped them to budget for low-cost, ourishing meals and to organize their households; arrange picnics; attempted to relieve the fears of some of them that their husbands might develop a yen for the co-eds at the college; and repeatedly planted the idea that they should be proud of their husbands and of themselves.

One faculty member, who praised Mrs. Ewing for her achievements, nonetheless expressed misgivings; "I wonder," he said, "how these men will react when they have to show up on the job on the dot every day and stay steady, without her to hold their hands when they have troubles." Thus far, his doubts have not been justified.

What Were Some of the Problems in Placement?

For all the spirit and confidence that had developed by graduation time ("The hall was packed and the undergraduates cheered; you'd have thought they were graduating from Harvard," said one professor), it took two months to get thirty of the trainees hired and two more to bring that number up to fifty. The Navy, which had been expected to hire nearly all of the electronics and sheet-metal workers, was stymied by a reduction in the civilian work force of the entire Defense establishment. The weather had turned cold, and so had the bricklayers' prospects.

Eight months after the end of the project, the Navy has managed to hire only one trainee. Even so, sixty-six of the ninety who earned certificates are working at their trades -- including fifteen of the sixteen bricklayers -- or at related jobs. Twelve others have found work in different fields. One of them, the sixteenth bricklayer, exemplifies an important side benefit of the training; the self-discipline that comes with having seen something through. His big handicap always had been a violent temper, which flared up a few times early in the training and rendered his future dubious. He learned to control it, and because he had, was recommended to an agency that supplies guards for stores. Not long after being hired, he broke his hand while defending a supermarket against young hoodlums who have been vandalizing it, and became something of a local hero.

Trained Men Break Through the Segregation Barrier

Especially striking was the impact of the project on segregation. One graduate became the telephone company's first Negro lineman in Norfolk at $72 a week. A previously all-white automobile assembly plant took on four trainees, two for the assembly line at $3.50 an hour and two for maintenance work at $2.52 an hour. One of the assemblers made $200, with overtime, his first week on the job.

To be sure, some members of the unusual graduating class have not been so fortunate. It is believed that one trainee was fired from a good job because he refused to change an elaborate hair style that his white co-workers found offensive. Another joined the Black Muslims upon graduation. Eight of the trainees found jobs at a plant in North Carolina, only to be laid off in short order for reasons that have not been made clear.

But on balance, the project must be reckoned a worthwhile experiment. In a recent progress report, Dr. William M. Cooper, who directed the project, wrote: "We are continuing our efforts to place and upgrade trainees. Co-operation of the employment offices has been good. The employment situation is fluid and ever-changing. Our trainees are responding to these changes to better their employment and pay ... Our hope is that this report will help in promoting the total manpower effort."

At the very least, it looks like a step in the right direction.

9 March 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

Thanks for the interview transcript. It was a good job.

You have a copy of Volk's letter. Enclosed is a copy of a brief note from Guy Johnson.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure

March 24, 1966

Mr. Otto Pragan
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Otto:

Thanks for sending the digest of speeches, discussions and panel presentations of the National Conference of Labor Representatives. Keep me on the list.

Please send a copy of the digest to Mr. Cleveland Dinnard, George Washington Carver Vocational School, 1275 Capitol Avenue, S.W., Atlanta, Georgia.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

April 6, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Your suggestion in Detroit that we meet with some of the union education people regarding the southern staff institute and other related matters certainly meets with my approval.

You suggested the latter part of this month. This would suit me fine if we could dodge the 18th through the 20th.

I hope you are able to set it up. With a little warning I'll make every effort to be there. In the meantime I hope you get some good vacationing in.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

April 15, 1966

Mr. Larry Rogin, Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Larry:

Enclosed is a copy of a proposal that I sent to Bill Allen and the other Florida AFL-CIO officers following a recent visit to Tampa. It lays out some of the ideas which we will be suggesting to state and local central bodies and internationals.

I wanted you to see this for several reasons. One is to get your response to it; two, to let you know what I am doing in areas where the Education Department might be having programs.

There is no sure way to prevent overlapping of persons or subject matters between the Department's and my efforts. In the main I don't think this presents much of a problem since the subjects can use frequent airings, especially when coming from a variety of instructors. And I will be sensitive to the dates of ongoing Department programs to avoid setting up anything too close to them. Where appropriate I hope that the Department's schedule and interest will be such that they can join in on programs which I have initiated.

You will hear from me about such programs that the state bodies decide to sponsor. In turn, it would be helpful for me to know of programs planned by the Department in the region so that I can dodge those dates.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure
cc: George Guernsey

April 15, 1966

Mr. Larry Rogin, Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Larry:

It was good to talk with you today. Montague is calling a meeting for Wednesday at 10:00 a.m. The full-time education people in the state will meet together with him and me. This would include CWA, UAW, and IAM. This is one of the first times that Montague has shown an active interest in education. Herb Green has helped. But so did the Detroit meetings! What did you do to those guys?

My function is to explain to them the variety of programs possible, to sound out some tentative strategies, and tell them what I know of possible interest from the three schools with special emphasis on Georgia State College. As I told you, both the chairman of economics and an associate dean of business have expressed a beginning interest.

You will hear from me following the meeting. I will urge the involvement of national education people before many more steps are taken and certainly make it a requirement before any formal approach is made to a school.

This may be a situation where a few ad hoc programs of various sorts should be attempted before actually pushing the idea of a labor education program. I am not especially optimistic, but I do think that stirring the idea around a bit is timely.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb
cc: George Guernsey

April 28, 1966

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I have your two letters written in absentia for April 25-26. The Tri-State Labor School schedule for Tuesday night and Wednesday morning suits me fine. I am not firmly decided about using the Mitchell film; right now, I am inclined not to use it but I would be happy for you to have it on hand. I would also be pleased to have you share with me any special thoughts regarding its use.

Regarding the Florida proposal, you are basically right concerning the length of the Institutes. Both the Florida AFL-CIO and I are quite aware of the dates of the AFL-CIO Labor School there. You understand of course that I have had no response regarding my proposal for any of the three areas and though I am hopeful I would be at least mildly surprised if any of the three comes off.

The Kentucky School dates and topic are o.k. Henry Lake spoke to me some time ago and I indicated that I would be available. I doubt that I mentioned this to you in the rush of events.

Fraternally,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

April 26, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

Larry and I talked about the Florida program that you're working on as well as the Georgia meeting. I told Larry that when I spoke to you, you were planning a conference for the Tampa area, that this would be a weekend. I assume that the other conferences will be held over weekends too? You should know that the Florida State AFL-CIO Labor School is being held July 31 to August 6.

I'd be interested in what happened at the Georgia meeting? I may try to call you from the University of West Virginia where I am all this week and talk to you about both these programs. If you want to reach me, I'll be staying at the Morgan Hotel, Morgantown.

I spoke to Henry Lake of Kentucky and went over the school program. He is counting on you to teach someting called "Developing Union Leadership." As soon as we know what staff from here will be at the Kentucky school, July 10-16, I'll have that person get in touch with you.

Fraternally yours,

(dictated but not read)

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Director, Dept. of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

April 25, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

We have worked out using you at the Tri-State Labor School on Tuesday night, May 17. I assume you'll talk on the "Changing South." Do you want to use the Mitchell film?

We also want to use you for a session from 9-12 on Wednesday morning with the "advanced group." Part of this could be on reapportionment and part might be a follow-up on the Tuesday night discussion.

I'll be calling you on this.

Sincerely yours,

(dictated but not read)

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio
cc: Hal Boyd, Virginia State AFL-CIO

JB - pick up
Monday
"Face of the Dalai"
ADL

Let's reserve this film for use in
N.C. on 5/17/66

To be picked up so
I will have it going to Asheville on Tuesday -

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

May 2, 1966

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Stuart Brock from our staff will be working on the Tri-State School. I think he'll be in touch with you very soon.

I assume that you can bring the Mitchell film.

I think Jack Sessions will be at the Kentucky school. You might want to get in touch with him even though the program will be planned directly by Henry Lake.

Fraternally yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio
cc: S.Brock, AFL-CIO

just returned from the second week in West Virginia. It went better.

May 5, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Please look this over and compare with your final copy of the program (which we reconciled -- yours and mine -- long ago by phone). I seem to have lost my corrected copy and I am wondering what is omitted.

Thanks.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure: NILE Institute program

Labor Ed

May 6, 1966

Mr. Larry Rogin, Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Larry:

We had the meeting about the possibility of approaching a state college regarding labor education programs on April 20 in Montague's office. George Warner of the CWA and Bill Clitheroe of the IAM, Montague and I were present. Herb Green of the UAW was unable to attend but you will recall that he is one of the initiators of the interest in this whole project.

Montague wanted you to be kept abreast of all developments but he may have decided to leave this task to me since he knew I would be in touch with you in any case. What kind of an approach should be made to Georgia State College will await my informal sounding out of a faculty group there. The associate dean of business, John Lewis, who has expressed an interest in this development, will be selecting a group of interested people to meet with me in the near future simply to review the kinds of programs conducted by other schools.

I will be in touch with you and with the other local labor people after this meeting.

Montague assured those of us attending the meeting that he and the state AFL-CIO were greatly interested in labor education and in one way or the other would do everything in its power to see that such programs are developed. I think he really is convinced that the state body is lagging on this score and must do something. This is a good change on his part whether or not anything develops from the approaches to the schools here.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
cc: George Guernsey

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

May 9, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thank you for your report on the preliminary meeting regarding labor education programs.

As I indicated to you over the phone, at some point I think it would be very important that a representative of our department be involved in a meeting between the university and the labor movement. This assumes, of course, that your informal discussions indicate a sufficient interest to go ahead.

Sincerely yours,

Larry

Lawrence Rogin, Director
Department of Education

LR:ng
opeiu#2 afl-cio
cc: W. H. Montague
George Guernsey

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

Geo Meany

May 11, 1966

TO: Delegates, 1966 NILE Southern Staff Training Institute

Recently, I was talking to Professor Ray Marshall about a study he is doing on minorities and apprenticeship training. In the process, Ray told me that the figures he gave you on union membership in the South were incorrect. He asked me to send you the enclosed table which corrects the one he gave you at the Athens, Georgia, Institute.

You'll be interested in knowing that I've spent a couple of weeks at the West Virginia University where 100 local union members from ten Appalachian states are being trained to work in local community action programs. This is being paid for by a grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity. We had two delegates from the Rome (Georgia) Central Body; I've sent Fred Robinson a letter suggesting that he give them some help.

I've checked on whether or not your union used the picture and/or story which I sent to them. I don't have a complete list, but I do have stories from the Lithographers magazine; ACWA, OCAW, RWDS newspapers. IUE is to use the material in its next issue. If your international used the picture and/or story and I haven't mentioned it, would you send me the date of the issue so that I can get a copy for our files?

Recently I have had two excellent reports on the Athens Institute from Fred Cory of Textile and from Hugh Owen of the ICWU.

I assume you have been pondering the results of the Alabama election.

Drop me a line on what your new activities have been.

Fraternally yours,

George T. Guernsey, Assistant Director
AFL-CIO Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio

P.S. I'm enclosing a COPE story on the '66 elections.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

May 11, 1966

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Aug 21-26 or 14-19

I was glad to get the background of the Georgia meeting. I'm hoping that we can push the state body to work on recruiting for the Gulf Coast School. This is to be held the third week in August, Mobile, Alabama.

Barny Weeks called today. We're planning to work out some recruiting material for Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi and have it available for mailing by the first of June. I'll be in touch with Montague when the material is ready.

Will you be available for a couple of days during the week of this school? I will probably start working on the staffing and program around the end of June.

Have you turned in a report on the NILE Institute? I saw Don hurriedly the other day but forgot to ask him.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

May 24, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO : Union & State Body Education Directors

FROM : George T. Guernsey, Assistant Director, Department of Education

SUBJECT: 1966 GULF COAST LABOR SCHOOL

As many of you know, the AFL-CIO's Department of Education has given unusual service to our Southern state bodies in helping them develop education programs. Resources available to state bodies in other parts of the country are not available in the South. State labor bodies, through the Southern Labor School, an organization of Southern states, have developed an excellent program.

This year the Southern Labor School is again sponsoring the Gulf Coast Basic Institute, which is open to delegates from local unions in Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi, from August 14-19. We're especially anxious to have this school well attended. As some of you know, it was held in Georgia two years ago and in Mississippi last year. This year it will be held at the Sheraton-Battlehouse Hotel, Mobile, Alabama. The charge will be $85 per person, two to a room. ($95 for a single.) This still does not cover the minimum cost of running the school. This cost is partially absorbed by the Southern Labor School.

Mr. Barney Weeks, President, Alabama Labor Council, 604 Lyric Building, Birmingham, Alabama, 35203, will receive all registrations for this 1966 school.

We're working out an intensive recruiting drive for the Gulf Coast School and hope to get a minimum of 75 delegates from the three states. Would you be willing to do a mailing of a recruiting folder on this school to all of your locals in the three states?

Could you send me the name and address of the person in charge of these three states within your union?

G.T.G.

RETURN TO: Mr. George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
AFL-CIO Department of Education
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

The name of the person in charge of the Alabama-Georgia-Mississippi area, within our (union/state body) is: _____

_____
(street)

_____
(city) (state) (zip code)

I would like _____ copies of the promotional leaflet on the Gulf Coast Labor School.

NAME: _____ UNION or STATE BODY _____

ADDRESS: _____

CITY: _____ STATE: _____ ZIP CODE: _____

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio
May 24, 1966

May 25, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I have your letter on the Gulf Coast School. I would be happy to be with you for some part or all of that school. Let me know.

When you speak of the third week in August, do you mean from the 14th-19th or from the 21st-26th? It's a tricky month.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AFL-CIO

Edu Rept

DEAD

Mr. Carter

May 27, 1966

Mr. Wayne Craddock
Recording Secretary
Local 488
584 Ashton Avenue
Franklin, Virginia

Dear Mr. Craddock:

The film "Heart of the Union" which deals with local union meetings is available from the AFL-CIO Education Department at 815 16th Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006.

I will send a copy of this letter to the Education Department and request that they send you a list of films and their costs. You will find the Education Department a valuable source of information regarding local union education programs.

I thought the Norfolk Institute was a good one and am happy that you were able to be there. If my own program here can ever be of service to you please feel free to be in touch with me.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
cc: Miss Jacqueline Kienzle
Staff Representative
Education Department, AFL-CIO

May 27, 1966

Miss Jacqueline Kienzle
Staff Representative
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Jackie:

I thought you might be interested in this. Could you send him a film catalogue and whatever else you have on the subject.

Incidentially, I don't seem to have a film catalogue. Could you send one to me?

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure: letter to Wayne Craddock

May 10/1966

Dear Mr. Via,

I'm writing for Local 488 in Franklin, Va. A member of the United Paper Makers and Paperworkers. I was at the AFL-CIO week end institute in Norfolk, Va. April 16/17.

Our members would like to get the film on how to hold a union meeting" to show at our regular meeting. Our local will be glad to pay for the use of the film. If it is possible to get the film for us please send it to me. WAYNE CRADDOCK

REC. SEC. LOCAL 488
584 ASHTON AVE.
FRANKLIN, VA.

Thank you for all the help you can give,

Wayne Craddock
Rec. Sec.

May 27, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Feel free to use my name in connection with the Gulf Coast Labor School. Vernon Jordan will also be available during the week of August 14-19, but you should confirm with him as soon as possible the exact date.

I thought the Tri-State School went very well. It was a good group and a good program.

Fraternally,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET. N.W.
WASHINGTON. D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

May 24, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Rm 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

I'm enclosing an announcement on the Gulf Coast Labor School. I'm going to work up a tentative program sometime during the next two weeks. I'd like to use your name as one of the invited resources. I'd also like to use Vernon Jordan's name. Could you check to see whether or not he would be available?

ok if firmed soon
Aug 15

I haven't had a chance to check the NILE program you sent to me. But I will this week and return it to you. How is the report coming?

I'll be sending you a sheet to fill out on the Tri-State School. Stuart Brock thought it was pretty good.

Fraternally yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Dept. of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio
Enclosure

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

Department of Education
June 6, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory,

We sent Wayne Craddock a film catalogue and also a discussion guide for "Heart of the Union" so he could get a better idea of how the film could be used. A film catalogue is also on its way to you.

You might be interested in the enclosed reprint of a series of articles which appeared in The Washington Post on the implementation of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. We are using it as a reading at some schools.

Best regards.

Fraternally yours,

Jacqueline Kienzle
Staff Representative

JK/dc
opeiu #2 afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

Department of Education
June 6, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Room 201
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I will write you about the Gulf Coast School later. Thanks for sending the letter to Montague.

I am going to give Barney a rough program so that he can get a mailing ready for sometime during the next week.

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director of Education

GTG:jms
opeiu#2 afl-cio

Still trying to send you the OK on the NLE program. The band has a new record coming out next week. Tell Al.

June 15, 1966

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Please see that the billing for the film, "The Inheritance", is sent to me at the Southern Regional Council. The film got to Tampa in good time, but as luck, human frailty, and planning would have it, the Steelworkers showed up with a copy in good order. This led me to bring the film back to Atlanta and call together, hastily, a small group of civil rights types and our own staff to preview the film.

I was interested in two things: one, to expose folks to a high-quality film that dealt with labor history and the other to seek from them reactions regarding its possible use with non-labor groups. In this regard I think you might be interested for your own considerations in one comment which summarizes some of what I feel about the film as well as several others. This note was written to me by Pat Watters as a reaction to having seen the film.

> "I don't know how it might be done, but I think the chief value of this film for right now would be in countering nationalist and separatist tendencies among Negroes. It is an irony that what struck me most was how it said very effectively that whitey has gotten his lumps too, that injustice, etc. is not reserved for Negroes only. On a deeper level, it should convey, too, to Negroes sensitively enough attuned to such, some of the roots in brutalization and the fight for survival of present-day unfortunate traits of whitey -- including his materialism. Anyhow, it is as thought-provoking a piece of propaganda as I have seen since the old I&E days in the army."

George, do we know anything about the film's use with civil rights groups? The last couple of showings of the films with southern labor groups that I have been in on made it clear, I feel, that there were some interesting parallels between labor activity and civil rights activity.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

June 21, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Southern Regional Council, Labor Program
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Although it's very much against our policy, I'm canceling the billing on THE INHERITANCE. I'm hoping that out of the showing you had at the Southern Regional Council we'll be able to get some bookings outside the normal labor groups which we're now reaching.

I was quite interested in Pat Watters comments. Generally speaking, the film creates among labor people a sympathy for civil rights goals. In a few cases, labor people object to the militancy of the film, both in labor and in civil rights situations. These, however, are quite rare.

I'll be writing to you later on the Gulf Coast Labor School.

Fraternally yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2
afl-cio

June 22, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey
Assistant Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Would it be possible to have someone send a copy of the discussion guide for the film "The Inheritance" to the following persons:

Earl E. Flous
316 Tulane Bldg.
New Orleans, Louisiana

William Edwards
316 Tulane Bldg.
New Orleans, Louisiana.

Thanks and best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

June 23, 1966

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Thanks so much for absorbing the cost for THE INHERITANCE. I certainly had not meant to get the Education Department into an awkward position. I do feel that the film was put to good use here and I trust that a broader audience will be considering its further use.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

June 24, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO : Jack Fingler, University of Minnesota
Phillips Garman, University of Illinois
Helmut Goiatz, Pennsylvania State University
Frank Lyons, University of Wisconsin
Joseph Samlen, University of Connecticut
Morris Tibbetts, University of Wisconsin
Emory Via, Southern Regional Council

FROM : George T. Guernsey, Department of Education, AFL-CIO

George

SUBJECT: 1966 MANUAL

Under separate cover I'm sending you a sample copy of one of our summer school manuals. The material was prepared around May 10th so that we have since revised some of the legislative materials. However, it will give you an idea of what our summer school manuals contain. We're doing these for 20 separate summer schools.

I'd appreciate any comments you would care to make on it.

GG:cm
opeiu #2 afl-cio

July 25, 1966

Mr. Stuart Brock
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Stuart:

Enclosed are two sheets which summarize our latest estimates of white and Negro voter registration in the Southern states. Let me add a few interpretive comments which may be of help.

1. The Arkansas figure is back up to 104,000 for Negro registration after having taken a sharp dip as the result of a new registration law.

2. The Negro registration for Georgia stands at about 265,000 today and by the end of the registration period on July 26 may have reached as much as 300,000 since a number of voter registration projects are currently in operation. We will not have a report on this for a while yet.

3. We have revised figures in today which wouldiindicate the Negro registration in Mississippi is at approximately 145,000. The earlier figure which you have indicating 147,000 was evidently an over-estimate.

4. You should note especially for North Carolina and Texas that these figures are rougher estimates than the others. No official figures are available to use from those two states.

We do feel that the two figures on the enclosed sheet are fairly accurate. You will note that the Texas Negro registration figure has been revised downward to 400,000.

5. It could be that the Virginia Negro registration has now exceeded 185,000 but we cannot say what the new figure should be since we have not received our own reports on that situation.

6. You will recall that the voting age in Georgia is 18. This gives that state a slightly different base from the others.

Let me know if there is anything further we can do to be of assistance.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures

August 3, 1966

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Where are you? Don't complain, just talk to the Machinists. Yesterday I sent a copy of the NILE Institute report. How about that?

The report is in draft form although I would hope not to have to do too much more to it. There are several things which I feel you should pay special attention to, and I would greatly welcome your comments inggmeral.

Let me simply list a few of the specifics which you may wish to consider:

1. What is the best way to shorten the whole report?
2. The project reports on poverty and urban renewal need to be enlivened. Would you undertake this?
3. Has there been further labor press coverage?
4. Would you look over the chart which gives some data on the students? There are some blanks which perhaps can be filled in from the information which you have. In the final report I think it would probablybbe unwise to identify the partécipants by name on this particular sheet. What are your reactions on this, and is there a more useful way to summarize some of this data?
5. Would you please compare my version of the final program schedule with yours and make any needed corrections?

I am embarrassed to ask you to look at the report right away, but Joe has waited so long for me to perform that he now has to get it into shape for use as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

kSame letter sent to Fred Robinson, Rome, Georgia

5 August 1966

Mr. Guy Johnson
RFD 2
Broxton, Georgia
c/o Jesse Harper

Dear Guy:

Enclosed are copies of information relating to the Gulf Coast Institute. As you will note, the school includes Georgia. To be quite candid, the Georgia representation will be very small.

I am writing because I think over the years this school has proved to be very valuable and because the idea of union education in Georgia will spread only if we get local leaders actually involved in programs.

I realize how short the time is, but would you make an effort to interest some of your local leaders in attending this institute?

If you find your way to Atlanta, please look me up.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures

S O U T H E R N L A B O R S C H O O L

GULF COAST INSTITUTE FOR STATES OF ALABAMA, GEORGIA AND MISSIPPI

S P E C I A L C A L L

To Officers of City Central Bodies, Trades Councils and Local Unions in Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi

Notice is hereby given of the 1966 Gulf Coast Institute for the States of Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi.

Place: Battle House Hotel, Mobile, Alabama
Dates: August 14-19, 1966
Course of Study: "Labor History," "Labor's Role in Poverty Programs," "Using the South's Resources for the People," "Collective Bargaining Problems," "Issues of the '66 Elections," plus films.
Workshops: "Union Administration," and "Parliamentary Procedures."

Teachers & Speakers: Assistant Education Director George Guernsey; Dr. Ray Marshall, Professor of Economics, University of Texas; Emory Via, Director of Labor Studies, Southern Regional Council; TVA Commissioner Frank Smith; E. T. Kehrer, Southern Director, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department; Staff Representatives of the AFL-CIO Research Department; Daniel A. Powell, COPE Regional Director, and others.

Credentials: Attendance is limited to Officers, Business Agents, Shop Stewards, Committeemen of Local Unions, WAD's, Central Bodies and Councils in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi. Each delegate must be duly credentialed by the body represented. Credential blank is enclosed. It should be returned to the address below not later than August 5.

Cost: $85.00 for Board, Room and Tuition--two persons to a room. Those desiring a private room, add $15.00 for week's costs. A check in full must accompany the credentials. Cost of all meals is included. Tips to waitresses and maids are included in the above tuition. First meal served will be dinner Sunday night.

Registration: Delegates should plan to arrive at the Battle House Hotel in Mobile, Alabama, by not later than 5 p.m. on August 14. First meal will be served at 6:30 p.m. on that date.

Communications: Send all correspondence to Barney Weeks, President, Southern Labor School, 604 Lyric Building, Birmingham, Alabama 35203.

Fraternally yours,

Barney Weeks

Barney Weeks, President
Southern Labor School

mw

OPEIU-18

Enclosure

C R E D E N T I A L

SOUTHERN LABOR SCHOOL
Battle House Hotel
Mobile, Alabama
August 14-19, 1966

CREDENTIAL FOR LOCAL UNION OFFICERS

TO GULF COAST INSTITUTE OF THE SOUTHERN LABOR SCHOOL, AFL-CIO

This is to certify that the following officers have been designated by this organization to attend the Gulf Coast Institute of the Southern Labor School to be held at the Battle House Hotel, Mobile, Alabama, August 14 - 19, 1966:

Name	Office	Address

Signature _____

Date _____ Office _____

Name of Organization _____

City and State _____

Return Credential to: Barney Weeks, President
Southern Labor School
604 Lyric Building
Birmingham, Alabama 35203

Check for $85.00 for each delegate must accompany credential, to cover room, board and tuition--two to a room. Those delegates desiring a private room should remit $15.00 additional.

Make checks payable to Southern Labor School.

Registration begins 1:00 p.m, Sunday, August 14, 1966

OPEIU-18

Southern Labor School

August 5, 1966

Mr. George Guernsey, Assistant Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Dear George:

As of today, we have received 69 credentials to the Southern Labor School, 58 of which are paid. The five delegates from Steelworkers Local 1466, Bessemer, Alabama, listed in my letter of July 29, to you, will not attend since officers of this local will have to be in Chicago at that time due to contract disputes. Due to the Governor's race in that state, Treasurer Louise Dean will replace W. H. Montague as delegate from the Georgia AFL-CIO. Following is a list of the credentials:

Ala. State Assoc. of Barbers	Tuscaloosa, Alabama	Walter B. Boyd
Georgia State AFL-CIO	Atlanta, Georgia	Mrs. Louise Dean
Montgomery Central Labor Coun.	Montgomery, Alabama	Joe F. Garrard
Pulp Sulphite Local 157	Tuscaloosa, Alabama	David V. Johnston A. E. Davidson O. W. Stokes
Steelworkers Local 3574	Birmingham, Alabama	John T. Cole J. R. Shelton L. B. Hallmark
Glass Bottle Blowers 196	Montgomery, Alabama	Henrietta Nobles Kelpie Tremontana Frances E. P. Taylor
Clothing Workers Local 910	Andalusia, Alabama	Merrill Petty Paul Whitehurst
UAW Local 1155	Birmingham, Alabama	Charles Mays E. M. Peoples R. B. Martin T. V. Armstrong
ILGWU 378	Florence, Alabama	Marvella Snoddy
Clerks Local 761 (RWDSU)	Huntsville, Alabama	C. A. Byrd James Elkins

Alabama Labor Council	Birmingham, Alabama	Barney Weeks William E. Mintz A. G. Trammell
Textile Workers L465	Mobile, Alabama	Edley Oden Clifford Shirah Amelia P. Lloyd
Machinists Dist. Lodge 178	Anniston, Alabama	Hollis W. Wilson
RWDSU Local 102A	Mobile, Alabama	James L. White
IBEW Local 1264	Mobile, Alabama	J. C. Burns
Steelworkers Local 320	Mobile, Ala.	Max W. Morgan John E. Bridges John Doss Thomas McKinstry
Steelworkers Local 1151	Birmingham, Alabama	Leroy Bridges Carl Powell
Machinists Local 372	Bessemer, Alabama	Frank E. Hyde
ILGWU	Florence, Alabama	Ed Sharp
Butchers Local 215	Montgomery, Alabama	James R. Lee
Chemical Workers 754	Atlanta, Georgia	Coleman Lynn, Jr. Daisy M. Mann Mary L. Gurley Josephine Callier
Laborers' Local 145	Jackson, Mississippi	Tommie Griffith
Chemical Workers 125	Anniston, Alabama	Joseph E. Mundy William T. Cambron
Brick & Clay Wkrs. 554	Meridian, Mississippi	Aaron Hopkins Arthur Darden
Tobacco Workers 334	Cullman, Alabama	W. A. (Joe) Buckelew
Office Emp. Local 52	Sheffield, Alabama	Catherine Akin
Iron Workers 92	Birmingham, Alabama	J. L. Harlon
Steelworkers Local 1109	Birmingham, Alabama	Emmitt Hicks Oliver Harper
Pulp Sulphite Local 602	Tuscaloosa, Alabama	James Fulghan
Longshoremen 1752	Pascagoula, Mississippi	Ronald K. Robinson
Aluminum Workers Local 200	Muscle Shoals, Ala.	Coolidge B. Hatton Travis O. Dawson Rufus B. Marthaler

Bookbinders Local 96	Atlanta, Georgia	Truitt L. Crunkleton
ILGWU Andraw Knit Local	Tuscaloosa, Alabama	Syble Neal Ola Mae Cork
ILGWU Local 527	Town Creek, Alabama	Mary Green Jimmie Doris Kelly
Atlanta, Ga. Regional Office	Atlanta, Georgia	Frank C. Gullatte Paid 8-8-66
Laborers' Int'l Union	Mobile, Alabama	Elbert Robinson
" " "	Meridian, Miss	J. H. Townsend
Rubber Workers	Cottondale, Ala.	James O. Elliott
Mobile, Ala. Regional Office	Tuscaloosa, Ala.	Clifton King
United Papermakers & Paperworkers	Mobile, Ala.	Al Dunaway
	Memphis, Tenn.	Jack Hydrick

The last eleven listed above are those which have not as yet paid their registration fee. However, Truitt L. Crunkleton of the Bookbinders 96 in Atlanta, Georgia, is waiting to receive my letter of today letting him know the cost of tuition only and said he would mail his check on in.

The Atlanta Regional Office of the Laborers' International Union sent a letter with their credential stating that tuition had been paid direct from their Washington office, but we have not as yet received the check from Washington.

We received a letter from the Regional Office of the Papermakers stating Representative Jack Hydrick would pay his fee upon arrival, making no mention of the other two representatives listed on their credential.

All other credentials stated registration fees would be paid on arrival at the school.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Barney Weeks
President

BW

OPEIU-18

8-8-66

Carpenters 438	Mobile, Ala.	George W. Roberts
ILGWU 567	MARION, Ala.	Betty Colburn Viva Lou Barnette
CLU	Tuscaloosa, Ala.	Nora Weaver Ruth Weed

cc: Emory Via

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

August 25, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

I spoke to Larry Rogin for a couple of minutes on Monday. He called Joe Mire and explained that I couldn't possible look at the NILE report until after Labor Day.

I'm now in New York and then, next week, in Arkansas. I will call you when I'm back in the office and able to get into the report.

Sincerely yours,

(dictated but not read)

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Dept. of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

September 7, 1966

Mr. Emory Via
c/o Mr. Norris L. Tibbetts
School for Workers, University Extension Division
University of Wisconsin
432 North Lake Street
Madison, Wisconsin 53706

Dear Emory:

I find that you'll have about one hour and 20 minutes at the D.C. airport--from 9:32 to 10:50 a.m. If all goes well, I'll meet you at the airport for an hour's talk about the NILE report.

If for some reason you change your plans, call me--at the office on Friday or at home: WH 2-3145, AC 301. I'd rather not make a trip to the airport in vain.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey
Asst. Dir., Department of Education

GG:cem
opeiu #2 afl-cio

AIR MAIL

October 31, 1966

Mr. Stuart Brock
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Stuart:

The A. D. L. here in Atlanta wants to know where its copy of "Face of the South" is. You will recall that it was sent to washington for your use in Baltimore.

Can you help me out?

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

AFL-CIO Edu Dept.
1965-1966

November 1, 1966

Mr. George Guerrsey
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

Enclosed is a copy of the pamphlet Know Your Rights which we discussed by phone. I have nearly exhausted my supply even though it is fresh off the press. However, other copies will soon be available.

I would be interested in your reactions to it. The A.C.L.U. of Georgia will be distributing it also and promoting the idea of classes using a filmstrip and resource person to go along with the pamphlet.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

Enclosure

November 4, 1966

Mr. Holgate Young
Education Director
Communications Workers of America
AFL-CIO
1925 "K" Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Hoagy:

A vote of thanks is never an adequate expression for a job well done. Let me add my personal voice to that of Local 189 for your having tended to its necessary and important business over the past several years. You did much to hold the organization together and make it grow.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

EDUCATION IN THE FIFTY STATES

Department of Education

AFL-CIO

815 16th Street, N.W.

Washington 6, D.C.

Third Revised Edition
1966
oeiu#2 afl-cio

INTRODUCTION

This third edition of Education in the Fifty States has been completely revised and reorganized to include up-to-date figures and a great deal of new material. The various charts bring together information about education throughout the nation and in each of the fifty states.

As an illustration of how to use this handbook, we might take the state of Pennsylvania. From these charts one can learn that Pennsylvania is slightly above the national average in per capita income (Column A), but slightly below average in per pupil expenditure for elementary and secondary education (Column B). Pennsylvania therefore ranks low in "effort," that is in school expenditure as a percentage of personal income (Column C). Pennsylvania spends only 3.65% of its personal income on elementary and secondary schools, compared to the national average of 4.74%. By glancing through the chart, it can be seen that Pennsylvania is among the lowest states in effort. Pennsylvania, more easily than many states, could maintain adequate levels of educational expenditure. By committing 6.09% of its income to elementary and secondary education, less than several states are already doing, Pennsylvania could raise its per pupil expenditure to $800 (Column D), enough to pay teachers an average of $8,000 a year and to match New York State's average expenditure for other current needs. The average state would need to spend 7.83% of its income to accomplish the same result, and many states would need to commit more than a tenth of their income to education.

The state government provides 43.4% of educational expenditures in Pennsylvania, slightly higher than the national average (Column N), but considerably less than many other states do. Local communities pay 53.6% of school costs and Federal assistance accounts for only 2.8% of school costs. It should, of course, be noted that these figures are for a school year prior to the enactment of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

Inadequate support for education is reflected in several ways. Teachers' salaries in Pennsylvania are below the national average (Column E), considerably lower than they should be in view of the resources of the state. A surprising 58.2% of the schools in Pennsylvania have no school library (Column G). Classroom shortages in Pennsylvania are severe. The state now has 79,500 classrooms in use (Column I), but 19,800 new classrooms are needed to replace substandard classrooms now in use (Column J) and an additional 16,900 classrooms are needed to bring class size down to 25 elementary and 20 secondary pupils to a room (Column K), making a total of 36,700 new classrooms needed in the state (Column L).

Dropouts in Pennsylvania are fewer than for the nation as a whole, with 80.8% of the ninth graders in public school going on to graduate from the twelfth grade (Column H). Columns R, S, and T tell the story of what happened to a typical group of 1000 Pennsylvania students who entered the ninth grade, either in public or non-public schools, in the fall of 1960. In 1964, 815 of them graduated from the twelfth grade, 185 of them having dropped out somewhere along the way. Of those who graduated, 309 entered their freshman year of college in the fall of 1964. In Nevada 528 of the original 1000 would have entered college and in California 724 of the original 1000 would have started college. These figures, computed by the AFL-CIO Education Department, have not been published prior to their appearance in this handbook.

With regard to higher education, Pennsylvania's per capita public expenditure is considerably below average, $6.29 as compared to the national average of $14.12 (Column U). Perhaps this partially explains the fact that fewer of Pennsylvania's high school graduates enter college than is the case in the average state, 38% in Pennsylvania as compared to 51% in the nation (Column V). Of the Pennsylvanians who do enter college, 22.4% go outside the state for their education, as compared with only 9.8% in Michigan and 5.4% in California (Column W).

Since the last edition of Education in the Fifty States, several important new programs of federal aid to education have been enacted. Some of the authorized appropriations for 1966 under these programs are given on pages 16 and 17. Pennsylvania is authorized to receive $56,501,000 for improving educational opportunity of disadvantaged children under Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act; $9,410,000 under the Vocational Education Act of 1963; and $27,539,000 for student aid, academic facilities, and community extension services under the Higher Education Act of 1965.

As can be seen from the charts, many states with much less income are doing much both absolutely and relatively than Pennsylvania in elementary, secondary and higher education. Using these charts, this same kind of information can be obtained about each of the states. Some states, it will be discovered, are straining their resources to support their schools; others could do more. All in all, these charts add up to compelling statistical justification for full federal partnership in financing education from the elementary schools to the universities.

	A	B	C	D
	Per Capita Personal Income (1964)	Current School Expenditure Per Pupil (1964-65)	Effort: State and Local School Expenditure as % of Personal Income (1964-65)	% of Income Needed to Raise Expenditure to $800 per Pupil
UNITED STATES	$2,550	$484	4.74%	7.83%
Alabama	$1,737	$277	4.52%	13.05%
Alaska	$3,128	$683	6.68%	7.82%
Arizona	$2,218	$478	6.12%	10.24%
Arkansas	$1,633	$317	4.88%	12.31%
California	$3,092	$565	5.71%	8.08%
Colorado	$2,591	$470	5.38%	9.15%
Connecticut	$3,250	$600	3.87%	5.16%
Delaware	$3,426	$539	4.24%	6.29%
District of Columbia	$3,515	$498	2.87%	4.61%
Florida	$2,280	$412	4.88%	9.47%
Georgia	$1,933	$330	4.31%	10.44%
Hawaii	$2,579	$418	4.59%	8.78%
Idaho	$2,012	$341	4.87%	11.42%
Illinois	$3,003	$551	3.97%	5.76%
Indiana	$2,529	$490	4.87%	7.95%
Iowa	$2,370	$464	4.80%	8.27%
Kansas	$2,311	$487	5.21%	8.55%
Kentucky	$1,811	$324	4.04%	9.97%
Louisiana	$1,864	$418	5.61%	10.73%
Maine	$2,130	$371	4.39%	9.46%
Maryland	$2,888	$503	4.59%	7.30%
Massachusetts	$2,922	$528	3.40%	5.15%
Michigan	$2,733	$510	5.29%	8.29%
Minnesota	$2,373	$534	5.90%	8.83%

more.....

	A	B	C	D
	Per Capita Income	Expenditure Per Pupil	Effort	% of Income to Raise $800 Per Pupil
Mississippi	$1,444	$273	5.34%	15.64%
Missouri	$2,595	$449	3.81%	6.78%
Montana	$2,183	$570	6.76%	9.48%
Nebraska	$2,302	$407	4.58%	9.00%
Nevada	$3,248	$543	5.95%	8.76%
New Hampshire	$2,343	$440	4.41%	8.01%
New Jersey	$2,962	$607	4.36%	5.74%
New Mexico	$2,010	$475	6.71%	11.30%
New York	$3,139	$790	4.84%	4.90%
North Carolina	$1,900	$322	4.50%	11.18%
North Dakota	$2,012	$424	5.81%	10.96%
Ohio	$2,623	$465	4.53%	7.79%
Oklahoma	$2,095	$366	4.63%	10.12%
Oregon	$2,602	$569	5.77%	8.11%
Pennsylvania	$2,575	$479	3.65%	6.09%
Rhode Island	$2,479	$514	3.72%	5.78%
South Carolina	$1,647	$284	4.66%	13.12%
South Dakota	$1,832	$444	6.07%	10.93%
Tennessee	$1,852	$300	4.25%	11.33%
Texas	$2,175	$396	4.77%	9.63%
Utah	$2,174	$407	6.89%	13.54%
Vermont	$2,144	$522	4.80%	7.35%
Virginia	$2,224	$380	4.36%	9.17%
Washington	$2,634	$534	5.88%	8.80%
West Virginia	$1,962	$327	4.30%	10.51%
Wisconsin	$2,492	$543	4.91%	7.23%
Wyoming	$2,475	$554	6.16%	8.89%

	E Average Annual Salary, Classroom Teachers (1964-65)	F Percent of Children (5-17) in Families with Income under $2,000 (1960)	G Percent of Public Schools with no School Library (1962)	H Public High School Graduates (1964) as % of 9th Grade Enrollment (1960-61)
UNITED STATES	$6,220	12%	51.7%	73.1%
Alabama	$4,700	25%	58.8%	59.8%
Alaska	$7,016	9%	74.7%	64.2%
Arizona	$6,700	11%	45.1%	66.5%
Arkansas	$4,200	29%	38.8%	69.5%
California	$7,900	6%	56.1%	90.6%
Colorado	$6,025	8%	50.5%	75.2%
Connecticut	$6,975	4%	42.9%	80.1%
Delaware	$6,800	7%	35.6%	75.3%
District of Columbia	$7,450	10%	54.1%	56.3%
Florida	$6,140	13%	22.1%	70.4%
Georgia	$5,050	21%	19.3%	59.1%
Hawaii	$6,024	6%	14.2%	83.0%
Idaho	$5,100	7%	44.9%	70.2%
Illinois	$6,809	7%	52.4%	71.6%
Indiana	$6,530	7%	49.9%	66.3%
Iowa	$5,747	11%	59.4%	87.1%
Kansas	$5,587	8%	56.2%	78.0%
Kentucky	$4,700	24%	65.0%	63.8%
Louisiana	$5,175	21%	34.6%	73.5%
Maine	$5,200	8%	74.7%	66.8%
Maryland	$6,727	7%	30.8%	72.1%
Massachusetts	$6,950	4%	65.1%	79.1%
Michigan	$6,700	7%	53.6%	72.6%
Minnesota	$6,463	9%	64.9%	86.2%

more.....

	E	F	G	H
	Teachers' Salaries	Children in Families Under $2,000	Schools with no Library	Graduates as % of 9th Graders
Mississippi	$4,103	37%	37.3%	60.6%
Missouri	$5,660	12%	70.5%	67.1%
Montana	$5,600	8%	61.4%	76.8%
Nebraska	$4,893	11%	83.6%	76.4%
Nevada	$6,530	5%	55.9%	75.0%
New Hampshire	$5,435	5%	73.2%	78.2%
New Jersey	$6,698	5%	49.8%	79.2%
New Mexico	$6,200	14%	55.6%	59.8%
New York	$7,800	6%	27.6%	81.0%
North Carolina	$5,022	24%	14.6%	58.4%
North Dakota	$4,800	13%	60.2%	80.5%
Ohio	$6,025	7%	49.2%	75.8%
Oklahoma	$5,160	15%	56.2%	69.8%
Oregon	$6,420	6%	42.1%	78.0%
Pennsylvania	$6,150	7%	58.2%	80.8%
Rhode Island	$6,251	7%	60.0%	82.6%
South Carolina	$4,500	28%	35.0%	62.1%
South Dakota	$4,475	17%	81.2%	81.8%
Tennessee	$4,850	23%	56.5%	64.7%
Texas	$5,463	16%	38.6%	61.9%
Utah	$5,945	5%	37.7%	71.3%
Vermont	$5,362	8%	78.6%	72.5%
Virginia	$5,450	17%	39.3%	62.2%
Washington	$6,400	5%	23.4%	78.7%
West Virginia	$4,590	20%	82.7%	66.6%
Wisconsin	$6,125	6%	65.6%	77.9%
Wyoming	$5,975	6%	32.6%	66.6%

	Classrooms Now in Use (1964-65)	Additional Classrooms Needed: To Replace Substandard Classrooms	Additional Classrooms Needed: To Bring Class Size Down to 25:1 and 20:1	Additional Classrooms Needed: Total
	I	J	K	L
UNITED STATES	1,536,500	352,000	285,900	637,900
Alabama	28,000	6,800	7,100	13,900
Alaska	1,900	700	200	900
Arizona	13,700	2,000	2,600	4,600
Arkansas	15,000	3,200	2,600	5,800
California	130,700	50,100	33,500	83,600
Colorado	18,100	3,500	3,600	7,100
Connecticut	21,000	4,200	2,000	6,200
Delaware	4,100	200	500	700
District of Columbia	4,900	1,000	1,100	2,100
Florida	39,300	6,500	10,000	16,500
Georgia	37,200	5,200	9,600	14,800
Hawaii	5,800	2,400	1,200	3,600
Idaho	6,900	2,100	1,100	3,200
Illinois	76,000	17,800	13,500	31,300
Indiana	40,400	9,600	7,300	16,900
Iowa	28,500	9,500	3,500	13,000
Kansas	25,200	4,700	2,700	7,400
Kentucky	23,400	4,500	4,400	8,900
Louisiana	32,000	6,200	5,600	11,800
Maine	8,300	4,100	1,100	5,200
Maryland	25,700	4,200	6,600	10,800
Massachusetts	36,400	12,100	5,000	17,100
Michigan	64,500	9,200	14,700	23,900
Minnesota	33,000	8,000	3,800	11,800

more....

	Classrooms Now in Use	Additional Classrooms Needed: To Replace Substandard	To Reduce Class Size	Total
	I	J	K	L
Mississippi	20,900	2,100	5,500	7,600
Missouri	34,100	7,300	4,900	12,200
Montana	8,600	2,800	900	3,700
Nebraska	17,300	6,100	1,500	7,600
Nevada	3,500	500	600	1,100
New Hampshire	5,200	1,500	700	2,200
New Jersey	46,000	10,800	6,500	17,300
New Mexico	10,200	1,200	1,600	2,800
New York	118,100	22,000	22,900	44,900
North Carolina	45,000	7,600	8,100	15,700
North Dakota	7,400	2,400	800	3,200
Ohio	83,200	16,900	15,100	32,000
Oklahoma	25,800	4,800	3,100	7,900
Oregon	18,900	7,500	2,200	9,700
Pennsylvania	79,500	19,800	16,900	36,700
Rhode Island	5,900	1,700	1,100	2,800
South Carolina	23,200	3,500	5,700	9,200
South Dakota	8,600	3,700	600	4,300
Tennessee	31,400	7,400	6,700	14,100
Texas	92,000	13,600	13,300	26,900
Utah	10,100	2,400	2,300	4,700
Vermont	3,700	1,600	300	1,900
Virginia	34,500	5,800	7,800	13,600
Washington	29,200	7,900	4,300	12,200
West Virginia	17,100	5,500	4,000	9,500
Wisconsin	32,600	7,300	4,900	12,200
Wyoming	4,500	800	400	1,200

	Percent of School Revenue by Source (1961-62)			Percent of Persons Over 25 yrs. old with Less Than 5 yrs. of Schooling (1960)
	Federal	State	Local
	M	N	O	P
UNITED STATES	4.3%	38.7%	56.5%	8.3%
Alabama	9.1%	60.5%	20.7%	16.3%
Alaska	27.2%	46.8%	26.0%	8.2%
Arizona	7.7%	34.9%	57.3%	10.0%
Arkansas	8.2%	45.5%	46.1%	15.4%
California	3.6%	37.0%	59.4%	5.7%
Colorado	7.5%	21.9%	70.5%	4.7%
Connecticut	2.9%	35.2%	61.7%	6.3%
Delaware	3.7%	79.9%	16.3%	6.6%
District of Columbia	14.6%	0.0%	85.0%	7.2%
Florida	5.7%	52.2%	41.3%	9.2%
Georgia	7.1%	66.3%	26.3%	17.6%
Hawaii	14.0%	67.5%	17.9%	15.0%
Idaho	7.6%	29.6%	62.5%	3.3%
Illinois	2.6%	19.8%	77.4%	6.3%
Indiana	2.9%	30.7%	66.3%	4.9%
Iowa	3.5%	11.3%	85.3%	3.0%
Kansas	5.6%	21.9%	72.6%	3.7%
Kentucky	6.7%	56.0%	37.1%	13.8%
Louisiana	4.7%	66.9%	28.4%	21.3%
Maine	6.7%	26.5%	66.6%	4.7%
Maryland	5.1%	36.3%	57.9%	7.7%
Massachusetts	4.8%	22.9%	72.3%	6.0%
Michigan	2.6%	41.0%	55.9%	5.8%
Minnesota	3.0%	38.4%	57.7%	4.0%

more.....

	Percent of School Revenue by Source (1961-62)			% of Persons Over 25 with Less Than 5 yrs. Schooling
	Federal	State	Local
	M	N	O	P
Mississippi	7.3%	57.6%	34.5%	18.8%
Missouri	4.4%	33.7%	61.8%	7.1%
Montana	6.3%	27.2%	66.6%	4.1%
Nebraska	5.9%	5.9%	87.6%	3.6%
Nevada	7.9%	51.3%	40.6%	3.9%
New Hampshire	6.3%	6.9%	86.4%	4.4%
New Jersey	2.4%	22.9%	74.7%	7.0%
New Mexico	12.4%	76.5%	11.1%	12.2%
New York	2.4%	41.4%	56.1%	7.8%
North Carolina	5.8%	70.4%	22.9%	16.5%
North Dakota	6.9%	28.0%	64.7%	6.0%
Ohio	3.1%	26.7%	~~29.3%~~ 69.3%	5.4%
Oklahoma	8.3%	27.7%	63.9%	8.6%
Oregon	4.0%	28.4%	67.3%	3.3%
Pennsylvania	2.8%	43.4%	53.6%	6.9%
Rhode Island	5.9%	31.0%	63.0%	7.4%
South Carolina	8.2%	66.5%	25.3%	20.3%
South Dakota	8.3%	8.9%	81.9%	4.1%
Tennessee	7.9%	56.4%	35.3%	14.8%
Texas	4.5%	49.8%	44.5%	13.4%
Utah	5.5%	48.3%	46.0%	2.8%
Vermont	3.8%	26.2%	69.5%	3.8%
Virginia	9.1%	40.2%	50.1%	13.1%
Washington	5.3%	62.4%	31.9%	3.4%
West Virginia	4.3%	53.5%	42.1%	11.0%
Wisconsin	3.6%	25.0%	71.4%	5.3%
Wyoming	5.3%	46.9%	46.2%	3.6%

WHAT HAPPENED TO AN AVERAGE 1000 NINTH GRADERS (1960-64)
(Public and Non-Public Schools)

	Ninth Grade 1960-61	Failed to Graduate From High School	Graduated From High School 1964	Entered College 1964
	Q	R	S	T
UNITED STATES	1,000	258	742	378
Alabama	1,000	393	607	194
Alaska	1,000	360	640	300
Arizona	1,000	330	670	408
Arkansas	1,000	300	700	329
California	1,000	106	894	724
Colorado	1,000	250	750	412
Connecticut	1,000	178	822	476
Delaware	1,000	218	782	352
District of Columbia	1,000	368	632	379
Florida	1,000	291	709	439
Georgia	1,000	400	600	234
Hawaii	1,000	150	850	416
Idaho	1,000	298	702	435
Illinois	1,000	266	734	455
Indiana	1,000	327	673	296
Iowa	1,000	132	868	416
Kansas	1,000	215	785	423
Kentucky	1,000	346	654	307
Louisiana	1,000	258	742	348
Maine	1,000	305	695	215
Maryland	1,000	264	736	382
Massachusetts	1,000	178	822	435
Michigan	1,000	262	738	324

more.....

	Ninth Grade	Failed to Graduate	Graduated	Entered College
	Q	R	S	T
Minnesota	1,000	145	855	393
Mississippi	1,000	387	613	318
Missouri	1,000	309	691	338
Montana	1,000	230	770	446
Nebraska	1,000	229	771	416
Nevada	1,000	245	755	528
New Hampshire	1,000	143	857	325
New Jersey	1,000	206	794	420
New Mexico	1,000	398	602	294
New York	1,000	185	815	383
North Carolina	1,000	410	590	212
North Dakota	1,000	191	809	404
Ohio	1,000	243	757	333
Oklahoma	1,000	301	699	377
Oregon	1,000	222	778	420
Pennsylvania	1,000	185	815	309
Rhode Island	1,000	117	883	397
South Carolina	1,000	377	623	211
South Dakota	1,000	185	815	415
Tennessee	1,000	342	658	276
Texas	1,000	376	624	355
Utah	1,000	284	716	400
Vermont	1,000	250	750	255
Virginia	1,000	359	641	301
Washington	1,000	215	785	447
West Virginia	1,000	327	673	249
Wisconsin	1,000	216	784	337
Wyoming	1,000	334	666	419

HIGHER EDUCATION

	U Per Capita Public Operating Expenditures for Higher Education (1964-65)	V Residents of State Entering College (1963) as % of High School Graduates (1963)	W % of Students Who Leave Home State for Under-graduate College (1963)
UNITED STATES	$14.12	51%	---
Alabama	8.99	32%	18.0%
Alaska	24.31	47%	51.8%
Arizona	19.05	61%	11.0%
Arkansas	10.62	47%	14.8%
California	19.83	81%	5.4%
Colorado	18.61	55%	18.2%
Connecticut	7.16	58%	38.8%
Delaware	13.47	45%	49.7%
District of Columbia	---	60%	40.1%
Florida	13.10	62%	18.5%
Georgia	9.95	39%	20.2%
Hawaii	19.63	49%	34.0%
Idaho	17.04	62%	31.1%
Illinois	14.19	62%	22.2%
Indiana	16.64	44%	16.0%
Iowa	17.54	48%	24.0%
Kansas	20.37	54%	15.2%
Kentucky	13.74	47%	16.1%
Louisiana	18.94	47%	8.1%
Maine	10.00	31%	31.1%
Maryland	11.60	52%	27.7%
Massachusetts	3.99	53%	22.2%
Michigan	17.10	44%	9.8%

more.....

HIGHER EDUCATION

	U Per Capita Public Operating Expenditures for Higher Education (1964-65)	V Residents of State Entering College (1963) as % of High School Graduates (1963)	W % of Students Who Leave Home State for Under-graduate College (1963)
UNITED STATES	$14.12	51%	---
Alabama	8.99	32%	18.0%
Alaska	24.31	47%	51.8%
Arizona	19.05	61%	11.0%
Arkansas	10.62	47%	14.8%
California	19.83	81%	5.4%
Colorado	18.61	55%	18.2%
Connecticut	7.16	58%	38.8%
Delaware	13.47	45%	49.7%
District of Columbia	---	60%	40.1%
Florida	13.10	62%	18.5%
Georgia	9.95	39%	20.2%
Hawaii	19.63	49%	34.0%
Idaho	17.04	62%	31.1%
Illinois	14.19	62%	22.2%
Indiana	16.64	44%	16.0%
Iowa	17.54	48%	24.0%
Kansas	20.37	54%	15.2%
Kentucky	13.74	47%	16.1%
Louisiana	18.94	47%	8.1%
Maine	10.00	31%	31.1%
Maryland	11.60	52%	27.7%
Massachusetts	3.99	53%	22.2%
Michigan	17.10	44%	9.8%

more.....

	U Per Capita Expenditures	V College Entrants as % of High School Graduates	W Students Leaving State for College
Minnesota	$15.66	46%	14.5%
Mississippi	11.32	52%	9.6%
Missouri	10.71	49%	20.0%
Montana	18.38	58%	19.3%
Nebraska	12.88	54%	15.9%
Nevada	16.30	70%	28.5%
New Hampshire	7.89	38%	38.9%
New Jersey	6.91	53%	42.5%
New Mexico	18.88	49%	21.9%
New York	12.79	47%	22.1%
North Carolina	10.80	36%	11.6%
North Dakota	19.10	50%	19.3%
Ohio	6.71	44%	15.7%
Oklahoma	13.78	54%	9.5%
Oregon	22.77	54%	16.5%
Pennsylvania	6.29	38%	22.4%
Rhode Island	10.11	45%	31.2%
South Carolina	7.75	34%	21.8%
South Dakota	17.43	51%	18.7%
Tennessee	8.46	42%	16.8%
Texas	11.22	57%	6.3%
Utah	9.13	56%	5.1%
Vermont	13.35	34%	36.3%
Virginia	9.36	47%	32.5%
Washington	24.48	57%	11.7%
West Virginia	13.23	37%	14.6%
Wisconsin	14.73	43%	14.5%
Wyoming	19.84	63%	30.1%

AUTHORIZED FEDERAL FUNDS FOR 1966

	X Elementary and Secondary Education Act Title I	Y Vocational Education Act of 1963	Z Higher Education Act of 1965
UNITED STATES	$1,151,390,000	$156,518,000	$495,314,000
Alabama	34,981,000	3,752,000	8,950,000
Alaska	1,710,000	187,000	455,000
Arizona	10,464,000	1,296,000	4,866,000
Arkansas	22,826,000	1,982,000	5,576,000
California	78,665,000	10,811,000	48,037,000
Colorado	9,684,000	1,496,000	5,854,000
Connecticut	7,286,000	1,652,000	6,082,000
Delaware	1,995,000	298,000	1,136,000
District of Columbia	5,436,000	544,000	3,050,000
Florida	27,754,000	4,603,000	12,660,000
Georgia	37,716,000	4,576,000	10,489,000
Hawaii	2,399,000	630,000	1,848,000
Idaho	2,471,000	731,000	2,105,000
Illinois	61,707,000	6,840,000	24,029,000
Indiana	18,562,000	4,165,000	12,811,000
Iowa	18,839,000	2,538,000	8,488,000
Kansas	10,588,000	2,005,000	6,967,000
Kentucky	30,433,000	3,442,000	8,495,000
Louisiana	38,728,000	3,592,000	10,254,000
Maine	4,054,000	1,014,000	2,447,000
Maryland	15,402,000	2,482,000	7,698,000
Massachusetts	16,705,000	3,759,000	15,051,000
Michigan	35,075,000	6,463,000	21,203,000
Minnesota	24,754,000	3,110,000	10,875,000

more.....

	X	Y	Z
	Elementary and Secondary Education Act	Vocational Education Act of 1963	Higher Education Act of 1965
Mississippi	31,203,000	2,547,000	7,116,000
Missouri	30,157,000	3,695,000	11,781,000
Montana	3,668,000	646,000	2,137,000
Nebraska	6,989,000	1,255,000	4,364,000
Nevada	959,000	196,000	749,000
New Hampshire	1,467,000	555,000	1,863,000
New Jersey	24,806,000	3,908,000	11,949,000
New Mexico	9,888,000	1,058,000	2,888,000
New York	110,736,000	10,920,000	39,881,000
North Carolina	53,354,000	5,514,000	13,848,000
North Dakota	5,272,000	697,000	2,333,000
Ohio	39,578,000	7,790,000	24,455,000
Oklahoma	17,550,000	2,495,000	7,722,000
Oregon	8,248,000	1,496,000	5,703,000
Pennsylvania	56,501,000	9,410,000	27,539,000
Rhode Island	4,080,000	769,000	2,407,000
South Carolina	27,754,000	2,990,000	6,796,000
South Dakota	6,962,000	712,000	2,367,000
Tennessee	32,528,000	4,065,000	10,740,000
Texas	78,300,000	9,844,000	27,054,000
Utah	2,849,000	970,000	4,203,000
Vermont	1,749,000	411,000	1,438,000
Virginia	30,925,000	4,464,000	9,855,000
Washington	10,801,000	2,370,000	8,800,000
West Virginia	17,161,000	2,071,000	5,288,000
Wisconsin	18,211,000	3,417,000	11,581,000
Wyoming	1,478,000	282,000	1,030,000

INEQUALITY OF EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY PERSISTS

Although significant gains have been made in education over the past fifteen years, inequality of educational opportunity nevertheless persists. The above chart plots educational expenditures over a fifteen year period in the five states which were highest in their per pupil current expenditure in 1964-65 and the five states which were lowest in per pupil expenditure. As can be seen from the graph, the difference in the average expenditure of the five lowest and five highest states in 1949-50 was $213; by 1964-65 school year the difference had actually widened to $337. Per pupil expenditures in the five lowest states were $127 below the national average in 1949-50. By 1964-65 they were $194 below the national average. Dollar for dollar, inequality of educational opportunity has widened rather than narrowed over the last fifteen years.

(Note: All of these figures have been adjusted to constant dollars of the 1964-65 school year.)

NOTES AND SOURCES

Column

A — U. S. Department of Commerce, Survey of Current Business, April, 1965.

B — U. S. Office of Education, Digest of Educational Statistics, 1965.

C — U. S. Office of Education, Digest of Educational Statistics, 1965.

D — Computed by AFL-CIO Education Department from data of U. S. Office of Education.

E — U. S. Office of Education, Fall, 1964 Statistics of Public Schools.

F — U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, U. S. Census of Population, 1960.

G — U. S. Office of Education, National Inventory of School Facilities and Personnel, 1964.

H — Computed by AFL-CIO Education Department from data of U. S. Office of Education.

Note: The difference between the percent of ninth graders grading four years later and 100% will give an approximate indication of the percentage of school dropouts. In the United States as a whole, for example, 73.1% of the ninth graders of 1960-61 graduated in 1964. This means that approximately 26.9% of the ninth graders dropped out of school before graduating. However, certain factors other than dropping out are included. Among them are death and in some instances migration from the state.

I-J-K-L — U. S. Office of Education, Condition of Public School Plants, 1964-65, 1965.

M-N-O — U. S. Office of Education, Statistics of State School Systems, 1961-62.

Note: These are the most recent dependable figures. However, more recent estimates indicate that the figures have changed little through the school year 1964-65

P — U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, U. S. Census of Population, 1960.

Q-R-S-T — Computed by AFL-CIO Education Department from data of U. S. Office of Education.

Note: Column S differs slightly from Column H because Column H includes only students enrolled in public schools whereas Column S includes students enrolled in both public and non-public schools.

Column
U	Computed by Office of Institutional Research from data of U. S. Office of Education.
V	Computed by Office of Institutional Research from data of U. S. Office of Education.
W	Computed by Office of Institutional Research from data of U. S. Office of Education.
Y-X-Z	U. S. Office of Education.
Page 18	Computed by AFL-CIO Education Department from data of U. S. Office of Education.

* * *

General Note: In using all charts which give dollar figures, it should be remembered that because of the high cost of living in the state of Alaska, a truer comparison will be obtained if dollar figures for Alaska are reduced by approximately 25%.

Ed Dept

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

January 4, 1967

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsythe Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

Fred Corey came through town about a week ago with his wife. We spent an hour talking about the institute. He was on his way to New Jersey for a vacation.

I notice that both of us did a mailing to the NILE delegates. In my mailing, I included the November issue of The American Federationist. I had a letter from Jimmy Stewart about it. He asked for some extra copies to distribute to trade unionists in the Louisville area. Fred Corey also said he was going to ask for some extra copies. He sent your report out to about 20 people including Ron Donovan of Cornell. I got a letter from him yesterday in which he said some nice things about the report.

I spent a day at the University of Maine helping to start the new labor program there.

Thanks for the contribution to Larry's present. We gave him a round-trip ticket to California to visit his son in Berkeley and a round-trip ticket to Michigan to visit his son in Ann Arbor.

My son has a new album out called "Bittersweet." It is put out by Monument Records. The number is Monument 8077 or if you prefer stereo, the number is 18077. I am appointing you and Al Kehrer to handle the Atlanta distribution.

Sincerely and fraternally,

George T. Guernsey jo

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG:jms
opeiu#2 afl-cio

cc: Al Kehrer
Dictated but not read

January 13, 1967

Mr. George T. Guernsey,
Assistant Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear Mr. Guernsey:

Enclosed are four copies of "What Happened in the South, 1966". Because of the large demand for this report there are very few copies left.

If you wish to have the 100 copies there will be a small cost of $.15 per copy to cover the cost of printing more copies.

I am sorry that the office has such a small supply of these reports left and will be unable to fill your request. Do let us know if you want the other copies.

Sincerely,

Jane S. DeLung, Secretary
Labor Program

/jd

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

January 10, 1967

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsythe Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Emory:

I meant to ask you in my letter the other day for 100 copies of the December 14 report entitled "What Happened in the South, 1966." If you cannot spare this many, could you spare 25?

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG:jms
opeiu#2 afl-cio

Dear
H.

Jane: Please indicate in your response if I am out of town.
Thks
Emory

January 24, 1967

Mr. George Guernsey
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

As you know I recently sent a mailing of the November Federationist. One of the responses requested the department's pamphlet on "Films on Civil Rights". Would you send a copy to

Miss Anne Hamilton
Department of Education Library
State Office Building
Frankfort, Kentucky

Thanks.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

February 27, 1967

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th St., N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George,

Under separate cover I am sending you a packet of materials put together by our Urban Planning Project under the direction of Moreland Smith. I thought you would like to see them as a group so that you could determine which of them had any special relevance to your interest.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

March 6, 1967

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsythe Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for the material on the Urban Planning Project. As you know, I am still trying to develop three Staff Training Programs for the West, the Mid-West and the East on problems of metropolitan areas. We have had three meetings thus far. Our next step is to talk to the Ford Foundation. Don Slaiman and I hope to do this within the next two weeks.

As soon as I have the dates for the southern schools, I will send you a copy. the TRI-State is May 21-26.

I am trying to do something for a group of staff people under the sponsorship of the Tri-State School. If we are able to pull this off, it will be held April 6-9 in Greensboro, North Carolina. It will be co-sponsored by the AFL-CIO Organizing Department.

I am also trying to put together a 1967 Southern Staff Training Program. I had a meeting with Ralph Campbell when he was in town. There is some money available from NILE if we can pry it loose.

My son's rock and roll album "Bittersweet" by the Hangmen, Monument Records, #8077, has sold about 10,000 copies in the Washington area. He is not getting rich, but he is making somewhat of a living. He is now playing in Clearwater, Florida with the band for a week; they will then be coming back to Washington for two weeks.

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

Hello to Al! Drop me a line.

GTG:jms
opeiu#2 afl-cio

March 29, 1967

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Asst. Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 16th St., N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Thanks for your informative letter of March 6th. You still sound busy! I am glad that you got the Urban Planning Materials. I trust that my "Minimum Wage Campaign Kit" has reached you by now.

The Metropolitan areas proposal sounds good. Did N.I.L.E. ever receive an answer from Field on their proposal?

I would be pleased to hear the details of the Tri-State School. Let me know if I could help out.

I hope you are able to get something worked out in Greensboro for Southern staff. April 6-9 is awfully close; again, let me know if there is anything I can do either in terms of materials or instruction. My schedule is a bit tight about then.

Another Southern Staff Training Program!? You never get enough. Still an excellent idea. Good Luck!

I still haven't heard "Bittersweet". We will stry to stimulate the Atlanta market.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
WILLIAM POLLOCK

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

April 4, 1967

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

We have changed the date of the Southern Staff Tri-State Program to May 11-14. I will write you later.

Sincerely,

George Guernsey jr

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG:jms
opeiu#2 afl-cio
dictated but not read

April 13, 1967

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I do not know that you plan to make any use of me for the Southern Staff Tri-State Program, but I will be unavailable for the dates May 11-14. I am sorry to miss out on it and trust you will have a very successful program.

Will the staff come out on Mother's Day?

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

May 22, 1967

Mr. Walt Davis, Director
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th St., N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Walt:

I plan to be in Washington on May 31, and perhaps for June 1 as well. I would like very much for a chance to talk with you. I will call your office after I get in town to see if we can work out a convenient time.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

(dictated but not read)

June 19, 1967

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 - Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Thanks for your letter of June 6. It was good to see you in Washington and, as you now know, I thought the Tri-State School went quite well.

Any follow-up that you do on Tri-State over the years would be of real interest.

I will not be available for the School in Mobile August 13 - 18. I am sorry for this because I would like very much to participate in that School.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/csb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

June 6, 1967

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W., Room 201
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for the hard work which you did at the Tri-State School. Stuart and others have told me that it was an extremely successful school.

I am going to try to do some kind of a follow-up on the Tri-State School showing how many delegates have attended it in the last nine years and work out a questionnaire to send to those who have attended in the last two or three years.

I understand that the Advanced School went extremely well this year.

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG:jms
opeiu#2 afl-cio

Are you available for Alabama Aug 13-18, Mobile?

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

February 14, 1969

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks for the summary which you sent me on the Galveston meeting.

Did you ever get any "readings" on the book GROWING UP IN MISSISSIPPI?

Also, could you find out for me what your people think of the new novel BLACK JACOB by William Mahoney. It was just published by Macmillan and sells for $5.95. Mahoney is apparently the managing editor of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference newspaper.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

Asking for a service!
Did you buy a print of "Hunger in America"?

February 26, 1969

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

Nothing new on "Growing Up in Mississippi."

No one here has read "Black Jacob" yet. John Lewis knows William Mahoney and thinks he is a good fellow. However, he is probably no longer at SCLC.

Our print of "Hunger in America" has just arrived. If the Education Department already has a discussion guide for it, would you please send me a copy.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

March 11, 1969

Mr. George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

Our print of "Hunger in America" has arrived. We are giving it to the Atlanta Regional Office of the Anti-Defamation League, 41 Exchange Place, S. E., Atlanta, Georgia, to handle distribution.

You can refer requests for the film either directly through me or to the ADL. If we set a lower rental fee than $7.50 we could still see that your referrals are billed at the $7.50 rate.

Please give my regards to Jackie Kienzle and that I hope she comes out of her stint in the hospital feeling O.K. It would be helpful to have her discussion guide even if we prepare one of our own. I hope that a "fact sheet" can be put together which will update some specifics in the film.

Our copy of "Black Jacob" has just arrived and I have asked some people to read it and give me a response.

I hope you will get to read "Still Hunger in America" by Robert Coles with photographs by Al Clayton and introduction by Edward M. Kennedy. It is published by The New American Library, Inc. in association with The World Publishing Company, 2231 West 110th Street, Cleveland, Ohio 44102. This book was a direct outgrowth of our own programs and we hold the contract with the publisher.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

March 6, 1969

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Let me know about the book BLACK JACOB. I am trying to get a copy.

How will your print of "Hunger In America" be distributed? We are charging a rental of $7.50 per showing. I would like to refer some of our showings in your region to you and you could bill them the $7.50. Would this be alright?

On the discussion guide, Jackie Kienzle who does our guides is in the hospital for three weeks. I hope we can get it done the first week when she returns.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

Dictated but not read

March 24, 1969

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I came through Washington on Sunday and Wednesday night and did not have your letter until I returned to Atlanta.

I trust we can see each other or talk by phone soon.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

March 14, 1969

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I see that you are scheduled to be at the Human Resources Conference next week. If you are in Washington at all on Tuesday, would you give me a call.

There is no reason for you to set a rental of $7.50 on "Hunger In America" just because we do. It would help though if the rentals were the same and we could just simply refer some of our southern request to you.

I will check on the book "Still Hungry In America".

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

May 21, 1969

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

These are just off the press. Your regular copies will arrive later but I thought you might want to see them as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enclosures - 2

June 6, 1969

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I thought you might find the enclosed pamphlet, "The Will To Survive," of special interest. In a sense it is the other side of the story I sent you recently, "John Willie Reed," in that this is the tale of those rural folks who did not come to the city but stayed on the farm.

It is being sent to the press today with a release date of June 16.

Inadvertently the printer left off the union bug on these advance run copies. However, it will appear on the remainder.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enclosure

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

(202) 387-7050
Coordinate
Training & Urban Ed Specialists
Visit local

September 24, 1969

Fred B.
Human Rels
Poverty
Specialist
Employment Services
FDR Center
SRC
Letter on Central Body support Miami running for Congress.

Dear Gregory Vice —

As you know, the AFL-CIO has developed four OEO labor training projects. The most recent one to be funded by the national OEO is the University of Minnesota program which will work in the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Indiana.

Recently, Julius Rothman and I attended a meeting in Milwaukee with Jack Flagler and Emil Starr of the University of Minnesota program and the presidents of the three state bodies. The training program will run for one year and will train approximately 100 local union leaders to work more effectively on the poverty program.

The person whom we thought would become ~~president~~ director of the project, at the last minute, has had to withdraw. The salary for this position is $18,500 with the normal travel expenses and health coverage but no pension. Although this program is for one year, Jack Flagler thinks he can guarantee a second year of employment at the university. If you know anyone who would be interested in this position, would you have him get in touch with Jack Flagler, Head, Labor Education Program, Industrial Relations Center, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minnesota, 55455, or myself. He should be a fairly experienced person who knows something about workers' education and understands the operation of our local central body. We hope to fill this within the next two or three weeks.

Fraternally yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

opeiu 2 afl-cio

Al Bettrich
Jim Wolf

* * *

LABOR COLLEGE starts enrolling union staffers for its first year of classes.

The new AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center will open its doors to students Dec. 1. Distribution of enrollment material at the convention gives unionists their first chance to sign up for one of the 17 three-week courses offered during the 1969-70 school year. Fred K. Hoehler Jr., the former Michigan State industrial relations professor who heads the center, terms the initial response "excellent."

The staple of the Washington-based center's curriculum is a broad course in "staff development." Other courses cover a wide variety of social and economic subjects: Pollution, health-care planning, ways to increase participation of minorities in union leadership. "We'll get into controversial subjects," vows Hoehler, "because that's the job of an educator."

One of the center's future goals: To train union leaders for stints of government service.

* * *

THE CHECKOFF: Atlantic City suffers from comparison with Miami Beach, site of the AFL-CIO's 1967 convention, in the view of many delegates. They grumble about aging hotels and the few diversions available beyond a quiet boardwalk stroll. . . . Adding to the gold drain: Meany presents two British trade unionists attending as guests with "solid gold" convention badges. . . . The Atlantic City Bartenders Union distributes a "please-don't-patronize" list of restaurants that includes some of the best ones in town.

10-7-69
Wall St Jnl

December 9, 1969

Mr. Walter Davis, Director
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Walt:

It was very good to see you in Washington on my recent trip. I want to thank you for your time and interest regarding the tax bill.

I look forward to continued opportunities to cooperate with you and the department in southern progress and any other programs in which our services may be of use.

Best personal wishes,

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

December 9, 1969

Mr. George T. Guernsey
Assistant Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I can send you 40 copies of our tax study. However, is there any way that you could pay us a rock-bottom, subsidized charge of 25¢ each? Incidentally, the 25¢ figure will be the one that the Labor Program will offer to any state AFL-CIO. I have not heard further from Giles regarding his interest in the study. However, he has called me for advice and assistance on another matter. A good sign, I think.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
HERMAN D. KENIN
HUNTER P. WHARTON
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

November 25, 1969

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Programs
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks for coming to the Advanced Southern Labor School. All in all, I thought it went well.

Is there any chance you can give me forty or fifty copies of your tax job, free-of-charge? I could use them in some of my contacts with the labor movement in the south.

Let me know whether Giles goes through with the idea of mailing it to the Georgia State Legislature. Also, the price per copy you would have to charge him.

You will be glad to know we had 32 people at our closing luncheon. This did, however, include five wives.

Sincerely,

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

DELEGATES TO YOUNG TRADE UNIONISTS INSTITUTE

Raleigh, North Carolina
May 3 - May 8, 1970

Roy L. Allen
UPP Local 297
3217 2nd Avenue
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

Leonard Barrier
Local Union 1109
225 Bingham St., Apt. A
Greensboro, North Carolina 27402

Roger W. Bradley
OCAW Local 3-495
RFD #3
Blacksburg, Virginia

Claire Brown
RWDSU, Hospital Division
18 Filix Street
Charleston, S. C. 29403

~~Joseph Caleb~~
~~Laborers Local 476~~
~~1688 Meridian Ave.~~
~~Miami Beach, Florida 33130~~

Anita C. Cannon
ILGWU Local 581
18 Smythe Street
Spartanburg, S. C. 29301

David M. Clark
UPP Local 870
Rt. 2, Kester Mill Road
Winston-Salem, N. C. 27103

Lonnie Crow
ILGWU Local 581
Route 2
Forest City, North Carolina

Earl S. Dapp II
Carpenters' Local 1308
4982 Cambridge St.
Lake Worth, Florida 33460

Tommy Gill
Tobacco Workers
Greensboro, North Carolina

Betty White
CWA - N. Carolina

Alfred Hazel
Laborers' Local 58
202 Fifth Street
Augusta, Georgia 30902

Edward M. Herrington
UPP Local 407
22 Goebel Ave.
Savannah, Georgia 31404

Bennie A. Holliman
URW Local 748-Columbus, Miss.
Route 1
Kennesly, Alabama

Frank A. Horton, Jr.
UPP Local 639
Route 1
Knightdale, N. C. 27545

Edward P. Hubbard, Jr.
Communications Workers Local 3060
454 Monmouth Street
Winston-Salem, N. C. 27107

Roy Jones
IBEW Local 776
403 Berckman Rd.
N. Charleston, S. C. 29406

Jimmy McCracken
United Rubber Workers
Clyde, North Carolina

William M. McMillan
Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers
Route 2, Box 403-B
W. Columbia, South Carolina

Sidney Mitchell
CWA Local 13
Raleigh, North Carolina

Robert Parhan
Decatur Labor Council
221 12th Ave., S.W.
Decatur, Alabama 35601

Wm. Clough
CWA - South Carolina

Eugene Rhodes
ACWA Local 503
Charleston Heights, S. C.

Johnny Spears
United Bounding Company
Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers' Union
Paw Creek, North Carolina

E. T. Sutton, Jr.
Operating Engineers Local 500
Route 3, Box 429
Kinston, North Carolina

T. J. Warren
Tobacco Workers
Greensboro, North Carolina

STAFF & RESOURCE

James HARRIS
Education Department
American Federation of State,
County & Municipal Employees
1155 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20005

Al Kehrer
AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights
40 Marietta Street, N.W.
Suite 1422
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

James Gary
Education & Research Department
Intl. Union of Operating Engineers
1125 17th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

ALLEN MORRISON
UPP
ALBANY, N.C.

George T. Guernsey
AFL-CIO Education Department
815 16th Street, N.W., Room 510
Washington, D. C. 20006

Richard Prosten
AFL-CIO Industrial Union Department
815 16th Street, N.W., Room 301
Washington, D. C. 20006

William Shipes
National Council of Churches
Migrant Project
723 West Johnson Street
Raleigh, North Carolina 27603

Emory Via
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

SOUTHEAST SCHOOL FOR YOUNG TRADE UNIONIST

Sponsored by:
The Southern Labor School and
The AFL-CIO Department of Education

Sir Walter Hotel
Raleigh, North Carolina

May 3 - 8, 1970

PROGRAM

Time	Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
7:45-9:00 a.m.		BREAKFAST ----------
9:00-12:00		Film Showing: "Do Not, Fold, Staple, Spindle or Mutilate"	Labor History	The Changing South and New Welfare Problems - Emory Via & 1:30-3:00	Organizing Problems of The South - Al Kehrer	9:00-11:00 Structure of the AFL-CIO 11:00-12:00 What Have We Learned
12:00 noon		LUNCH ----------				GRADUATION Speaker: Barney Weeks
4:00 p.m.	REGISTRATION
1:30-4:30 p.m.		Young Workers Look at Today's Issues	Young Workers Look at Today's Issues	Labor and the '70 Elections - Al Kehrer	Collective Bargaining and Inflation - Richard Prosten
6:00 p.m.	DINNER ----------
7:00-8:30 p.m.	ORIENTATION	Fighting Poverty - James Harris and William Shipes	Film Showing: "Hunger In America"	Program to be announced	Film Showing: "The Inheritance"

opeiu 2 afl-cio

SOUTHWESTERN SCHOOL FOR YOUNG TRADE UNIONISTS

University of Oklahoma
Norman, Oklahoma

June 14 - 19, 1970

Sponsored by
Southern Labor School
and
AFL-CIO Education Department

DELEGATES

Anthony Bacile
Meat Cutters Local 327
1622 Toldeano
New Orleans, Louisiana 70115

Douglas M. Bonds
Steelworkers Local 6357
217 Davis
Conway, Arkansas 72032

Mary Bryant
Machinists Local 921
119 Fairfax
N. Little Rock, Arkansas 72117

Charles Chandler
Transport Workers Local 514
11929 E. Pine Street
Tulsa, Oklahoma 74116

Leanne Craig
Restaurant Emplys. Local 246
406 Armstrong
Moore, Oklahoma 73060

Bob Ecton
IBEW Local 1141
3056 S. W. 67
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73159

Charles Fitch
Plumbers Local 176
1502 E. 2nd Street
Tulsa, Oklahoma 74120

Troy Henderson
Steelworkers Local 6357
Route 1
Conway, Arkansas 72033

Phillip Hopper
Transport Workers Local 514
11929 E. Pine Street
Tulsa, Oklahoma 74116

Freddy Hughes
Steelworkers Local 6794
Route 3, Box 438
Malvern, Arkansas 72104

Herman LaZare
Laborers, Local 207
319 Kirkman
Lake Charles, Louisiana

Etroy Lyons
IWA Local 5-298
2913 Cross Street
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

Ronald C. McKee
Laborers Local 648
1347 Hortense
Dallas, Texas 75216

Pat McKinney
USA, S559
3118 Ware Street
Little Rock, Arkansas 72204

Kenneth J. Miller
Operating Engineers Local 670
303 Pine Street
Ardmore, Oklahoma

Eddie Mae Moore
Machinists Local 921
5324-B Fourche Dam Pike
Little Rock, Arkansas 72206

Waylon G. Outlaw
UPP, Local 369
902 Fairview Road
Crossett, Arkansas 71635

Erbey Rendon
Amalg. Meat Cutters Local 171
502 Cupples Road
San Antonio, Texas 78437

William E. Tucker
Operating Engineers Local 381
1603 W. Block
Eldorado, Arkansas 71730

Fred Wilmeth
IBEW Local 2021
1425 N. Rockwell
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

STAFF

George T. Guernsey
Education Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th St. N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Allen Morrison
Education Director
United Papermakers & Paperworkers
N. Pearl St. at Wolfert Avenue
Albany, New York 12201

J. Bill Becker, President
Arkansas State AFL-CIO
1408 Rebsamen Park Road
Little Rock, Arkansas 72202

Henry L. Likes, President
Oklahoma State AFL-CIO
111 Northeast 26th
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma 73105

Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Julius Gordon, Staff Representative
University of Houston
OEO Labor Training Program
College of Business Administration
University of Houston
Houston, Texas 77004

Clint Hampton, Director
OEO Migrant Project ~~Ark~~ ANM College
Pine Bluff, Arkansas

Paul Brinker, Professor Department of Economics
University of Oklahoma
Norman, Oklahoma

Thurmond White, Vice President
University of Oklahoma
Norman, Oklahoma

SOUTHWESTERN SCHOOL FOR YOUNG TRADE UNIONISTS

Sponsored by:
Southern Labor School
and the AFL-CIO
Department of Education

University of Oklahoma
Norman, Oklahoma

June 14 - June 19, 1970

Completed Program 1970

#15

FINAL PROGRAM

p 2

SUNDAY, June 14

4:00 P.M.	REGISTRATION
6:00 P.M.	DINNER
7:00 P.M.	ORIENTATION George T. Guernsey, AFL-CIO Department of Education

MONDAY, June 15

7:45-8:45 A.M.	BREAKFAST
8:45-11:45 A.M.	Film: "Do Not Fold, Staple, Spindle or Mutilate" Allen Morrison, United Papermakers & Paperworkers
12:00 Noon	LUNCH
1:45-4:30 P.M.	YOUNG WORKERS LOOK AT THE ISSUES --- FILM George T. Guernsey, AFL-CIO Department of Education
6:00 P.M.	DINNER
7:00 P.M.	FILM: "Hunger In America" Julius Gordon, University of Houston OEO Project Paul Brinker, University of Oklahoma

TUESDAY, June 16

7:45-8:45 A.M.	BREAKFAST
8:45-11:45 A.M.	NEW TRENDS IN UNIONS --- The Gus Tyler Tape Paul Brinker, University of Oklahoma Allen Morrison, United Papermakers & Paperworkers
12:00 Noon	LUNCH
1:45-4:30 P.M.	YOUNG WORKERS LOOK AT THE ISSUES -- "What Do You Think?" George T. Guernsey, AFL-CIO Department of Education
6:00 P.M.	DINNER
7:00 P.M.	THE WORK OF THE STATE AND LOCAL CENTRAL BODIES J. Bill Becker, Arkansas State AFL-CIO Henry L. Likes, Oklahoma State AFL-CIO George T. Guernsey, AFL-CIO Department of Education

WEDNESDAY, June 17

7:45-8:45 A.M.	BREAKFAST
8:45-11:45 A.M.	THE WAR ON POVERTY OEO Migrant Project Clint Hampton, OEO Migrant Project, Pine Bluff, Arkansas Labor Training Program Julius Gordon, University of Houston Film: "The Inheritance"
12:00 Noon	LUNCH
1:45-4:30 P.M.	THE CHANGING SOUTH --- New Welfare Programs Emory Via, Southern Regional Council
6:00 P.M.	DINNER
7:00 P.M.	NEW COLLECTIVE BARGAINING GOALS FOR YOUNG MEMBERS Paul Brinker, University of Oklahoma Henry Likes, Oklahoma State AFL-CIO J. Bill Becker, Arkansas State AFL-CIO

THURSDAY, June 18

7:45-8:45 A.M.	BREAKFAST
8:45-11:45 A.M.	LABOR FACES THE 1970 ELECTIONS J. Bill Becker, Arkansas State AFL-CIO
12:00 Noon	LUNCH
1:45-4:45 P.M.	REPORTS FROM DELEGATES LABOR HISTORY George T. Guernsey, AFL-CIO Department of Education
6:00 P.M.	DINNER

FRIDAY, June 19

7:45-8:45 A.M.	BREAKFAST
8:45-11:45 A.M.	REPORTS FROM DELEGATES LABOR HISTORY George T. Guernsey, AFL-CIO Department of Education
12:00 Noon	GRADUATION Speaker: Thurmond White, Vice President University of Oklahoma

AFL-CIO- Dept of Ed

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
LANE KIRKLAND, SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
HERMAN D. KENIN
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

June 22, 1970

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thank you very much for making that hurried trip to Norman, Oklahoma. Next time, I hope you will come for at least two days.

I am enclosing a corrected copy of the mailing list.

Remember, you promised to send the delegates a copy of "The South Today" with a special article on welfare. Send me a copy of your covering letter.

I am off for a short vacationbut will check with you on the Tri-State school, August 2-7, and the Florida School, August 9-14, when I return. I am sorry you can't come to the school at Huntsville, Alabama.

Fraternally and Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

Enclosure

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
522-8764

PAUL ANTHONY
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

June 26, 1970

TO: Those who attended the Southwestern School for Young Workers.

FROM: Emory F. Via, Director, Labor Program, Southern Regional Council.

Enclosed is a copy of South Today which has two articles related to welfare on pages 4 and 5. You may recall that at the end of my session with you, I promised to send this along. I hope that you will take time to read these brief articles.

I am sorry that my stay at the School was so limited, but altogether you looked like an outstanding group. I wish you well and for your continued constructive role in the union movement.

If I can ever by of assistance to you or your union please let me know.

MEMO FROM GEORGE T. GUERNSEY

File 1

September 23, 1970

Emory Via:

I would like your ideas returned to me no later than October 3.

George.

MERKLE PRESS INC.
832-6420

Energy

September 23, 1970

AFL-CIO Education

NOTES on MEETING WITH BARNEY WEEKS, SEPTEMBER 16,
Washington, D. C.

Ideas for the program for the Advanced Southern Labor School:

1. Get Richard Scanlan or Angus Campbell to speak on an indept analysis of the southern voter.

2. Report on the four young worker schools sponsored by the Southern Labor School in 1968 and 1970.

3. Show and discuss the North Carolina light show which was a report on state AFL-CIO activities used at the state convention.

4. Report on the housing projects that the Alabama AFL-CIO is sponsoring.

5. Plan a panel of activities at local community level including Billy Henderson, South Carolina, who worked on school desegregation in Hampton County, S. C.

6. Get Nat Goldfinger (no one else) for an analysis of a recession.

7. Jim Pierce on the work of the Share Croppers Fund and the migrant programs.

8. A program on organizing using Scott Hoyman, TWUA Southern Director; Harold McIver, IUD Coordinator in Charlotte, North Carolina; and James Craven, Director of the IWA Victory in Oklahoma and Arkansas.

9. A state-by-state report on the 1970 elections, including the COPE southern staff.

10. Consider Saul Miller to talk about AFL-CIO publications and how to use them.

11. Two special programs for international union representatives where the state body officers and the international representatives would meet separately.

These are suggested ideas for programs. The resources are incomplete. Please give me any additional ideas that you have.

George

George T. Guernsey

opeiu 2 afl-cio

Sunday by Oct 5 !!
thanks!

September 25, 1970

Mr. George Guernsey
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815-16 Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear George:

Here are some suggestions for you to consider for the Advanced Labor School.

1. Take a new look at "Guaranteed Income in Practice" by having an interim report from the director of the pilot project in North Carolina. (This is a rural counterpart to the New Jersey experiment.) Details on who to ask can be had from Harold Watts, Director of the Institute for Reseach on Poverty, University of Wisconsin, or from Ray Munts, the Assistant Director.

2. What can unions do directly or indirectly to educate public management regarding collective bargaining? Are there ways to stimulate collegs and universities, personnel associations, civic groups, city councils, etc? There is a special need for this in the South and I do not feel that unions should rely soley on organizing and collective bargaining techniques.

3. The delivery of health services is, of course, coming in for a new round of attention. Any topic from National Health Insurance, the continuing problems of the poor and lower-middle class in getting health service, to reorganizing and reallocation of health resources. (For example, why transplants and k kidney machines or probably even cancer research as against providing substantial fundamental health care for large numbers of people.)

4. The relation between ecological and environmental interest and the overwhelming need in the South for industrial and economic development. There are some excellent ecologists in the region, but I am sorry not to know someone who properly meld these two interests.

5. Some aspects of population studies, growth, and related problems. There is a man at the University of North Carolina Population Studies Center who had a good reputation. I do not know him as an adult educator. He is Moye W. Freymann.

6. Something on planning, whether it be regional, urban suburban, or rural. Again the University of North Carolina had a man of good reputation whom our Housing and Planning Director feels whould do a good job with an advanced labor school. He is David R. Godschalk, Editor of the Journal of the American Institue of Planners, Department of City and Regional Planning, New West Building, University of North Carolina.

7. New ideas in education. (As you know, better than most, some of them are quite old.) To some degree this would be an attempt to get labor leaders to go beyond the problems of desegregation to an interest in direct quality in education. It seems to me we might be talking about everything from philosophy, techniques, educational organization, to financing. I do not have a southern name to suggest but feel we could give you some help in uncovering a good person.

8. The development and problems caused by private segregated acadamies. Reese Cleghorn on our staff would be one good resources in this area.

9. Penal reform, including the need for significant job training and job placement services.

10. A general presentation on the South. You might want to look at Pat Watters book and consider him for a somewhat different session that you have had in the past on this topic. He has worked recently with NET on a film to present a look at the South for a more populat understanding.

Let me know if any of these are of special interest and if further assistance would be of use.

November 25, 1970

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815-16 Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear George:

Five copies of Gaston's book have already been sent to you with Gaston's signature affixed, and our invoice for $23.85.

Paul wished he could have spent more time with the Advanced Southern Labor School. Although it would be dangerous to let the participants know this, he found them to be good fellows indeed.

You will recall that you and I agreed to an honoraium for this undertaking. Will you please follow up on that. My program here will cover his expenses.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

December 1, 1970

DEC 7 REC'D

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I am enclosing a copy of the program for the Advanced Southern Labor School and a list of the delegates. Actually, the program Thursday and Friday took hold and gave us a good finish. I am enclosing a copy of Bob Eckhardt's speech and his study of the press. You ought to use him when you can.

I am forwarding the bill for the five books to Bill Becker. He will send you a check. I have also told Bill to send Gaston a $100 honorarium.

I spoke to Kim Pittman again and suggested he sit down and talk to you and Al.

Fraternally,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

Enclosures

Get me that CWA question-aire and the results soon.

December 16, 1970

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815-16 Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear George:

I am pleased that you were interested in our mailing our publications to CWA staff in the South. They also go to selected headquarters staff. The arrangement was worked out over a year ago through their education department. We agreed to at least a one year trial with the subscriptions paid for by the union.

Each person received the quarterly New South, the monthly South Today, and all of our other pamphlets and special reports.

We felt that they were good materials for people working in responsible positions in the South. It was our hope that they would:

1. Be useful in dealing with membership reactions to changing conditions

2. Assist the individual staff person in his own understanding of the region

3. At least keep the staff people informed about the availability of certain kinds of information.

We, SRC and the union, realized from the start that it was unlikely that any staff person would look at all the materials. However, we did think it important for them to see what is available and to be able to choose for more detailed reading those things felt to be most relevant.

It is my fault that we did not provide an adequate way to follow up on the non-respondents to the questionnaire. In any case, I am pleased with the results.

A copy of a summary of the responses in enclosed.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms
Encl.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
LANE KIRKLAND, SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

February 11, 1971

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

These are Barney's comments on the Advanced Southern Labor School. I thought you would be interested in a copy.

We are doing our mailing to the Advanced Southern Labor School delegates saying that you will send them a kit of materials. As soon as the letter goes out, I will send you a copy and you can follow-up.

Fraternally,

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

Alabama LABOR COUNCIL, AFL-CIO

328-2164 • 1018 SOUTH EIGHTEENTH STREET
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA 35205

BARNEY WEEKS, PRESIDENT
A. G. TRAMMELL, SECRETARY-TREASURER
WM. E. MINTZ, EXECUTIVE VICE-PRESIDENT

RECEIVED
EDUCATION
DEC 11 1970

December 9, 1970

Mr. George T. Guernsey, Assistant Director
Department of Education, AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I am sorry that the accumulation of business when I returned to the office after the school has delayed my writing you about the school. I don't think there's any doubt at all that each year this Advanced Institute improves and that this was the best one we've held yet.

I think there were several things about the school that were unique and that contributed to its overwhelming success. I received more comment about thesession on new programs for state bodies with strong statements that we ought to have something like this every year. Of course, I realize the almost utter impossibility of coming up with a different presentation along the same lines each year, but if there's any way at all to work it in even if we have to bring state council officers from Washington and Oregon and Maine to do so, I believe it's a must.

I know your feelings on labor law in one of these schools and I certainly share them. I know you can't make labor attorneys out of every representative of organized labor, but this always goes over so good, attracts delegates and contributes to the overall enthusiasm. At the same time, it gives these people an opportunity to ask questions concerning some phases of labor law, the NLRB, etc. that are on their minds that they haven't been able to get answers for. Jim Youngdahl is the best one I've seen for this and I'm in favor of bringing him back again and again.

Although Professor Paul Gaston started off slow, he was great, and the school would not have been complete without him. I hope we can impress upon Nat Goldfinger the importance of him making more of these schools in person. He did an outstanding job and I hope that if you're able to get him back for another one that we can get him a little deeper involved with the students if he has a little more time.

Having Congressman Bob Eckhardt for the graduation was ideal and it's worth the expense that we try to do something like this each time.

Other subjects and instructors were equally good. I have only attempted to comment on some of the new things that we tried to do that I got so much favorable reaction from.

s/ Barney Weeks

MAR 4 1971

Statement by the AFL-CIO Executive Council on

Education Policy

February 16, 1971

President Nixon in his 1972 budget message proposes to consolidate federal funds available under present aid to education programs into block grants which would be made available to state authorities to spend as they see fit. The AFL-CIO regards this proposal as a blatant effort to repeal the wide range of federal aid to education legislation which was enacted with our complete and whole-hearted support during the years of the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations.

Among the hard won laws which would be destroyed are the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the Vocational Education Act, the impact aid program, all programs for the education of the handicapped, and the school lunch program. Funds from these programs would, under the Administration plan, be consolidated under a new bill, "The Education Assistance Act," which would provide block grants to the states "in four broad areas of national interest."

Existing programs of categorical aid, that is federal grants to state and local authorities for specific purposes spelled out by Congress in the legislation, came about as a part of a creative solution to specific problems.

State and local school authorities, while responsive to general needs, have tended to slight the serious educational needs of various minority groups, whether they be racial minorities, economically disadvantaged children, non-English speaking children or physically, mentally, and emotionally handicapped children. Congress has sought to pinpoint these areas of neglect and correct them by providing specific grants to states and localities which can be used to meet these special needs and for no other purpose. Under the Administration proposal these federal funds would become diffused in the total school budget. Vocational education might very well fall back into the state of neglect which preceded the Vocational Education Act of 1963. Economically disadvantaged children could again become the victims of the superior political power of more affluent parents. Handicapped children might again find their needs ignored because their parents constitute a small minority in the community.

The Administration's block grant program solves no existing problems. It provides virtually no additional funds for education and would primarily consolidate existing funds. The total funding proposed, $3 billion for the first full year, is actually less than the present authorization simply for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

But the block grant program does open up the possibility of serious new problems. Block grants would reopen the difficult question of aid to non-public schools, an issue which would have to be separately resolved by each state. States would determine how the funds would be distributed, with no assurances that the critically pressed urban school systems would receive their fair share. The responsibility for using federal funds in non-discriminatory ways would fall upon the states, many of which have long-established records of school segregation and racial discrimination.

It is undoubtedly true that among existing categorical aid programs there is some overlapping and duplication of effort. The AFL-CIO would welcome sincere efforts to re-examine these programs with the aim of bringing about useful consolidation. But to eliminate the categorical programs altogether and to finance loosely restricted block grants to the states would be a step backward rather than forward. That we are not prepared to accept.

The AFL-CIO urges the Congress to firmly reject any educational block grant proposal of the Administration and to fulfill existing federal commitments by fully funding present programs at the levels of authorization which Congress itself deemed necessary.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

MAR 4 1971

February 26, 1971

TO: University Labor Education Advisory Committees

FROM: Walter G. Davis, Director of Education WGD.

I am enclosing for your information an extensive background paper dealing with the Nixon Administration's proposed changes in existing programs of federal aid for education. This paper was prepared by the AFL-CIO Department of Education for the recent AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting.

I am also enclosing a copy of the policy statement adopted by the Council in response to the background paper.

I am sure that you will find both of these documents useful in thinking about these issues. If I can help you with any additional information about the materials covered, please let me know.

JS/WD/bt
opeiu#2 afl-cio
Enclosures (2)

10 extra copies

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

done 3/19/71 EFV

Emory F. Via

Send a copy to each State Council director:

Thought this background paper from the AFL-CIO ~~on~~ education would be of interest to you

THE ADMINISTRATION ROLE IN EDUCATION

A Background Paper

Prepared by the AFL-CIO Department of Education for the AFL-CIO Executive Council
February, 1971

The Administration's strategy in education is becoming clearer as a result of the President's State of the Union message and his 1972 budget proposals. But the specific shape of the Administration plan will not become clear until a legislative proposal emerges.

Ambiguous and sometimes contradictory language in the budget message suggests that, as of this moment, the Administration itself is not clear as to how far it can go, but the general direction is by now quite evident. The Administration will try to move as far as possible in the direction of ending existing federal programs in education and shifting the funds which have been available under these programs into block educational grants which would be made available to state and local authorities to spend as they see fit.

In the words of the budget message: "An important element of the Administration's reform of federal grant programs will be a proposal to adopt a new and expanded program of special revenue sharing for elementary and secondary education. This proposal will draw together the wide array of overlapping and confusing authorities for categorical grants into four broad areas of national interest."

United Press International reports that, subsequent to the budget message, HEW Secretary Elliot Richardson explained that the Administration would seek to merge all of the various education acts into three new ones. According to Richardson, President Nixon will ask Congress to pass an "Educational Assistance Act" to consolidate all federal funding operations for public schools. The budget message indicates that the legislation would include the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the Vocational Education Act, the impact aid program, all programs for the education of the handicapped, and the school lunch program. A second new act, the "Education Renewal Act," according to Richardson, would cover all research, experimental and reform programs. Later, Richardson stated, the administration will present a third bill dealing with higher education.

These proposals have not suddenly emerged from nowhere. They are rather the latest phase in an education strategy which Mr. Nixon has been shaping since he assumed the presidency.

The Nixon proposals and their implications can best be understood in the framework of the past history of federal education legislation.

Achievements of the Kennedy-Johnson Years

During the years of the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations, a wide range of laws were passed making the federal government for the first time a full partner in financing education at every level ranging from early childhood education, on through elementary and secondary education, higher education, and adult education. The AFL-CIO has played a major role in winning the passage of all of these laws which have improved the educational opportunities for all Americans, wherever they may live, whatever their income, race or creed.

The Head Start program authorized under the Economic Opportunity Act has been an innovative beginning in early childhood education that has stimulated the growth of other pre-kindergarten school and day care center programs.

The Elementary and Secondary Education Act, largest of the new federal programs, both in funds and in the number of students it serves, has brought new resources to bear in schools serving economically disadvantaged children, has provided funds for innovative educational programs, and placed textbooks and library books into schools where the former were outdated and in short supply and where the latter were frequently non-existent.

The Vocational Education Act and the 1968 amendments to it, drafted in considerable part as a result of efforts of the AFL-CIO, have brought substantial new funds into vocational education and, even more important, it has resulted in new flexibility of funds and a strong mandate that programs be realistically related to the world of work. To ensure the fulfillment of these goals, the law established strong national and state advisory committees.

The Higher Education Act has provided a wide range of student financial aid programs which have made higher education a reality for countless young people who could not otherwise have entered college. The act has also made it possible for colleges and universities, both public and private, to provide the new facilities needed to make higher education available to hundreds of thousands of students for whom there would otherwise have been no room and, of particular importance, the act has stimulated the establishment of community colleges throughout the nation, bringing a wide range of college programs within commuting distance of the students they serve.

The "Cold War G. I. Bill" has opened up possibilities of higher education and job training for returning Viet Nam veterans. Former Senator Ralph Yarborough, chief sponsor of the bill, has publicly credited the AFL-CIO with being the only major national organization to give him help in securing its passage.

The Adult Education Act has expanded educational opportunities for adults, especially those seeking basic education. Other funds have become available for adult education through the Higher Education Act and the Manpower Training and Development Act.

These are only a few of the important legislative victories which the AFL-CIO has helped win in the field of education. Altogether these programs of federal support for education have had a significant effect. The acute teacher shortage of a few years ago has all but disappeared, and teacher salaries, although still below the earnings of many professionals, have improved in most areas. Educational innovation is flourishing as never before and throughout the nation dramatic new methods are being used to reach disadvantaged children who have been largely neglected by the schools of the past. Some of these methods have produced disappointing results, others have resulted in significantly improved student achievement. As a result of federal aid programs, there is now a wealth of experience from which educators can develop future programs.

Critical Needs Still Remain

Impressive as the progress has been, it must nevertheless be said that the expectations of the educational community and of organized labor have not been fulfilled.

American education is still in a state of deepening crisis. On the one hand, the problems facing the schools have intensified. Virtually every city in America faces critical financial troubles; the costly problems of the inner-city have escalated and the tax resources have been drained away.

Adding to the erosion of tax resources has been the success which business and industry have experienced in reducing their share of the state and local tax burden. Figures compiled by the Advisory Commission on Inter-Governmental Relations show that in 1957, business taxes accounted for 34.2% of total state and local tax revenues. By 1967, the business community had reduced its share to 29.3%. If the business community had continued to maintain its relative share, the financially pressed state and local governments would have had another $4.5 billion in 1967 tax revenue, $3 billion of which would have been from the property tax which is the single most important source of public school financing.

At the very same time that educational costs have been rising sharply and that local and state tax crises have intensified, the federal government has been curtailing its commitments to share in the financing of education.

In fairness, it must be said that the process of cutting back on federal commitments to education had already begun before Mr. Nixon became President. President Lyndon Johnson will unquestionably be remembered in history for his ability to break through the century-old deadlocks which had frustrated efforts to legislate federal aid to education. It is nevertheless equally true that President Johnson did not always follow through on the legislative victories which he had contributed so much toward winning. Never did President Johnson seek federal funding for education at the level of full authorization, and the AFL-CIO did not hesitate to criticize him for this failure.

Under President Nixon, however, the gap between legislative authorizations and funding have widened even more. Appropriations for 1966 under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act constituted 96% of the amount authorized under the legislation. For 1969 and 1970 appropriations were only 45% of authorization, and for 1971 they were 48% of authorization, a slight increase forced by Congress on a reluctant Administration.

Vocational education has suffered a similar fate. Appropriations for 1966 under the Vocational Education Act constituted 91% of full authorization. For 1969 appropriations were 52% of authorization, for 1970 they were only 45% of authorization, and for 1971 they were 46% of authorization.

Appropriations under the Higher Education Act were 91% of authorization for 1966. For 1969 they were only 48% of authorization and for 1970 they reached a low of 27% of authorization. For 1971 they rose slightly, against the wishes of the Administration, to 29% of authorization. (See table, p. 7)

Efforts in Congress to increase federal funds for education resulted in vetoes of the appropriation bills for both 1970 and 1971. "These increases," the President argued in the first of these veto messages, "are excessive in a period of serious inflationary pressures."

The very words indicating that education should bear the brunt of the fight against inflation, indicated the relatively low priority which the Administration has placed on education.

President Nixon had, in fact, been in office for over a year before he issued any message at all to Congress concerning education. That first

FUNDING HISTORY OF

THREE FEDERAL EDUCATION LAWS

(in thousands)

Statute	Year	Congressional Authorization	Budget Request	Congressional Appropriation	Appropriation as % of Authorization
Elementary & Secondary Education	1966	$ 1,329,300	$ 1,240,600	$ 1,271,450	96%
	1967	1,920,564	1,430,110	1,432,860	75%
	1968	2,776,636	1,707,000	1,641,157	59%
	1969	3,249,059	1,561,703	1,475,993	45%
	1970	3,615,727	1,525,876	1,614,398	45%
	1971	3,877,741	1,614,693	1,846,968	48%
Vocational & Adult Education	1966	$ 277,491	$ 260,041	$ 252,491	91%
	1967	349,991	287.952	297,416	85%
	1968	369,991	341,261	313,100	85%
	1969	592,091	322,156	304,591	52%
	1970	935,650	336,377	419,046	45%
	1971	1,073,150	440,046	494,196	46%
Higher Education	1966	$ 1,079,750	$ 522,808	$ 978,931	91%
	1967	1,134,950	383,950	1,173,551	103%
	1968	1,554,950	1,117,744	1,149,394	74%
	1969	1,694,377	733,677	806,353	48%
	1970	3,107,441	899,859	850,913	27%
	1971	3,387,620	857,525	967,880	29%

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Health, Education & Welfare

message, when it finally came on March 3, 1970, was entitled "Education Reform," and it provided the rational for his future efforts to limit federal spending for education and to scuttle most of the existing programs. The message consisted largely of sweeping generalizations about the supposed failures of federal programs in the field of education. "Most of them," the President said, "are not yet measurably improving the success of poor children in school."

The principal authority cited by the President as evidence of the failure was the Coleman report of 1966, Equal Educational Opportunity. There are two significant facts about this. One is that the Coleman report does not constitute any judgment whatever about the Elementary and Secondary Education Act because the survey upon which it is based was conducted in 1965, prior to the time that schools had received any funds from the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Secondly, the central thesis of the Coleman report is that the one factor which most improves the learning of minority children is for them to be in racially balanced classrooms. Mr. Nixon in his message on Education Reform drew back from this conclusion. He used the Coleman report to discredit existing federal programs which it had not considered and then he rejected the central findings of the report.

The presidential message on Education Reform introduced other notes which have been key elements in the education plans of the Administration. Charging that the Elementary and Secondary Education Act had not fulfilled the promises of its supporters, the President called for greatly increased educational research, "fundamental studies that should lead to far-reaching reforms before going ahead with major new expenditures for 'more of the same.'"

Arguing that past federal support for education was based upon dollars, not reform, Mr. Nixon said, "Somehow it seemed reasonable to assume that the amount of dollars invested in education was all that really mattered." Precisely who ever made such an assumption is not clear. Certainly it was not the authors of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act who authorized under Title III more than half a billion dollars specifically earmarked to fund innovative and exemplary education programs.

Although the President took pains to demolish assumptions that no one ever assumed, he carefully avoided discussing the most reasonable assumption of all, namely that the existing federal programs have not completely succeeded for the simple reason that none of them have ever been funded at the level Congress determined was necessary to fulfill their purposes.

Mr. Nixon called for the establishment of a National Institute of Education to undertake major research projects. We know so little about what makes good education, he suggested, that more research is needed before increasing expenditures. The New York Times editorially likened this to telling a drowning man that you will try to rescue him as soon as you can find out why he can't swim.

In line with the views set forth in the message on Education Reform, the Administration proceeded to establish a series of task forces, commissions, and study projects. These appear to be excuses for delaying necessary funding rather than significant searches for facts.

Among these study groups was the Task Force on Urban Education, chaired by Wilson Riles of California, which reported that federal expenditures of between $5 billion and $7 billion a year were needed just to meet the needs of the large urban school systems. The report has been totally unheeded and never even officially released.

Another study group is the President's Commission on School Finance charged with making a study of long-range financial needs of both public and non-public schools. The commission was instructed to have its report ready in the Spring of 1972, which, of course, is after the President will have submitted the budget for the last year of this Administration.

A Task Force on Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act is expected to report in the summer of 1971, after the President will have presumably introduced his proposed legislation to dismantle the entire ESEA program.

And while these and other task forces go on with their work, Mr. Nixon and Administration spokesmen continue to support more research rather than necessary funds.

There is an abundance of research which has already been completed but which remains unused. Mention has already been made of the never-issued report of the Task Force on Urban Education. The two-volume report of the Task Force on Occupational Training in Industry, jointly sponsored by the Department of Labor and the Department of Commerce, has been ignored and finally scrapped altogether. The list could be extended at length. The computerized ERIC information retrieval system established by the U. S. Office of Education has gathered together a prodigious amount of research which is accessible to anyone who wants to use it. Unquestionably there is a great deal of educational research which still needs to be done, but the Administration could utilize the findings of research which has already been completed.

Higher Education

Shortly after his message on Education Reform, Mr. Nixon issued a second message to Congress, this one dealing with Higher Education. In the message, the President expressed commendable concern for the problem of providing greater financial assistance to low-income students, but he proposed to do so by ending federal aid programs which had been benefiting other students and which had provided desperately needed federal funds for the construction of higher education facilities.

Higher education is in a state of crisis. Enrollment has increased by an average of 9% a year for the last decade and it will continue to increase for the foreseeable future. Costs have gone up while federal funds and private contributions have decreased. Tuition and required fees in higher education have more than doubled during the past ten years and they continue to rise. Four years at the average state university costs $6,000 and as much as twice that for students from outside the state. At private universities a four-year education can cost as much as $18,000 to $20,000. This means that students from moderate income families are increasingly finding the costs of higher education an intolerable burden.

In the face of this situation, President Nixon proposes to concentrate student aid programs entirely on low-income students. He has asked for an end to subsidized interest on student loans for all except low-income students and, for the first time, he would require students to pay interest on loans for the years during which they are in school. The result could well cost thousands of dollars to a union family trying to put its sons and daughters through school.

The Higher Education Act of 1965 provided a variety of student aid programs designed to realistically meet the financial needs of a wide range of students. The Administration has been determinedly whittling away at these, and especially at those which are most helpful to union families.

The Administration, despite the increasing college population, has also called for an end to federal grants for the construction of higher education facilities. It is a measure of the Administration's lack of concern for federal aid to higher education that appropriations under the Higher Education Act for 1971 are only 29% of full authorization, and even this figure was more than President Nixon wanted.

The Administration and School Desegregation

The record of the Administration on school desegregation is one of compromise, vacillation and political expediency. While the President has frequently talked of his commitment to enforcing the law, he has failed to give leadership on this issue.

The exercise of the power to terminate federal school funds, provided by Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, was abandoned after the first six months of this Administration. The burden of enforcing the law was shifted to the courts and delaying tactics soon surfaced.

Early in July, 1969, the Attorney General and the Secretary of HEW eased the guidelines to extend the September, 1969, deadline for compliance if "bonafide educational and administrative problems" warranted delay. A month later, Secretary Finch intervened in a school suit to ask delay in the withdrawal of HEW approval of plans for 33 school districts in Mississippi. (Alexander vs. Holmes County Board of Education.) For the first time since the 1954 Supreme Court decision, the federal government aligned itself with the recalcitrant southern school districts. When the case reached the Supreme Court, the Court, in a unanimous decision, told the South and the Administration that the time for delaying was over.

Again, in the case involving the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education, the Justice Department joined with the school board in appealing a federal court decision ordering the board to take positive steps to bring about racial balance in the schools. (Swann vs. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education.) In presenting the government brief, the U. S. Solicitor argued that "the 14th Amendment does not require as a matter of law racial balance in all public schools or integration of every all-white or all-Negro school."

On March 24, 1970, President Nixon issued a major policy statement on school desegregation. The President declared his support for the various court decisions outlawing de jure school segregation, but he took great pains to distinguish between de jure segregation, segregation arising out of state or local laws, and de facto segregation, segregation arising as a result of neighborhood housing patterns.

"In the case of genuine de facto segregation, "Mr. Nixon said, "school authorities are not constitutionally required to take any positive steps to correct the imbalance... Residential housing patterns may result in the continued existence of some all-Negro schools even in a system which fully meets constitutional standards. But in any event, local school officials may, if they so choose, take steps beyond the constitutional minimums to diminish racial separation."

The President went on to suggest that special weight should be given to "the special needs of racially-impacted schools where de facto segregation persists and where immediate infusions of money can make a real difference in terms of educational effectiveness."

This statement is, of course, in direct contradition to other statements of the President who has taken great pains to argue that spending more money doesn't make any real difference in educational effectiveness. If spending more money will improve the effectiveness of de facto segregated schools, it would seem that more money would provide even greater effectiveness in integrated schools.

Education and Private Enterprise

While the Administration has been seeking to cut back the federal role in financing education, it has also been seeking ways of increasing the role of private enterprise in the field of education, particularly through the Office of Economic Opportunity and the U. S. Office of Education.

One of the devices by which federal funds are being used to increase the role of private enterprise is through performance contracting. Under this kind of arrangement, school systems contract out certain parts of their curriculum -- most often reading and mathematics -- to private enterprise firms, with the level of payment depending upon the contractor bringing students up to pre-determined levels of achievement.

The Office of Education and the Office of Economic Opportunity have both encouraged the development of performance contracting. Among the first performance contracts was one funded by the Office of Education between the Texarkana, Arkansas, Board of Education and Dorsett Educational Systems, Inc. Recently, OEO funded $6.5 million worth of performance contracts involving 18 school districts and six private corporations.

Even before it was under way, the Texarkana-Dorsett program was hailed as a major breakthrough in education, but a team evaluating the project discovered that the Dorsett firm had been seeking to increase its profits by teaching pupils the answers to test questions which were being used to determine the level of payment. As a result of these irregularities, the Texarkana School Board announced that it would not renew its contract with Dorsett.

An even more drastic departure from public control of education is the voucher plan which is being promoted through the Office of Economic Opportunity. Under the voucher plan, all parents would receive education vouchers for each of their children: they could then enroll their children in any school of their choice, public or non-public, and use the vouchers to pay the tuition. The school would then submit the vouchers to obtain reimbursement.

At least two presidential advisers, Roger Freeman and Donald Rumsfeld, have strongly urged trying the voucher plan in a few selected communities. Both Freeman and Rumsfeld opposed the Elementary and Secondary Education Act when it was first passed by Congress.

Although the voucher plan has been proposed as a way of improving educational opportunity for children from low-income families, it would solve no old problems but would bring new chaos. Hardsell hucksters could promote their private educational ventures with the reckless disregard for facts now used by the makers of detergents. Alleged religious sponsorship could become the excuse for increasing numbers of racially segregated schools. Costly and tragic damage could be done to the public schools unable to compete with the glittering promises of private enterprise educational salesmen, greedy for a lion's share of vouchers.

Teaching to the test, as happened in Texarkana, is only one of the devious practices encouraged by performance contracting and voucher plans. Many critics see teaching to the middle as another. So far this particular problem has not been discovered in existing performance contracts, but it would be most surprising if it is not revealed in future contract evaluations. The principle is very simple. If compensation depends upon results, then teaching energy becomes concentrated where it will get the most results. Children who are doing badly need a maximum amount of attention if they are to pass their tests. Children who do well will presumably pass the test one way or another. So, in order to maximize profits, teaching energy is directed to students in the middle.

This is not a new phenomenon. Ontario from 1876 to 1882 used a system of "payment by results," with financial aid from the province depending on the number of students who passed their final examination. Charles Philips, the distinguished Canadian historian of education has described the results:

> The effect was, of course, to narrow all school efforts to the cramming of content most likely to be tested in the subjects prescribed for examination. The system also caused teachers to concentrate on the average and slightly below-average pupils, with whom their efforts would pay dividends through a larger percentage of passes, and to neglect other students -- the bright because they would pass anyway, the dull because they were hopeless or at best a poor risk in terms of expenditure of time.

Donald Rumsfeld, when he was director of the Office of Economic Opportunity and one of the most vocal supporters of private enterprise education schemes, repeatedly protested that all he wants is to conduct some experiments along these lines. He seems to hold that the government ought to be willing to try anything at least once, even if the subjects of the experiment are children and not guinea pigs.

When one contemplates an experiment he does not proceed blindly to gather data. He develops a hypothesis and tries to anticipate the probable and possible consequences. America has the theoretical ability to test out various biological warfare devices on the surface of the moon, but few scientists would be mad enough to try it because the probable consequences are so terrible that they overweigh any possible knowledge that might ensue.

In the framework of the general Nixon Administration strategy of using the need for research as an excuse for putting off necessary funding, there is another significant aspect of the voucher plan. The crisis in education is immediate and it is nationwide. Nothing in the voucher plan is addressed to this crisis. What is being proposed is a five to eight year trial demonstration of the voucher plan for a few thousand students in a small handful of communities. Even if the trial demonstrations were to produce useful information, it would be at least ten years before that information could be put to general use. The voucher plan is therefore another device which is calculated to delay the day when the federal government measures up to its full responsibility in the field of education.

Block Grants

In his 1972 budget message, President Nixon has set forth the next steps in his educational strategy. They constitute nothing less than the complete dismantling of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the Vocational Education Act, the federally impacted aid program, the education for the handicapped programs, and the school lunch program.

Already in his 1970 message on Education Reform, the President charged that the federal government has not had a cohesive educational policy, that "federal education programs are largely fragmented and disjointed." At that time he promised to "recommend to the Congress plans for consolidation of grants into packages that are truly useful to states and localities receiving them."

In the 1972 budget, the Administration proposes "to draw together this wide array of overlapping and contradictory authorizations into a new special revenue sharing program for elementary and secondary education."

Mr. Nixon proposes to fund this educational block grant program at three billion dollars for its first year. This amount for the total funding package is actually less than the present authorization just for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

The specifics of this revenue sharing proposal will become clearer, presumably, when new legislation is introduced which will, according to Secretary Richardson, merge the various education acts into two new ones, an "Educational Assistance Act," to consolidate all federal funding operations for public schools and an "Educational Renewal Act" to cover all research, experimental and reform programs.

It is unlikely that the Administration proposal to put existing programs of categorical aid into block grants will be received with favor by Congress, and there is good reason for this. Categorical aid consists of federal grants to state and local authorities for specific purposes spelled out by Congress in the legislation. Funds for the school lunch program, for example, can be used only for a school lunch program and nothing else. Under the Nixon proposals, a local school board would be able to transfer the funds which it has been receiving for the school lunch program to its textbook funds.

Categorical aid programs did not happen simply by accident. They came about as a part of a creative solution to specific problems.

One of the most critical of the problems which gave rise to categorical aid was the century old impasse over federal aid to education. There was for years a general recognition in Congress and among the champions of education that federal aid to the schools was necessary. The problem became more intense in the years following World War II with the enormous increase in school age population. Between 1940 and 1970 school enrollment has jumped from 28 million pupils to over 52 million pupils. This mushrooming growth placed unmanageable strains on local school authorities, particularly in areas where there were meager sources for additional state and local tax revenue.

There were a long series of efforts in Congress to enact programs of general aid to education. But each time, the legislation floundered over the question of what to do about the non-public schools. There were those who argued that federal aid to parochial schools would constitute government subsidization of religion in violation of the Constitution. Others were equally determined that they would oppose any program of federal aid which did not include aid to non-public schools within its scope.

By shifting the emphasis from general aid to education to one of categorical aid for specific programs, Congress was at last able to break through the impasse. The National Defense Education Act of 1958, passed during the Eisenhower Administration, was one of the first applications of the principle of categorical aid. It established financial assistance to both public and non-public schools to upgrade their teaching in mathematics, foreign languages, and science and later in a wider range of "secular" subjects. This approach was successful in satisfying both the public and non-public school adherents.

A similar approach proved successful when the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963 was passed. This legislation made federal assistance available to church related institutions of higher education, provided the funds were used for the construction of facilities used only for secular purposes.

Building on this experience, Congress shaped the Elementary and Secondary Education Act with the strong support of organized labor. By using the categorical approach, Congress was able to achieve an intricate balance between what had historically been conflicting interests. If the legislation was not perfect, it at least succeeded in resolving a century old impasse in a way that met urgent needs without doing violence to the American principle of separation of church and state.

Under the Administration block grant proposal it would remain for each state to determine how much, if any, and what kind of aid would go to the non-public schools. Inevitably the old public-parochial school controversy would flare up again, as it has already done in those communities in which school boards have held public hearings on the Administration's voucher plan. The Washington Star on January 31, 1971, quotes an HEW official as saying, "We thought the church-state issue was laid to rest five years ago, but all that may change now with revenue sharing."

Too much progress has been made in shaping a workable program of federal support for education to endanger it by reopening old wounds that have apparently healed.

There is a second important reason why categorical programs have come about. Congress has reacted to certain specific educational needs for the very reason that, important though they are, they have in the past been largely neglected by state and local authorities. It is the assumption of the Administration's block grant proposal that state and local authorities are better able to establish priorities for spending available funds according to needs than is the federal government.

There is abundant evidence that this is not always true. State and local authorities inevitably make decisions in terms of the various social and political pressures around them and these pressures are not necessarily consonant with the needs. A conspicuous example of this is the deplorable state of affairs which existed with regard to vocational education in most school systems prior to the enactment of the Vocational Education Act of 1963. It is an unmistakeable conclusion that the parents of college-bound students carried more political weight with school authorities than did the parents of vocational students. In writing the Vocational Education Act, Congress was thereby in a sense helping to correct this political imbalance.

In drafting Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, Congress reacted to the mounting evidence that in most school systems there was no meaningful equality of educational opportunity between schools serving economically disadvantaged children and those serving children of the middle and upper class. School boards everywhere had tended to be most responsive to the political power of the more affluent parents. Congress responded by directing that Title I ESEA funds be used exclusively to meet the educational needs of economically disadvantaged children.

A similar situation has given rise to federal programs to aid in the education of the handicapped. Handicapped children have serious needs for special educational programs, but these needs had been largely neglected because their parents constitute a small minority in the community. Their appeals to school officials for help had been drowned out by the understandable concern of the large majority of parents of non-handicapped children that what funds were available be used to improve the schooling of their own children. Again Congress helped to restore a kind of political balance by granting funds which could only be used to aid the education of handicapped children.

An illustration of a well working program which could be seriously imperiled by the Administration's block grant proposal is the school lunch program. The funds for this program are among those which the Administration would put into the block grants, permitting school authorities to use the money for other purposes.

The relationship between learning and good nutrition has been firmly established. The 1970 amendments to the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act make it possible for every poor child to receive free school lunches. Even so there are still 18,000 schools serving 10 million children in which school authorities have failed to participate in the lunch program. The school lunch program is specifically designed to meet needs of disadvantaged children. There is already abundant evidence that in many school districts the funds for this program, if placed into block grants, would be diverted to other purposes which were more politically popular.

School authorities in general welcome categorical aid because it permits them to plan constructive, creative and needed programs free of the political pressures which might otherwise destroy them.

Finally, there is a third reason that categorical aid programs have been established and that is that the national interest in a specific educational problem may transcend local interests. The National Defense Education Act, for example, was adopted in considerable part because it was more important to the nation to have an increased number of scientists and technicians than it was to individual school districts. As a nation we have a concern which is greater than that of localities that there be more doctors and nurses. Categorical aid programs have been one of the ways in which this national interest has been expressed and supported.

It is undoubtedly true that among existing categorical aid programs there is some overlapping and even duplication of effort. The AFL-CIO would welcome efforts to examine these programs with the aim of bringing about useful consolidation. But to do away with the categorical programs altogether and put the money into block grants to the states would be a step backward rather than a step forward. It would channel the funds where the political pressures are greatest rather than where the need is greatest. It would reopen the church-state controversy in a way that could only be harmful to the cause of American education. And it could destroy the progress which we have made up to now.

In reviewing the Administration's education program, the AFL-CIO speaks from a background of more than one-hundred and fifty years of demonstrated concern by organized labor for the public schools.

Early in the nineteenth century, workers became convinced that the responsibilities of a democratic society made it essential that all citizens be educated. The Workingmen's Party, organized in New York in 1829, included as one of the principal planks in its platform a demand for a school system "that shall unite under the same roof the children of the poor man and the rich."

The children of union members constitute a substantial part of America's school population. Concern for their own children and concern for their nation has led union members to serve on hundreds of school boards throughout the nation and led local and state labor bodies to work tirelessly to win better financial support for the schools. This concern was formalized at the founding convention of the AFL-CIO which included in its Constitution as a statement of one of its major goals its "interest in providing the nation with the highest standard of education at all levels."

The AFL-CIO therefore approaches the Administration education proposals from the perspective of a deep historical commitment. In the light of this perspective, the Administration appears intent upon the destruction of the constructive gains which have been won over the past years.

March 4, 1971

Mr. Walter G. Davis
AFL-CIO Education Department
815-16 Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear Walter:

Thanks for sending the copy of the background paper on the Federal Government's Relation to Education and the Executive Council's policy statement.

Would you please send me ten (10) extra copies of each.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

March 15, 1971

MAR 19 1971

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I am happy that you found the background paper on the Administration Role in Education useful, and I am sending you the ten extra copies which you requested.

You may also be interested in seeing my report on the Office of Education Regional meeting in Philadelphia, a copy of which is enclosed.

Sincerely,

Jack

John A. Sessions
Assistant Director of Education

JS/bt
Enclosures
opeiu#2 afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
LANE KIRKLAND, SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

March 22, 1971

MAR 24 1971
MAR 25 1971

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I thought the March issue of THE SOUTH TODAY was quite good.

If you can spare 50 copies, I would be glad to mail them to some of the key people in our summer schools who may not see the paper. If they subscribe to this separately, what does it cost?

Have you heard from any of the delegates from the Advanced Southern Labor School?

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

File

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

March 24, 1971

Mr. John A. Sessions
Assistant Director of Education
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear Jack:

Thanks for sending me extra copies of the background papers of the Administration's Role in Education, and for your own report of the office of education regional meeting. It would please me greatly if you would share with me any future reports dealing with problems of education.

My thanks.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms

March 24, 1971

Mr. George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear Mr. Guernsey:

Enclosed are fifty copies of the March Issue of South Today. The subscription cost for one year is $2.50 and for $7 per year subscribers can receive copies of South Today (monthly tabloid paper), New South (quarterly publication), and all special reports of the Council.

Mr. Via is not in the office today but as soon as he returns you will be receiving further correspondence regarding the delegates from the Advanced Southern Labor School.

I trust that persons in your summer schools will find South Today interesting as well as informative.

Sincerely,

Gwendolyn M. Sapp, Secretary
Resources Development Center

HAROLD BAUMAN, Treasurer
Workman's Circle

40 Marietta St., N.W. Suite 1422

ORGANIZED LABOR and WORKMEN'S CIRCLE

Awards Banquet

E. T. KEHRER, Treasurer
AFL-CIO

Atlanta, Ga. 30303 525-8549

CO-CHAIRMEN

T. D. ARCHER
Building Trades Council

NICK BONANNO
Ladies Garment Workers

OMA BARTON
Amalgamated Clothing Workers

ROY BOND, JR.
Machinists' Union

SAMSON GARRETT
Laborers Union

GEORGE CAUDELLE
Building Trades Council

ED COUCH
Plasterers Union

BUD CROSS
Carpenters Union

TRUITT CRUNKLETON
Bookbinders Union

IRVING GORDON
Workmen's Circle

HERBERT C. GREEN
United Auto. Workers

JAMES HAMPTON
Chemical Workers

DAVE HERMAN
Hotel & Restaurant Workers

JAMES HOWARD
State, County & Municipal Employees

JOSEPH JACOBS
Jewish Labor Committee

W. N. JENKINS
Retail Clerks

MARION LEE
Plumbers Union

HERBERT MABRY
State AFL-CIO

GID PARHAM
Teamsters

OLIVER SINGLETON
A.F.L.-C.I.O.

ROY WILLIAMS
Meat Cutters

JOHN WRIGHT
Central Labor Council

MARTHA TRUE
Communication Workers

Partial List

E. L. ABERCROMBIE, Chairman
Laundry Workers Union

Please make out interest payment form.

April 12, 1971

APR 15 1971

Dear Friend:

You are cordially invited to the annual Labor Awards Banquet, Wednesday, May 12, 1971, to be held at the Regency Hyatt House.

The dinner will be in honor of President George Meany, Secretary-Treasurer Lane Kirkland and the members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, who will be meeting in Atlanta during this period.

"Labor Man of the Year" awards will be presented to R. E. Shadix, Regional Director of the Building and Construction Trades Department, AFL-CIO, and to Weldon Mathis, President of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local 728.

A reception for the honorees, and for members of the Executive Council will be at 7 p. m., with dinner at 8 p. m.

Proceeds from the dinner will go toward expansion of the Southern Labor Archives at Georgia State University.

Since Tickets will undoubtedly be quickly sold out, you are urged to mail the enclosed reservation form together with your check at the earliest possible moment.

Sincerely and fraternally,

E. L. Abercrombie

E. L. Abercrombie,
Chairman

P. S. Table reservations may be requested in blocks of ten.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

File

April 13, 1971

APR 15 1971

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

We are working on another young workers school to be held in the Southeast at Nashville, Tennessee. I am enclosing several folders on it. If you know any young members of AFL-CIO unions that you could send this to, send it in a hurry. I would appreciate it.

I think we should have approximately 18 to 25 delegates.

Do you think it would be possible for John Lewis to spend a day at the school? Maybe just being part of the group, maybe I could work him into the program?

I will be on vacation until the 19th of April and will call you about this on that date.

Fraternally,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio
Dictated but not read

J.L. 25, 6, 7

AFL-CIO

Transmittal Slip

Gene: what happened? E.M.

DATE: October 22, 1971

TO: Emory Via

OCT 26 1971

FROM: E. T. Kehrer

☐ Note and File	☐ Prepare Reply For My Signature
☐ Note and Return To Me	☐ Take Appropriate Action
☐ Return With More Details	☐ Per Your Request
☐ Note and See Me About This	☐ Signature
☐ Please Answer	☐ Advice Please
☐ For Your Approval	☐ Attach Complete File and Return

COMMENTS: GS

See if this will xerox — let me have copy of 15th page even if rest won't print.

Thanks

(Revised August 4, 1971)

Estimated Construction Employment - Total and Nonwhite
Atlanta Area
1960 and 1970

Occupation	1960 Total	1960 Nonwhite	1970 Total	1970 Nonwhite
Total Construction Industry: All Occupations	26,469	6,065	41,472	9,501	22%
Boilermakers	12	0	20	0
Carpenters	3,811	294	4,801	370
Cranemen, Hoistmen, etc.	111	12	182	20
Electricians	944	13	1,604	22
Plumbers & Pipe Fitters	1,120	81	1,504	108
Tinsmiths, Coppersmiths and Sheetmetal Workers	279	5	439	7
Masons, Tile Setters, etc.	1,713	628	2,272	883
Painters and Paperhangers	1,712	269	2,051	322
Glaziers	78	12	55	9
Plasterers	282	239	247	209
Cement, Concrete Finishers	267	226	426	361
Structural Metal Workers	138	9	222	15
Asbestos, Insulator Workers	54	INA	80	INA
Excavating, Grading Machine Operators	887	INA	1,287	INA
Roofers and Slaters	223	INA	314	INA
Craftsmen and Kindred, N.E.C.	154	17	284	31
Drivers and Deliverymen	884	325	1,218	448
All Other Occupations	13,800	INA	24,466	INA

Source: 1960 Total Construction Employment and occupational distribution based on Table 125 of 1960 Census of Population. The total nonwhite employment in construction was taken from Table 129.

The nonwhite distribution by occupation in 1960 was based on the nonwhite percentage shown for employment by occupation in Table 122. The 1970 nonwhite distribution was based on the same percentage used in 1960.

Georgia Department of Labor
Employment Security Agency
Manpower Resources Section

August 11, 1971

Mr. William U. Norwood, Jr.
Regional Manpower Administrator
U. S. Department of Labor
1371 Peachtree Street, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30309

Dear Mr. Norwood:

We have received complaints from Atlanta area contractors and construction craftsmen unions that quotas for the hiring of nonwhite construction craftsmen imposed by the U. S. Department of Labor upon Atlanta area contractors are unrealistically high and constitute an undue burden on the employers because qualified workers simply are not available.

These quotas apparently were based on estimates prepared by the Georgia Agency at the request of the Regional Office and submitted by Mrs. Maria Mallet at the OFCC hearing held in Atlanta March 31, April 1 and 2, 1971. We have reviewed the estimates and find that the data submitted in Exhibit E for employment of nonwhite construction craftsmen were indeed far too high for most occupations!

Our over-estimating employment of nonwhite construction craftsmen can be blamed in large part on the crisis manner in which the U. S. Department of Labor attempted to obtain these data and on the unclear instructions that were furnished this Agency. This is not the first instance that we have had to furnish minority data for OFCC use that were of doubtful validity and for which we received no instructions or inadequate instructions. In some cases employers were instructed to come to us for minority data, but we had not even been informed that we were going to be asked for such information.

A review of the correspondence, methodology and other circumstances pertaining to the estimates is in order.

On April 8, 1970, our Research and Analysis Section received a telegram from the Regional Office requiring within 30 days projections of occupational requirements for the construction industry for Georgia and Atlanta. Procedures and background information for making the projections were to be mailed directly from Washington shortly. On April 13, 1970, we called the Regional Office to inquire about the procedures. We were told the methodology would be mailed that day. It was not received until April 22, 1970, although dated April 16. On April 23, we received corrections to the procedure by telephone.

August 11, 1971

Mr. William U. Norwood, Jr.

Your letter 4 MG-MBR dated Wednesday, April 29, 1970, with instructions attached directed this Agency to prepare a great deal of data on minority employment in the construction industry in Atlanta for an OFCC hearing. We were instructed to bring the data to the Regional Office the following Monday. This left little time for preparation and review of the data.

Nine persons were engaged in hastily gathering and preparing minority data for the Regional Office meeting Monday, May 4, 1970. Other persons were involved in typing and proofreading. No time was available for checking out every detail. The miscalculation that caused the faulty nonwhite estimates for the 1971 hearing was in the data for 1960 hand delivered to the Regional Office May 4, 1970. Updating the estimates for the 1971 hearing simply carried the basic error over. In explaining the error below, we are using the electrician occupation as an example.

The Atlanta Plan states on page 12 that "there are substantial numbers of non-union employees and self-employed minorities currently employed throughout the [construction] industry, including 435 electricians...". The U. S. Department of Labor may have updated the incorrect data we furnished in Exhibit E. Our estimate for 1970, as stated above, was an update of the 1960 error.

The 1960 estimate for nonwhite electricians was obtained by taking 21.4 percent of the 944 construction electricians. This produced an estimate of 202 nonwhite electricians in construction, compared to the 25 nonwhite electricians for all industries shown in the 1960 Census.

The error was due to our interpretation of the instructions attached to your letter 4 MG-MBR dated April 29, 1970, under Table 2, item 2 on page 2 that a constant ratio of 21.4 percent for nonwhites computed from Census total employment in all industries should be applied to each selected construction occupation. These instructions are quoted below:

> "2. Nonunion Minority Workers, Selected Occupations - Total.
>
> Tables 125 and 129 of 1960 Census of Population (appropriate State volume) provide data on the total number of workers in specific occupations who are employed in construction. Estimate the number of nonwhite construction workers in 1960 in each selected occupation on the basis of total employed all industries who were nonwhite, as shown in Table 122."

Table 122 of the 1960 Census gives the following information for total employment in all industries in the Atlanta SMSA.

August 11, 1971

Mr. William U. Norwood, Jr.,

	Both Sexes	Male	Female
Employment, all races	395,190	250,180	145,010
Nonwhite	84,565	47,198	37,367
Percent of Total	21.4	18.9	25.8

Table 122 also provides data for employment of men, but not of women, in a number of craftsmen occupations. The data for electricians employed in all industries, including construction, are:

Employment of electricians, all races	1,801
Nonwhite	25
Percent of Total	1.4

The percent that nonwhites are in each selected occupation should be used for that occupation instead of a constant ratio that was derived from data that included men, women, teenagers, laborers, farmers, domestic servants, and every other occupation as well as construction craftsmen.

If the correct percent of 1.4 for electricians were applied, the number of nonwhite construction electricians in 1970 would be 22 instead of the 333 shown in Exhibit E. This is a far cry from the 435 said to be available in the Atlanta plan.

However, in order to test the actual availability of electricians, extensive recruiting has been intensified in the Atlanta area by contractors. This includes listing jobs with the GTES offices combined with the planned use of paid newspaper want ads.

We are sending a copy of this letter and revised Exhibit E to Mr. Arthur A. Fletcher, Assistant Secretary for Employment Standards, U.S. Department of Labor, for his use.

Sincerely,

Walter O. Brooks, Director
Employment Security Agency
Georgia Department of Labor

Attachment: Exhibit E, Revised 8/4/71

cc: Mr. Arthur A. Fletcher, Assistant Secretary of Labor
Mr. John L. Wilks, Director
Office of Federal Contract Compliance

(Revised August 4, 1971)

Estimated Construction Employment - Total and Nonwhite
Atlanta Area
1960 and 1970

Occupation	1960 Total	1960 Nonwhite	1970 Total	1970 Nonwhite
Total Construction Industry: All Occupations	26,469	6,065	41,472	9,501	22%
Boilermakers	12	0	20	0
Carpenters	3,811	294	4,801	370
Cranemen, Hoistmen, etc.	111	12	182	20
Electricians	944	13	1,604	22
Plumbers & Pipe Fitters	1,120	81	1,504	108
Tinsmiths, Coppersmiths and Sheetmetal Workers	279	5	439	7
Masons, Tile Setters, etc.	1,713	628	2,272	883
Painters and Paperhangers	1,712	269	2,051	322
Glaziers	78	12	55	9
Plasterers	282	239	247	209
Cement, Concrete Finishers	267	226	426	361
Structural Metal Workers	138	9	222	15
Asbestos, Insulator Workers	54	INA	80	INA
Excavating, Grading Machine Operators	887	INA	1,287	INA
Roofers and Slaters	223	INA	314	INA
Craftsmen and Kindred, N.E.C.	154	17	284	31
Drivers and Deliverymen	884	325	1,218	448
All Other Occupations	13,800	INA	24,466	INA

Source: 1960 Total Construction Employment and occupational distribution based on Table 125 of 1960 Census of Population. The total nonwhite employment in construction was taken from Table 129.

The nonwhite distribution by occupation in 1960 was based on the nonwhite percentage shown for employment by occupation in Table 122. The 1970 nonwhite distribution was based on the same percentage used in 1960.

Georgia Department of Labor
Employment Security Agency
Manpower Resources Section

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
I. W. ABEL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
DAVID SULLIVAN
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PAUL HALL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
CHARLES LUNA
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

November 16, 1971

File - Courtesy

BA

What are we doing on this? as far as I know - not anything

BA

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I am enclosing a clipping on the black vote in Mississippi in the last election which appeared in the New York Times November 15.

Does John Lewis have anything on this problem? If so, I would appreciate any material.

I see Pat Waters' book "Climbing Jacobs Ladder" is out in high-price paperback. I amy put a few copies in Guernsey's underground bookstore. Is the Southern Regional Council going to handle sales on the book at a discount? Maybe some of the state bodies would consider buying it.

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
AFL-CIO Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio
Enclosure

MEMO FROM

GEORGE T. GUERNSEY

March 14, 1972

Emory:

I thought you would be interested in this announcement of the renewal of the grant to the Lee County Clinic.

Allen Noah represented the Clinic at our meeting in Hot Springs.

I am also enclosing the story from the New York Times.

George

MERKLE PRESS INC.
832-6420

from the Office
of Economic Opportunity

JW. BA BO
Please return to EV

MARCH 1, 1972 MAR 16 1972

ARKANSAS HEALTH CLINIC GETS OEO SUPPORT TO SERVE 10,000 RURAL POOR

Ambulatory health care will be furnished to approximately 10,000 rural poor persons residing in Lee County, Arkansas, under a grant announced today by the Office of Economic Opportunity.

#60080/01

OEO Director Phillip V. Sanchez stated that the $1,201,692 grant to the Lee County Cooperative Clinic in Marianna, is for 18 months. The clinic will demonstrate how family-oriented medical care can benefit the poor by providing services to improve and maintain good health continuously, instead of just during times of medical crisis.

Three health care teams will provide clinic medical care and Lee Memorial Hospital and the University of Arkansas Medical Center will be used for hospitalization and special medical services.

Mid-level practitioners, like nurse clinicians and child health associates, will be used to allow for maximum use of physician manpower. Environmental health education is an important component of the program.

Mr. Olly Neal, Jr. is the project director.

####

a 72-191

NEWS
from the Office
of Economic Opportunity

PRESS ADVISORY

In announcing the grant for the Lee County Cooperative Clinic Phillip V. Sanchez, Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, pointed out that the grant is not intended to further exacerbate tensions within the Lee County community. Instead, Mr. Sanchez said, the program will provide a means of continuing urgently needed quality health services for the poor, while simultaneously facilitating closer and broader community ties. Mr. Sanchez pledged the support of OEO in using the program as a vehicle in assuring a total community effort to the mutual benefit of all Lee County citizens.

-30-

3/1/72

Lee County Clinic's Strength Is Giving Poor a Voice, Doctor Says

By JEROL GARRISON
Of the Gazette Staff

The strength of the Lee County Co-operative Clinic at Marianna rests in the fact that the poor people of Lee County have a voice in its operation, Dr. Irwin Redlener, the Clinic's medical co-ordinator, said Monday.

Dr. Redlener said the Clinic differed from most clinics set up to provide free medical care to the poor in that "it is actually run by a board elected by the patient population — the poor people — through neighborhood action councils."

"The poor in Lee County feel that the Clinic is their clinic, and they are right about that," Dr. Redlener said. "They don't want it to leave, and we are just going to be here one way or the other."

Dr. Redlener was interviewed by telephone on the role of the Clinic in Lee County. He is to address the pediatric faculty and students of the University of Arkansas Medical School at 8 a.m. today on that topic.

The Clinic caused a hostile reaction from the medical profession of Lee County when it was established in March 1970 and recently some whites have blamed staff members of the Clinic for causing racial dissension in the county. Lee County has been plagued with racial troubles and a six-member task force appointed by Governor Bumpers is seeking to mediate the issues.

The Lee County Co-operative Clinic is an experiment in socialized medicine in an area of extreme poverty. Dr. Redlener, one of two doctors on the Clinic's 24-member staff, said it was understandable that some members of the "Establishment" were upset.

"The Clinic represents a successful effort on the part of the poor black community to define and solve its own medical needs above and beyond the traditional relationship it has had with the Establishment," he said.

Poor blacks in Lee County have been able, for the first time, to solve one of their own basic needs "without having to depend on the Establishment to give them something," Dr. Redlener said. He said he could understand how this could be regarded as "a threat to the status quo."

The federal Office of Economic Opportunity provides 80 per cent of the funds for the operating Clinic and the remainder comes from other contributors. Dr. Redlener said government aid was the only way the medical needs of the county could be met because of the widespread poverty.

Of the 18,884 residents of Lee County about 13,500 qualify as indigents under antipoverty guidelines established by the OEO and are eligible for free medical care and drugs at the Clinic, Dr. Redlener said. For a family of four, this means a nonfarming income of less than $4,000 or a farming income of less than $3,400. A family of 10 would be classified as indigent if its nonfarming income was less than $7,700 or its farming income was less than $6,500.

Some have said private physicians, through charity, could meet the needs of the poor in Lee County. "That would be impossible, even if that was what they wanted to do," Dr. Redlener said. He said there were only four physicians in private practice in Lee County and that two of them were 85 and 77 years old and had only limited practices.

The Clinic operates in a remodeled house. "We have 6,000 charts in the Clinic files—6,000 people that have been treated here," Dr. Redlener said. He said some of the 13,500 persons classified as indigent were receiving care from private physicians in Lee County or outside the county but that others simply hadn't been to see a doctor since the Clinic opened.

"We feel there still are a large number of persons who aren't receiving the medical care they need anywhere," he said. The Clinic employs four "community health advocates" who work in the low-income communities to explain the services available at the Clinic.

Dr. Redlener said he and Dr. Gilbert Sartore, the other physician at the Clinic, see about 50 patients a day at the Clinic and another three to 10 on house calls.

The Clinic treats illnesses but also is seeking to educate men over 35 and women over 25 to come in annually for a physical examination and routine laboratory tests, Dr. Redlener said.

Medical education is stressed by the Clinic staff because many indigents are not aware of the need for good health habits, Dr. Redlener said. A sanitarian on the Clinic staff advises families on constructing sanitary outhouses and where to locate water wells.

The Clinic has been operating with $15,000 a month in OEO funds under a grant that expires at the end of February. It also has some Volunteers in Service to America workers on its staff, whose salaries are paid by VISTA, but they gradually are being phased out in favor of permanent employes paid with OEO funds.

The Clinic has applied for a new and larger grant to take effect March 1 but has not yet heard from OEO. Dr. Redlener said that "we have very strong suspicions" that members of the Establishment in Lee Coun had tried to pressure OEO from making any more grants for the Clinic. He said "tremendous pressure" also had been exerted on Senator John L. McClellan (Dem., Ark.) to try to get the Clinic's funds stopped.

"OEO has stated that it intends to fund us," Dr. Redlener said. "We haven't gotten definite word, but we don't feel the pressure has been successful. The pressure has been based on an untrue contention that the Clinic is a political rather than a medical entity. The more the pressure has been increased, the more rallying around the Clinic we are seeing from the poor community."

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

JOSEPH CURRAN
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
I. W. ABEL
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON
PETER BOMMARITO
JOHN F. GRINER
LOUIS STULBERG
ALEXANDER J. ROHAN
AL H. CHESSER

JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
KARL F. FELLER
HUNTER P. WHARTON
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN
PETER FOSCO
FREDERICK O'NEAL
JERRY WURF
JAMES T. HOUSEWRIGHT
MARTIN J. WARD

JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
PAUL HALL
PAUL JENNINGS
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS
THOMAS W. GLEASON
FLOYD E. SMITH
S. FRANK RAFTERY
GEORGE HARDY
WILLIAM SIDELL

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

(202) 293-5000

October 18, 1972

Dear Emory:

Where is that letter on program ideas? I am considering giving the delegates the new book by Senator Gore "Let The Glory Out." Have you seen it?

Sincerely,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
AFL-CIO Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Programs
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
52 Fairlie St., N.W., 2nd Floor
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

RAYMOND M. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
C. G. GOMILLION, VICE-PRESIDENT
LUCIUS H. PITTS, VICE-PRESIDENT
VIVIAN W. HENDERSON, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
GEORGE H. ESSER, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
52 FAIRLIE STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
522-8764

October 23, 1972

Mr. George Guernsey
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815-16 Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

Dear George:

Following is a variety of suggestions that you may want to consider as program ideas for the Southern Labor School.

1. Tax Reform and Revenue Sharing with a focus on what is happening to property taxes and if they are abandoned, what takes their place. I also think that a discussion of labor's role such as whether state bodies become "watchdogs" regarding revenue sharing in their own state would be interesting.

2. A program on guaranteed income and welfare reform especially in terms of what is happening now, the current political situation, and what has been reported to date on some of the trial experiments such as in New Jersey and North Carolina.

3. When is the last time someone took a hard look from the union perspective on organizing low-income workers.

4. There is a new kind of "third party" intervention that has been taking place in several unionized situations. This occurs especially where a civil rights type group enter into either strike action or negotiations where they are not the direct collaborator with a union but where a union is present. Potentially these kinds of interventions range all the way from trying to make the union be more representative, more aggressive to having overtones that border on extortion or a violation of the legally protected exclusive bargaining agent status.

5. The human problems and promise in Appalachia. Kathy and Si Kahn could handle such a discussion as well as being on hand for conversation and entertainment. They seemed to have worked quite well in their relations with the Textile Workers. You could also use Jack Guillebeaux, jointly or separately, who heads the Black Appalachian Commission.

6. Rural Economic and Social Development. This would be a different theme for Ray Marshall.

7. Students rights and the Student's Role in School Desegregation. Leon Hall, on our staff, could give an informed and lively presentation based on first-hand contact with students and school situations.

8. Other education topics might include some new areas such as teacher training,materials and textbooks, and metropolitization of schools, or an oldie such as busing. On a sort of survey of what is going on in teacher training and/or the textbook field in the South, John Egerton, who is working with us out of Nashville, would be useful. I would think that in either of these fields you yourself might want to do some support of the session in terms of relating facts and theory to potential good practices. Egerton could also deal with busing.

9. On the matter of nutrition and its relation to health or the problems and prospects of food programs as related to nutrition, a Dr. James P. Carter, Project Director for Maternal and Child Health, at MeHary Medical College in Nashville, Tennessee should be helpful. Although I do not know anything about him as an adult educator, he is a well informed and concerned person.

10. My recollection is The Federationist had an article on cable tv. I think that a discussion of its implications for unions, do-good groups, and perhaps getting into the problem of program adequacy, regulation, and the relation to freedom of information could be very interesting.

You will note my late calling and impatient friend that this letter is being written on a day that you are taking a holiday.

Best personal wishes. I hope that the program goes well and I will try to be on hand for a visit.

Sincerely,

Emory

Emory F. Via

EFV/gms

April 25, 1966

Mr. James Pierce
Southern Coordinator
Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 12245
Charlotte, North Carolina

Dear Jim:

Enclosed are two copies of the Voter Education Project guidelines and a copy of my letter to you of April 7th.

I am at a loss to explain the failure in your receiving the materials.

Good to have been with you in Durham.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures: 2 copies of VEP guidelines letter of April 7, EV to Jim Pierce

AIR MAIL

April 7, 1966

Mr. James Pierce
Southern Coordinator
Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO
2121 Commonwealth Avenue
Charlotte, North Carolina

Dear Jim:

Following your phone call to me yesterday and your request for information regarding the Voter Education Project, I am sending you two copies of the guidelines developed by the Project in considering request for grants.

It is my understanding that other requests have already come in from the Charlotte area. If you intend to make a request, I would suggest that you do so at the earliest date which allows you to put together a thoughtful proposal.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosures

April 26, 1966

Mr. James Pierce
Southern Coordinator
Industrial Union Department,
AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 12245
Charlotte, North Carolina

Dear Jim:

I thought some of the items on pages 7-9 might be pertinent to your interest in migrant labor.

If needed, in some cases I might be helpful in securing the material for you. Just let me know.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure: Univ. of Wisc. IRRI Report, October 1965

INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPARTMENT, AFL-CIO
Labor Building, Room 212
P. O. Box
Charlotte, N. C. 28205
Phone: 334-4749

AFL-CIO- I.U.D.

Memorandum

Date: April 26,1966

To : Emory Via

From : Jim Pierce

Subject : Voter Registration Proposal

Thanks, Emory. We received the material today and got the guys together tonight and wrote this up. They are very enthusiastic. Any help you can give us will be most appreciated.

Jim

P.O.Box 12245,
Charlotte, N.C. 28205

April 26, 1966

Mr. Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Director, Voter Education Project
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

RE: Voter Education Project
Charlotte, N.C.

Dear Mr. Jordan,

Please consider this letter as a request from the Eastside Council and the Westside Council for a grant from the Southern Regional Council, Inc. for the purpose of conducting a voter registration, citizenship education, and leadership training program in the Mecklenburg County area of North Carolina.

For your information the Eastside and Westside Councils are composed of responsible Negro business and professional leaders in the two major areas of Charlotte in which a majority of the Negro population resides. In addition, we are attempting to include responsible Negro leaders in other areas of Charlotte; in smaller towns in the county; and in the rural areas. Our purpose is to form a responsible, solid coalition of all Negro groups in Mecklenburg County.

We are appealing to you to assist us in a voter registration, citizenship education, and leddership training program to include the complete county and all facets of the Negro community. The following information is being sent to you for the purpose of explaining our need for your assistance.

AREA OF OPERATION:

The area of operation would include all areas of Mecklenburg County, including the rural area. It would include all existing organizations presently engaged in the above listed activities and will be extended to include areas of operation in which there is no existing organization.

THE NEED:

At the present time there is over 35,000 Negroes residing in this area who are eligible to vote, if they were registered. However, presently there is only about 17,000 of them actually registered. To make matters worse, there has been an inordinate amount of movement in the Negro community brought on by the massive movement of Negro families through urban renewal and area redevelopement. More are subject to move in the near future as those programs are accelerated. In Mecklenburg County voters are dropped from the registration list, and are ineligible to vote, if they move and do not appear personally at the Board of Registration for the purpose of correcting their address.

TIME FACTOR:

The primary elections are scheduled for May 28, with a probable runoff a few weeks later. Both parties have fielded candidates for all major posts thereby assuring an active campaign in the November General Election. The program should start immediately and continue through the General Election.

COST:

It would cost at least $15,000 to effectively finance the proper type of program in the time limits as outlined above. The program would necessarily include voter education programs, transportation, secretarial costs, leadership training courses, correspondence and educational material and associated activities.

BACKGROUND:

There are a number of organizations who are interested in this type of program. We would incorporate them into an overall steering committee so that they would all be involved in the program and so that their prior experience could be utilized.

There are a number of appointed Negroes in the area. These include law enforcement officers, welfare officers, commission members and other positions of importance. There is a Negro appointed to the Urban Renewal Commission. One Negro was elected to the City Commission.

More important, there are four Negroes who are candidated in the upcoming elections; one for the House of Representatives, one for the County Commission, and two for the Board of Education. Three of these have wide-based support in all parts of the community and a good chance of being elected.

If the Southern Regional Council agrees to extend the requested grant we assure you that we will handle the money carefully and account for it fully; we will cooperate with any and all organizations who are interested in this type of operation; and will not use any of the money to advance the candidacy of any candidate or for other partisan political purposes.

Respectfully submitted,

Henry Wallace
President, Eastside Council

Sidney G. Cunningham
President, Westside Council

Robert Davis
Secretary, Eastside Council

Don O. Hairston
Secretary, Westside Council

January 24, 1967

Mr. Marvin Caplan
Industrial Union Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Marvin:

Al Kehrer asked that I send you some copies of our "School Desegregation, 1966; The Slow Undoing". Fifteen copies are being sent to you under separate cover.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

February 20, 1967

Mr. Jack Conway
I.U.D.
AFL-CIO
815 16th St., N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Jack:

This rather full report may not have come to your attention. I thought the attitudes expressed towards unions would be of special interest.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

February 21, 1967

Mr. James Pierce, Coordinator
I.U.D.
2525 Commonwealth Ave.
Charlotte, N.C.

Dear Jim:

This rather full report may not have come to your attention. I thought the attitudes expressed towards unions would be of special interest.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

February 21, 1967

Mr. James Pierce, Coordinator
I.U.D.
2525 Commonwealth Ave.
Charlotte, N.C.

Dear Mr. Pierce:

AFL-CIO

IUD

NEWS, WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 4, 1969

Abel's Leadership Praised:

IUD Convention Votes Funds For Organizing, Bargaining

By Eugene A. Kelly

Atlantic City—The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. voted new two-year terms for its top officers at the department's eighth convention and doubled its per capita tax to finance an intensified program of organizing, coordinated bargaining and contract analysis.

Delegates from 61 unions affiliated for 5.7 million members unanimously elected Pres. I. W. Abel for his first full term.

They approved five changes in the IUD constitution, including an increase in per capita payments of affiliated unions from 2 cents a month per member to 4 cents. And they adopted a series of policy statements for the guidance of the president, 24 vice presidents and the two IUD operating heads—Organizational Dir. Nicholas Zonarich and Administrative Dir. Jacob Clayman.

The convention expressed its "deep gratitude" to Abel for "leading the department out of its darkest depths to the threshold of its greatest achievements."

The convention tribute to Abel, who also is president of the Steelworkers, noted that "less than two years ago the IUD was in trouble. The only leadership it had ever known had suddenly departed. Its treasury was depleted and much of its staff dispersed."

Since Abel agreed to accept the presidency, the resolution noted, "judicious management has balanced the financial books. Department services have been restored," within financial limits. "Modest beginnings have been made on new programs."

The statement said "a quiet redemption of this kind makes few headlines but its ultimate significance to the labor movement . . . can hardly be exaggerated."

In opening the convention as presiding officer, Abel was strongly applauded when he pledged that IUD will "continue as a strong and respectable part of the AFL-CIO" and "never forget that we are an arm of the AFL-CIO." As members of a team, "we will function as part of that team," he promised.

Abel called on the delegates to "make common cause with all . . . who seek social and economic justice." This is, he emphasized, "a time to join hands —to re-cement the political and social coalition" between labor, the minorities, family farmers and the liberal and intellectual community.

The delegates elected Pres. Floyd E. Smith of the Machinists as a vice president replacing P. L. Siemiller, retired, and Pres. Thomas E. Boyle of the Chemical Workers as a vice president to succeed the late ICWU Pres. Walter L. Mitchell. All other board members were reelected.

Abel emphasized the IUD's interest in working conditions by naming a new IUD Committee on Safety & Health to follow through on department programs. Members are Presidents Peter Bommarito of the Rubber Workers, A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America, Harry D. Sayre of the Papermakers & Paperworkers, Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers, Smith of the IAM and Steelworkers' Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony.

Major policy resolutions:

- Supported strikes of the Farm Workers against California grape growers; of the Cement Workers against Universal Atlas Cement Co., a subsidiary of the U.S. Steel Corp., and newspaper unions against Hearst's Los Angeles Herald-Examiner.
- Urged that a broad national health insurance system be financed from federal funds, and that unions negotiate more prepaid health care plans.
- Called on every union in the IUD to "redouble" its COPE efforts in 1969 and 1970.

The convention asked Congress to pass the Williams-O'Hara Occupational Safety & Health bill setting national standards; urged all-out union involvement in the war against pollution; and asked adoption of a new welfare system and coverage of the working poor by a wage-hour law with a $2.50-an-hour minimum wage.

I.U.D

union coalition's commitment to upset GE's "Boulwarism," or hard-bargaining policy. Strong support is coming from the Industrial Union Dept. headed by I. W. Abel, president of the United Steelworkers. Both leaders and their organizations see the GE bargaining as an "all labor" campaign that rates the fullest backing—with money, manpower, and political assistance. They and other labor chieftains say the fight is "important to the whole trade union movement," and have called for mobilization.

To underscore the battle's importance, the federation has relaxed its policy of non-collaboration with the United Auto Workers and International Brotherhood of Teamsters, core of the new Alliance for Labor Action. This permits UAW and Teamsters representatives to sit with IUE and coalition negotiators in the GE talks. While the two outside unions are barred from the coalition bargaining committee, they are kept advised about its activities through what the Auto Workers board once called an "under-the-table" formula.

The independent United Electrical Workers also is bargaining with GE now, separately, and its demands parallel those of the IUE. The two rival electrical unions are keeping in close touch—Albert J. Fitzgerald, UE president, says that "the unity of workers and among the GE unions has never been greater."

Prospects. Into this week, discussions between the company and the IUE centered almost entirely on contract language. The union was insisting that GE commit itself on non-economic issues before turning to money matters, while the employer argued that discussion of economic matters would clear the way to settlements.

Important strategy was involved on both sides. General Electric's maneuvers were intended to pin down IUE and other unions on cost items and to get "comments or questions" on facts and figures offered by GE before GE put its firm offer on the table. IUE was insisting on "written counter-proposals from GE on union requests for improvements in working conditions" as a prerequisite for the start of economic talks; the union's negotiators saw a possibility that once money was settled on, other issues would be left unresolved.

Each side criticized the other for stalling. From the outside, it appeared that there was a stalemate over what to talk about first, money or some 100 contract language proposals by IUE. Each side said the other's tactics were bringing on crisis bargaining that could lead to a strike.

Initiative. In the past, GE was able to take and hold the bargaining initiative. In this round, IUE has prevented the company from dominating talks but it has not succeeded in gaining the initiative completely. Now, there is a grim fight as one side tries to force the other to give ground.

Union leader I. W. Abel sees possible need arising for a four-day work week.

IUD builds up its war chest

The AFL-CIO's Industrial Union Dept.—short of both dynamism and funds since the departure of former IUD President Walter P. Reuther last year—took steps last week to generate both. An IUD convention in Atlantic City voted to double the per capita tax of affiliated unions in order to step up organizing and coordinated bargaining activities.

The tax was raised from 2¢ to 4¢ a month for each member of an affiliated union, a formula which should produce $220,000 monthly based on the unions' total membership of 5.5-million.

The immediate effect of the change will be to convert the financing of IUD organizing campaigns from a subsidized, temporary affair to a more solidly based program, an IUD spokesman said. At present, half a dozen affiliated unions contribute $25,000 in manpower and money to IUD each month, a stopgap arrangement made necessary by the department's money troubles of the past few years. The subsidy ends when the new tax starts.

Bind. United Steelworkers President I. W. Abel, Reuther's successor as head of IUD, recounted the history of the financial crisis in his report to the convention.

In 1963, IUD launched an 18-month organizing campaign that was predicated on receiving $4-million from all sources. IUD's treasury was to give $1-million, another $1-million was to come from its then major affiliate, Reuther's United Auto Workers, and $2-million was due from all other affiliated unions. IUD attempted to continue organizing activities on this scale in succeeding years. But by 1967, the UAW had stopped contributing as part of its escalating feud with AFL-CIO, a conflict that led to its withdrawal the following year. Other union contributions dropped off.

As a result, the bulk of expenses were met from IUD reserves. Abel told the convention that when he took over in 1968, IUD's treasury was down to $650,000. The men-and-money subsidy from several unions together with the 2¢-per-head levy enabled the department to continue on an austerity basis. Now the higher income per capita will permit it to operate more actively in organizing, in coordinating bargaining among unions dealing with the same employer or industry, and in offering data bank service, Abel said.

Modern tools. The data bank, IUD's most recent innovation, is a computerized, running record of contract settlements to make available up-to-date information on the wages and fringe benefits negotiated by affiliated unions.

In the national sphere, Abel called on both industry and the government to consider the possibility of a four-day week to offset high levels of unemployment that unions say might develop as a result of present economic policies. Although industry has been automating rapidly, it has simultaneously continued to use old-style production facilities because of strong demand for products, Abel said.

These old-style facilities employ proportionately more workers than the new. When and if demand weakens, they will be the first to be closed, he predicted, magnifying the effect on employment of any slowdown. A four-day week would be a moderating factor, he said.

Behind the reason. But more might be involved than a simple itch to get another four-day work-week campaign under way.

In the past, David J. McDonald, Abel's predecessor as USW president, made good use of shorter work-week talk between bargaining rounds to whip up union enthusiasm in steel mills. The last USW election and recent rumblings of dissatisfaction in the steel union's rank-and-file have left Abel in need of such a lift within USW.

The situation is somewhat similar within IUD. Although Reuther lacked major leadership support inside the department, he had personal appeal and unionists looked to him for innovations. Now that Abel is trying to put IUD back into operation as an effective, attention-winning organization, he needs an issue as much as the dues increase. The four-day week idea, however old, is still popular.

There is one further reason why Abel might have sounded off on the issue at this time: AFL-CIO and all of its unions want the Nixon Administration's anti-inflation policies eased—and a threat of bargaining and lobbying for a shortened work-week could bring added pressures from business and other sources for a moderation of the government position. The shorter work-week issue is a can of worms nobody wants opened. End

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
WILLIAM POLLOCK

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

April 17, 1967

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I have heard a lot about your work on enforcemnt of the Minimum Wage Law -- Congratulations!

As you might know the enclosed reprint from the February Federationist is now available. Also would you please send me a copy of your minimum wage kit.

Sincerely yours,

Rudolph Oswald

Rudolph Oswald, Economist
Department of Research

Enclosure

July 22, 1969

Mr. Arnold Cantor
AFL-CIO
Department of Research
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Arnold:

When you were in Atlanta I discussed sending you a copy of a manuscript by Eva Galambos for comment. It is enclosed.

You are receiving a draft copy and we recognize that it needs some routine editing. I know that your schedule is a busy one but if you could read this critically and pass your suggestions on to me it would be both helpful and appreciated.

I hope you will be able to get to this.

Thanks.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enc. - 1

November 14, 1969

Mr. Arnold Cantor
Research Department
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Arnold:

Enclosed is a copy of The Tax Structure of the Southern States. I feel sure that George Guernsey has already forwarded a copy to you.

I want to thank you again personally and on behalf of Bob Anderson, our editor, for having read the manuscript. You contributed to improving this publication and we are grateful.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enc. - 1

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

REGION NO. 6, OLIVER W. SINGLETON, DIRECTOR
501 PULLIAM STREET, S.W., RM. 505
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30312
(404) 524-5001

June 25, 1971

TO: Friends & Co-Workers of Oliver W. Singleton

FROM: Staff of Region 6, AFL-CIO

The staff of Region 6, AFL-CIO cordially invites you to attend a "Retirement Banquet" in honor of our Director, Oliver Singleton, who will be retiring July 31 of this year.

The affair will be held:

Friday, July 30, 1971
7:30 p.m.
Citation Room
Executive Park Motel
1447 North East Expressway
(North Druid Hills Exit off I-85 North)
Atlanta, Georgia

Tickets for the banquet will be $10.00 per person. This will cover cost for your dinner and an appreciation gift for Mr. & Mrs. Singleton. Checks or money orders should be made out to Miss Elaine Cook, our office secretary. It would be appreciated if you would purchase your tickets no later than July 26. No tickets will be sold at the door.

As we are planning this as a surprise banquet, we ask that you not mention it to Director Singleton. Also, when writing for tickets, please address them to Miss Cook, at this office, and your tickets will be promptly mailed to you.

ec
opeiu#2
afl-cio

AFL-CIO Department of Social Security

Washington, D.C.
December, 1968

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR STATE UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

(For the information and guidance of state affiliates)

1. Coverage. Our long-range goal is to cover all wage and salaried workers. Based on previous experience, coverage of the following groups would seem to be the most easily attainable:

   a. Covering small establishments with fewer than four workers, down to one worker at any time.

   b. Removing present exclusions of workers in agricultural processing establishments, nonprofit institutions, and state and local governments.

   c. Broadening the definition of employer so that employees of subcontractors will be covered.

Other long-range objectives should include:

   a. Removing present exclusions of agricultural workers.

   b. Broadening the definition of employee so that groups not included such as those individual contractors who in fact have an employment relationship, will be covered.

2. Wage Qualifying Requirements. These are necessary but arbitrary definitions of who is attached to the labor force. Any proposed change should be researched for estimates of the number of exclusions it would cause, preferably with an industry breakdown. This can be done by the state unemployment insurance agency.

   a. Employment should not be required in more than two quarters of the base year.

   b. Low wage earners should not have to work longer than high wage earners to establish their right to benefits.

   c. Outside limits may be defined as follows: where a multiple of the weekly benefit amount is used, it should not require base year earnings of more than 30 times the weekly benefit amount; where a multiple of high quarter earnings is used, it should not require base year earnings of more than 1½ times high quarter earnings whether expressed as a multiple of the weekly benefit amount or of high quarter earnings.*

*For example, when the weekly benefit amount is 1/20th of the high quarter earnings, the base year earnings should be not more than 30 times the weekly benefit amount.

d. A claimant should not be required to meet more than one formula or type of wage qualifying requirement.

3. Benefits.

a. The State benefit formula should provide for flexible maximum weekly benefit amounts so that benefits will automatically keep pace with wages.

The individual's weekly benefit should be equal to 66 2/3 percent of the worker's past full-time earnings (or at least 1/20th of high quarter wages) and in no case less than 50 percent.

The State maximum weekly benefit amount should equal 66 2/3 percent of the statewide average weekly wage in covered employment. Provision should be made for annual or semiannual computation of the maximum weekly benefit amount.

If the statewide maximum benefit amount cannot be raised to this level immediately, it should progressively approach this level in a series of steps, for example:

50 percent for the benefit year beginning between July 1, 1969 and June 30, 1970

60 percent for the benefit year beginning between July 1, 1970 and June 30, 1971

66 2/3 percent for the benefit year beginning on or after July 1, 1972.

b. These ratios should apply to gross earnings in those weeks of the base year when wages were highest.

c. The maximum should be stated as a percentage of wages in covered employment but in no case should a maximum less than 50 percent of average wages be established. (If you can't get the maximum that high, postpone seeking a flexible maximum and don't state it as a percentage.)

4. Duration. Every claimant should be entitled to at least 26 weeks under state law. For variable duration provisions, this should be the minimum rather than the maximum. Where this is unachievable, the formula should, at least, provide the overwhelming majority of workers 26 weeks of benefits with a minimum of at least 20 weeks and a maximum of at least 30 weeks.

5. Eligibility and Disqualifications.

a. The "waiting week" should be eliminated or at least compensated retroactively after a few weeks of unemployment.

b. The "availability requirement" should be limited to registration and availability for suitable work, which term should be properly described, and it should specifically permit a worker to refuse uncovered employment.

c. A person able and available for suitable work should be disqualified only for the following reasons and not in excess of the periods noted:

(1) Leaving suitable work without good cause -- preferably 4 weeks; and in any event no more than 6 weeks
(2) Discharge for misconduct connected with the work -- preferably 4 weeks; and in any event no more than 6 weeks
(3) Refusing suitable work without good cause; good cause should be broad enough to include causes that are not work-connected -- preferably 4 weeks; and in any event no more than 6 weeks
(4) Fraud -- six weeks; with additional weeks, if any, based on the number of weeks involved in the fraud, but not to exceed 12 weeks
(5) Labor disputes -- there should be no disqualification in case of:

lockout
layoff during negotiations an employer violation of any state or federal labor law, or any arbitration decision a worker not directly interested in the labor dispute, and a labor dispute occuring at a location other than the worker's place of employment.

If a disqualification is provided, it should not extend beyond a limited period (maximum of six weeks) after which the dispute can no longer be considered the main reason for continued unemployment.

d. There should be no denial of benefits for a person participating in training courses with the approval of the state agency.

e. There should be no reduction or cancellation of a worker's benefit rights or base period wages.

6. Financing. To secure the soundness of the funds, the following three measures should be taken:

a. Experience rating should be eliminated or brought within bounds by reducing the range between maximum and minimum tax rates; in any event zero rates should be eliminated.

b. Alternative tax schedules should be triggered by fund levels stated as ratios to the total wage base. The fund should be maintained by such trigger points and tax schedules so that it does not fall below the benefit amounts paid out in the highest cost 18 months during the last 10 years.

c. The taxable wage base should be raised to at least the same base in use in Old-Age and Survivors Insurance ($7,800 effective January 1968.) This could be accomplished in a series of steps over a period of years, for example:

$3,800 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1969
$4,800 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1970
$6,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1971
$7,200 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1972, and to the tax base used for old age, survivors, and disability insurance for fiscal years beginning after July 1, 1973.

Unemployment Insurance Under State Laws, Jan. 1, 1969[3]

	Average Weekly Benefit Paid for Total Unemployment 1967 [1]	Maximum Weekly Benefits [2]	Average Weekly Wages in Covered Employment 1967 [1]	Basic Maximum Weekly Benefit as a Percentage of Average Weekly Wages: Now	Basic Maximum Weekly Benefit as a Percentage of Average Weekly Wages: 1939	Duration of Benefits by Weeks [4]	Percentage of Claimants Who Exhausted Benefits 1967 [1]	Estimated Average Employer Tax Rate, 1968: Percentage of Taxable Payrolls [5]	Estimated Average Employer Tax Rate, 1968: Percentage of Total Payrolls
United States	$41		$119				19%	1.5%	.8%
Alabama	31	$44	101	44	87	13-26	30	.9	.5
Alaska	44	55-80	183	30	41	15-28	22	2.9	2.3
Arizona	38	50	115	44	61	12-26	21	1.6	1.0
Arkansas	30	44 [7]	86	50 [7]	95	10-26	22	1.4	.9
California	50	65	134	48	50	12-26 [6]	23	2.8	1.7
Colorado	48	56 [7]	113	50 [7]	62	10-26	14	.5	.3
Connecticut	45	70-105 [7]	127	60 [7]	56	22-26 [6]	20	1.8	1.0
Delaware	45	55	128	43	58	14-26	13	.9	.5
District of Columbia	45	60 [7]	120	50 [7]	59	17-34	20	.8	.4
Florida	30	40	105	38	81	10-26	32	.7	.4
Georgia	35	45	101	44	87	9-26	27	1.2	.7
Hawaii	50	68 [7]	109	67 [7]	85	26 [6]	20	1.8	1.3
Idaho	43	53 [7]	101	53 [7]	82	10-26 [6]	22	1.8	1.2
Illinois	44	42-70	130	32	56	10-26 [6]	19	.2	.1
Indiana	36	40-52	123	33	58	12-26	25	1.1	.6
Iowa	44	55 [7]	109	50 [7]	67	11-26	21	.6	.3
Kansas	41	53 [7]	108	50 [7]	66	10-26	18	1.2	.7
Kentucky	37	49 [7]	105	47 [7]	69	15-26	20	1.0	.6
Louisiana	37	50	112	45	90	12-28	30	1.2	.7
Maine	35	49 [7]	98	50 [7]	74	12½-26	19	1.1	.7
Maryland	40	56	110	51	65	26	10	.9	.5
Massachusetts	43	57 & up [8]	114	50	57	9-30	20	2.0	1.2
Michigan	48	46-76	139	33	53	10-26	15	1.3	.7
Minnesota	40	50	115	43	62	12-26	23	1.1	.8
Mississippi	26	40	90	44	97	12-26	19	.7	.5
Missouri	38	53	118	45	61	10-26	14	.9	.5
Montana	32	34	102	33	60	13-26	26	1.5	.9
Nebraska	36	44	98	45	66	11-26	24	.7	.4
Nevada	43	43-63	125	34	57	11-26	24	2.0	1.3
New Hampshire	38	54	103	53	70	26 ~~34~~	1	1.1	.7
New Jersey	41	65 [7]	129	50 [7]	55	12-26	23	2.1	1.2
New Mexico	32	40	102	39	73	18-30	14	1.3	.7
New York	43	65	132	49	51	26	14	2.0	1.0
North Carolina	29	42	93	45	89	26 [6]	14	1.3	.8
North Dakota	41	49 [7]	97	50 [7]	69	18-26	18	2.1	1.3
Ohio	41	47-66	129	37	54	20-26	12	1.0	.5
Oklahoma	28	38	107	36	61	16-39	29	.7	.4
Oregon	38	49	116	42	53	11-26	16	1.5	.9
Pennsylvania	37	60	116	52	60	18-30 [6]	10	1.4	.8
Puerto Rico	20	33 [7]	65	50 [7]	—	12 [6]	61	2.7	2.1
Rhode Island	40	53-73 [7]	105	50 [7]	70	12-26	18	2.0	1.3
South Carolina	32	46 [7]	92	50 [7]	99	10-22	29	1.3	.8
South Dakota	33	41	92	45	69	16-26	27	.8	.5
Tennessee	31	42	99	42	78	12-26	22	1.5	1.0
Texas	31	45	110	41	65	9-26	29	.4	.2
Utah	40	51 [7]	103	50 [7]	70	10-36	26	1.5	1.0
Vermont	39	53 [7]	105	50 [7]	66	26 [6]	12	1.9	1.3
Virginia	33	48	100	48	74	12-26	21	.6	.4
Washington	33	42	128	33	57	15-30	17	2.0	1.0
West Virginia	28	47 [7]	118	40 [7]	59	26	12	1.4	.8
Wisconsin	48	63 [7]	119	53 [7]	55	14-34	15	1.6	.9
Wyoming	41	51 [7]	100	50 [7]	78	11-26	13	1.4	.9

[1] Calendar 1967

[2] Where two figures are shown, the larger includes maximum dependents' allowances.

[3] Includes all legislation enacted in 1968 regardless of effective date.

[4] Where two figures are shown, the lower represents the shortest possible duration. In most States this is the entitlement of a claimant with minimum weekly benefits and minimum qualifying wages. But in six States a higher than minimum weekly benefit amount may result in shorter duration where the distribution of earnings is concentrated in the high quarter.

[5] Taxable wages have remained at the first $3,000 of employees' earnings since 1939 except in Tennessee ($3,300); Arizona, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming ($3,600); California and Nevada ($3,800); Utah ($4,200); Minnesota ($4,800); Alaska ($7,200); Hawaii ($4,800 computed annually at 90 percent of State average annual wage); and North Dakota (computed annually at 70 percent, not to exceed $3,100 in 1969).

[6] Benefits are extended when unemployment in State reaches specified levels in: California, Connecticut, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Pennsylvania and Vermont, by 50 percent; in North Carolina by 8 weeks; and in Puerto Rico, benefits are extended by 40 weeks in certain industries, occupations or establishments when a special unemployment situation exists.

[7] Maximum weekly benefit is determined as a specified percent of average weekly covered wages and is computed annually at 40 percent in West Virginia; 46.75 (expressed in law as 55 percent of 85 percent) percent in Kentucky; 50 percent in Arkansas, District of Columbia, Kansas, Iowa, Maine, New Jersey, North Dakota, Puerto Rico, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, Vermont, and Wyoming; 52.5 percent (but not less than $10) in Idaho; 66⅔ percent in Hawaii; computed semi-annually in Wisconsin at 52.5 percent; in Colorado 50 percent of average weekly wages in selected industries; and in Connecticut 60 percent (not to exceed $70 to October 1969) of the statewide average weekly wage for production and related workers. The base year used for setting the maximum is not necessarily annual 1967 shown in this table, which explains why the percentage figures in the fourth column may vary slightly from the statutory percentages.

[8] Augmented amount includes $6 per dependent up to individual's average weekly wage.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
815 16th STREET, N.W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

GEORGE MEANY
President

Publication No. 36-L

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER
Secretary-Treasurer

17 - 17

Workmen's Compensation Under State Laws, Jan. 1, 1969

Jurisdiction	Temporary Total Disability[1] Intended Benefit as % of Weekly Wage	Actual Maximum Weekly Benefit Allowed	Maximum Duration in Weeks	Death Benefits Maximum Total Payments	Maximum[2] Medical Care	Maintenance Benefits for Vocational Rehabilitation	Coverage of Occupational Disease
Alabama	55-65%	$44	400	$17,600 [11]	2 yrs.—$6,000	No	3
Alaska	65	113	W,C-18 [4]	20,000	7	Yes	Full
Arizona	65 [5]	150 [6]	W,C-18 [4]	.....	.....	Yes	Limited
Arkansas	65	49	W,C	.....	6 mos.[7]	Yes	Full
California	61¾	87.50	250-293	20,000-23,000	F.P.	No	Full
Colorado	66⅔	54.25	312	16,980-20,501	6 mos.—$5,000 [21]	No	Limited
Connecticut	66⅔	76-114 [6]	W,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
Delaware	66⅔	50	400,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	No	Full
District of Columbia	66⅔	70	W,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
Florida	60	49	350	15,000	F.P.	No	Full
Georgia	60	50	400	18,000	$5,000	No	Limited
Hawaii	66⅔	112.50	W,C-20 [4]	35,100 [10]	F.P.	Yes	Full
Idaho	55-60	37-63	400,C-18 [4]	16,000	F.P.	No	Limited
Illinois	65-80	62-76	W,C-18 [4]	15,000-21,000	.....	No	Full
Indiana	60	51	450	25,000 [11]	[7]	No	Full
Iowa	66⅔	40-56	300	14,250	[7]	No	Limited
Kansas	60	49	W,C-18 [4]	16,500	$8,500	No	Limited
Kentucky	66⅔	47 [6]	400	16,000 [11]	7 ~~$3,500~~	No	Full
Louisiana	65	35	400	14,000	$12,500	No	Limited
Maine	66⅔	65.17 [6]	W,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
Maryland	66⅔	55 [12]	500	35,000	F.P.	Yes	Full
Massachusetts	66⅔	62 [13]	400,C-18 [4]	16,000	F.P.	Yes	Full
Michigan	66⅔	64-93	500.C-21 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
Minnesota	66⅔	60	W,C-18 [4]	25,000 [11]	F.P.	Yes	Full
Mississippi	66⅔	40	450	17,000	F.P.	Yes	Not by Statute 16
Missouri	66⅔	57	W,C-18 [4]	17,500	7	Yes	Full
Montana	50-66⅔	37-60	600	22,200-36,000	36 mos.—$2,500 [14]	Yes	Limited
Nebraska	66⅔	45	325	14,625	F.P.	No	Full
Nevada	65-90	52.50-72.69	W,C-18 [4]	.....	[20]	No	Full
New Hampshire	66⅔	58	341	19,778	[19]	No	Full
New Jersey	66⅔	83 [6]	W,C-18 [4]	.....	[7]	No	Full
New Mexico	60	45	500	22,500	5 yrs.—$5,000 [7]	No	Limited
New York	66⅔	85	W,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
North Carolina	60	42	350	15,000	10 wks.[7]	No	Limited
North Dakota	80	50-75	W,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
Ohio	66⅔	63 [12]	.....	17,000-20,000	.....	Yes	Full
Oklahoma	66⅔	45	.....	13,500	60 days [7]	No	Limited
Oregon	50-75	39.13-73.65	W,C-18 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full
Pennsylvania	66⅔	60	W,C-18 [4]	.....	1 yr.[15]	No	Full
Puerto Rico	66⅔	45	W,C-18-25 [4]	.....	F.P.	No	Full
Rhode Island	66⅔	50-62 [8]	500	.....	900-1,500 7	No	Full
South Carolina	60	50	350	17,500	10 wks.[7]	No	Full
South Dakota	55	44	.....	15,000-20,000	$1,700 [7]	No	Limited
Tennessee	65	42	W,C-18 [4]	16,000	2 yr.—$5,000	No	Limited
Texas	60	35	360	12,600	.....	No	Limited
Utah	60	44-62	312	13,728-19,344	$1,283.38 [7]	Yes	Full
Vermont	66⅔	54 [13]	W,C [4]	17,820	F.P.	No	Limited
Virginia	60	51	300	20,400	90 days [7]	No	Limited
Washington	....	42.69-81.23	W,C-18 [4]	.....	.....	No	Full
West Virginia	66⅔	47	W,C-18-22 [4]	.....	$3,000 [17]	Yes	Full
Wisconsin	70	73	400	20,858 [18]	F.P.	Yes	Full
Wyoming	66⅔	43.85-63.46	W,C-18 [4]	13,000-23,000	[7]	No	Not by Statute 16
Federal-Employes	66⅔-75	370.83	W,C-18-22 [4]	.....	F.P.	Yes	Full

[1] The lower figure represents the benefit for a single worker; the higher the maximum for workers with dependents.

[2] Benefits may not exceed period of time or amounts indicated. F.P. indicates full payment of all medical aid and hospitalization required.

[3] Covers only specified dust or pulmonary disease and/or disease caused by the inhalation of poisonous gases or fumes, and radiation diseases.

[4] "W" means payment to widow until death or remarriage; "C" means payment to children until age specified. The higher figure represents age if child is attending approved educational institution. Vermont continues benefit to dependent children regardless of age while they are regularly attending school, and to widow until she is remarried, or she is entitled to social security benefits, or death.

[5] Plus an additional $10.00 per month if there are total dependents.

[6] Maximum weekly benefit amount 55 percent of 85 percent of the average wage as computed by the Employment Security Commission in Kentucky, 50 percent of statewide average weekly wage as reported under the State Employment Insurance Act in Vermont, and 66⅔ percent in Maine and New Jersey, 60 percent of the statewide average weekly wages of production workers in Connecticut.

[7] May be extended by commission without limit; in Kentucky justifiable need must be shown. The commission may authorize up to $25,000 in New Mexico, $21,000 in South Dakota, and extend benefits for three years in Virginia.

[8] If worker is receiving benefits under the State Temporary Disability Insurance Act, benefits under the Workmen's Compensation Act are limited to $15.00.

[9] An additional $12,500 may be ordered by the court.

[10] Dollar maximum does not apply to children under 18 nor to unmarried children over 18 for 104 weeks beyond their 18th birthday, if incapable of self-support, nor to widow physically or mentally incapable of self-support.

[11] Disability benefits already made are deducted from death benefits payable. Minnesota limits deduction to $17,500.

[12] Maryland $55.00 for the first 42 days, thereafter ⅔ of statewide average weekly wage; in Ohio during the first 12 weeks of disability the amount is $63.00, but thereafter, the maximum amount drops to $56.00.

[13] Massachusetts provides an additional $6.00 for each total dependent not to exceed the average weekly wage of the employee. Vermont provides an additional $3.50 for each dependent child under 21.

[14] In cases of occupational disease, no time limit is imposed. If employee with occupational disease is able to continue work, while undergoing medical treatment, medical benefit is limited to $1,000. In cases of total disability where the $2,500 is insufficient to meet all hospitalization expenses, additional benefits may be allowed.

[15] Medical and surgical cost during first 12 months; hospital treatment not to exceed prevailing charges for the same period; may be extended if employee's earning power would be substantially restored.

[16] ~~Order of Commissioner required if aggregate exceeds $1,500.~~

[17] May be increased without limit, but no medical benefits are payable in silicosis cases.

[18] Additional death benefits payable from state fund for children.

[19] Reasonable medical and hospital services or other remedial care for 6 months and additional 6 month periods upon written request to the Commissioner. Commissioner may grant extension for aid.

[20] Reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital treatment and supplies, crutches and apparatus including artificial members.

[21] Additional payments out of Medical Disaster Insurance Fund in excess of payments under Workmen's Compensation Act and Occupational Disease Act, maximum, $35,000.

[22] The one exception is radiation disease.

....Medical Care may be limited under special circumstances.

Source: For a more complete comparison of the laws, write to the Superintendent of Documents, U. Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., for STATE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAWS, Bulletin 161 with supplement. Price 30 cents.

16

COMBINED

CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS

OSHKOSH, WISCONSIN

JUNE 22-23-24

1 9 6 4

WISCONSIN PAID FIREMEN'S LEGISLATIVE ASSOCIATION

UNITED PROFESSIONAL FIRE FIGHTERS OF WISCONSIN AFL-CIO

United Professional Fire Fighters of Wisconsin

MEMBER OF INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FIRE FIGHTERS
MEMBER OF WISCONSIN STATE A.F. OF L. - C.I.O.

March 23, 1965

Mr. Owen Tapper
School for Workers
University of Wisconsin
Extension Division
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Sir:

Enclosed is a list of the United Professional Fire Fighters of Wisconsin Locals, and the name and address of the Secretary of each Local, which President Royal Taylor requested that I send to you.

Also included is a letter, which our State Association is sending to each Local on March 24, 1965. Most of the Locals have their union meetings scheduled for the first part of each month, so if possible I hope your letter will follow by the first of April.

Sincerely yours,

Eugene P. Mucklin

Eugene P. Mucklin
Secretary-Treasurer
2432 Johnson Road
Kenosha, Wisconsin 53140

United Professional Fire Fighters of Wisconsin

MEMBER OF INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FIRE FIGHTERS
MEMBER OF WISCONSIN STATE A.F. OF L. - C.I.O.

Fire Fighters Local 1000

Number in front of city is the Local number:

1000 Antigo
Ray Kirsch
605 South Clermont Street

257 Appleton
Kenneth C. Kositzke
203 North Oneida Street

875 Ashland
Berkeley Cameron
813 Willis Avenue

583 Beloit
John Gustafson
524 Pleasant St.

487 Eau Claire
Darrel Jepperson
1434 - Hogeboom Ave.

400 Fond Du Lac
Ralph Michaels
250 West Ninth St.

1440 Glendale
Kenneth Peterman
4976 N. Port Washington Rd.

141 Green Bay
Russell Reynolds
501 S. Washington St.

580 Janesville
Edward Wellnitz
303 Milton Avenue

414 Kenosha
Joseph Carlini
4205 22nd. Avenue

127 La Crosse
James Sciborski
1627 Travis Street

311 Madison
John Luther
1517 Troy Drv.
#10 Fire Station

368 Manitowoc
Robert Burtard
911 Franklin Street

226 Marinette
Francis Erickson
1450 Main Street

1021 Marshfield
Marvin Strohman
1212 East 8th.

695 Menasha
Thomas Miller
124 Main Street

847 Merrill
John Prein
1303 W. Main St.

215 Milwaukee
Ray Frankowiak
3755 South 15th. Place

[redacted]

[redacted]

275 Neenah
Vernon Jankowski
606 Knight Avenue

316 Oshkosh
519 Otter Ave
Albert Mauritz

321 Racine
David Russell
1322 State St.

1028 Rhinelander
Harley Samuelson
25 W. Revis St.

483 Sheboygan
Herbert Herman
833 New York Avenue

808 Shorewood
Kenneth Szeklinski
3936 North Murray Ave.

484 Stevens Point
Ray Bartkowiak
626 Strong Ave.

74 Superior
William Torguson
83 Norwood Ave.

423 Two Rivers
Richard Stiefvater
2122 Monroe

877 Watertown
Wayne Wendt
506 North Warren Street

407 Waukesha
Ray Carlson
721 Beechwood Ave.

415 Wausau
Dennis Bwerden
209½ 3rd. St.

1004 West Allis
Donald Liedle
1465 South 95th. Street

1417 West Milwaukee
Leon Zalewski
4726 South 22nD. St.

819 Whitefish Bay
Roland Gasper
825 E. Lexington Blvd.

1054 Wisconsin Rapids
Ceylon Miller
350 1st. Street North

United Professional Fire Fighters of Wisconsin

MEMBER OF INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FIRE FIGHTERS
MEMBER OF WISCONSIN STATE A.F. of L. - C.I.O.

March 23, 1965

Dear Sir and Brother:

Each year the problems of the organized Professional Fire Fighters seem to grow. Not only are we faced with the problems of securing adequate wages, hours, and fringe benefits, but new problems such as disparity, integration, and bargaining in good faith arise.

The 1961 session of the legislature gave Fire Fighters the right to bargain on hours, wages, and working conditions. This law in itself, although designed to be a means to the end has presented problems.

The major problem under the law for Fire Fighters was their lack of understanding the law, and the rights that are now afforded in reaching their objectives. The Executive Board of your State Organization, realizing that many new problems would arise from the Collective Bargaining Law, asked your President to work with the University of Wisconsin School for Workers, to make available to all organized Professional Fire Fighters of Wisconsin, an annual institute on Collective Bargaining.

In accordance with Resolution #8 of the 1964 Convention a School for Workers will again be held in Madison, June 8,9,& 10, 1965.

Comments by fellow Fire Fighters who have attended the past institutes, indorse the program wholeheartily. Therefore we urge every Local to have at least one member in attendance, although there is no limit as to the number each Local may wish to send. This year's attendance will determine whether programs shall be continued or not. Only by attendance to such institutes does your State Board know the desire of Locals, for help in the field of Collective Bargaining.

This is the place to get your answers and to keep pace with your local city administrators, as to what they learn at their institutes and conventions. So make your reservations early! A letter from the University of Wisconsin School for Workers will follow in a few days, stating the time and place to make such reservations.

The road to success for the Professional Fire Fighter in Wisconsin is difficult and challenging, and your State Association urges the Fire Fighters to prepare themselves to meet this challenge, by attending this year's School for Workers.

Royal Taylor - President
Eugene Mucklin - Secretary-Treasurer

VICE PRESIDENTS
James R. King
New York, N. Y.
Vernon C. Cook
Clinton, Iowa
William H. McClennan
Boston, Mass.
Raymond C. Fogarty
Baltimore, Md.
Harland A. Lippolt
Madison, Wis.
Eric Simmons
Victoria, B. C., Can.
Walter Lambert
Spokane, Wash.
Cornelius M. Shea
Chicago, Ill.
Harry E. Williams
Portland, Oreg.
H. C. Harmelink
San Diego, Calif.
Jack Bostick
Fort Worth, Tex.
E. C. Wilcox
Miami, Fla.
Bernard Bonser
Scarborough, Ont., Can.
Raymond L. Perry
Birmingham, Ala.
Percy Clark
St. John, N. B., Can.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FIRE FIGHTERS
905 16TH STREET, N.W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006

William D. Buck
President

Albert E. Albertoni
Secretary-Treasurer

Affiliated with:
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS • CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS • NATIONAL FIRE PROTECTION ASSOCIATION

May 12, 1965

Mr. Emory F. Via, Associate Professor
Labor Education
The University of Wisconsin
432 North Lake St.
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. Via:

I would be pleased to participate in your Fire Fighter Institute, however, my work load is such that I can only arrange to be in Madison June 9, for the afternoon session on wage disparity.

The agenda looks very interesting. I hope I will be able to attend more of the Institute than I can presently foresee.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely and fraternally,

Bill

William A. Lang
Director of Education and Research

WAL/sg
oeiu #2

May 13, 1965

Mr. Wm. A. Lang, Director
Research and Education
Int'l Assn of Fire Fighters
AFL-CIO
905 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Dear Mr. Lang:

Could you send us thirty-five copies of your "On Fire Fighter and Police Salaries" which was published in December, 1964. We would like to have this on hand for our coming institute in June.

Also, has the "Fire Department Salaries and Working Conditions" publication been completed? We would like to have copies of this on hand again this year.

Hope to hear from you soon about your participation in the institute.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Associate Professor
of Labor Education

EFV:bjr

May 20, 1965

Mr. John Lawton
Attorney at Law
119 Monona Avenue
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear John:

This letter will confirm the arrangements we made by phone for your participation in our Fire Fighters Institute.

You will note from the enclosed program that you are scheduled for 1:15 to 4:15 P.M. on Tuesday, June 8th. There will be a break at about midpoint. Your session will be in the Wisconsin Center Building, corner of Langdon and Lake Streets. The topic that we agreed on was a survey of new and proposed legislation of interest to fire fighters. A resume, not too lengthy, of existing legislation as a prelude to what further is proposed, would certainly be in place.

Please let me know if you have any questions. We look forward to having you with us for this program and greatly appreciate your interest in it.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Associate Professor
of Labor Education

EFV:bjr

May 20, 1965

Mr. Arvid Anderson, Commissioner
Wisconsin Employment Relations Board
State Office Building
4802 Sheboygan Avenue
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Arvid:

This letter will confirm the arrangements we made by phone for your participation in our Fire Fighters Institute.

You will note from the enclosed program that you are scheduled for 8:30 to 12:00 noon on Wednesday, June 9. There will be a break at about midpoint. Your session will be in the Wisconsin Center Building at the corner of Langdon and Lake Streets. The topic that we agreed upon related proper subjects for collective bargaining by city employees and what could be done in the event of a refusal to bargain.

Please let me know if you have any questions. We look forward to having you with us for this program and greatly appreciate your interest in it.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Associate Professor
of Labor Education

EFV:bjr

May 20, 1965

Mr. Charles Anderson
412 North Hall
Campus

Dear Charles:

This letter will confirm the arrangements we made by phone for your participation in our Fire Fighters Institute.

You will note from the enclosed program that you are scheduled for 7:00 to 9:00 P.M. on Wednesday, June 9. We will take a short break at midpoint. Your session will be in the Wisconsin Center Building. The topic that we agreed on was a discussion of the Dominican crisis. Any general background information on U. S. - Latin American relations which you would care to introduce would be most acceptable.

Please let me know if you have any questions. We look forward to having you with us for this program.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Associate Professor
of Labor Education

EFV:bjr

May 20, 1965

Mr. William F. Lang
Research Director
International Association of Fire Fighters
AFL-CIO
905 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington 6, D. C.

Dear Mr. Lang:

We are most pleased to know that you will be with us for the Fire Fighters Institute.

I am enclosing a copy of the final program. You will note that you are scheduled for 1:15 to 4:15 P.M. on Wednesday, June 9. There will be a break at about midpoint. Your session on police and fire fighter salaries will be at the Wisconsin Center Building at the corner of Langdon and Lake Streets.

Please let us know if we can assist in arranging accommodations for you either in the dormitory with the institute participants or in a motel close to the Wisconsin Center. Feel free to be in touch with me if you have any questions. We look forward to having you with us.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Associate Professor
of Labor Education

EFV:bjr

LAW OFFICES
LAWTON & CATES
INSURANCE BUILDING
MADISON 3, WISCONSIN

JOHN A. LAWTON
RICHARD L. CATES
GEORGE E. AUMOCK
JOHN C. CARLSON
DAVID LOEFFLER

TELEPHONE
256-9031

May 27, 1965

Mr. Emory Via
School for Workers
825 Extension Bldg., UW
Madison, Wis.

Dear Emory:

I am enclosing a list of subjects of interest to firefighters which have been introduced in the 1965 session. This list does not include the pension bills.

I have given only the topic headings, and it is my intention to supply the amendments and status of the bills when I appear at the session. This is the best way to do this since the every day activities of the legislature can soon make a report antiquated.

I would therefore suggest that if you are going to put these out in duplicated form that you leave a space after each where an individual can insert the status of the bill at the time of the session.

Very truly yours,

JOHN A. LAWTON

JAL:rj
Enc.

Dirty

NEW PRESIDENT of Fire Fighters, W. H. McClennan, gets his set of keys from a happy William D. Buck, retiring to president-emeritus status after 11 years as head of the union.

December 10, 1958

Mr. Jim Pierce
Field Representative
IUE, AFL-CIO
315 S. Broadway
Tyler, Texas

Dear Brother Pierce:

I am writing you at the request of Ben Segal. He and I have worked together a great deal on problems relating to civil rights and race relations in the South. Ben felt that I might be able to pass on a few useful suggestions regarding the set-up and functioning of a civil rights committee in the Texas State AFL-CIO.

Though I do not envision any easy task for such a committee, Texas, unlike many other Southern states, is one in which almost any of the problems of civil rights can get some airing and action through the state labor body. The general problem, of course, is how to do this effectively and acceptably. I would start by not defining the duties of the committee too narrowly; however, at the same time it will be important to make some of the tasks of the committee so definite and specific that you can be sure of performance. For example, your task may be as general as helping educate the Texas labor movement in a broad way about face relations and prejudice, or it may be defined as specifically as seeking out, investigating, and referring to proper authorities any violation of civil rights of any member of organized labor.

I think that the minimum a civil rights committee should do is:

a) report annually on the state of human relations within the state labor body; b) promote educational programs that will better mutual understanding between all groups; c) keep the officers of the state labor body informed regarding trouble spots within the labor movement, pertinent community tensions, violations of civil rights within the labor movement and without where they are of concern to organized labor, and human relations developments in other states of the South and other sections of the country; d) to act as a safety valve in preventing tensions within organized labor from damaging in any serious way union organizations. However, this should never mean sweeping the problems under some convenient rug, but serving as a safety factor in about the same way that a grievance procedure works, by providing a recognized channel through which people can voice their complaints and from which they can expect effective action.

Of course a committee could do much more than these minimum requirements would indicate. It could be actively concerned about all violations of individual rights regarding political rights such as voting, regarding the rights of individuals as infringed by threats, intimidation, and violence by any denial of equality in treatment in any public service, and of course because of any illegal job discriminations. This latter raises a basic question. When will the committee be concerned with just what is illegal and when will it be concerned with those things that are unfair, undemocratic, or not in keeping with the highest standard of the American labor movement? At the outset it might well be that you would start in some areas by being concerned only with legalities; however, even at the beginning of the committee's work I am sure you will find that in a number of areas it will not be limited by what is lawful, and that you can expand freely into the area of what is fair and decent.

A civil rights committee actually can help secure good public relations. To make this the purpose of such a committee would be disasterous, however. This has already happened in some northern situations; the end result is that the committee joins others in seeking credit for things that should be done but which largely go unacted upon. Sufficiently good public relations can be had from an honest interpretation of a committee such as we described in the preceding paragraphs and through its responsible and forthright reporting and action. In just explaining why such a committee may be needed and why it is fair and right for the state AFL-CIO to undertake establishing such a committee one has already begun to align himself with the forces of decency and democracy. Such an alignment will not go unnoticed either by the Negro community or by any person who has a basic committment to the democratic way. I think that you will also find that new channels of cooperation with other groups and agencies will be opened by the work of such a committee. This is especially true for a number of church groups - not just denominations but in many cases specialized agencies working within the denominations. Of course, there are the action and educational agencies in the field of human rights. The Southern Regional Council itself would be most interested in the activities of such a committee, and would be willing to offer it such program support and aid as seemed wise to both parties.

There is one aspect of setting up a new committee which we have not discussed. Along with being conscious of setting forth fairly clear purposes and channels of action, a good bit of attention will need to be given to the personnel of the committee itself. I am not unfamiliar with the kinds of "political" considerations that need to be given in establishing any major committee. I cannot and would not speak to those problems in your situation. However, this committee more than most, will need to be make up of solid citizens who as a minimum have a committment to honesty and hopefully, have a dedication to good democratic practice. You will need persons who can work together responsibly to hear out complaints even when there is imposing opposition, to determine facts, and to report their findings fairly. Obviously, such a committee needs to represent the major minority groups as well as the majority group. In most of the South this requirement is met merely by having both Negro and white members; however, in Texas I am sure you would want to include Spanish speaking American representation and perhaps others. In no case should your minority representatives be just "yes men" to the majority group; although "Uncle Tom" is not completely dead, the labor movement endangers its legitimate ends any time it even unwittingly helps perpetuate "Uncle Tomism." Hopefully, both minority and majority members would be intelligent, candid, and sensitive to each other and the problems which various groups face. Such sensitivity should not hinder objective facing of the facts and necessary action, but it may well help determine the character of the action and the manner in which it is undertaken. The members of such a committee should have sufficient status with their own groups and hopefully with the labor movement of the state at large.

I will add a few general suggestions as to the kinds of interests or activities a civil rights or fair practices committee might have. Certainly such a committee should be especially conscious of getting to know other individuals and organizations working on human relations problems. Let them know your own position and limitations, and call on their people for help when needed and when you feel they are persons of real responsibility. Such a committee can help the labor movement to find new ways in which to take stands for basic rights. In some sections of your state this might well be an outright statement for public school integration and in other sections you may wish to put the emphasis merely on saving the public school system; although this problem by an large is not so important to Texas as to other sections of the South. Certainly, stands should be taken against specific acts of violence and intimidation. Stands should be taken for the elementary protection of all individual rights. Frequently this might mean defending the rights of someone unpopular even within union circles. Just keep clearly in mind that it is the right which is being protected - usually some form of due process - and that this is a protection of democracy itself. Certainly the labor movement can always afford to stand for a peaceful community. And it should be able to support constructive community or private efforts which are aimed specifically at aiding some minority group. Then, of course, such a committee should aid the labor movement in coming to a wise position whenever a specific issue comes up. One of its task would be to make sure that the labor movement does not take a backward step.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

You will need to decide for yourself whether or not "civil rights committee" is the best title to give the committee which you envision. It may well be. However, I would give at least brief consideration to whether another title might be more acceptable or even more applicable if you plan a committee performing a broad range of functions, as suggested in this letter. I trust that these rambling suggestions will be of some use to you. Please feel free to be in touch with SRC if there are any materials, information, or special resources which we can provide. Recently I have been in touch with H. S. Brown, the state body's Education Director, and he has sample copies of a number of the materials which we have used with union groups in the last two years.

Best wishes to you in this undertaking; I think you and the other leaders in Texas should know that much of the rest of the South's labor movement is keeping its eyes on what you are able to do there as they try to determine the kinds of constructive measures they can employ in their community relations and in meeting the problems of fair practices and civil rights. Good luck.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Emory F. Via
Labor Consultant

EFV:ls
cc Ben Segal

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Single Reserved for Oct 31 & Nov 1 at Wisconsin Hotel. Oct 8, JWS

Wisconsin State AFL-CIO

CHARTERED 1958

6333 W. BLUE MOUND RD., MILWAUKEE 13, WISCONSIN SPRING 1-0700

George A. Haberman, President John W. Schmitt, Vice President George W. Hall, Secretary-Treasurer

October 7, 1963.

By Joyce Bkr.

Mr. Emory F. Via,
School for Workers,
University of Wisconsin,
Madison, Wisconsin.

Dear Emory:

Unfortunately, in my communication to you last week, I did not inquire of you as to whether or not I should make a reservation for a room for you at the Wisconsin Hotel. If you want me to do so, please so advise me.

Sincerely yours,

John W. Schmitt

John W. Schmitt,
Vice President.

JWS:kp

union negotiators in working out final settlement.

Ga AFL-CIO

State AFL-CIO Urges Georgia Wage Floor

Savannah, Ga.—The largest convention in the history of the Georgia State AFL-CIO—more than 500 delegates—elected new officers and adopted a legislative program headed by a call for a state $1.25 minimum wage.

Georgia presently does not have any state wage-hour law.

Jim Moore, who has been secretary of the state central body, was elected president, succeeding the late W. H. Montague, Sr. Moore, a member of the Painters, defeated R. J. Butler of the Elevator Constructors, 444-157.

M. J. Counihan was re-elected executive vice president and Louise Dean was re-elected treasurer. Counihan had been serving as president since Montague's death.

Delegates elected J. W. Giles of the State, County & Municipal Employes secretary of the state federation in a contest with John Wright of the Communications Workers.

Moore, in accepting the presidency, told the delegates that a key objective of his administration will be to accelerate the voter registration program.

The convention called on the Georgia legislature to pass a collective bargaining law for public employes and to exempt the elderly from state personal property tax.

Convention speakers included Assistant Sec. of Labor Thomas R. Donahue.

AFL-CIO News 10/26/64 (p.3)

AFL-CIO Sec
Dead

April 4, 1966

Mr. Harry R. Smith, Chairman
Civil Rights Committee
Local 901, IUE, AFL-CIO
1427 Broadway
Fort Wayne, Indiana 46802

Dear Mr. Smith:

Thank you for your letter of March 31 requesting SRC literature concerning desegregation and civil rights.

Under separate cover I am sending a selection of our recent publications. One of these, our magazine New South, is appearing in its first issue as a quarterly. The cost of publishing New South prohibits our distributing it gratis, but if you find it pertinent to your interests in the areas of desegregation and civil rights, you will note the subscription form on the back cover of the magazine.

If we can be of further assistance, let us know.

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning
Administrative Secretary
Labor Program

JOSEPH T. HILL
FIRST VICE PRESIDENT
WILLIAM G. MARTIN
SECOND VICE PRESIDENT
MELVIN BORCHERDING
TREASURER
JOHN CAVANAUGH
MARJORIE L. SMITH
JAMES LINN
TRUSTEES
ARTHUR BROCKMEYER
SERGEANT-AT-ARMS

FRANCIS L. FULK
PRESIDENT
LLOYD R. WIRE
BUSINESS AGENT

VELMA M. ROSE
RECORDING SECRETARY
G. ROBERT CROSLEY
FINANCIAL SECRETARY

GRIEVANCE COMMITTEE
DONALD BAHDE
HERBERT BAUER
PAUL BILLMAN
WAYNE BLAKE
MAURICE CASEY
EUGENE COULTER
CHALMER STEELE

LOCAL 901 IUE-AFL-CIO

1427 BROADWAY : 743-7686 : FORT WAYNE, IND. 46802
(219)

March 31, 1966

Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Sirs:

Thankyou for your prompt reply to my recent request for material on school desegregation.

We would appreciate any other literature you may have concerning the problems of desegregation and civil rights.

Sincerely yours,

Harry R. Smith
P.W.

Harry R Smith, Chairman
Civil Rights Committee

HRS/pw
Oeiu 325 afl-cio

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

April 13, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I am enclosing some material that will help you make some fast comparisons among states about their unemployment insurance laws. Note that the cost of these laws as percentages of payroll is pretty low although some of the mid-Western States do even worse. (Costs reflect both the quality of the legislation as well as the volume of unemployment and therefore is an imperfect index.) However, I can say with great certainty that the Texas, Florida and Virginia laws are among the half-dozen worst in the United States.

We made detailed analyses of four Southern states fifteen months ago and I am enclosing copies of these if you are interested.

Perhaps we can go into this in more detail when you next come to Washington.

In addition, I very much want to see you about some fascinating new developments in Madison that should be of direct concern to you.

Best regards and

Sincerely,

Ray

Raymond Munts, Acting Director
Department of Social Security

P.S. Georgia has just raised its $35 maximum to $43; it will go up to $45 next year, that is, it increases in two stages. Kentucky has also increased its maximum (46.7 percent of average weekly wages) as have Maryland ($50) and Virginia ($42).

Enclosures
RM:fg
opeiu #2 afl-cio

April 21, 1966

Mr. Raymond Munts, Acting Director
Department of Social Security, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Ray:

Thanks so much for the information which you sent regarding unemployment compensation. It will be quite useful to have even though you have left the figuring to me.

Don't put teasigg notes about Madison in your letters unless you know I'm going to see you soon enough to relieve my curriosity. I do hope to see you before long. We will talk.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON

GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE

HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

P.W.

May 16, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

We would very much like to cooperate on the article for the "New South." I am especially interested in the relationship of social insurance programs to the anti-poverty effort. We have several unpublished studies around the office from which we could cull the more interesting ideas for such a piece.

Do you have any particular deadline in mind? What about the length of the article? Would you send me a copy of the New South so I could have the feel of its approach. I would hope that in about two weeks I could put my mind to this. Right now we are in very bad shape in the Ways and Means Committee on the unemployment insurance bill.

You will be interested to know that the Muntses are going to spend the next year, beginning September 1st, in Madison. I will be doing some research work for Bob Lampman's Institute on Poverty Research.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Ray

Raymond Munts
Acting Director
Department of Social Security

RM:fg
opeiu #2 afl-cio

Bob A.

Bob: I am not specially wedded to this idea, but thought it worthy of consideration. Does it interest you. I could show you some relevant material of the sort Munts deals with. Aside from his present position, he is a Ph.D in economics and heaven help us a labor educator. Emory

Ray Munts, Acting Director Social Security Department, AFL-CIO

Dear Ray:

What would be the chance of getting an article from you or a competent person on your staff giving and objectve review of where certain kinds of protective legislation stand in the Southern states. Special emphais could of course be given to unemployment compensation. Tying it in with the push for national standards would be fine so long as it was a report on what interests are pressing for such legislation and how the states or their folk would benefit. It would not be required, but useful, to have some special tie in with the ~~special~~ problems of the disadvantaged ~~folks~~.

I would like you to give consideration to such a piece for publication in our New South recently transformed into a quarterly. Its audience is a good one of concenred Southerners in the main and a variety of interesting ~~people~~ influentials in press, foundation and good ~~good~~ circles. They will be, in the main, lay people as far as your special concerns go. ~~If you~~ A modest two-figure honorarium is available if that would help someone to put out the extra effort.

Let me have your reaction and we can talk further if needed.

Sincerely, EFV

JB. O.K. send it.

June 10, 1966

Mr. Ray Munts, Acting Director
Social Security Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Ray:

It was great seeing you and Mary Lou in Washington. I want to thank you both for the most enjoyable evening at your home.

Bob Anderson, our managing editor, tells me that his last letter to you indicated the general length of the article we were interested in and gave you a dead-line for our summer issue. I, for one, certainly hope that you will be able to make this schedule.

If as you begin to think about what it is you would like to do in the article you would like to chew over its relevance to our kind of audience I would be most happy to hear from you. Simply call me. I would be happy for you to do it on my dime. It could be that such an article should start with some basic explanations about unemployment compensation, what it is, what it means to folks, and what it means to the economy under special circumstances. Beyond this a look at the southern states and how they compare to the others and to the nation might be useful especially if accompanied by some explanation of the low level of benefit. In this regard I think some of the information in terms of effort by the states -- for example comparing what they did in an earlier year with what is being done now and relating it to the average weekly wage in each time period -- would be of interest. Is there any way to meaningfully discuss the problems of coverage and money amounts in terms of those persons who are especially disadvantaged in our society? By this latter I mean either minority groups or low income groups.

By the preceding paragraph I by no means mean to outline what it is you should do. I think you are the best judge of that. I would be happy, however, to discuss this further with you if you think it would be useful.

I hope to get to Madison before the summer is over.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

June 10, 1966

Legislative Department, AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Sirs:

Would you send me as soon as possible two copies each of the current Fact Sheets on legislative issues.

Your cooperation in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AIR MAIL
SPECIAL DELIVERY

Mrs Alfred

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

WALTER P. REUTHER
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
GEORGE BURDON
GEORGE M. HARRISON
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
A. J. DeANDRADE
HARRY C. BATES
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
RALPH HELSTEIN

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

June 17, 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Brother Via:

Pursuant to your request to Ray Munts, I am enclosing some information on workmen's compensation. I have included a more specific example for the state of Georgia. Similar comparisons could be made in the other southern states should that be your wish. In addition, as you become more involved in workmen's compensation for the various state legislatures and feel that you need a more detailed analysis of specific provisions of state workmen's compensation laws, please feel free to call on us.

Trusting this material will be of help to you, I am

Sincerely and fraternally,

Lawrence Smedley

Lawrence Smedley
Assistant Director
Department of Social Security

LS:dev
opeiu#2 afl-cio

Encls:

June 22, 1966

Mr. Lawrence Smedley
Assistant Director
Department of Social Security,
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Brother Smedley:

Thank you very much for the materials which you sent me on workmen's compensation which included the more detailed analysis of the Georgia law. If similar analyses are readily available for each of the other Southern states I would be most pleased to have them.

It was generous of you to offer further detailed assistance if needed. I will certainly keep this in mind. In general, the Council would be happy to receive any materials on protective labor legislation that relate to the Southern region or to individual states within the region.

We appreciate your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

File

Spartanburg Central Labor Union, A.F.L.-C.I.O.

Meets 1st Tuesday and 3rd Monday, 7:30 P.M. at 252 N. Church St.

Spartanburg, South Carolina

July 9,1966

Mr. Emery Via
Southern Regional Council Inc.
Rm 201
5 Forsyth NW
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mr. Via:

We of the Spartanburg Central Labor Union are interested in helping our people to be able to express themselves in public and also to have some knowledge of parliamentary procedure.

Billie Solesby told me of the work you are doing along this line. We would like some information about the cost and time etc.

This is one area that the Labor Movement is failing the membership and we would like to do something about it.

Hoping to hear from you soon on this matter,

Sincerely,

George E. Griffin

George E. Griffin, President
P. O. Box 1147
Spartanburg, S. C. 29301

Comfortable room Blackboard
Movie Projector
Screen

Improving Union Meetings
Procedure, Speech, Meeting, ideas
Introduce materials on Changing South

Two night — all day Sat —
Every night for week —
2 full days

15-30 people —
Local union offices

10 — 16 hours

$100.00 / depending

SPARTANBURG CENTRAL LABOR UNION
P. O. Box 1147
SPARTANBURG, SOUTH CAROLINA

SPARTANBURG, S.C.
JUL 11
1966

Mr. Emery Via
Southern Regional Council Inc.
Rm 201
5 Forsyth NW
Atlanta, Ga.

August 12, 1966

Mr. George E. Griffin, President
Spartanburg Central Labor Union, AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 1141
Spartanburg, South Carolina 29301

Dear Mr. Griffin:

I was pleased to hear of your interest in union education and am very sorry to be so late in answering your letter of July 9th. It came at a time when I was away from the office for an extended period.

I would be happy to attempt to work out an education program with you. I think we could get togetheronn a program which might emphasize improving the union meetings and include special attention to problems of public speaking and parliamentary procedure. We could have practice sessions in speaking and discussion leading which would use materials related to union problems, labor's responsibilities to the community, and labor's role in the changing South.

Ideally we should have a group between 15 and 30 persons who would attend all sessions planned for the program. Also we should plan for from between 10 and 16 hours of instructional time. If possible I think it is best not to have all of the instruction on one day or even on two consequtive days. If it is not too confusing let me suggest several unusual ideas about how we might get the kind of time which would be needed.

Do you think you could get a group that would meet two hours an evening for every night in one week and then meet for five or six hours on Saturday? Or, possibly, if you had thirty or more people interested in such a program let half of them meet for two nights during the week, the other half for the other two nights and then the whole group come together for Friday night and Saturday. Of course, we could try meeting a group for two evenings during the week and then meeting onSSaturday and Sunday. Would you let me know if any of these plans make sense in terms of the kind of people you would expect to participate in such a program. Or perhaps you have a suggestion which would better suit your group.

For a beginning program of this sort I think we could handle it for a hundred to a hundred and fifty dollars. This would, of course, not fully cover the instruction time, expenses, and materials which would be involved. However, ourpprogram here would underwrite the rest of the cost. The Central Labor Union besides providing the students would need to provide a suitable room for the sessions, a blackboard with chalk and eraser, and a movie projector and screen.

I will be out of town another two or three weeks. When I come back you will have had a chance to read and think about this letter and then we could talk about the whole matter more fully by telephone. If you continue to be interested in such a program, I hope you will think about what time in the fall you would like tohave it.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AFL-CIO General
1966

November 23, 1966

Mr. Marvin Friedman
Research Department, AFL-CIO
815 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Marv:

I was very sorry to miss you in Miami at the Southern Labor School, but I had to leave on Tuesday morning.

If you prepared a paper regarding the new minimum wage law amendments and the problems of enforcement, I would greatly welcome seeing it. In any event, could you send other materials along this line which you feel are especially useful that have either been developed by the department or have come to your attention?

I am glad that the southern labor guys continue to have opportunities to hear you.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

hj

February 21, 1967

Mr. Charles H. Gillman,
Regional Director
AFL-CIO
1026 Hurt Bldg.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Charlie,

This rather full report may not have come to your attention. I thought the attitudes expressed towards unions would be of special interest.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

April 20, 1967

Mr. Rudolph Oswald, Economist
Department of Research
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Rudy:

Thanks for the copy of your reprint from the Federationist on Minimum Wage. I had already read it in the magazine with some care and found it quite useful. You may know that I requested permission from the Federationist to reprint the special section you included on the "Extent of Wage-Hour Violations".

Thanks, too, for your comment on efforts here. I will send you a copy of the kit as soon as I can get even one available. They are all out at this point with the exception of some which are incomplete since we have not received all of the materials we ordered from the Wage-Hour Division itself.

I had asked, by phone, the Federationist to send me fifty copies of the reprint when it was available. This has probably slipped from the organizational memory. I would still like to have them. Could you help out?

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

Copy

April 24, 1967

Mr. Staunton Smith
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Stan:

I am sending to Houston under separate cover 25 copies of the Minimum Wage Campaign Kit, 100 copies of the table of contents (What Is In This Kit), and 25 copies of the illustrated pamphlet for handing out to low wage earners (More Money for You?).

Al Kehrer indicated that you were interested in presenting the kit idea to your meeting. Since time is so short I thought that I would move ahead and send the above listed items to you. I understand you might have wanted one hundred kits. This is not possible at this time, but the materials are now being reprinted and once the government materials arrive, we should be able to fill orders again.

In a few places I have found some misconception about the kit. Some unionists have thought of it as an effort to educate unions or to alert those union workers in marginal situations as to minimum wage protection for them. This is not the case. As you know, it is intended as an aid to unions working either directly with non-union (for the present) low wage earners or with those groups who do work with them. It also is hoped that the campaign idea will provide the basis for cooperation between unions and other groups as one way of furthering their ability to work with each other on other issues as well. Incidentally, Al Kehrer understands the fit fully and its intended use. If he is in Houston at the right time and you plan to have the kit presented, perhaps he can be of assistance.

I had seen the Meany letter which you sent me on minimum wages. It was an especially useful letter of its kind because it took time to spell out some of the concrete steps a group might take.

I hope your other area meetings have gone well and that the Houston one will be a great success. In recent weeks I have had a number of reminders of your earlier tracks into the South. They ranged from your abbreviated stint with the SRC board, through the Southern Labor School efforts, to some stories regarding fly fishing (embellished by Dan Powell).

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

April 25, 1967

Mr. Stanton Smith
C.O.P.E ?
Lincoln-Sheraton
Houston, Texas

Dear Stanton:

I failed to mention in my letter about the Minimum Wage Kits that I was also including one hundred copies of an article by Ray Munts on unemployment compensation. It has a special focus on the Southern States. I thought it was useful and if you feel the same I am happy for you to have them.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

May 25, 1967

Mr. Marvin Friedman
Assistant Director
Department of Research
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Marv:

A word: Congratulations! I am pleased that the AFL-CIO will continue to have your good services in your new position. I am sure you richly deserve the promotion.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emery F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

January 9, 1968

Mr. Louis Banks
Office of the Managing Editor
Fortune Magazine
Time and Life Building
Rockefeller Center
New York, New York 10020

Dear Mr. Banks:

To answer in detail the distortions, misrepresentations and downright misstatements of fact in Mr. O'Hanlon's article "The Case Against the Unions", January, 1968, would require as many words as he used in making them. I will note only a few examples as typical of the whole.

Let me start with his glittering statistics on how many Negroes would be employed in the building trades if they were represented in proportion to population.

Mr. O'Hanlon did not even correctly read the tables he refers to in Employment, Race and Poverty, edited by Arthur Ross and Herbert Hill. He asserts for example that there should be 112,000 more Negro workers working as construction foremen. That, in fact is the figure for all foremen - not just construction foremen. The last federal census shows there are only 101,896 construction foremen in the whole United States.

And in pursuit of his deception, Mr. O'Hanlon conveniently ignores the fact that the same table shows minority workers in the carpenters and other construction craftsmen growing in proportions greater than any category cited except non-college teachers. That specifically includes professional and technical workers, managers, officials, proprietors and even clerical and sales workers.

How does one deal with this kind of deceptive generality? By asking perhaps the relative percentage of Negroes in the Congress, or in Governors' chairs, or on school faculties, or among the senior editors of Fortune magazine?

Mr. O'Hanlon does even worse violence to the general thrust of the report he cites. He, and Fortune's newspaper advertisements, have conjured up a contrast between a supposed "breakthrough" by Negroes in professional and technical occupations and a supposed stalemate, or worse, in the construction trades. The report itself, covering the years 1959-64, shows nothing of the sort. On the contrary, it asserts that:

> "Negroes made appreciable gains in skilled manual trades both in construction and in manufacturing. The number of Negro carpenters rose from 27,000 to 43,000, with other construction craftsmen increasing from 94,000 to 123,000."

The actual figures in the report - not Fortune's interpretation of them - bear this out. In any event a report which terminates in 1964 is by definition out of date. The Civil Rights Act, with its fair employment section, was not law until late 1964 - an act which the AFL-CIO strongly supported and has used since with great effectiveness.

There is another generality: "Negro factory hands earn 32 percent less than their white counterparts."

The O'Hanlon insinuation is that the unions are to blame. That is just not so. Let's see what his statistic is all about.

1) The prime contributors to the 32 percent figure are low-wage, unorganized industries which AFL-CIO unions are trying hard to organize, almost always against the last ditch opposition of the employers. These industries employ a disproportionate number of Negroes at inordinately low wage scales.

2) In unionized industries, wherever the union is strong enough, the differentials have been long since eliminated - despite intense employer opposition and sometimes only when the unions were ready to strike.

3) The federal law, which we sought and employers resisted, is currently being used by unions against recalcitrant employers in order to eliminate such remaining differentials.

The O'Hanlon article attacks on industrial unions and the seniority system are equally false. The seniority systems of the thirties have been improved time and again. Seniority is often minority workers best protection against exploitation by employers. In addition, many industrial unions - and this specifically includes the Steelworkers - have not only worked unstintingly to eliminate discrimination in upgrading - they are currently conducting major educational and training operations to insure that minority workers are ready for more skilled jobs.

I must also take personal exception to what Mr. O'Hanlon said about the department I head. He asserted that complaints to the AFL-CIO produced no results. He charged we have never made a frontal attack on discrimination and segregation. These are untruths of staggering dimensions.

The record shows that:

1) Hundreds of cases have been satisfactorily handled by this department and Mr. O'Hanlon could have examined the files on these cases when he was here, if he had asked. Obviously he wasn't interested in facts. He didn't use a single bit of the factual information we provided him.

2) No other organization - save the civil rights organizations - fought as hard as the AFL-CIO has fought and continues to fight for civil rights legislation, including granting cease-and-desist authority to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. And it is the AFL-CIO that continues the fight today for fair housing legislation, in the face of polls that report many union members as individuals are opposed to it.

3) We have launched, financed and established affirmative programs to upgrade minority workers and have promoted better public education, especially in America's ghettos.

4) In the area of apprenticeship, we have worked out programs in over 17 major U. S. cities to recruit and help prepare minority youngsters for entry into skilled trades. This is done in cooperation with the Building Trades Councils and community based organizations - among them the Urban League, Opportunities Industrialization Center and the Workers Defense League.

Mr. O'Hanlon implied that our Civil Rights Committee comprises white union leaders reluctant to move against themselves. In fact, this committee of 20 outstanding international union officers includes three militant and outspoken Negro trade union leaders.

And he left the impression of a rift between the AFL-CIO and the dean of the Negro union leaders, A. Philip Randolph. On the contrary, Mr. Randolph has praised the progress made by the AFL-CIO and commended in most generous terms the efforts of Mr. Meany and of the Civil Rights Committee.

Mr. Randolph is his own best spokesman. He told the 1965 AFL-CIO Constitutional Convention, "...Negro leadership recognizes that of all the mass institutions in the nation the labor movement holds out the greatest hope for progress in the daily conditions of life in the Negro community ..... the civil rights department is to be congratulated for the vigor and effectiveness with which it has labored to eliminate the remaining discrimination within our ranks."

And on December 11, 1967 when Mr. Randolph introduced the civil rights resolution to the AFL-CIO convention, he said:

"In supporting this resolution, President Meany, I want also to thank and congratulate you for the firm stand that you have taken as spokesman for the AFL-CIO on behalf of civil rights .....to translate these words into action requires strong leadership. That leadership has been exercised, President Meany, by you and by Brother Schnitzler, who had presided ably and diligently over the Civil Rights Committee of the AFL-CIO."

No one in the AFL-CIO maintains that the civil rights record of unions is without fault or above criticism. We never object to an honest, objective appraisal of union problems or shortcomings in this or any field. But the O'Hanlon article is not criticism; it is a dishonest, distorted attack.

Finally, let me say a few words about Mr. O'Hanlon's four so-called "reforms". They are revealing indeed; for essentially they are not pro-Negro but anti-union, calculated to divide the labor movement and Negroes.

To us this is not accidental. It is precisely this that Mr. O'Hanlon and "Black Power" advocates want. Such a division would be detrimental to unions, to Negroes and to America. And that we will not allow to happen.

Sincerely,

Don Slaiman

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

DS:cr
opeiu #2 afl-cio

file AFL-CIO

October 18, 1968

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

Has there been a re-issuing of "Education in the Fifty States"? The latest one I have is the third revised edition, 1966.

If a new one is out, please send three copies as soon as possible. Will it be available in bulk?

If a new one is not out, does the Department contemplate a revision?

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Dirty

John J. Grogan, AFL-CIO Vice President, Dies

John J. Grogan, president of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and a vice president of AFL-CIO, died of a heart attack Sept. 16.

At age 54, he had been president of his International union for 17 years. He served 12 years as mayor of Hoboken, N. J. Earlier, he had served as a member of the New Jersey legislature.

Under the union's constitution, Vice Pres. Andrew A. Pettis automatically stepped up to the presidency upon Grogan's death.

Dirty

Dirty

NEW OFFICERS of the Laborers—Pres. Peter Fosco, left, and Terence J. O'Sullivan, who succeeds Fosco as secretary-treasurer.

November 5, 1968

Mr. Daniel A. Powell, Director
Area V, C.O.P.E.
AFL-CIO
5298 Revere Road
Memphis, Tennessee

Dear Dan:

I have tried to reach you unsuccessfully on two trips through Memphis. I am teaching a class in Owensboro, Kentucky and will come through Memphis on the following dates: November 7, 21 and December 5, 12 and 19.

I have only a short stay at the airport but if there is any special program or matters which we should discuss I could probably arrange to come in a day early.

Trust campaigning went well. Will know just how well today.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AFL-CIO

December 18, 1968

Mr. George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear George:

I was, of course, happy to be with the Advanced Southern Labor School again and it is my pleasure to be of some small service to the Education Department.

It looked like an excellent school to me and I have heard good comments about it since its conclusion.

You asked about the course charges by the Labor Education Program at the University of Kentucky. I have had nothing to do with the administration of the course but think that the fee was $10.00.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

November 26, 1968

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for participating in the Advanced Southern Labor School program. I am sure that you found it as stimulating as I did. This is one of the few programs which is geared to full-time state body people and international union representatives that our department works on. I find it to be one of the most worthwhile things we do.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, ~~Asst.~~ Director
Department of Education

Really — Thanks

Enclosure

opeiu 2 afl-cio
GTG/mjq

FINAL PROGRAM

1968 ADVANCED SOUTHERN LABOR SCHOOL
Flagship Hotel, Galveston, Texas
November 17-22, 1968

Sunday, November 17

4:00 p.m.	Registration
6:30 p.m.	Dinner
	Speaker: Honorable Ralph Yarborough, U.S. Senator

Monday, November 18

9:00 a.m.	"Economic Issues Under The Nixon Administration" Marvin Friedman, Asst. Director, AFL-CIO Research Department
1:30 p.m.	"Building Stronger State AFL-CIO Bodies" J. Bill Becker, President, Arkansas State AFL-CIO Roy Evans, Secretary-Treasurer, Texas State AFL-CIO William Clitheroe, Regional Education Director International Association of Machinists Tommy S. Gibson, Sr., International Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners

Tuesday, November 19

9:00 a.m.	"Facing The Welfare Issue With Our Members" Emory Via, Southern Regional Council, Inc.
2:00 p.m.	Boat Trip

Wednesday, November 20

9:00 a.m.	"Poverty-Labor Training Programs" George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director, AFL-CIO Department of Education Earl Williams, University of Houston Edgar Berlin, OEO Labor Liaison, Austin, Texas Jesse Lester, OEO Labor Liaison, Atlanta, Georgia

Wednesday, November 20 (cont.)

2:00 p.m. "The Memphis Sanitation Strike"
Edward Stanfield, Southern Regional Council, Inc.

"Hunger In America" - CBS Film

"The Grape Boycott"
Delores Huerto, Vice President, United Farm Workers Organizing Committee

7:30 p.m. "Do Not Fold, Staple, Spindle or Mutilate"
New copper strike film produced by United Steel Workers

Thursday, November 21

9:00 a.m. "Outreach Programs"
E. T. Kehrer, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dept. Chairman
Ernest Green, Workers Defense League
Robert McGlotten, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department
Chuck Bremmer, Workers Defense League

1:30 p.m. "The 1968 Election"
Nicholas Chriss, Los Angeles Times
Don Ellinger, International Association of Machinists
Walter Davis, Director, AFL-CIO Department of Education
Dan Powell, COPE Area Director
Barbara Jordan, State Senator, Texas

Friday, November 22

9:00 a.m. "The 1968 Election" (cont.)
Don Ellinger, International Association of Machinists
Dan Powell, COPE Area Director

Luncheon - Graduation

Speaker: H. S. "Hank" Brown, President, Texas State AFL-CIO

2:30 p.m. Adjournment

Mr. Barney Weeks, President
Southern Labor School
604 Lyric Building
Birmingham, Alabama 35203

Mr. J. Bill Becker, Sec.-Treas.
Southern Labor School
1408 Rebsamen Park Road
Little Rock, Arkansas 72202

Mr. George T. Guernsey, Coordinator
Southern Labor School
815 16th Street, N.W., Room 510
Washington, D. C. 20006

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

November 25, 1968

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for doing the session at the Advanced Southern Labor School. I thought the session went quite well and was a real addition to the program.

I meant to ask you whether you knew anything about the charges that the University of Kentucky is making for extension courses like the one you are teaching? I sent a letter to Henry Lake and I assume I will be hearing from him soon.

I am, however, interested in keeping up on what you think of the program and how it is operating.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

opeiu 2 afl-cio
GTG/mjq

AFL-CIO

December 18, 1968

Mr. Rudy Oswald
Research Department
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Rudy:

Thanks for your prompt attention to my request for recent Minimum Wage materials. They were most appreciated by the state legislators attending the Black Elected Officials Conference.

I am certain there will be further requests in the future and it is good to know that you and the department are there to help out.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AFL-CIO

December 18, 1968

Mr. James R. O'Brien
Assistant Director
Department of Social Security
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Mr. O'Brien:

Your materials finally arrived on Monday. Thanks so very much for your efforts and for the materials. Although they did not get here in time for the Black Elected Officials Conference, through no fault of yours, I will be able to send them to selected members of the State Legislators Workshop.

I am sorry for the rush this time, but as always we are greatly appreciative of the cooperation received from the Social Security Department. I am sure we will be making further requests in the future.

Again, many thanks.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT
WM. F. SCHNITZLER, SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK
DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG
JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

December 9, 1968

Mr. Emory Via
Director of Labor Programs
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

I am enclosing six sets of current unemployment and workmen's compensation material concerning a majority of the states you mentioned during our recent telephone conversation. Material on Texas, Tennessee, and Louisiana is limited because I did not have it readily available in our files.

The tables on unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation are copies of the proofs we just received from the printer. But they are up-to-date.

The list of recommendations for state unemployment insurance laws has recently been up-dated, and we plan to distribute it to our state bodies for use in their 1969 legislative work.

If we can provide you with any additional information on these matters, please let us know.

Sincerely yours,

James R. O'Brien

James R. O'Brien
Assistant Director
Department of Social Security

JRO:pm

opeiu #2 afl-cio

Enclosures

V.E.P. NEWS

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

DECEMBER 1968 VOL. 2, NO. 12 Southern Regional Council, Inc. 5 Forsyth St., N.W. Atlanta, Ga. 30303

200 BLACK ELECTED OFFICIALS ATTEND FIRST SOUTHWIDE MEET

By JANET WELLS

Approximately half of the South's nearly 400 Negro officeholders met in Atlanta Dec. 11-14 for the first region-wide gathering of black elected officials.

Sponsored by the Voter Education Project, the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials brought 200 public officials together to talk about mutual problems in workshops and panel discussions and to hear such nationally prominent speakers as U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind., Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm, and Georgia state Rep. Julian Bond.

In a resolution adopted at the closing session of the four-day conference, the elected officials stated, "As more of us take office and as we become more deeply involved in the problems of our constituencies, gatherings like this one, on regional, state and local levels, must be continued to help us keep abreast of the complexities of modern government."

The conference opened with a keynote address by Rep. Bond Dec. 11 and closed with a luncheon speech Dec. 14 by Mrs. Chisholm of New York, elected Nov. 5 as the first Negro congresswoman in history.

Attorney General Clark spoke at a banquet Dec. 13.

Clark warned that the Voting Rights Act of 1965 will expire in 1970, and that when it does, "The state legislatures will be empowered to prescribe new standards, new procedures for voting throughout this land."

He noted that the states in which literacy tests were banned might reinstate them and that the Justice Department would lose its authority to send federal registrars into Southern counties.

The Voting Rights Act "has made a difference," he said. Clark quipped: "Four years ago we could have held this meeting in the telephone booth in the lobby—and not interfered with anyone who wanted to make a phone call."

"I am Southern and white," the outgoing attorney general said, "and I know how very desperately we need black elected officials."

Concluding his speech to a standing ovation, Clark said, "From one side comes the call for order, from the other side the cry for justice, but the long history of mankind tells us that you will have neither order nor justice until you have both."

Richard Hatcher, one of two black mayors of major

(Continued on Page 4)

OFFICEHOLDER ASKS CONFERENCE QUESTION
Picture Taken at One of Several General Sessions

SPEARS ELECTED IN NEW ORLEANS

The city councils of two Southern cities recently named Negroes to fill vacant seats. Meanwhile, a Negro was elected to the school board in New Orleans.

Arthur D. Shores, a veteran civil rights lawyer, was elected unanimously to the Birmingham, Ala., city council following the death of one of its members. In Dallas, Texas, businessman George Allen was appointed to one of two new seats on the council.

The final general election runoff in the South involving a a Negro candidate saw the election of Dr. Mack J. Spears, dean of student affairs at Dillard University, to the school board in New Orleans. Dr. Spears and Joseph Delpit, elected to the Baton Rouge city council Nov. 5, are the first Negroes to win city-wide elections in major Louisiana cities.

Dr. Spears, who won by more than 5,000 votes, received substantial white support and the endorsement of white civic organizations and the daily press.

New Birmingham councilman Shores' home was bombed twice in 1963 because of his civil rights activities. He is the first black man elected to the nine-member council.

Shores' appointive term will expire in October. An election for George Allen's seat will be held this spring.

TEXT OF CONFERENCE RESOLUTION

The following resolution, drafted by a representative of each of the 11 Southern states, was adopted by the Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials as the conference ended Dec. 14. It is reprinted here in its entirety.

We have come to a point in the South and in the nation where the executive decisions of the next four years may well determine the course of race relations and civil rights progress for the future and will decide whether the succeeding generations of Americans will live in peace or will live at all.

We are appalled by inferences from the incoming administration that the South's racial problems will be effectively dealt with by the states.

The fate and future of the South and her people, black and white, cannot be left in the hands of these leaders whose past failures have demonstrated their inability and unwillingness to build a new South.

While business, acting unselfishly, can help, business alone will not bring enlightened, unselfish solutions to this region's problems.

Rather, we, as members of city, county and state governments, believe in and depend on democratic government, responsive to the needs of our constituents and the unrepresented millions of the South, as the proper problem-solving agency of the 20th Century.

We hope that the traditional Southern divisions between class and race can be healed. The kinds of oppressed whites who have had their own interests subverted by their racism must join with the oppressed blacks whom we represent to build a new South.

What is needed more than all else is full implementation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and 1968, the Voting Rights Act of 1965, and the Economic Opportunity Act. This can be done only by full dedication of the Executive, Legislative and Judicial branches of federal and state government to the rights of man. The United States Supreme Court and our federal judiciary must be upheld and strengthened in devotion to equal justice.

We want to urge the President of the United States and our Congress to extend the much needed Voting Rights Act of 1965, from its present maturity date, to another five years.

Since 1965, 805,233 Negroes have been added to voter registration rolls in the 11 Southern states. Most notable gains have come in those states where federal registrars have been assigned. To date, however, none have been assigned to either North Carolina or Virginia. Registrars are needed in these two states, and additional federal registrars are needed throughout the whole South.

In a nation dedicated to democratic principles, how can we explain that only about 60 per cent of the nation's potential voters went to the polls in the November election? Consideration should be given to making election day a national holiday so that the people can have adequate time to exercise the right to vote, so dearly earned by so many, over so long a period of time.

Violence and intimidation—as the tragic events at Orangeburg, S. C., earlier this year illustrated—have not abated in the South. White resistance to school desegregation continues—as we have seen in South Carolina and Mobile, Ala., and many other places, where white parents have organized to block effective progress toward eliminating the dual school system. In the 14 years since the Brown decision outlawing segregated public education, the rate of school integration in the South still hovers at a low level of tokenism. According to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare figures for the 1967-68 school year, only 14 per cent of the South's black children were enrolled in desegregated schools. For the Deep South the figures were: Alabama, 5.4 per cent; Mississippi, 3.9 per cent; South Carolina, 6.4 per cent; Louisiana, 6.7 per cent; and Georgia, 9.9 per cent.

The critical problem of poverty in the South must not be ignored by the new administration. In spite of much national publicity, children are still hungry in Mississippi and throughout the South. In spite of national concern over technological unemployment, men are still being driven from the land to huddle in the slums of our large cities. As critical as the problem of technological unemployment is the depressing reality of widespread underemployment. In many areas of the South the percentage of the labor force designated "unemployed" is about the national average, but the income in those areas is less than half the national average. Southerners, black and white, work long hours for low pay. Minimum wage laws must be broadened and enforced.

As part of a short-term solution to some of the more critical problems of the poor, uniform federal regulations are needed to govern the administration of public assistance programs in the states. Under present state welfare structures it is possible for states to impose restrictive regulations which bar the most needy from welfare rolls. However, the concept of public assistance, itself, needs to be re-evaluated with the understanding that welfare is not a privilege bestowed upon the needy in the way of charity, but a clear and legal right. Hand in hand with such a re-evaluation, additional jobs and job training programs must be created.

We want to thank the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council for bringing us together and giving us the tools and techniques we need to improve our performance as elected officials.

As more of us take office and as we become more deeply involved in the problems of our constituencies, gatherings like this one, on regional, state and local levels, must be continued to help us keep abreast of the complexities of modern government.

Events of the past four years in the nation's alienated black ghettos should have taught us that the just and human needs of the country's black minority cannot be ignored, or appeased with high-sounding words. We are not yet a nation separate, but we are most assuredly a nation unequal.

Voter Education Project

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, NW, Atlanta, Ga. 30303

DR. SAMUEL D. COOK
Chairman

PAUL ANTHONY
JULIAN BOND
DR. C. G. GOMILLION
DR. VIVIAN W. HENDERSON
JESSE HILL
NORMAN HILL
FRANK SMITH
DR. C. H. THOMAS, JR.
JOHN WHEELER
JAMES E. YOUNGDAHL

VERNON E. JORDAN, JR.
Director

NEWSMAN SWINGS MIKE TO QUESTIONER
Conference Got Wide Press Coverage

ATTORNEY GENERAL WAS BANQUET SPEAKER
Called for Extended Voting Rights

OFFICIALS CHAT DURING BANQUET
Attorney General Clark Spoke After Dinner

SCENES AT SOUTHWIDE CONFERENCE

Photos by Booker Lockhart and Harmon Perry

URBAN LEAGUE'S WHITNEY YOUNG DROPPED IN Between Paul Anthony and Vernon Jordan

KEYNOTER BOND GREETS MRS. CHISHOLM
Her Speech Closed Conference

HATCHER (CENTER) SPOKE AT FORUM
Shown with Vernon Jordan, Dr. Henderson

Text of President's Telegram

Four years ago, only a handful of black people held public office in the South. Negroes were, in effect, without a direct voice in the councils of government in the Southland.

Soon after this administration began, I had the honor of signing into law the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Hundreds of thousands of Southern Negroes who had previously been denied the ballot were able, for the first time in their lives, to register and to vote. Indeed, Negro registration in the South has increased by one million in the last four years, to a total of more than three million today. Those black Southerners are today, for the first time, able to participate in the most basic step in our democracy—the casting of the ballot on election day.

Largely because of this historic development there are now some 385 black elected officials—all holding public offices for which they had to go before the voters—in the South. These officials now are gathered in a conference sponsored by the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council to discuss their mutual problems, to exchange ideas and to receive advice and counsel on the performance of their public duties.

As President of the United States, I salute these black men and women now meeting in Atlanta. I wish their conference much success. I am proud to have been a part of the developments that made it possible for them to serve.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

CONFERENCE

(Continued from Page 1)

American cities, spoke to an audience of Negro officeholders and students at Clark College Thursday, Dec. 12. He called for black power and black consciousness which would lift the Negro from his role as a "stranger in the American village" and for "people power" which would enable both races to achieve "the good society."

"If I look to the alleviation of our poverty and the improvement of our standard of life," he said, "logic compels me to place hope in the eventual coming together of the demands for power by people of many sorts."

These "people of many sorts" include youth, students and Spanish-speaking Americans, he said.

While expressing confidence that the lives of the black people of Gary are richer since he took office a year ago, he warned that there are some services that no public official can perform for his constituents because "the power structure of this society is not prepared to give up enough of its profits to solve the problems of city living—for whites or blacks."

Mrs. Chisholm, echoing Mayor Hatcher's thoughts, quoted black abolitionist Frederick Douglass: "Power concedes nothing."

She spoke at length of her own campaign in New York's Bedford-Stuyvesant district. Like most of the speakers during the four-day conference, she talked about black power.

"Black power is concerned with organizing the rage of black people," she said, "and is putting new, hard questions and demands to white America. We will build a new sense of community among our people."

Citing the apathy of black voters, especially in the South, she said, "Many of them don't go to the polls because the public officials that they put in office forget them when they get in office."

Julian Bond, whose name was put before the 1968 Democratic National Convention as a vice presidential nominee, said Negroes must seek new political allies.

Bond said that there are so relatively few Negroes in the United States that "we have got to find the kinds of people who can help us."

"We naturally ought to look to the other colored minorities —the Mexican-Americans and the Puerto Ricans and the American Indians. If we could get some kind, any kind of response from the heavy shield of racism that blinds poor white people, they would be our natural allies, too."

Both Bond and Dr. Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College, criticized President-elect Nixon's proposed "black capitalism."

"It is an illusion to think this approach will transform the lives of the majority of brothers and sisters from poverty and destitution to minimum standards of living," Henderson said.

Dr. Samuel D. Cook, professor of political science at Duke University and chairman of VEP's Advisory Committee, told the first session Dec. 12 that the Negro "is the key to Southern politics."

"Take him out of the equation," Dr. Cook continued, "and the politics of Southern history does not, in substance, make sense."

The professor added, "The key to Southern liberation is black liberation."

Black elected officials from all 11 Southern states attended the four-day conference, which was the first of its kind ever held in the South. In addition to the general sessions, workshops were conducted Thursday afternoon, Dec. 12; Friday afternoon, Dec. 13; and Saturday morning, Dec. 14.

A luncheon panel Friday featured four Negro candidates who recently mounted major campaigns in the South and lost. The four and the offices they sought were Maynard Jackson, U. S. Senate in Georgia; Reginald A. Hawkins, governor in North Carolina; Mrs. Eva Clayton, U. S. House in North Carolina; and A. W. Willis, mayor in Memphis.

JORDAN ON LEAVE AT HARVARD

Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project, departed Atlanta early in January to begin five months of instruction and study at Harvard University.

Mr. Jordan is one of five new Fellows selected for the 1968-69 academic year at Harvard's Institute of Politics. The Institute was established in 1966 as a part of the John Fitzgerald Kennedy School of Government at Harvard and is endowed by the Kennedy Library, Inc.

In addition to undertaking studies related to current urban problems, Mr. Jordan will conduct a seminar at Harvard called "The Black Man in the Southern Political Process: 1944 to the Present."

V.E.P. News Vol. 2 No. 12

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

5 Forsyth Street, N.W.

Atlanta, Georgia 30303

(Address Correction Requested)

also Jay Dummer

111 NE 26

73105

RETURNED TO SENDER

Postage Due

20

2-4-69.5

5 5-68

MR. HENRY L. LIKES, PRES.
OKLA STATE AFL-CIO
532 COMMERCE EXCHANGE BUILDING
OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA 7310

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

GEORGE M. HARRISON
M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
WILLIAM POLLOCK

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
JOHN J. GROGAN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DE ANDRADE
MAX GREENBERG

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
RALPH HELSTEIN
JOHN H. LYONS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

January 30, 1969

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

If you can send me a one-page "evaluation" of the Galveston conference, I would appreciate it. I am especially interested in your comments on your small group.

Sincerely yours,

George

George T. Guernsey, Asst. Director
Department of Education

GTG/mjq
opeiu 2 afl-cio

February 5, 1969

Mr. George Guernsey
Education Department
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear George:

The summary you requested is attached.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enclosure

M E M O R A N D U M February 5, 1969

Comments on The University of Houston's "Labor Training Project" held in Galveston, Texas, January 1969.

The total program had many strengths. Its weaknesses lay in a crowded schedule, insufficient meshing, and inadequate time for informal in-depth learning.

The small groups were provided for greater discussion opportunity and I felt that they were to a large degree successful and useful. They provided the main opportunity for both informal teaching and individual response.

The groups were not highly structured and I believe more guidelines or brief resource material would have assisted discussion leaders in making each group a better part of the whole.

I was not too bothered by the lack of structure. Our group responded to the daily sessions where appropriate or I did "my own thing" when I thought it was useful. Although this suited me reasonably well and such an approach can provide useful education when the instructors are fully competent, it opens the door to almost too much variety.

The state groups, in many cases, went well and I think more time could have been spent in them. Perhaps it would have been useful to have avoided the first session on a state basis (the very first day) and have added it as a second session toward the end. I'm sure I felt better than many of the group leaders over the last state session because I did not receive any questionnaires and thought that matter had been cancelled.

MEMORANDUM - 2.
February 5, 1969

With some of the small groups more sharing or balancing of experience between staff with extensive union orientation and those without such experience might have been useful.

In the overall program the quality of the resource people was generally good, but perhaps too many were used.

Some of the discussion leaders showed signs of serious fatigue about mid-week or a little beyond,--and there was little opportunity for recuperation. In a few instances this may have led to some fogginess as to what their particular group should be doing.

Although the provided readings were frequently excellent, in and of themselves, they were no substitute for a much briefer orientation to goals and problems. The readings had relatively little utility for my groups although I am certain that a few people made moderate use of them.

This, of course, is all on the critical side and I think all of us saw much evidence of positive change and success.

North Carolina
State AFL-CIO

P. O. Box 10805
RALEIGH, N. C.

RALEIGH
FEB 25 '69
N. C.

U.S. POSTAGE
06
T.U. 309684

FIRST CLASS

Mr. Emory Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

cc: Janet Wells
(VEP wants copy when they come in)

February 27, 1969

Mr. Al Barkan, Director
Committee on Political Education
AFL-CIO
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Barkan:

We would very much like to have two copies of the current COPE calendar.

With kind regards, I am

Sincerely,

(Mrs.) Katharine Martin
Secretary
Labor Program

km

Save to update new directory 3/1/69

NEW VICE PRESIDENTS of the AFL-CIO, elected to fill vacancies on the federation's Executive Council, are from left: Matthew Guinan, president of Transport Workers; C. L. Dennis, president of Railway & Airline Clerks, and A. F. Grospiron, president of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Grospiron, Guinan, Dennis Fill Executive Council Vacancies

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council filled three vacancies in its ranks by electing A. F. Grospiron, Matthew Guinan and C. L. Dennis vice presidents of the federation.

Grospiron is president of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers; Guinan is president of the Transport Workers; Dennis is head of the Railway & Airline Clerks.

The vacancies on the council resulted from the deaths of John J. Grogan and George Harrison and the resignation because of ill health of Ralph Helstein. Helstein was named a vice president emeritus.

All three of the new council members are veteran trade unionists whose road to international union office began when they were elected by their shopmates to local union office.

Grospiron, 52, was born in Burton, Tex., and worked in oil refineries in the state starting in 1935. In 1942, he helped organize his Texas City refinery and in later years served in various local union offices, including the presidency and the full-time post of secretary-treasurer.

He was elected an OCAW board member in 1959 and in 1962 became secretary-treasurer of the OCAW.

Grospiron won election as OCAW president in 1965, succeeding O. A. Knight, who retired. He was reelected without opposition at the union's 1967 convention.

Guinan, 58, was born in Offaly, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1929. He started work in 1933 as a trolley operator for the Third Ave. line in New York and helped organize his fellow workers into the TWU.

In 1942, Guinan became a full-time organizer for the union's big Local 100, was elected vice president of the local in 1945 and its president for six two-year terms, starting in 1949.

He was chosen to the new post of executive vice president of the TWU in 1952 and in 1956 took on the additional job of secretary-treasurer.

Guinan, along with other top TWU officers, spent nine days in jail in 1966 for refusing to call off New York City's transit strike. He became the second president in the history of the Transport Workers that year, when Mike Quill died.

Dennis, 60, was born into a railroad family in Breadstown, Ill. Sixteen members of his family are or have been railroad workers, including his wife, a son, two daughters and five sisters.

He joined the Railway Clerks when he started work as a freight handler for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy in 1928. Dennis held almost every local office and later was division chairman. In 1939, he won the union's grand prize for signing up the largest number of workers into the union.

Dennis was elected an international vice president of the union in 1959 and assigned to work in the growing field of airline clerks. He served for 19 years as general chairman of the Chicago & North Western System Board.

Dennis was first elected president in 1963 and reelected without opposition in 1967.

hold TO correct ~~Labor~~ Democracy of Unions
(U.S. LaSalle Ref.) when it answers

NEW VICE PRESIDENTS of the AFL-CIO, elected to fill vacancies on the federation's Executive Council, are from left: Matthew Guinan, president of Transport Workers; C. L. Dennis, president of Railway & Airline Clerks, and A. F. Grospiron, president of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Asks

BAL HA CIO Exec lishment agency t called o tive high-on t
Th
the pass
"m imp me
"m pro is
T
"no
pas dru ing ins
T req
aga

Better Protection Of Fire Fight

EV

Kuley: Also Save to update Board Directory of Unions.

RECEIVED

RETAIL, WHOLESALE & DEPARTMENT
STORE UNION, A.F.L.-C.I.O.

IS PLEASED TO ANNOUNCE THE REMOVAL OF THEIR OFFICES
TO

4-11-69

OK
5/29/69

101 WEST 31ST STREET
NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10001

WISCONSIN 7-9303

108

J. Smith

EFFECTIVE MARCH 21, 1969

Card made
KM

V. E. P. NEWS

VOTER EDUCATION PROJECT

MARCH 1969 VOL. 3, NO. 3 Southern Regional Council, Inc. 5 Forsyth St., N.W. Atlanta, Ga. 30303

COURT ORDERS NEW VOTE IN GREENE COUNTY, ALA.

The U.S. Supreme Court has ordered a new election for six offices in Greene County, Ala., where the probate judge last fall refused to put the names of National Democratic Party of Alabama candidates on the ballot.

In the same ruling, the court struck down the state's Garrett Law, which required candidates in the general election to file a declaration of intent to run by March 1.

The case grew out of a refusal by Alabama Secretary of State Mabel Amos and several probate judges last fall to certify NDPA candidates because they had not complied with the Garrett Law. The Supreme Court, acting on a petition from the NDPA, issued a temporary order restraining the state from keeping the names off the ballot.

Greene County Probate Judge J. Dennis Herndon ignored the court order and left off the ballot the names of four NDPA candidates for county commission and two for school board.

By striking down the Garrett Law, the Supreme Court

(Continued on Page 8)

Henry Akins, New AVEP Chairman

HENRY D. AKINS IS NEW CHAIRMAN OF ARKANSAS VEP

Henry D. Akins, a high school principal from Wynne, Ark., is the new chairman of the Arkansas Voter Education Project.

Akins, 36, replaces attorney George Howard, who resigned in February. He was elected March 15 at an AVEP executive board meeting.

Akins was a candidate for Arkansas' First District congressional seat in the primary election last July. He is principal of Childress High School in Wynne.

A former biology instructor at Shorter College in North Little Rock, he holds a master's degree in education from the University of Arkansas. He attended Shorter College for two years and received his bachelor of science degree from Philander Smith College in 1957.

Akins is past president of both the Cross County Teachers Association and the Northeast Arkansas Administrators Association.

A native of Augusta, Ark., Akins is married and has two children.

Mrs. Ardies Mauldin of Selma, Ala., recently recognized as the first person registered under the 1965 Voting Rights Act, stands on the front porch of her home on Selma's King Street. An interview with Mrs. Mauldin appears on Page 2.

AT LEFT, THE MAULDINS AT HOME; RIGHT, MRS. MAULDIN WITH SON CHARLES' PICTURE

Mr. Mauldin Was Second Registered; Charles' Civil Rights Work Inspired Them

WHY MRS. MAULDIN REGISTERED FIRST

By JANET WELLS

"When things were going along smooth, I didn't think much about it. But when they started running horses over people, then I got mad."

Mrs. Ardies Mauldin of Selma, Ala., was recalling the circumstances which had made her the first person in line August 10, 1965, when federal registrars came to Dallas County to make the ballot available to the county's 15,000 eligible but unregistered blacks. It was the first appearance of federal registrars in the South, and Mrs. Mauldin became the first person registered under the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Mrs. Mauldin's name first appeared in the national press last December when black members of the Johnson administration gave the retiring President a gold-plated replica of her voting certificate as a farewell memento. In February, a Voter Education Project staff member interviewed Mrs. Mauldin and her husband in their home.

"We have always been a family of people who lived and had no trouble," she said, trying to explain why voting had not seemed so important to her until racists and lawmen began clubbing Negro and white demonstrators in the streets of her hometown. "We always owned our own farm. My father's 84, and he's still independent today. We never had any trouble with the law, never had a minute's trouble with anyone."

Mrs. Mauldin, who shares George Washington's birthday, was 57 Feb. 22. Born in Sardis, about 13 miles away, she has lived in Selma since 1931. She is a practical nurse, and, her husband, Thomas Mauldin, is a salesman and delivery man for a wholesale grocery company. They live in a comfortable seven-room house they bought in 1947.

Like many residents of Selma, the Mauldins were thrust into involvement in the struggle for equality by one of their children.

Charles Mauldin, then 17, was president of the youth movement during the violent struggle for the ballot in Selma in the winter and early spring of 1965. He was among the first persons to cross the Edmund Pettus Bridge on that fateful Sunday when Sheriff Jim Clark unleashed his mounted, club-wielding patrolmen against demonstrators who were trying to march to Montgomery.

"Our daughter called and said Charles had gone with the march," Mrs. Mauldin recalled. "Thomas ran and got his gun and said they weren't going to do that to his child. He said, 'They're going to have to kill me, too.' "

Mrs. Mauldin restrained her husband. But by the time Charles had returned unharmed from the bloody fracas which contributed to passage of the Voting Rights Act, they had realized that things were not going smoothly in Selma and that the time had come to think about it.

"After Charles had made such an effort, even risked his life, I felt like I had to do something, too," she recalled.

Her voice is still bitter when she speaks of lawmen attacking the demonstrators—many of them young friends of her son's—on horseback and firing tear gas on them.

"If it hadn't been for the teen-agers that got out, there never would have been as many registered," she believes. "They gave their parents courage."

Registering to vote was not simple in Selma, even for those who had the courage and endurance to reach the registrar's office. A week or two after she went to the courthouse, Mrs. Mauldin received word that she had not passed the literacy test.

In the summer, when Congress already was drafting a voting rights bill which would alleviate the conditions which kept Selma Negroes away from the polls, she attempted again to register—this time by mail with a sympathetic federal judge in Mobile.

But she didn't wait to test the validity of this registration. On August 10, the Mauldins "just happened to get there on time" to be the first two people registered under the new law inspired largely by their son and his friends.

"It didn't take but a few minutes," she said. "I don't know why it couldn't have been like that in the first place."

Mrs. Mauldin was concerned when told that the Voting Rights Act would expire in 1970, allowing Alabama and the other states to return to use of literacy tests and other tactics which had kept her from voting for so many years.

"It really would be bad to have to go back," she said.

The Mauldins have voted in every election since they registered. They humorously recalled George Wallace's presidential campaign claim that his wife received a heavy black vote in Selma in the 1966 general election. Mrs. Mauldin pointed out that many Negroes voted a straight Democratic ticket to insure the victory of Wilson Baker for sheriff over Jim Clark, defeated in the primary by a solid black turnout but running again in a write-in effort.

"A lot of people get mad when he (Wallace) talks about

(Continued on Page 3)

COURT BACKS VRA PROVISION

In a broad interpretation of Section 5 of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that states covered by the law may not change their election procedures without prior approval of the U.S. attorney general or the Federal District Court in Washington, D.C.

The March 3 ruling grew out of three suits in connection with 1966 amendments to Mississippi's election laws and a case involving the Virginia board of elections. Specifically, the court determined that those states must have permission to change counties' voting from district to at-large, to change a county office from elective to appointive, to enforce stricter requirements for write-in candidates or to prohibit use of paste-on stickers by illiterate voters.

Chief Justice Earl Warren, writing for the majority, said the Voting Rights Act was intended to include protection from "the subtle, as well as the obvious state regulations which have the effect of denying citizens their right to vote because of race."

Warren pointed out that changing such laws could dilute the votes of minority groups, remove formerly elective offices from the voters' control and undermine the effectiveness of citizens who wish to vote for independent candidates.

The court did not order new elections in Mississippi counties where officials have been elected under the 1966 law changes. The chief justice said there was no evidence of discrimination or deliberate defiance of the Voting Rights Act.

Justice John M. Harlan dissented with the majority's decision not to require new elections on the grounds that since the 1965 federal law is due to expire in 1970, elections for some offices would never be held in compliance with this section of the Voting Rights Act.

Harlan added, "There may have been hundreds of officials throughout the South who began serving long terms in office this November under procedures that have not been federally approved. As a result of this part of the court's decision, the Voting Rights Act may never play the full role that Congress intended for it."

Section 5 says that no state under the Act can enforce "any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect on Nov. 1, 1964" without permission of the attorney general or approval of the U.S. District Court in Washington.

Two other federal court decisions affecting the Voting Rights Act have been handed down recently in Louisiana.

A three-judge panel in Baton Rouge ordered registrars in nine parishes to put on their books the names of persons registered by federal registrars. The parishes affected are East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Plaquemines, East Carroll, Ouachita, DeSoto, Madison, Bossier and Caddo.

U.S. District Court Judge Ben Dawkins March 10 ordered a new election for town marshal in Tallulah, La., where Negro candidate Zelma Wyche was defeated by 300 votes in February of 1968.

MRS. MAULDIN

(Continued from Page 2)

that," chuckled Mrs. Mauldin. "But I just laugh."

Do they find things any better in Selma today?

They say it's easier for the young people to get jobs, and they think the city council is finally going to do something to stop the floods that have swept through the homes in their all-Negro neighborhood year after year.

On the whole, they feel Dallas County's elected officials are paying more attention to the black community since more than 10,000 of its members have registered to vote.

"They've kind of been pushed up to it since they got so many colored votes," Mrs. Mauldin reasons.

BOND, M'KISSICK DELIVER MESSAGE AT NCVEP MEETING

At least 600 North Carolina grass roots leaders attended the North Carolina Voter Education Project's third annual leadership training conference in Raleigh March 8.

The crowd swelled to approximately 1,000—including students from host Shaw University—by afternoon when Georgia state Rep. Julian Bond spoke.

In addition to speeches by Rep. Bond and former CORE national director Floyd McKissick, the conference featured workshops on voter registration, getting out the vote, public housing and urban renewal, community organization and education.

Attorney McKissick, who is developing Soul City in North Carolina, advocated Black Power in a rousing keynote speech. Calling the civil rights movement "hung up on semantics," he said Negroes have been "deluding themselves and wasting time" over words like "integration," "Fourteenth Amendment" and "the law."

"If you got the power, you don't need the law," he told the enthusiastic audience. "Whites know what power is; they got power. This is the white man's game."

Rep. Bond also called for racial solidarity.

"Integration victories have little meaning for most blacks," the young Atlanta legislator said. "For most of us, things have not gotten better. They have gotten worse."

Bond defined politics as "saying who gets how much from whom."

"If we are to involve ourselves in that kind of politics," he continued, "we have to think of ourselves as a unit."

What is needed finally, he said, is commitment—"the kind of commitment that would have kept Northern youth in the South and Chicago in ferment."

VEP NEWS BRIEFS

Voter education classes in West Feliciana Parish, La., last summer were organized on a ward basis. During weekly classes in the nine wards, task force workers used model voting machines to teach voters the mechanics of voting. The voters were also informed of their rights at the polls and the dates and importance of upcoming elections.

Miss Kathleen Feyen, secretary of the Greenwood, Miss., Movement, wrote in late October: "We had tried to have classes in churches and schools in the rural areas; but because of the fear of having their buildings burned or taken away, many would not 'get mixed up in that mess.' Instead, people from the rural areas and Greenwood residents have gone out into the smaller cities and down the side roads, stopping at each home and showing each family how to fold and mark the ballot so their vote will be counted in November. We also set up a booth in the downtown section of Greenwood and showed the shoppers as they went by."

EXCERPTS FROM WASHINGTON

(Excerpts following are from an address by Vernon E. Jordan Jr., director of the Voter Education Project, to the 21st annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House. The conference was held March 20-21 at the Hotel Shoreham in Washington, D. C.)

In August of 1965, the first certificate issued under the Voting Rights Act was given to a black woman from Selma, Alabama—Mrs. Ardies Mauldin. There was much appropriate about this event.

First of all, it was Selma and the violence there in the spring of 1965 that led to the Voting Rights Act. Secondly, it was fitting that Mrs. Mauldin led the way. Her teen-age son was a local youth leader in the civil rights movement. He was a part of the generation that assaulted racial injustice with such vigor in the early sixties. Thirdly, it was fitting that Mrs. Mauldin be the first because she is probably typical of the thousands of black people across the Deep South who have registered with the assistance of federal examiners since 1965. She herself is neither a civil rights leader nor a "militant." She is simply an Alabama woman who feels that she is entitled to the right to vote the same as anyone else. That is probably characteristic of the 158,000 blacks who have registered through federal examiners since August of 1965.

Last December, Mrs. Mauldin got into the national news when several hundred Negro leaders gave President Johnson a gold-plated replica of her voting certificate. A few weeks thereafter, a research assisant from the Voter Education Project went to Selma to interview Mrs. Mauldin. During the interview, the research assistant happened to mention the scheduled expiration of important provisions of the Voting Rights Act in 1970. Thinking back to all that Selma Negroes had to go through to get on the voting books, Mrs. Mauldin declared: "It really would be bad to have to go back."

Mrs. Mauldin, in saying this, again is probably typical of the thousands of black people who have registered under the Voting Rights Act. The vast majority, like Mrs. Mauldin, no doubt is unaware that important sanctions of the Voting Rights Act are up for expiration next year. The vast majority, again like Mrs. Mauldin, undoubtedly would be dismayed at the thought of having "to go back."

But that is the prospect faced by Mrs. Mauldin and thousands of other black people in the South as 1969 spins past and as 1970 approaches. That is the prospect faced by those of us who have labored in the field of voter registration in the South, trying to help Mrs. Mauldin and others like her get on the voting books. That is the prospect faced by a promising new crop of black elected officeholders in the South—whose ranks now number nearly 400—as they contemplate the possible loss of thousands of black voters from the registration lists.

There seems to be an impression, in Washington and in the nation, that the Voting Rights Act has solved all the problems of voter discrimination in the South. True, Negro voter registration has increased dramatically in the South. In the election last November there was an increase of nearly one million in Negro registration in the South over the previous presidential election. And most of this increase has come in the states covered in full by the Voting Rights Act—Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina and Virginia. In fact, black registration in these six states has increased 740,000 since August of 1965, when the Voting Rights Act went into effect.

Black registration in the six states fully covered has almost doubled in three and a half years. The number of black elected officials in the region has gone from about 70 in 1965 to 400 today. But that is only one side of the picture.

In the South, there are more than five million Negroes of voting age. Yet, black registration is just above three million. Thus, even with the help of the Voting Rights Act, nearly two million Negroes of voting age in the South remain unregistered. Only 62 per cent of voting-age Negroes are registered in the Southland. Among whites in the region, however, 78 per cent of the voting-age population is registered to vote.

Although much of the increase in black registration has come in the six states covered in full by the Voting Rights Act, the situation in these six states still is a bit worse than the situation in the region as a whole. In these six states, only 57 per cent of the voting-age blacks are registered. White registration in these six states, however, stands at 79 per cent of the adult white population.

This is the situation with the Voting Rights Act. Before the Voting Rights Act was adopted only 31 per cent of the voting-age blacks in the six states—less than one-third, mind you—was registered to vote. So without question, the Voting Rights Act has made a difference. How much more might have been accomplished if the Act had been fully enforced!

Of 517 counties in the six states fully covered by the Voting Rights Act, federal examiners have been sent to only 58. Make no mistake about it, black people in the South very much prefer going before a federal examiner to going before a local registrar. There is a difference in attitude. There is a difference in setting; for many black people fear and dread the local county courthouse, which is for many of them a symbol of injustice and oppression. There is a difference, too, in procedure. As Mrs. Mauldin points out, "It didn't take but a few minutes. I don't know why it couldn't have been like that in the first place."

No federal examiners have been assigned in Virginia, which is wholly covered by the Act, or in North Carolina, which is partly covered. Federal examiners have been assigned in only three Georgia counties and only two in South Carolina. All the rest have been assigned in Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana.

And keep in mind that federal examiners are not constantly available to register black people, even in the counties to which they are assigned. For example, there were no federal registration activities in the South during the final quarter of 1968, despite the approach of important municipal elections in Mississippi.

Finally, in surveying the present scene, I might mention

Voter Education Project

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, NW, Atlanta, Ga. 30303

DR. SAMUEL D. COOK
Chairman

PAUL ANTHONY
JULIAN BOND
DR. C. G. GOMILLION
DR. VIVIAN W. HENDERSON
JESSE HILL
NORMAN HILL
FRANK SMITH
DR. C. H. THOMAS, JR.
JOHN WHEELER
JAMES E. YOUNGDAHL

VERNON E. JORDAN, JR.
Director

SPEECH BY VERNON JORDAN

the problem of enforcement resources in Washington. When he came to Atlanta in December to address our historic Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials just before leaving office, the distinguished former attorney general, Mr. Ramsey Clark, pointed out that the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department had fewer than 100 lawyers to enforce not only the Voting Rights Act, but school desegregation, open accommodation, and all the other civil rights laws as well.

I personally hope that Congress and the administration will see that the resources for civil rights enforcement are increased rather than decreased. I know only too well that certain forces for retrogression in the South are sensitive to the slightest relaxation in this area.

Having discussed the past and present aspects of the Voting Rights Act, let us now turn to the future. Unless Congress acts this year or next year, the sanctions of the Voting Rights Act will go out of existence in August of 1970. What then?

Once Southern states are freed from the bonds of the Voting Rights Act, it is highly likely that they will want to do something about their 740,000 new black voters, whose presence on the voting lists is profoundly affecting Southern politics. It is highly likely that these states will require—as South Carolina did in 1967—that all voters re-register. A number of localities in the South—West Feliciana Parish in Louisiana being prominent among them—already have procedures requiring re-registration.

As black leaders in West Feliciana Parish have pointed out, re-registration can be a considerable burden for Negroes who were fearful and reluctant about going to the courthouse in the first place. But once the prohibitions of the Voting Rights Act are removed, re-registration would be a means of reviewing the registration status of those blacks who have registered under the Act. In fact, several states have retained literacy tests in their election codes and thus stand in a position to reactivate these tests once the restraints of the Voting Rights Act are out of the way.

The election of nearly 400 black officials is only one way in which newly registered Negro voters are affecting the politics of the South. These new voters also are changing some of the faces and attitudes of white officeholders. As Mrs. Mauldin puts it, the white officeholders in Selma "have kind of been pushed up to it since they got so many colored votes."

As sure as I stand here this morning, there are many white politicians in the South who resent being "pushed up to it" by newly registered black voters. There are, of course, some white politicians in the South who have learned to deal comfortably with large groups of black voters. But for every one of them, there are dozens of other Southern politicians who would like to go back to the "good old days" when large numbers of black voters didn't have to be taken into account.

It might be argued that the South is changing and that black people need no longer fear white-written election codes and white-run registration offices. To be sure, there have been some slight changes—thanks in large part to the Voting Rights Act and the ever-present threat of having federal examiners sent in and the influence of newly registered voters. But old attitudes and hostilities persist in the atmosphere at many registration offices across the South.

The Voter Education Project from its beginning in 1962 has had the requirement that registration programs funded by us send us periodic progress reports. At first, of course, the reports were dramatic documents, replete with stories of violence, confrontation and direct action. The struggle for the ballot made headlines across the country.

There are fewer such headlines today, but the struggle is far from won. Our reports still tell us of registrars maintaining short or irregular hours, of registrars arbitrarily closing their offices without notice, of chicanery being used to keep Negroes from voting, of Negroes being treated discourteously by registrars. We hear over and over, from the 100 or more registration programs that we support each year, that blacks fear economic reprisals if they register—such as being fired or evicted, of losing lines of credit or being put off the welfare rolls.

And, yes, voter registration can still touch off violence in the South, despite the existence of the Voting Rights Act. Last fall one home was bombed and a shot was fired into another in Leake County, Mississippi.

Federal presence, or the threat of federal presence, still is needed also to protect ballots cast by blacks. One VEP report tells of whole ballots about to be thrown out in a Mississippi county because of a few incorrect markings on them, until a federal observer intervened. A report from another Mississippi county tells of black voters seeking assistance and being misinstructed by white "helpers" to vote for George Wallace. Still another says: "If the new voters were not actually abused at the polling places, they were thoroughly confused and made to feel ignorant and inferior. This kind of thing spread into the community and many more prospective voters are convinced that politics is a white man's game." And I can report that black leaders in Hancock County, Georgia, are convinced that not the first one of their four black officials could have been elected if their county had not been the first in Georgia to which federal observers were sent.

If conditions can be, and are, this difficult with the Voting Rights Act, then we can imagine how difficult they will be if the coverage of the Act is allowed to expire.

So the Act must be extended. But I personally do not wish to settle for that. Enforcement of the Act should be strengthened. And the Act itself should be strengthened.

Southern states make the argument that they should not

(Continued on Page 8)

CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS ARE NOW AVAILABLE

The proceedings of the Voter Education Project's Southwide Conference of Black Elected Officials were published in March.

In addition to photographs of workshops and speakers, the 64-page booklet contains the full texts of the conference's major addresses. Also reprinted in the proceedings booklet is President Lyndon B. Johnson's telegram to the black officials, the text of the conference resolution and a roster of the Negro officeholders who attended.

Those not currently on the VEP mailing list may obtain the booklet by writing to the Voter Education Project. Single-copy price is 75 cents.

SPOTLIGHT ON CITY ELECTIONS

Blacks are vying for elective offices in several states where municipal elections are being held this spring, and several others are candidates for their state legislatures.

In Mobile, Ala., two Negroes were seeking separate seats in the House of Representatives in an April 1 special election. A Norfolk, Va., Negro has announced he will be a candidate for the House of Delegates in the July Democratic primary.

In Lake Charles, La., a Negro is running for mayor and three others were running for city council April 5. New Roads and Ville Platte each had a black candidate for their municipal councils.

Dr. Edwin W. Guinn was seeking re-election to the Fort Worth, Texas, city council April 8.

Dissension has developed in Alexandria, Va., where the city Democratic committee endorsed a black candidate in a special city council election April 15. Some local Negroes charged that the black leadership of the city was not consulted before the endorsement was made.

Municipal elections will be held in North Carolina during May. Most will be May 6. At least 30 Negroes are reported seeking city offices in Mississippi's May 13 primaries.

In Charlotte, N.C., the newly formed Black Political Organization has announced it will run a full slate of black candidates for mayor and city council. A Negro is running a strong race for mayor of Chapel Hill, and in Durham a Negro is running for a seat on the city council, where one black already serves.

A bomb exploded recently in Smithfield near the home of a Negro candidate for the town commission. The board of commissioners offered a $1,000 reward for information about the bombing.

Reese Cleghorn

CLEGHORN JOINS STAFF OF SRC

Reese Cleghorn, former associate editor of The Atlanta Journal and co-author of a book about the early Voter Education Project, has joined the staff of the Southern Regional Council.

Cleghorn will be writer-in-residence and also director of the leadership project, one of four projects in the SRC's new Economic Development Center. As writer-in-residence he will be writing for national publications on subjects of concern to the Council and engaging in research studies for the organization.

Cleghorn was co-author in 1967 of "Climbing Jacob's Ladder" with SRC information director Pat Watters. Relying heavily on field reports of the first VEP (1962-1965), the book described Negroes' early struggle for the ballot in the South.

He recently wrote an SRC and American Jewish Committee joint report on "Radicalism: Southern Style." He has had a number of articles printed in New South.

Cleghorn has an AB degree from Emory University and a master's from Columbia. He has contributed articles to many national magazines, including New Republic, The New York Times Magazine, Esquire, Progressive and Argosy.

3 BLACKS WIN IN ARKANSAS

The Arkansas Voter Education Project reports that three of 26 black candidates seeking school board seats in the state's March 11 elections were victorious.

Those elected were Edwin Evans, Linwood; John Duckery, Wilmot, and Louvert Rowlette, Selma.

Despite a snowfall which covered most of Arkansas Feb. 15, 22 black school board members and candidates attended a day-long workshop at A. M. & N. College in Pine Bluff sponsored by the AVEP.

The Rev. Ben Grinage, former director of the AVEP, and Cain Wilder, Wilmot city councilman, urged the candidates not to stress race. Grinage said an appeal to race would be played up by the white opponent and the white press.

Alex Brown, a school board member from Tucker who lost his first try for public office, said he won the second race by urging each of his constituents to be responsible for registering 13 potential voters.

Arthur Miller, school board member from Pine Bluff, directed his remarks to the other school board members. He told them they could gain public support for their programs by letting the news media know how they voted on issues and why.

Workshops were conducted on "Securing and Implementing Programs Covered by Public Law 89-10," "Educational Trends and Meeting Pupil Needs," and "Community Organization and Education."

Maury County, Tenn., registration workers advertised the 1968 general election and urged citizens to vote by touring the county in a "Freedom Wagon." James W. Caldwell, director of the project, said black registration in Maury County is at the highest level in history.

LEFT, CARL HOLMAN RISES TO SPEAK; RIGHT, HONORED OFFICIALS RECEIVE PLAQUES

Former Atlantan Holman Addressed Dinner Recognizing Atlanta's 14 Black Elected Officials

ATLANTA'S BLACK OFFICIALS HONORED

More than 200 Atlantans turned out March 7 at a recognition banquet honoring their city's 14 black elected officials.

All the Atlanta Negro officeholders—which include 11 state legislators, two school board members and an alderman—attended with the exception of school board member Horace Tate, who had a previous commitment, and state Rep. Grace Hamilton, who suffered a heart attack the night before. Mrs. Hamilton is now reported in "good" condition at Hughes Spalding Hospital in Atlanta.

Speaker at the banquet was M. Carl Holman, vice president of the national Urban Coalition and a former editor of the weekly Atlanta Inquirer, which sponsored the event. The banquet is slated to become an annual affair.

Holman said blacks have been "badly out of practice" in electing their own to office for more than a hundred years. He continued, "We may thus run the risk of forgetting that considerably more is involved than simply voting for the right man or woman and going back to sleep until the next election."

"Politicians cannot do the job alone," he reminded. "I have never read, 'Where there is no vision the people perish,' to mean that only the leaders must have vision.' "

The recognition night coincided with the formation of an advisory committee of black Atlantans who will act as a liaison between the officials and their Negro constituency.

Chairman John Lewis, director of the Southern Regional Council's Community Organization Project, said the committee will sponsor a briefing session each year to help keep black legislators informed of the needs of their community. The committee will make its recommendations with the advice of private and governmental service organizations.

Lewis said the committee might also support candidates to run against incumbents who do not serve the black constituency.

For a few days in March, meanwhile, Atlanta had its first black mayor. In the absence of Mayor Ivan Allen and Vice Mayor Sam Massell from the city March 13-16, board of aldermen vice president Q. V. Williamson was official acting mayor.

Williamson, elected the city's first Negro alderman in modern times in 1965, was elected vice president of the municipal governing body in February. With the division of the predominantly Negro third ward into two new wards by time for next fall's elections, he may be joined by one or two new black members. The ward division will also provide for the election of one new school board member.

LEFT PHOTO, SINGING "WE SHALL OVERCOME"; RIGHT, HONOREES WITH SPOUSES

All But Two of Atlanta's Black Elected Officials Attended First Annual Recognition Banquet

EXCERPTS FROM JORDAN SPEECH

(Continued from Page 5)

be singled out for coverage in the Act. Their argument is partly valid, partly invalid. Certainly there is reason to apply the Act in those states which have been most flagrant in denying the ballot to black people. But certainly there is logic also to extending federal protection to minority groups anywhere in the country who face discrimination in attempting to exercise their right to vote.

Certainly more effective and widespread use should be made of federal examiners and observers because of the continuing practices I have described, both in counties to which examiners and observers have been sent and those to which they have not been sent.

Perhaps the burden of designating counties for coverage should be lifted from the attorney general. Perhaps designation could be made automatic when non-white registration is below, say, two-thirds of the eligible number. This would remove the designation of counties from the pressures and cross-currents of Washington politics.

At present the Act permits political subdivisions to petition for withdrawal of examiners when more than 50 per cent of the non-white voting-age population is registered. Many counties that have, or should have, federal examiners have moved past that point since 1965. Among these counties are some of the worst in the South. Accordingly, this 50 per cent figure should be raised to, perhaps, two-thirds.

The federal government should make announcements well in advance and seek to publicize the announcements heavily when federal examiners and observers are being assigned. The Justice Department should have at all times staff and resources to review changes in state election laws aimed at weakening the ballots of black people.

I believe we of the Voter Education Project can make a case for extension of the Voting Rights Act, or for some law like it, for strengthening of existing voting-rights legislation, and for stronger enforcement of existing legislation. We can demonstrate that these steps are necessary to guarantee the rights of black people in the South to participate fully in the American political process.

I believe we also can demonstrate that there is no decline of interest on our part, or on the part of Southern Negroes generally, in getting people registered to vote. Indeed, we have sponsored, or helped to sponsor, over 400 programs in 11 Southern states during the last three years, the vast majority of which involve voter registration. We intend to keep at the task until we feel that it has been finished. And like Mrs. Mauldin, we hope that we don't have "to go back" and retrace our efforts of the last three years because Congress and the administration feel that enough has been done to protect the voting rights of black people in the South.

Let us never forget that most of the problems of the ghettos in the North and West have their roots in remote areas of the South. For many years Negroes in the South have been oppressed, starved, disfranchised and dehumanized. Voting-rights legislation holds out at least the hope of correcting these wrongs within the democratic system. If this federal support is lost, either through expiration or non-enforcement, no amount of persuasion will ever "bring us together again."

DISINTEREST, FEAR

Fred L. Neal, director of the Morehouse Parish, La., voter registration project, recently summed up in a few words the problems of his task force workers in registering blacks: "Disinterest ('My vote won't mean anything') and unnamed fears ('You people are trying to get us killed')."

GREENE COUNTY

(Continued from Page 1)

validated the election of 17 NDPA candidates in four other counties.

The American Civil Liberties Union office in Atlanta, which filed the suit in behalf of the NDPA, asked for contempt charges against Herndon. The court ordered the contempt proceedings sent to the lower courts.

V.E.P. News VOL. 3, NO. 3
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

4812 E. 33rd.
74135

5-12-69; 3

Mr. C. C. Wilson, Sec'y.
Tulsa Labor Council, AFL-CIO
P. O. Box 504
Tulsa, OKLA. 74101

5

Dudley Takes Post With Church Unit

Tilford E. Dudley has resigned as director of the AFL-CIO Speakers Bureau to become national affairs director of the Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ, effective Apr. 28.

The United Church of Christ is a union of Congregational, Evangelical and Reformed churches. Dudley has long been active in the work of its council. His headquarters will be in Washington.

Dudley became head of the Speakers Bureau in 1958. Earlier he served as assistant director of COPE and, before the merger, as assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee and associate general counsel for the Packinghouse Workers.

AFL-CIO News 4-26-69

Meany Assigns McGlotten to NAB Position

Robert M. McGlotten, AFL-CIO civil rights staff representative, has been assigned to serve as the labor director of the National Alliance of Businessmen until July 1, Federation Pres. George Meany announced.

The assignment continues the AFL-CIO's cooperation with NAB in its Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program.

Before joining the AFL-CIO civil rights staff in April 1967, McGlotten was a national labor relations specialist for the Opportunities Industrialization Center job training program located in 25 major cities. He formerly was a public relations representative for Transport Workers Local 234 in Philadelphia.

AFL-CIO 4-26-69

5/17/67

... on Page 3) the post. Kirkland has served as

Boggs Succeeds Gritta As Metal Trades Head

file

The resignation of B A. Gritta as president of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. was announced by the department's executive council, which named Maywood Boggs of the Boilermakers as his successor.

The announcement said that Gritta, after more than 20 years of service to the Metal Trades Dept., had tendered his resignation May 9 and retired as president, due to health problems. He was designated president emeritus of the department.

Boggs, who lives in Richmond, Va., and is a vice president of his union, will assume his new office July 1.

Gritta, who has been a member of the Sheet Metal Workers for 43 years, served the labor movement actively most of his working life, the council noted.

After more than 20 years of work at his trade, he was appointed general Metal Trades Dept.

(Continued on Page 2)

Metal Trades Elect Boggs As President

(Continued from Page 1)

representative in 1949, and a year later was elected secretary-treasurer of the department.

Gritta became president of the department in 1962 and was re-elected at 1963 and 1967 conventions.

Boggs is a native of Goochland County, Va. He has been a Boilermakers' vice president since 1956. Before that he had been on the international staff of his union since 1941, except for a period of nearly two years when he served the War Production Board as a special assistant to the director of the Office of War Utilities.

Started in Texas

Gritta, a native of New York state, served his apprenticeship in Galveston, Tex. He held several supervisory and management positions in the sheet metal industry in Texas, and served as commissioner of the Galveston Housing Authority from 1940 to 1948, including two terms as chairman.

Later he was elected business agent for his union, and also served the Metal Trades Council, the Building & Construction Trades Council and the Galveston central labor body. Before his appointment to the Metal Trades Dept. staff in Washington, Gritta was executive secretary of the Texas Building & Construction Trades Council.

Until his retirement, Gritta was a member of the Navy Wage Committee for several years, and also served these additional organizations:

The AFL-CIO Committee on Safety & Occupational Health, AFL-CIO Committee on Social Security, AFL-CIO Committee on Education, Technical Advisory Committee for the President's Conference on Occupational Safety, Defense Orientation Conference Association, AFL-CIO Peace Corps Volunteer Committee, National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee, National Wage Policy Committee of the Coordinated Federal Wage System, and the Dept. of Defense Wage Committee.

AFL-CIO News 5-17-67

Dent

R. C. Coutts, Dispatchers Leader, Dies

Chicago—R. C. Coutts, president of the Train Dispatchers since 1959, collapsed and died at the union's headquarters here. He was 69.

The union's joint board chose Vice Pres. Charles R. Pfenning, 49, of Coggon, Ia., to fill Coutts's unexpired term until the October 1971 convention. Pfenning became a telegrapher at 17, served in the Army Signal Corps from 1942 to 1948, and returned to telegraphy until 1950, when he became a dispatcher on the Western Pacific. He was office chairman and general chairman until elected as ATDA vice president in 1964.

Memorial services for Coutts were held in Chicago, with burial in Grinnell, Ia. Born in Grinnell, he was a telegrapher until promoted to dispatcher, became general chairman on the Rock Island, and was elected union vice president in 1947 president in 1959.

In other changes caused by Coutts' death, D. V. Chandler, trustee for the union's Western region, was named vice president to succeed Pfenning. R. E. Johnson, general chairman for the Santa Fe System, was named to Chandler's former post.

OK
KM
AFL-CIO NEWS 5/31/69

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

July 1, 1969

Copy Harris' Testimony, 1st paper, for M. W. 7/14/69 Thanks Km

Dear Friend:

Enclosed are several items from the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department which may be of interest to you.

As you know, legislation to extend part of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is now before Congress. We include the testimony of the AFL-CIO by our Associate Counsel, Tom Harris, before the House Judiciary Committee on extension of the legislation. Also included is a speech by NAACP Legislative Director, Clarence Mitchell, before the AFL-CIO Community Services annual conference. Mr. Mitchell also discusses the legislation as well as the importance of the labor-civil rights coalition.

The article from New America by Monsignor Geroge Higgins discusses the criticism Housing Secretary George Romney recently labeled on the construction unions. He presents some interesting facts countering Secretary Romney's charges that the unions are responsible for the housing shortage.

Finally, I have included AFL-CIO President George Meany's letter to the NAACP on the occasion of its 60th Annual Convention held this month in Jackson, Mississippi.

With all good wishes!

Yours sincerely,

Don Slaiman

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

bfc
opeiu #2
afl-cio
enclosures

STATEMENT OF
THOMAS E. HARRIS, ASSOCIATE GENERAL COUNSEL, AFL-CIO
BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
ON H.R. 4249

June 19, 1969

My name is Thomas E. Harris. I am Associate General Counsel of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, and I am appearing here on behalf of that organization.

The AFL-CIO supports the enactment of H.R. 4249, which extends for another five years the key provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Since we are in substantial agreement with the testimony given the Committee by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, I will be brief.

Firstly, the AFL-CIO considers that there are compelling reasons for retaining the ban on literacy tests and the provision for federal examiners for those areas where these provisions are now applicable. As the Staff Memorandum submitted by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights shows, the disparity between Negro and white voter registration in the six covered States was substantially reduced during the first three years that the Act was in effect. However Negro registration still lags behind white in each of the six States, ranging from a gap of 8.6% in Virginia to one of 33% in Mississippi. Even greater disparities can be found in particular areas within these States.

Moreover, literacy tests, if re-established, would weigh unfairly against Negroes because their educational opportunities have over the years been substantially inferior to those of whites. The Supreme Court recently held, in Gaston County,

North Carolina v. United States, 37 Law Week 4478, that under the Voting Rights Act of 1965, §4(a) literacy tests may not be reinstituted in an area where the inferior education available to Negroes has resulted in their having a higher illiteracy rate than whites. In such situations, the Court held:

> "a literacy or educational requirement has the 'effect of denying the right to vote on account of race or color' because the State or subdivision which seeks to impose the requirement has maintained separate and inferior schools for its Negro residents who are now of voting age."

This holding will produce a highly anomalous situation, unless the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is extended. For, once a State or political subdivision has refrained, for five years, from using a literacy test, it can bring a suit under §4(a) to establish its right to reinstitute a literacy test, and (absent extension of the five year statutory period) it would prevail. It would then, however, be open to the Attorney General to bring suit under §3(b) to ban the literacy test, on the ground that it would have the effect of denying the right to vote on account of race, if the State or political subdivision "has maintained separate and inferior schools for its Negro residents who are now of voting age." If the Attorney General prevailed in such a suit the Court could, under §3(b), suspend the literacy test "for such period as it deems necessary."

A simple five year extension of the present ban on literacy tests, in the areas covered by the 1965 Act, would be preferable to this sort of circuituous litigation.

Further, we think that the provisions of the 1965 Act prescribing a special clearance procedure for amendments to election laws, in the covered areas, are still needed. As the Supreme Court declared in Allen v. State Board of Elections, 89 S. Ct. 817-823, the Congress enacted these special clearance proced res because of "the history some States had of simply enacting new and slightly different requirements with the same discriminatory effect." Unfortunately "the ingenuity of those bent upon preventing Negroes from voting," as the Court put it, has continued to be evidenced. In the case cited the Court had before it three types of election law changes adopted by Mississippi, allegedly to prevent the election of Negroes in areas where Negro voter registration outnumbered white. These devices were the appointment instead of the election of certain officials in certain areas; election at large in certain areas instead of election by districts; and new requirements to make it more difficult for candidates to run as independents, i.e., without a party nomination. The Mississippi legislature utilized the first two of these devices on a highly selective basis, i.e., certain positions were made appointive rather than elective only in areas with a majority of Negro voters, and not in other areas with a white majority. Similarly, election at large, rather than by districts, was not prescribed uniformly but only for black areas. Amendments to the Alabama election laws to make it more difficult for candidates to run as independents have also been before the Supreme Court. Hadnott v. Amos, 89 S. Ct. 1101.

The Report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights on "Political Participation," 1968, details numerous other devices allegedly being used to frustrate political activity by Negroes. (See pp. 20-59.)

These displays of legislative ingenuity clearly show the continued need for the special clearance procedure for voting law changes established by the Voting Rights Act of 1965. They also show the continued determination of some States to prevent Negroes from exercising their political rights. They make it all too clear that if these States are free to reinstitute literacy tests they will do it, and that the literacy tests are likely to be administered, as in the past, to discriminate against Negroes.

Ultimately, the AFL-CIO would like to see all literacy tests abolished everywhere. In a recent statement before a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on proposed amendments to the Constitution relative to electing the President, President Meany of the AFL-CIO urged that the proposed amendment provide for universal sufferage in presidential elections and that the right to vote be extended to all persons 18 years old or older. We favor universal sufferage for state and local elections also, and would like to see the Congress do whatever it can do by legislation toward achieving that end.

There have been intimations that the Administration is contemplating some proposal in this field, and we would like to reserve the right to file comments on whatever proposals the Attorney General does finally put forward.

However, we strongly urge that the Congress proceed immediately with a simple extension of the Voting Rights Act. Any extensive revision of the Act will inevitably be highly controversial, and its chances of enactment are likely to be conjectural, as the Administration's difficulty in formulating its own proposals shows. We would not like to see the very real advantages of H.R. 4249 put at hazard by an uncertain hope of something more far reaching.

Excerpts from the speech of Clarence Mitchell
Director of the Washington Bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People before the 14th Annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services - Tuesday, May 20, 1969
Shoreham Hotel - Washington, D. C.

From the beginning of my Washington legislative activity I have had the good fortune to be associated with dedicated representatives of organized labor in seeking passage of civil rights and related legislation. There are many monuments to the effectiveness of this working relationship.

Without the help and day to day work of the legislative representatives of labor, headed by Andrew Biemiller, no civil rights legislation could have passed in any session of Congress. Without the help of labor the great marches for civil rights that brought thousands of Americans to Washington would not have been a success. Labor contributed its brain power, its manpower and its finances to make these historic events possible.

In the field of political action we have always sought and gotten the help of labor in registration and voting, in platform battles at political conventions and in spreading work about voting records of public officials.

I have mentioned the foregoing because I believe that it would be a fatal mistake in this country if civil rights and labor groups did not continue to work together in the national interest. We should both welcome the support and cooperation of church groups, business associations and any other constructive organizations. However, we must never forget that we are the foundation on which the House of Freedom is built. If we crumble and fall apart the whole structure may very well collapse.

At this time the House Judiciary Committee is considering extension of the ban against literacy tests in voting. There are many other important civil rights matters which will be given attention by Congress but the voting rights problem is what is happening now. If the ban against literacy tests is extended and we continue to increase the number of qualified voters in the South, I believe that many of our major problems in this country will be solved.

In the field of employment, for example, much industry has fled to the South because that region offered much open space on which to build factories and also boundless opportunities for preventing the growth of unions by playing upon racial prejudices. With public officials who are often both anti-union and anti-Negro, many southern towns and cities have been happy hunting grounds for those who wish to exploit our country rather than build it into a land of opportunity for all. By joining hands in the fight for equal chances to work at the job for which a man is or can become qualified we can do much to make employment so attractive in the South that there will be little need to leave that region in search of a job.

Much of the strangle hold that the forces of obstruction now have on Congress, the state houses and the state legislatures is due to the denial of the right to vote. As we get more county boards that are sensitive to the needs of the people, as we get more Congressmen and Senators who are willing to appropriate enough money for the needs of the people we shall stamp out the ridiculous situation today where as the richest Nation in the world we do not spend enough to build enough decent housing and to feed the hungry. Even that which we do appropriate for those purposes is often wasted or not used because corrupt and inept local officials either do not want to or do not know how to make use of what is available.

Just this weekend we saw an example of the flagrant manner in which constitutional rights are violated by local officialdom. Representatives of the NAACP who were investigating complaints of racial discrimination against colored soldiers stationed at Fort Polk were jailed in Leesville, Louisiana on "investigation for vagrancy." The Mayor of Leesville is quoted as saying "anything that is not welcome at Fort Polk is not welcome at Leesville." The only difference between that mayor and many others (assuming he has been quoted correctly) is that he has been frank enough to admit that he is on the pro-segregation team of certain federal and local officials. Most who carry on a joint operation of this kind keep their mouths shut and the jail door wide open to receive anyone from in or out of town who believes in fair play.

In these times we hear the voices of defeat and conflict on all sides. It has become a wry joke to predict that our cities will either fall down because of rot or be burned down because of riots. Somehow, it has become fashionable to spend more time promoting racial discord than in promoting racial goodwill. However, I am not dismayed by these happenings. As I look about me I see that the ranks of those who have worked together through the years are holding firm. My presence here, today, is the best way that I can bear witness to the fact that those who have been joined together by the common ideals of the past are determined to make those ideals realities in the present and the future. The voices of hate and division are more audible now because they are amplified on the television screen and dutifully recorded on page one of some newspapers. Yet, these voices and the evil doctrines that they preach have been with us all the time. They could not stop us from moving forward in the past and they will not stop us now.

NEW AMERICA

An official publication of the Socialist Party

May 31, 1969

Not So Fast Mr. Romney

Msgr. George Higgins

Housing Secretary George Romney recently stirred up a bit of a rumpus with an all-out attack on the alleged selfishness and/or shortsightedness of the so-called craft unions in the building industry. Stomping in rather awkardly where angels and even Cabinet members normally fear to tread, he bluntly told a convention of several thousand business agents and other craft representatives that their organizations were largely responsible for the critical shortage of housing in this country. He accused them of gouging the public by demanding exorbitant wage rates and by saddling the building industry with all sorts of restrictive practices. He also charged that some of them are guilty of racial discrimination in their recruiting and apprenticeship programs.

Is the Secretary's all-out criticism of the building trades warranted by the facts? The New York Times and a number of other papers have answered this question with a resounding "yes." My own reading of the available facts leads me to conclude that they and the Secretary are badly mistaken. The building trades are admittedly open to criticism on a number of counts, but to leave the impression that they are chiefly responsible for the high cost of housing is to oversimplify a very complicated problem — and, incidentally, to do them a grave injustice.

SOME FACTS

The so-called Kaiser Committee Report, "A Decent Home," which was issued on December 11, 1968, discloses, for example, that the on-site labor cost amounts to 19% of the development and construction cost of the conventional single-family house and 22% of the cost of the elevator apartment unit. It is hard to escape the conclusion, therefore, that a one-sided emphasis on the labor-cost issue (a la Secretary Romney and The New York Times, for example) seriously distorts the nature of the current housing problem, which is actually a series of problems, largely involving land costs and money costs rather than the cost of on-site labor.

Moreover an exaggerated emphasis on improved technology — aimed at reducing the cost of on-site labor — can only lead to utterly false promises of vast reductions in the price of homes. If technological improvements were to reduce the cost of on-site labor from 19% and 22% to 15% and 18% (a substantial achievement, if it were actually to be attained in the brief period of time anticipated by Secretary Romney) the impact on the price of a home and on monthly payments or rents would hardly be more than minimal.

The committee points out, for example, that roughly 50% of the monthly occupancy cost is involved in debt retirement — payments of interest and on principal. For a unit in an elevator apartment house, the debt retirement is 42% of the monthly rent, while the on-site labor cost amounts to 22% of the original development and construction costs. Therefore the Kaiser Committee concludes that the on-site labor cost for such an apartment amounts to 9.2% of the monthly rent. Allowing for a small increase to account for architect's fees and other miscellaneous costs, the committee estimates that "approximately 10% of monthly rents are attributable to the costs of on-site labor." It follows, then, that a 20% cut in building trades wages — or a 20% cut in the cost of on-site labor through a substantial technological breakthrough — would permit merely a 2% reduction in rents. This would mean a reduction from $100 a month, for example, to $98 a month.

I am forced to conclude that Secretary Romney's criticism of the building trades was grossly exaggerated. This being the case, his stock in the labor movement is currently — and quite understandably — very low. He could probably make a comeback if he were to start all over again and propose that the President convene a so-called White House Conference on building costs — a conference made up of all of the parties involved in the building industry, including contractors, unions, bankers, realtors, architects, and the manufacturers of building materials.

I doubt that such a conference would be able to come up with a panacea for the housing crisis, but I strongly suspect that it would buttress the Kaiser Committee's conclusion that "the cost of housing is made up of many bits and pieces" and that "any progress toward cost reduction must proceed through a broadbased approach which would probe for potential savings in every cost element." In every cost element — not only merely in on-site labor costs. The New York Times, please copy.

No surcharge without tax reform

Injustice will be piled on injustice if the income tax surcharge is extended without a major reform of the federal tax laws, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

In a statement to the House Ways & Means Committee, the federation spelled out the reasons why labor cannot support a 10 per cent tax surcharge until it is linked to tax reforms going beyond the Nixon Administration's proposals.

Unless major loopholes are closed, the federation noted, "wealthy individuals and big corporations will continue to escape both the regular tax and the surcharge on a large portion of their incomes . . . as a result, the gap between workers' earnings and take-home pay is unnecessarily large while the tax burden on too many of great wealth and taxpaying ability is unconscionably small."

NEWS from the AFL-CIO

NA. 8-3870

FOR RELEASE IN SUNDAY PAPERS, JUNE 29, 1969

The AFL-CIO today made public a letter from its president, George Meany, to the 60th annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which opens today at Jackson, Mississippi. The text follows:

The AFL-CIO is most happy to have this opportunity to extend greetings to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at this -- its 60th Annual Convention.

Traditionally, conventions are a period when we look backward -- if only briefly -- to review past performance. But more important than this reflective pause, is the here and now -- and most important must be plans for future progress.

Certainly a glance backward over those six dramatic decades since NAACP was born reveals many significant achievements and major social changes.

We in the trade union movement share with our friends in the civil rights movement the satisfaction these achievements bring to those who fought to make them a reality.

The past decade, especially, has been rewarded with accomplishment, with perseverance crowned with victories. Significantly, these accomplishments were made through the democratic process, through a combination of economic and political protest channeled into the electoral system.

None of these victories came easily or cheaply. It is a truism that the road to social justice is long and bumpy.

But victories were won on the legislative battlefield and elsewhere and new programs, public and private, to fight poverty and discrimination were born.

One such is the Outreach Program established by the trade union movement to recruit minority young people as apprentices in the skilled trades. It is a program which already has had some successes and for which the future looks bright.

We know how much more needs to be done in this area and our efforts will continue and be intensified in the days ahead.

But it seems to me important to understand why we believe Apprenticeship Outreach is such a vital tool to the young people who so badly need hope. It is keyed to helping minority group youngsters to acquire skills and thus good paying jobs. It rejects the counsel of those who would downgrade the skills and standards in the trades and thus ultimately cut the wage levels.

There are statistical records which demonstrate that we are beginning to solve the problem. The U.S. Labor Department recently noted that of the 225,000 persons in registered apprenticeships in 1968, the number of non-whites totaled 16,200. In itself this is not a significant statistic unless one knows that this is triple the 1960 figure. And the picture continues to improve. Of the 26,000 apprentices newly-enrolled in the first half of 1968, nearly 10 percent came from minority groups.

There is one factor in the economy which could bring Operation Outreach crashing to a halt -- a recession.

Employment opportunities will continue to increase only if the nation's economic growth continues as it has in the past nine years.

So as we plan for the future, we must be alert to those who would hobble that economic growth, those economic tinkerers who would fight inflation by promoting unemployment.

Any increase in unemployment will mean that those who now see employment opportunity in the cards for the first time will be cruelly frustrated.

Recent figures from the Labor Department, for instance, show that the nation's unemployment rate has increased by one-tenth of one percent, up to 3.5 percent. And black workers suffered the most, for the unemployment rate for white workers remained unchanged.

You and we have another common concern -- the need to insure complete compliance with the civil rights law. This means we must be alert to and fight every attempt to put the enforcement machinery in the hands of hostile or mediocre administrators.

We must as well stand together in the fight for adequate funding of the vital social welfare programs for which we jointly lobbied. All of the federal educational programs now on the statute books are valueless without adequate appropriations and we face a major struggle to win passage of these appropriation measures.

In that connection let me point to our program for achieving federal tax justice. It will close loopholes in the present tax structure which cost the Treasury between $15 and $17 billion, It would provide $6.7 billion in tax relief to low, moderate and middle-income families. It would restore fairness to the tax laws and provide revenue to insure that badly needed domestic programs could be adequately funded.

Finally, let me publicly associate the AFL-CIO with the efforts of the NAACP to heal the schism within the Negro community caused by those black extremists whose so-called "solution" to America's racist problems is to mimic those extremist whites whose activities disgraced this nation.

Last November's issue of Crisis correctly and courageously noted that they would undo all that the NAACP has worked 60 years to achieve and that "reversal of the trend toward integration must be met head-on by the vast majority of Negroes who reject the minority's tactics and goals."

The NAACP and the AFL-CIO have shared the sweet taste of victory in the past and we shall again in the future.

The NAACP and the AFL-CIO have stood together against powerful and ruthless allies in the past and we stand just as united as we face the foes of today who seek to divide us and who must certainly fail.

And the goals we share are the goals all America must seek -- the abolition of hate, poverty, discrimination and disease; the achievement of full and equal opportunity in employment, housing, education and justice.

Working together we can -- and we must -- reach these goals.

-30-

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

LANE KIRKLAND
SECRETARY-TREASURER

DAVID DUBINSKY
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
RICHARD F. WALSH
JAMES A. SUFFRIDGE
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
I. W. ABEL
HUNTER P. WHARTON
WILLIAM POLLOCK
A. F. GROSPIRON

JOSEPH CURRAN
JACOB S. POTOFSKY
LEE W. MINTON
KARL F. FELLER
PAUL HALL
P. L. SIEMILLER
PAUL JENNINGS
MAX GREENBERG
MATTHEW GUINAN

M. A. HUTCHESON
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
HERMAN D. KENIN
DAVID SULLIVAN
A. J. DeANDRADE
JOHN H. LYONS
C. L. DENNIS

815 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

PHONE: NATIONAL 8-3870

July 17, 1969

Dear Friend:

On May 6 of this year, A. Philip Randolph was honored with an 80th birthday testimonial dinner commemorating him for the work and inspiration he provided the labor and civil rights movements over the past 45 years. The banquet was attended by fifteen hundred people representing the entire scope of the labor movement along with religious faiths, Negro organizations, government leaders and others testifying to the unity and strength of the labor-liberal-Negro alliance.

I am enclosing the three major speeches delivered at the dinner -- that of President Meany and of Roy Wilkins, Executive Director of the NAACP, who presented the award to Mr. Randolph and Mr. Randolph's reply.

I am also enclosing one of several editorials we received from a small mid-western newspaper. The significance of this kind of tribute becomes more meaningful when one remembers how many segments of our society ignored and degraded Brother Randolph in his early struggles.

Finally, included is the text of my latest radio interview, "Labor-Black Community Coalition".

I hope these items will be of interest to you and, as always, your comments are welcome.

Sincerely,

Don Slaiman

Don Slaiman
Director
Department of Civil Rights

pac
opeiu #2 afl-cio
Enclosures

P.S. The Publications Department of the AFL-CIO has sent a card to all those who receive complimentary copies of the AFL-CIO News and the Federationist, requesting that you fill out the card and return it if you wish to remain on those lists. Please respond to this notification promptly and if you have not received the card, please notify our office immediately so that your name will not be dropped from these two lists.

MT. CLEMENTS, MICH.
MACOMB DAILY
— D. 41,686 —
DETROIT METROPOLITAN AREA

APR 17 1969

In Our Opinion

Civil Rights Struggle Began With Randolph

In an active and useful life that spans eight decades, A. Philip Randolph was a leader in the field of civil rights before the fathers of some of today's self-appointed black spokesmen were born.

In the 1920s, he fought for integration against the Back-to-Africa movement of Marcus Garvey, just as today he opposes the movement for black separatism.

In 1925, he began the long and arduous campaign to organize the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, which met fierce resistance from the railway companies and became the central focus of the early civil rights struggle.

Thanks largely to Randolph, who among other things is a vice president of the AFL-CIO, there are today two million black trade unionists who have achieved economic dignity and job security.

In 1941, Randolph's plan for a massive Negro march on Washington convinced President Roosevelt to sign an executive order banning discrimination in war industries and setting up the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

In 1948, his influence and authority were behind another executive order by another president, Harry Truman, initiating integration in the armed forces.

In 1963, he conceived and directed the famous March on Washington, one of the landmarks in the civil rights struggle.

A. Philip Randolph was 80 on April 15 and remains passionately committed to the principles of democracy, nonviolence, integration and economic equality.

Those who demand more teaching about black heroes in the nation's schools could do far worse than begin with the study of this man's life.

Following is a text of an address by AFL-CIO President George Meany at a banquet honoring the 80th Birthday of A Philip Randolph at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel New York City, Tuesday May 6 1969.

My good friend, Bayard Rustin honored guests here at the head table, Phil Randolph, ladies and gentlemen.

I consider it a great privilege to come here this evening on behalf of the American trade union movement to bring birthday greetings to A. Philip Randolph and perhaps more important to pay tribute to him on his long and distinguished career as an active humanitarian.

Phil Randolph has really had a unique career having been an outstanding labor leader as well as a civil rights leader for more than half a century. He pioneered and persevered along three avenues of progress in his activities.

One, he strongly advocated the organization of Negro workers into trade unions as part of the mainstream of the labor movement beginning with the organization of the Pullman Porters on the railroads and continuing by encouraging black workers of other industries to unionize.

In his second activity he waged a long fight against employment discrimination especially by obtaining executive action and legislation to outlaw racial discrimination in employment. He courageously fought discrimination within the labor movement itself. It is significant that as far back as the 1920s when the American labor movement contained a great deal more discrimination than it does today Phil Randolph s firm conviction and advice to Negro workers was to get into the labor movement and work to obtain its support.

He warned Negroes against being used by those exploiters who sought to divide black and white workers for their own greedy purposes.

There is ample evidence that the American labor movement responded, oft times too slowly to Phil Randolph s efforts in all these fields. There is no question that the trade union movement played a role in the pattern of discrimination and exploitation that marked the industrial life of our country in years gone by.

But may I also state here and now that the trade union movement still has a job to do if it is to completely remove the spectre of race discrimination from its ranks.

While it is true today that anti-discrimination clauses are practically standard in collective bargaining contracts, it is also true that discrimination still exists. As to upgrading and advacement, there is still much to be done in the field of training members of minority groups for the higher skilled jobs that command higher pay.

- more -

The latest unemployment figures released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics just yesterday show a sharp rise in unemployment for Negroes while the rate for white workers remains unchanged at a fairly low level This clearly indicates the need for upgrading the skills of the Negro worker -- not only through federal job training programs, but by employers and unions through their industry training and apprenticeship programs

But despite these continuing disparagements that appear from time to time it is also true that there has been significant progress

As the magazine Business Week pointed out a few months ago more and more Negro workers are joining AFL-CIO unions -- many because companies are now hiring them and the unions absorb them through union shop agreements· others because many of our affiliates are actively seeking them out and urging them to join their local unions or to build new ones

It is not infrequent these days to find unions and civil rights leaders working together to bring the benefits of unionism to the most exploited Negro Puerto Rican Mexican-American and other minority group workers -- Memphis Charleston South Carolina the farm workers under Cesar Chavez in California and Texas are part of the daily efforts of the American labor movement to raise the economic levels of exploited minority group workers and to give them a means for collective strength· to achieve dignity as well as economic improvement

In the field of legislation while Brother Randolph obtained the first Executive Order barring discrimination in government contracts from President Roosevelt almost single handedly Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was wrestled from a reluctant Congress by a coalition of civil rights labor and religious liberal groups in the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights

I am proud to say that the AFL-CIO played a major role in getting Title VII into the bill and getting the entire package through the Congress

In the old days of the trade union movement Phil Randolph seemed to be a lonely voice fighting for justice and equality for his people. But I m sure today that he recognizes that he is no longer alone While I would be the last to say that labor has in the past done all that it should I can say that I am proud of the efforts that are now being made and put forth not only by the AFL-CIO but by its constituent national unions

The Civil Rights Department of the AFL-CIO under the energetic leadership of Don Slaiman is making its vital contribution Practically all of our large national affiliates have active civil rights departments today that cooperate fully with the AFL-CIO to see that the national policy receives the cooperation at the local union level that we must have if we are going to complete the job of eliminating discrimination entirely from our midst

The program of the Workers Defense League along with the A Philip Randolph Educational Fund which is the fund which will benefit from this dinner here tonight with their joint apprenticeship committee headed by Ernest Green have made significant progress in bringing minority group youngsters with skilled building trades apprenticeships

The Department of Labor recently reported that of 225 000 persons in registered programs in 1968 16 000 were non-whites Now that s not a very significant figure But it is significant if you realize that it s eight times the number there were in 1960 So we are moving in this direction It s not a significant number but it does represent progress Because of the effective work of the Workers Defense League and A Philip Randolph program the cooperation of the building trades internationals we are making progress in this field

- more -

We have our so-called Outreach program bringing apprentices into the building trades in cooperation with the Workers' Defense League and the A. Philip Randolph Foundation now going forward in 53 of our major cities in all parts of the nation.

And may I point out in this connection that these young men are being trained without a reduction of the skills and standards in the trades involved. They are being turned out as full-fledged mechanics capable of holding their own on the job.

I want to say that I am proud of these efforts on the part of the AFL-CIO and I am proud of the fact that we are having some success. However, there is no room for complacency. Progress eliminating discrimination and even further successful affirmative programs cannot guarantee opportunities for all. Adequate housing, education and full employment plus specialized programs in training are necessary to solve the problem of our urban crisis. Failure of the federal government to meet these needs can intensify the already apparent turmoil and confusion that exists. I must speak very highly at this point of Phil Randolph s latest contribution -- the A. Philip Randolph Institute It s staffed under the capable directionof Bayard Rustin. In these difficult times it is effectively and courageously continuing the work in traditions of a great labor leader and a great civil rights leader, the man we are honoring tonight. I have spoken about Phil Randolph the labor leader and the civil rights leader I cannot conclude without mentioning Phil Randolph my friend He has always been an eloquent orator on the public scene but in the privacy of smaller meetings the meaning of what he is saying is not only eloquent but clear, and comes through especially for its sincerity and honesty.

So again on behalf of the entire membership of the AFL-CIO, his colleagues on the Executive Council the majority of whom are in this room tonight I salute Phil Randolph as a great trade unionist and a courageous fighter for justice and human decency.

- 30

REMARKS BY ROY WILKINS, PRESIDENT OF THE NAACP
AT THE A. PHILIP RANDOLPH 80TH BIRTHDAY TESTIMONIAL DINNER
WALDORF-ASTORIA HOTEL - NEW YORK, NEW YORK - MAY 6, 1969

I want to bring greetings to Governor Rockefeller, to Phil Randolph, and I want to bring some earplugs to all the rest of you because I think you have evidenced marvelous forebearing this evening. I shall make it my duty not to intrude further on all the fine speeches that have been made and especially on your good will.

I wasn't able to hear all of the things that were said about Phil Randolph but I know all of them were true and all of them were good.

I did hear what George Meany had to say and this was very important because George Meany has worked with Philip Randolph in the trade union movement and knows of what he speaks. Not only that, but George Meany has worked in the civil rights movement in places where his presence and his words count a great deal at times when we do not see him work.

Moreover, his organization -- the AFL-CIO -- has been one of the bulwarks of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights which has been responsible for so much of the national legislation under which we now make progress.

But it was the story that Coretta King brought us here tonight that sent me back in memory to Phil Randolph's career -- the story of the Charleston hospital workers and their fight for the simple right to organize a union.

In the 1920s -- 45 years ago -- I came out of school and went to work in Kansas City for a newspaper -- one of the three Negro newspapers in the United States that were supporting Phil Randolph's efforts to unionize the Pullman Car Porters. The parallel with Charleston is painful and dredges up all kinds of memories.

I don't know what people have told you about Philip's earlier career and about that magnificent but heartbreaking but finally victorious fight to organize the most exploited class of workers in the United States bar none.

In the 1920s, the Pullman Porters were the most exploited workers in this nation. They were without any assistance whatsoever. They had no redress; they had no appeal. The Pullman Company wouldn't even listen to them and if they committed an infraction of the rules, they were fired. And sometimes they were fired without committing any infraction.

Philip Randolph -- son of a minister and college graduate and intellectual, as we now classify him so easily -- said he didn't know anything about the Pullman Car business and he didn't know about the problems of the workers but he was willing to learn.

They asked him for help and he met with them and he found that aside from the big enemies, the Pullman Company, that one of the most annoying and irritating and betraying enemies were those stool pigeons within the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters -- the men who ran the next morning to tell Mr. Charlie what was happening and who was at such and such a meeting and who met Phil Randolph and what Randolph said.

The other night Phil Randolph told us an amusing story about his organizing meeting -- the first meeting. And because they all recognized that stool pigeons were the main obstacles, he said, now this meeting will be the Randolph meeting.

He said, "It was my meeting. I told them I don't want you men to say a word. I don't want anybody to get up and testify about how you've been mistreated. I'm going to give the invocation," and he did. "I'm going to sing the first verse of a hymn and I thank you." He said, "I'm going to make the announcements and I made them. And I'm going to introduce the speaker and I did and I spoke and I did speak." He said after I finished speaking I did the benediction. And I said, "Now you men go home. Don't stand around on the street corners talking about the meeting because if you do you will be reported tomorrow morning. In fact, you may be reported just because you were here even though this was Randolph's meeting."

Well, that was one of the more humorous stories of this long fight, much longer than the fight of the hospital workers in New York City which took 46 days. This stretched into years.

But Phil Randolph finally won against the stool pigeons, against the Negro public which distrusted unions, which didn't want to have anything to do with unions, against the internal footdraggers among the Pullman Porters who, even though they were exploited and beaten and robbed of the wages they were making, were fearful of joining a union and doing something about it.

But Phil Randolph stayed and preached with that marvelous persistence and faith that he has. And with that goodness and steely determination underneath his gentleness and finally the day came when they sat down in the board room of the Pullman Company and drew up a contract.

Ah, that was a day because years of sacrifice and betrayals had gone into it. And Phil Randolph was the single, shining personality that changed the complexion of the opinion of unions in the Negro community. He had converted all the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters to the ranks and finally he had brought the powerful, domineering wealthy Pullman Company to the bargaining table.

And, I don't know, George Meany, of any greater satisfaction that a union man can have than bringing a stubborn company to the bargaining table.

You know, there are a lot of stories floating around which Phil has never verified and he won't verify them tonight, I'm sure. The Pullman Company once sent him a check for $100,000 and told him to get lost in Puerto Rico or somewhere and he sent the check back. And then the story is that they sent him after another year another check signed, dated, with the amount left blank for him to fill in. And he tore this one in half and sent it back.

This man who is celebrating his 80th birthday today is a man who has had nothing out of the labor movement or the workers whom he has benefitted but the satisfaction of having been their savior, their advisor and their counsellor, their inspiration.

He doesn't have worldly goods -- secret or non-secret -- and he began that career by sending back the checks to the Pullman Company. He won't tell you that. He won't deny it but he won't tell you that.

You know, the 1920s were a lot different than 1969 and there was a different conception of unions. But I wanted you to know that about Phil Randolph because we have in Charleston, and we had here in New York with the hospital workers, the same kind of fight to establish a union, to get a contract.

Those men were working for $67 a month salary and the first contract they got a $12 raise and now they are up to about $5,000 to $6,000 plus fringe benefits, plus, of course, what the hotel calls "gratuities".

So, I want to say, Happy Birthday to you, Phil, and I want to say like Coretta King said about Martin Luther King, when I came along as a young man, you were my hero, my inspiration. You caught me at the time when every young college boy should be caught -- when he's full of idealism, when he believes that the world can be changed and here was a man who was busy changing it. Who was confident it could be changed, who never wavered, who never slipped, who never faltered, who never gave his followers any cause for anything except going forward to victory.

In my college years you were my happy inspiration. I have a very personal pleasure in being here tonight, different from all the other pleasures, because when you came out to Kansas City and talked to staff members of the Kansas City Call and talked to my boss, thanking him for helping in the unionization of the Pullman Car Porters, it had an influence on the direction that I took in my lifetime.

This is the kind of effect that this man has had on generations of white people, of colored people, young people and old people.

And tonight we say thanks and we say it, Philip, in presenting to you a book of testimony from your friends.

With your indulgence I'll just read two of the many tributes in this book before handing it over to you.

From the White House in Washington, and President Nixon:

"I know of no one man who can look back with greater satisfaction on eight meaningful decades and certainly none has given the nation cause for deeper gratitude than you.

"You have long been in the forefront of the labor movement but more than that, you have always stood for the highest ideals of social justice and human dignity.

"You have spoken out frankly and convincingly on the most pressing issues of our time and you have helped to awaken the nation to the inequities that still prevent too many of our people from enjoying the blessings that most of us have taken for granted.

"Please accept our warmest congratulations on this birthday and our every good wish for all the joy and contentment that are derived from a lifetime of service to your fellow citizens.

"Sincerely

"Richard M. Nixon."

And from the former occupant of the White House, President Lyndon B. Johnson, this note:

"Of course we can do little more than help to bring attention to the tremendous contribution of this great and dedicated American. For in the final analysis, Philip Randolph's greatest tribute is his own career.

"For half a century he has been an inspired and tireless fighter to the cause of justice. He has never lost faith in the American dream or in the American people. And his efforts have been rewarded as his faiths have been justified.

"I am proud to be able to salute him as a friend and as an admirer.

"Lyndon B. Johnson."

Philip, this book contains others -- hundreds of other greetings from Governor Rockefeller, who is here tonight, from Congressman Diggs, Senator Harris -- both of whom are here tonight, from the AFL-CIO Executive Council, from the Africans gathered at Accra for a meeting of African trade unionists, and messages from all over the world.

And it gives me a great and personal pleasure to present this to you and not to introduce you or present you to this audience, but to simply let them look at you.

RESPONSE OF A. PHILIP RANDOLPH, PRESIDENT EMERITUS
BROTHERHOOD OF SLEEPING CAR PORTERS
TO ROY WILKINS TRIBUTE
AT THE A. PHILIP RANDOLPH 80TH BIRTHDAY TESTIMONIAL DINNER
WALDORF-ASTORIA HOTEL - NEW YORK, NEW YORK - MAY 6, 1969

Thank you, Roy, for that fine tribute.

I need not tell you that I am very happy to have your cooperation, your fine and splendid attitude for the work that I have tried to do. I have know you a long, long time and have the highest admiration and respect and love for you and your work.

I want to salute our gracious friend, Mrs. Martin Luther King, a lady of grace and charm and dignity and great dedication to the cause of the black worker -- not only the black worker but all workers -- Protestant, Catholic, Jewish.

I'm grateful for the fine representation here from various areas of life. I've known Governor Rockefeller for a long, long time. He and I were engaged in developing the movement for a Fair Employment Practice Committee, there was Isaiah Minkoff, Anna Rosenberg and a number of others.

We had a luncheon and at that time no one had any idea that the Fair Employment Practice idea would ever be realized and crystallized. I recall during the discussions that we had that Governor Rockefeller said: "Now it can be realized if we fight for it."

And I'm very, very glad and happy to see my good friend, George Meany, at this dinner. I have great admiration and affection for George Meany. I know him very well. I know that when he commits himself to a program he will work at it and he will carry through and he does not pretend to be for something when he isn't. If he isn't for something, he'll let you know and in no uncertain terms.

So George Meany and myself have worked together over a long period of time and I think that we have made some progress in the field of civil rights.

My good friend, Bayard Rustin -- Bayard Rustin and myself have been at this struggle for some 25 years. He's a young man and I have had him working on various marches which we have developed. He is a genius in the organization of protest marches and the biggest that was ever given in this country was given under Bayard's direction. That was the march of 1963.

Now, let me just say a few words that I have jotted down. I didn't intend to make any talk. My good friend, Billy Bowe, is here and he always tells me how long I speak.

The gathering here tonight is an honor and for that I am deeply grateful and humble, but in a more profound sense it is a rededication to a cause to which I have contributed my energies and principles, to which I have dedicated my life.

The cause has been the liberation of the Negro in America. I have seen fit in this endeavor to try and establish an alliance between the Negro and the American trade union movement. I have been guided by the belief that Negroes are a working people and that because of their history on American soil -- a history of suffering and tragedy, but also of struggle, endurance and dignity and ultimately, a history of human triumph -- that because of this history they have been a dispossessed people who have often had to migrate thousands of miles in search of the means of subsistence.

The labor movement has been the home of the working man and traditionally it has been the only haven for the dispossessed. Therefore, I have tried to build an alliance between the Negro and the American labor movement.

I have not been alone in my efforts. In 1925, almost half a century ago, I and my colleagues founded the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters. You heard Brother C. L. Dellums speak tonight about this movement. He and I were black militants on the Pacific Coast in the 20s. In our struggle to build the union we faced destitution and continual harrassment, but we did build it and our struggle conferred upon us collectively a certain dignity.

With this victory, my brothers and I in the union not only improved the conditions under which we lived and worked but we were enabled to reach beyond ourselves to our brothers and sisters on the plantations and in the ghettos -- the plantations of which our lovely Mrs. King told us tonight. We were able to reach out and build a movement of Negro masses struggling to realize, upon this American soil, the freedom and the justice which they had so long been denied. The Negro masses awakened in 1941. They challenged the President of the United States to integrate the defense industries and all other places of public employment. And they were victorious. The Negro masses were in motion. They were removing the mark of oppression from their brows and the burden of economic misery from their bodies. This struggle has continued down to the present day.

Like a mountain stream that grows in size and momentum as it rushes downwards, the struggle of the Negro masses for social and economic equality has become irrepressible. From Memphis, Tennessee to Charleston, South Carolina, they cannot now be satisfied with anything less than total liberation.

Our ceremony of rededication tonight is to the cause of freedom but it is also to the principles governing the means by which freedom must be achieved. In my life I have tried to abide by the principles of democracy, nonviolence and integration but there are some today, particularly among our black youth, who would question the validity of these principles in our on-going struggle. I urge them to reconsider their position and to engage with me in a reaffirmation of these fundamental principles.

We must reject confrontationism and together reaffirm the necessity for democratic means of political protest.

We must reject violence and together reaffirm the power and the wisdom of nonviolence.

And we must reject racial separatism and together, with the conviction that one day our nation can cease to be divided within itself, reaffirm our abiding faith in integration. We cannot reject these principles without also denying ourselves the possibility of freedom.

Salvation of the Negro masses must come from within. Freedom is never granted; it is won. Justice is never given; it is exacted.

But in our struggle we must draw our strength from something that far transcends the boundaries of race. We must draw upon the capacity of human beings to act with humanity toward one another. We must draw upon the human potential for kindness and decency.

And we must have faith that this society, divided by race and by class, and subject to profound social pressures, can one day become a nation of equals, and banish white racism and black racism and anti-semitism to the limbo of oblivion from which they shall never emerge.

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF: Sept. 9 1969

Kathy Martin

confirmed

Delta #65

Lv. Atl - 6:15

arr. 7:38 Wash Natl

breakfast

Lv. #739 lv. Wash Natl. 8:25

arr Atl 9:53

1st class

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

Kathy Martin

Call Mrs. Via after noon

The Butler Cottage - Blockade Runner Motel

Wrightsville Beach - N.C.

AFL CIO

NC

N.C. AFL-CIO

Another Copy
Of Labor News
Being Mailed To:

EMORY VIA
SOUTHERN REG. CN.
5 FORSYTH ST.
ATLANTA, GA.

Over 29 Years Service
To AFL-CIO Members
In North Carolina

Labor News

PUBLISHED WEEKLY Vol. 29, No. 23 DURHAM, N. C., FRIDAY, SEPT. 19, 1969 PRICE PER COPY TEN CENTS

CAROLINA LABOR'S VIEW

President Wilbur Hobby got his administration off to a flying start Sept. 12, by leading a Raleigh demonstration of more than 6,000 Tar Heel union members against Carolina Power and Light Co.

The demonstration was prompted by CP&L's decision to hire Brown and Root Construction Co., of Houston, Texas, to build more than half a billion dollars worth of generation plants in the state. It was launched by members of the building trades unions but quickly drew the support of the state organization as well as other unions.

Early on the morning of Friday, Sept. 12, thousands of union members began arriving at Raleigh's Memorial Auditorium. After receiving instructions from President Hobby and building trade leaders, the group began a march up Fayetteville Street to the offices of CP&L where Hobby and building trade leaders met for about an hour with officials of the power firm.

The group presented a petition to company officials requesting the firm to "require that proposed work . . . meet area standards of wages, fringe benefits, safety and working conditions established by the AFL-CIO Building Trades Unions in the Carolinas . . . hire key personnel and working forces, giving preference to Carolina citizens and North Carolina firms and national firms who . . . have been doing business in the Carolinas."

A second group stopped off at

Union Head Sets Militant Style For Organized Labor

RALEIGH—The new president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO is losing no time in setting a militant style for the labor organization.

The official, Wilbur Hobby of Durham, gave a demonstration of things to come with a march last Friday by thousands of union members in downtown Raleigh.

It was the largest gathering of union members in the memory of Raleigh old-timers, and a sharp departure from traditional union tactics.

The theme of the march was a protest against Carolina Power and Light Company's awarding of a $469 million construction contract to a Texas firm which the AFL-CIO leadership consider, "viciously anti-union."

But Hobby left no doubt that the march was a demonstration of union strength, too.

"From now on, we're going to go first class," Hobby told his cheer-

March was a demonstration of union strength, too.

"From now on, we're going to go first class," Hobby told his cheering listeners.

Statistically, the union movement in North Carolina appears extremely weak, with only an estimated 90,000 members out of a total labor force of about 2.3 million.

Hobby's task will be to make the weight of those few felt out of proportion while trying to swell the number.

His success in organizing Friday's march shows he's off to a good start.

The 43-year-old Durham tobacco worker gained his new leadership post last week after a dozen years of trying for it.

The theme he used in unseating the veteran Millard Barbee was the old political slogan, "It's time for a change."

But Hobby seems to be taking the slogan at face value.

A unionist who knows both Hobby and Barbee well puts it this way: "Barbee goes for the short gainer—Hobby will throw the long ball. Barbee will settle for an occasional drink of water — Hobby wants the whole bucket."

Friday's march brought no immediate concessions from CP&L.

The union charged that the Brown and Root Construction Co., chosen by CP&L to construct five generating plants in North Carolina, "has a reputation of anti-union activity."

The demonstrators, in a resolution presented to Gov. Bob Scott's office, asked Scott "to use your good offices and influence with Carolina Power and Light Co. to head off" the economic loss they claim will result from bringing in workers from outside the state.

doing business in the Carolinas."

A second group stopped off at the office of Gov. Robert W. Scott where a resolution was given to a Scott aide. The resolution pointed out that Brown and Root "has a reputation of being anti-union" and said an official of the firm had been quoted in a North Carolina paper as saying Brown and Root would not do business with unions in hiring of workers.

The resolution also said Brown and Root "has a reputation for undermining the wages and working conditions which have improved the living standards . . . in the construction industry and which have made it possible for these workers to enjoy a decent standard of living."

The resolution also said, "we believe workers will be brought to North Carolina to take jobs that rightfully belong to our people, black and white, ,thereby taking wages and salaries out of North Carolina. . . . "

The resolution concluded by calling upon the governor "to use your good offices and influence with Carolina Power and Light Co. to head off this economic loss to our workers. . . ."

8,000 Union Building Trades and Industrial Workers March in Raleigh to Protest Carolina Power and Light Company Letting of One Half Billion Dollars in Contracts to Anti Union Texas Firm of Brown and Root Construction Company.

CLEMENT LEMON DIES; HEADED DELAWARE AFL-CIO

WILMINGTON, Del.—Clement J. Lemon, first and only president of the Delaware AFL-CIO died here at 64 of a heart attack. He was buried after services Sept. 10 at St. Matthew's Catholic Church, Woodcrest, Del.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. Lane Kirkland said in a message of sympathy to Mrs. Helen Lemon and their five children and Lemon "served all his fellow workers with diligence and devotion" and was an outstanding leader.

Lemon served as head of the state AFL befo. the merger of AFL and CIO state bodies in 1957, and also as president of the Wilmington Building & Construction Trades Council. A member of Bricklayers Local 1 for 37 years, he was its business agent for 14 years.

ECKERD DRUGS UNFAIR

BROADER, TIGHTER federal safety laws are the key to curbing the mounting toll of train accidents that reached an all-time high last year, Al H. Chesser, center, national legislative director of the United Transportation Union, said on Labor News Conference. The program is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. (EDT), on Mutual radio. Chesser was questioned by Neil Gilbride, left, of the Associated Press and Stanley Levey of Scripps-Howard.

Preliminary Price Index For August '69

WASHINGTON — Wholesale prices declined 0.1 percent in August—the first decline this year—according to preliminary estimates, the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics has announced. It brought the Wholesale Price Index for the month down to 113.2.

Farm products dropped 1.5 per cent, reflecting a further weakening in cattle prices and substantial declines for grains and eggs. Processed foods and feeds also went down, by 0.5 percent, as a result of lower prices for meats, fish, and vegetable oils. Most other foods were higher, notably canned vegetables and fruits, frozen vegetables, and ice cream.

Prices of industrial commodities rose 0.3 percent, primarily because of boosts for metals and metal products. Price increases also were reported for machinery, apparel, rubber, and rubber products. Lumber and wood products continued to decline from the peak levels last spring, and gasoline prices were reduced.

Fowler's Food Store

Roxboro Road and Club Blvd.

"Where Service Is A Saving"

Telephone 684-0423

DURHAM, N.C.

"MAIL BAG"

IF YOU HAVE A QUESTION YOU WANT ANSWERED, WRITE "MAIL BAG," U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20210

Question — How good is the job outlook for women who want to be pharmacists?

Answer—Women are welcome in pharmacy. They now represent about 8 percent of all pharmacists and about 14 percent of all pharmacy students. As the demand for the services of pharmacists continues to increase, more and more women are likely to look to this field for a career. Women who do not wish to work full-time while their children are young should find this occcupation especially appealing because of the number of opportunities for part-time workers.

Question — Isn't it a waste of money for the Federal government to sponsor experimental manpower programs when the nation's range of manpower programs is already so broad?

Answer—Not at all. The experimental and demonstration projects funded under the Manpower Development and Training Act test new ideas and methods for helping the unemployed and the underemployed. Successful methods are then put into use in regular manpower programs, thus improving the nation's total manpower effort.

Question—Are most engineers and scientists employed in private industry, universities, or government?

Answer—The latest issue of the Monthly Labor Review reports that of all scientists and engineers employed in 1967, 71 percent were in private industry, 14 percent were in colleges and universities, 9 percent were in the Federal government, 3 percent were in State government, under 2 percent were in local government, and 1 percent were in nonprofit institutions.

ADVANCE WARNING
...slow down while there's time!

WHY?

• a Train might be coming!
• a Train might be in the crossing!
• the Crossing might be rough!

AMERICAN TRUCKING ASSOCIATIONS, INC.

Telephone 684-0423
DURHAM, N.C.

RAY'S
213 West Main St.
Watches-Diamonds
Jewelry
DURHAM, N.C.

to decline from the peak levels last spring, and gasoline prices were reduced.

ernment, and 1 percent were in non-profit institutions.

Labor Backs Bill Allowing Consumers To Join In Law Suits

WASHINGTON—Passage of a bill to allow consumers to join together in federal court suits will bring "more effective protection of consumer rights," the AFL-CIO told Congress.

Support for the proposal, known as the Class Action Jurisdiction Act, was expressed in a letter from AFL-CIO Legislative Director Andrew J. Biemiller to Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D-Md.). He is chairman of a Senate subcommittee handling the bill.

The legislation spells out the power of federal courts to handle class actions when violations of federal consumer law are involved, as well as establishing federal courts jurisdiction involving violations of state consumer statutes.

"Class actions," Biemiller) pointed out, "are potentially a highly effective method of redressing grievances of groups of consumers who have been victimized by the same seller or lender."

Further, he noted, "the costs for a single consumer to seek redress of a grievance through an individual suit are almost always prohibitive."

Biemiller also stressed that procedures in many state courts "are so restrictive that consumer class action suits are virtually impossible" whereas federal court procedures "are relatively receptive to this type of suit."

Enjoy
12 ounces of the best reason in the world to drink beer... in every easy-open Tab-Top can of Budweiser®

Old Boone
86 PROOF
KENTUCKY STRAIGHT BOURBON WHISKEY
$4.30 Fifth $2.70 Pint
OLD BOONE DISTILLERY Meadowlawn, Kentucky
4 Years Old

Savings Multiply
4½%
CURRENT ANNUAL DIVIDEND RATE

- Save by the 10th of any month Earn Dividends from the 1st.
- Insured Savings for Your Protection.
- FREE DOORSTEP PARKING OR SAVE BY MAIL

FIRST FEDERAL Savings And Loan Assn.
5 POINTS DURHAM, N.C.
"WHERE THOUSANDS SAVE MILLIONS"

AFL-CIO News 10-4-69

Drive Opens For Tennessee Wage Floor

Nashville—The Tennessee State Labor Council launched a new campaign for the passage of a st minimum wage equal to the $1.60 federal standard.

Delegates to the sixth biennial state AFL-CIO convention voted to concentrate on the adoption of the minimum wage by the state legislature which convenes in January.

Two earlier efforts by labor forces fell short of victory. But Pres. Matt Lynch noted that prospects for the adoption of the minimum wage were brighter now than ever before.

The convention also voted to have the state body team up with the A. Philip Randolph Institute for the development of public housing projects for low-income families. The first building project is expected to be initiated within the next year.

Other resolutions called for a stepped-up effort to establish prepaid health plans in cooperation with local unions and support of gaining full union rights for public employes throughout the state.

The state council's four top officers, including Pres. Lynch, were re-elected to new two-year terms. The others are Sec.-Treas. Lee Case, First Vice Pres. H. T. Powell and Second Vice Pres. Charles Robinson.

Five new vice presidents were elected and 13 incumbents were reelected at the three-day convention. The new vice presidents are John Ballard, Typographical Union, Memphis; E. L. Collins, Retail Clerks, Nashville; Jesse McCoy, Steelworkers, Chattanooga; Louis Miller, Communications Workers, Memphis, and Robert Watkins, Musicians, Chattanooga.

E. Wall St Jnl 10-7-69

Labor Letter

A Special News Report on People And Their Jobs in Offices, Fields and Factories

ATLANTIC CITY

ECONOMIC PROBLEMS deeply trouble labor chiefs at the AFL-CIO convention.

Corridor and convention-hall talk here at labor's big biennial conference focuses sharply on rising prices, rank-and-file pressure for fatter wage gains, the growing fear of recession, increasing unemployment. The Federation's Executive Council contends the Government's "restrictive policies" weaken the economy without slowing inflation. "It's awfully tough for a union leader to moderate demands" in the current atmosphere, a top AFL-CIO analyst warns.

Railroad signalmen unveil new wage demands including a 54% boost over three years for skilled workers. The Communications Workers of America, which won its biggest pact with the Bell System last year, is "seriously considering" asking for a cost-of-living escalator next time. A top Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers official worries that huge building-trades settlements leave his skilled members feeling underpaid.

Labor Secretary Shultz told delegates that previous Government policies, not union demands, produced the current inflation.

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

file

Kathy Martin

10/24/69

Mr. Wm. F. Schnitzler
Secty.-Treas.
AFL-CIO
815 16th St. N.W.
Wash. DC 20006

Retired

Kym

GEORGIA STATE AFL-CIO

CHARTERED BY AND SUBORDINATE TO AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

DISTRICT VICE PRESIDENTS

DAN CATERINA
1ST DISTRICT

CHARLES E. HALL
2ND DISTRICT

MRS. FAYE KNIGHT
3RD DISTRICT

FRANK C. GULLATTE
4TH DISTRICT

MRS. MARTHA TRUE
5TH DISTRICT

MORGAN BOWEN
6TH DISTRICT

MELVIN TATE
7TH DISTRICT

MRS. PAULINE BENNETT
8TH DISTRICT

OTIS CHILDERS
9TH DISTRICT

J. HAROLD DYE
10TH DISTRICT

15 PEACHTREE STREET, N. E.
ROOM 208
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
525-2793

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

J. O. MOORE
PRESIDENT

M. J. COUNIHAN
EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT

J. W. GILES
SECRETARY

MRS. LOUISE DEAN
TREASURER

HARRY BEXLEY
ATTORNEY

October 31, 1969

Southern Regional Council Inc.
5 Forsyth Street N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

11-19-69

Dear Sirs:

Please place my name on your mailing list to receive a copy of your mailings and other information pertinent to your organization.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

J. W. Giles 5

J. W. Giles, Secretary
Georgia State AFL-CIO

JWG/b

November 4, 1969

Mr. Saul Miller, Director of Publications
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Mr. Miller:

Although I have been pleased to see the AFL-CIO's continued interest in tax reform, I have been disturbed by the lack of attention given to some key proposals. The House Ways and Means Committee voted to seriously restrict voter registration activity and to place in jeopardy foundation backed educational efforts on public issues (going well beyond the existing and legitimate prohibition on support for specific pieces of legislation).

The Senate Finance Committee voted to bar all foundation money from being used for voter registration! This fact was completely omitted from the AFL-CIO News story of November 1. Of course, you know that the main financial support, overwhelmingly so, for voter registration efforts among Negroes in the South came from the foundations.

I feel certain that I would agree with some further regulations of foundations which would conform with labor movement policies. However, it seems to me destructive of the legitimate and necessary development of democratic participation to curb the discussion of public issues and the practical expansion of the franchise; on this latter the News and the labor movement know better than most that the right to vote has little meaning unless acted upon. Registration is the first essential step in such action.

A few materials are enclosed which may be of some assistance in clarifying these issues. I hope that future stories on tax reform can deal with these problems. Essentially, the measures about which I speak are not tax reform measures at all and yet if they are not separated out from the tax bill by members of Congress and the advocates of reform, we will do the nation and this region a grave disservice.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

Enclosures

DOMESTIC SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise this message will be sent as a fast telegram
TELEGRAM
DAY LETTER
NIGHT LETTER

$ S E

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

1206 (4-55)

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE
Check the class of service desired; otherwise the message will be sent at the full rate
FULL RATE
LETTER TELEGRAM
SHORE-SHIP

NO. WDS.-CL. OF SVC.	PD. OR COLL.	CASH NO.	CHARGE TO THE ACCOUNT OF	TIME FILED
			521-2100 Wk. Phone No.

Send the following message, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

TO BE DELIVERED November 4, 1969

Mr. George Meany, President
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

I want personally and on behalf of the Southern Regional Council to thank you for your statement of support of the recent Supreme Court desegregation ruling and for your appeal for practical assistance to school districts.

Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Sent: 11/4/69
4:15 p.m.

cc: P.A., Don Slaiman

ALL MESSAGES TAKEN BY THIS COMPANY ARE SUBJECT TO THE FOLLOWING TERMS:

To guard against mistakes or delays, the sender of a message should order it repeated, that is, telegraphed back to the originating office for comparison. For this, one-half the unrepeated message rate is charged in addition. Unless otherwise indicated on its face, this is an unrepeated message and paid for as such, in consideration whereof it is agreed between the sender of the message and the Telegraph Company as follows:

1. The Telegraph Company shall not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the unrepeated-message rate beyond the sum of five hundred dollars; nor for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for non-delivery, of any message received for transmission at the repeated-message rate beyond the sum of five thousand dollars, unless specially valued; nor in any case for delays arising from unavoidable interruption in the working of its lines.

2. In any event the Telegraph Company shall not be liable for damages for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for the non-delivery, of any message, whether caused by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the actual loss, not exceeding in any event the sum of five thousand dollars, at which amount the sender of each message represents that the message is valued, unless a greater value is stated in writing by the sender thereof at the time the message is tendered for transmission, and unless the repeated-message rate is paid or agreed to be paid and an additional charge equal to one-tenth of one per cent of the amount by which such valuation shall exceed five thousand dollars.

3. The Telegraph Company is hereby made the agent of the sender, without liability, to forward this message over the lines of any other company when necessary to reach its destination.

4. The applicable tariff charges on a message destined to any point in the continental United States listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations cover its delivery within the established city or community limits of the destination point. Beyond such limits and to points not listed in the Telegraph Company's Directory of Stations, the Telegraph Company does not undertake to make delivery but will endeavor to arrange for delivery by any available means as the agent of the sender, with the understanding that the sender authorizes the collection of any additional charge from the addressee and agrees to pay such additional charge if it is not collected from the addressee.

5. No responsibility attaches to the Telegraph Company concerning messages until the same are accepted at one of its transmitting offices; and if a message is sent to such office by one of the Telegraph Company's messengers, he acts for that purpose as the agent of the sender; except that when the Telegraph Company sends a messenger to pick up a message, the messenger in that instance acts as the agent of the Telegraph Company in accepting the message, the Telegraph Company assuming responsibility from the time of such acceptance.

6. The Telegraph Company will not be liable for damages or statutory penalties when the claim is not presented in writing to the Telegraph Company, (a) within ninety days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between points within the United States (except in the case of an intrastate message in Texas) or between a point in the United States on the one hand and a point in Alaska, Canada, Mexico, or St. Pierre-Miquelon Islands on the other hand, or between a point in the United States and a ship at sea or in the air, (b) within 95 days after the cause of action, if any, shall have accrued in the case of an intrastate message in Texas, and (c) within 180 days after the message is filed with the Telegraph Company for transmission in the case of a message between a point in the United States and a foreign or overseas point other than the points specified above in this paragraph; provided, however, that this condition shall not apply to claims for damages or overcharges within the purview of Section 415 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

7. It is agreed that in any action by the Telegraph Company to recover the tolls for any message or messages the prompt and correct transmission and delivery thereof shall be presumed, subject to rebuttal by competent evidence.

8. Special terms governing the transmission of messages according to their classes, as enumerated below, shall apply to messages in each of such respective classes in addition to all the foregoing terms.

9. No employee of the Telegraph Company is authorized to vary the foregoing.

4-54

CLASSES OF SERVICE

DOMESTIC SERVICES

TELEGRAM

The fastest domestic service.

DAY LETTER (DL)

A deferred same-day service, at low rates.

NIGHT LETTER (NL)

Economical overnight service. Accepted up to 2 A. M. for delivery the following morning; at rates lower than the Telegram or Day Letter rates.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICES

FULL RATE (FR)

The fastest overseas service. May be written in code, cipher, or in any language expressed in Roman letters.

LETTER TELEGRAM (LT)

For overnight plain language messages, at half-rate. Minimum charge for 22 words applies.

SHIP RADIOGRAM

For messages to and from ships at sea.

AFL-CIO Labor Studies 3/8/70 RWD Record

LABOR STUDIES CENTER

THERE are no ivy-covered walls at 1500 Massachusetts Avenue where the new AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center is located in Washington.

The curriculum of the training programs parallels the appearance of the facilities—practical and functional—designed for the immediate needs of the people in the labor movement.

Yet the expertise of the teaching staff in labor affairs and the availability of key officials in government and the trade union movement puts the center well beyond the scope of long established labor institutes at colleges and universities.

Twenty students in the initial staff development program represented a wide cross section of AFL-CIO affiliates in industrial and white collar unions and the building trades.

The school day begins at 9 a.m. for a full schedule of classes running through 4:30 p.m. with a break for lunch at mid-day. Two nights a week the students return to the center for labor policy seminars.

Five of the three-week staff development programs will be offered during the first six months of operation. Simultaneously, one-week institutes are being conducted, to cover special studies in civil rights, social security, labor education, urban affairs, state and local bodies, international affairs, organizing and political legislative activities.

Packed into the staff development training is a curriculum calling for 15 hours of study in each of these areas: economics, social studies and effective reading.

An additional 18-20 hours are devoted to union history and current labor affairs. The participants also spend another 18-20 hours in special study projects.

A counseling service is provided to the students to prepare them for their research into the special projects. On completing their studies, they make a report on the subject to the class.

The teaching and administrative staff of the center is headed by Dir. Fred K. Hoehler, Jr., former professor and associate director of the School of Labor & Industrial Relations at Michigan State University.

Hoehler cited the particular advantage of locating the center in Washington because of the availability of experts in labor and government to supplement the regular teaching staff.

"Universities find it impossible to mass such a wealth of teaching talent readily available to come in as visiting lecturers," he observed.

The pool of "talent" includes congressmen and senators, officials of key government agencies and the Administration, department heads of the federation and officers of a number of unions based in Washington.

Among the first special lecturers was Federation Pres. George Meany, who discussed a wide range of topics affecting labor and internal affairs of the trade union movement.

Hoehler said that programs being developed at the center will not only supplement the labor studies now existing at colleges and universities, but should aid in improving the current programs on the nation's campuses.

Long-range proposals for the center are still fluid. But consideration is being given toward developing programs running for three to six months and later with 12-month terms.

AFL - CIO Sec.-Treas. Lane Kirkland told graduates of the first staff development program that the basic factor in the success of any new federation project such as the school is support from the international unions.

More than a school, the center is a "trade union environment," Kirkland said, in which people from different unions can work together, exchange new ideas and share experiences.

FIRST SEMESTER ACTIVITIES at AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center are shown in photos on this page. At top, Pres. George Meany discusses current state of American labor. Next photo is Center Director Fred K. Hoehler Jr.; in third photo, counselor (back to camera) briefs Frederick Earle (left) and James Seals of the Workers Defense League before a seminar, while in bottom photo students chat and catch up with the news in the student lounge.

sniffles & sneezes

All About the Common (kerchoo!) Head Cold and How to Handle It

By PAUL STEINER

A study by Dr. D. C. Bewes of Montreal found that women who have women supervisors have 30% more colds than women with men supervising them.

On any given day at least one million people have colds, and on any given day 125,000 office workers stay home because of a cold (at least that's what they report to their bosses). In February, the height of the cold season, 20 million men, women and children will have colds each day and only a maximum of 10% of the population will escape at least one cold a year.

Colds account for about 80% of all illnesses in children up to the age of 18. Though the average was about 18-20 days of school missed every year for all reasons, it ranged from only 10½ days missed in the state of Washington the year of the survey, to 52 days in Nevada, according to data from the National Education Association.

Nearly 25% of all cold sufferers contacted their doctors about at least one of their colds each year, according to a recent survey. This compares with just 21% who contacted doctors in a study seven years ago, and 17% in 1952.

Estimates are that nine out of 10 Americans have at least one bout with the sniffles and sneezes each year, at a direct cost in lost wages, doctor bills and medications of $2.0 to $2.2 billion, making it the nation's most costly and widespread ailment. With the costs of lost production and reduced efficiency, some experts calculate the expense at $6 to $8 billion.

Most Americans suffer an average of two to three colds a year. But the incidence varies widely according to a person's age, sex, job, weight, intelligence, residence and physical and emotional condition. Some people stay cold-less, others come down with eight to ten mild upper respiratory ailments.

Estimates of the economic impact of colds and nasal congestion vary widely. But some experts calculate the nation's 520 to 530 million colds result in the loss of 200 to 225 million work days a year, an average of about 2½ days off the job for every worker in the country.

The average number of days a teacher is absent varies from area to area. The average for one year studied was 3.12 days in Southern California, nearly 5.16 in St. Louis, 6.1 in Akron, and 6.2 in Rochester. The low was 2.7 days for Milwaukee teachers and the high was 6.57 for those in Cincinnati.

A number of medical investigators have noted that it is not necessarily extreme cold —or extreme heat — that causes tissue changes which pre-dispose toward colds. Four brewing companies reported that production workers in their cellars—where temperatures constantly were in the 37-42 degree range—had fewer colds than the other employees of the firms.

Many doctors believe emotional factors play an important role in either causing or triggering colds and one physician feels as many as 60% of colds are psychosomatic in origin. Famed psychiatrist Dr. Karl A. Menninger wrote as long ago as 1934 that "it is often exceedingly difficult to be sure how much the cold is . . . simply a general and habitual 'invalid' reaction to the unpleasant."

Some doctors believe colds in children may be triggered by emotional factors just as emotions trigger colds in adults. Surveys have found that the better a student is doing academically, the less likely he is to be absent from school—and at least one-third of school absences are cold-caused. Also, students from below-average economic-status homes lost more time from school than the upper-income children. Emotionally disturbed children develop more colds than normal ones.

Katharine H. Hain, M.D., director of medical services at Schering Laboratories, and the mother of a teenage girl and two teenage boys, feels many American mothers are "pampering" children as far as the common cold is concerned. Mothers overdress their children, she notes, then the youngsters go out and play and get overheated and come down with colds. Dr. Hain also feels there is no reason to keep a child with a mild cold in bed and wait on him, and no reason to keep a child home from school unless he has a fever. Likewise, there is no reason to keep a child in bed if he does stay home and no reason the child should not get dressed—and do his homework.

Many people are familiar with the lament of Adelaide, heroine of "Guys and Dolls," whose 14-year-old continuing cold was the result of her frustrated romance with boyfriend Nathan Detroit. "Just from waiting around, for that plain little band of gold, a person . . . can develop a cold," she sang.

L. J. Saul, M.D., a psychiatrist, said colds were really an allergy affected by an unconscious emotional state. "Patients who are subject to frequent colds who come to analysis for other reasons . . . have as a by-product (of their analysis), a cure of this propensity."

Women, generally considered more emotional than males, have up to twice as many colds as men, and children have some four times as many. However, wives are in more frequent contact with more children—who are especially cold-prone—so this contact might account for some increase in the number of women's colds.

One doctor in Savannah, Ga., a former school board official there, said the school board officially adopted the policy that any child with a temperature of less than 99.8 degrees by mouth, with symptoms suggesting a cold, should be sent to school. Fears that complications would arise or that cold-germ carriers would skyrocket the incidence of colds proved groundless. Furthermore, since the atmosphere any place teems with viruses and bacteria, it doesn't make sense to avoid going out just to "protect" others. In fact, says one doctor, Stanley Kubrick, an M.D., Ph.D. and virologist from Boston U., most doctors attend to their practices while they have colds.

Studies show strong correlations between anxiety and susceptibility to colds. One report found that the malcontents and troublemakers among workers had far more colds than the more placid group. And, emotionally disturbed children have more colds than normal children. The emotionally upset children developed colds when faced with such situations as a school test, a new arrival in the family or a move to a new neighborhood. This is due to the effects of emotions on the vascular system (blood vessels). Emotions can cause the release of adrenalin and histamine in the tissues.

Various surveys give different results on the frequency of colds but one study showed that children under one year had an average of 6.9 colds a year, one-year-olds had 8.3, two-year-olds had 8.5, three-year-olds had 8.6, four-year-olds had 8.1, five-year-olds 7.8, six-year-olds 6.2, seven-year-olds 6.6, eight-year-olds 5.9, nine-year-olds 5.1, ten-year-olds 5.6 colds a year and children over 11 had 5.4. The same study showed fathers averaged 4.1 colds a year, mothers caught an average of 5.4. Little boys between the ages of 2-9 had an average of 7.9 colds a year, while girls between the same ages got only 6.8—yet grown women get about twice the average number of colds as grown men.

Physicians stress that no cold medication cures or in any way attacks the causes of colds, hay fever and congestion—all they do is relieve the symptoms.

TO MAKE SURE YOU GET YOUR MAGAZINE OR NEWSPAPER

Mail this change of address notice to your publisher today

MRS. ARVILLA M. BRADLEY, SEC.

~~Mr. Raymond T. Grady, Sec.~~

Broward County Central Labor Union

AFL-CIO

P. O. Box 245

Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. 33302

3-16-70

de

OLD

3. Show All Additional Dates and Nos. Included in Address Label (Necessary for identification)

NEW

4. No. and Street, Apt., Suite, P.O. Box or R.D. No.

5. Post Office, State, and ZIP Code

6. Name of Subscriber (Print or type)

7. Date of Address Change

NEW ADDRESS?

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.
PM
15 MAR
1970

AFFIX FIRST CLASS POSTAGE HERE

PLEASE NOTIFY YOUR PUBLISHER . . .

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
(Name of Magazine or Newspaper)

5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W
(Number and Street or P.O. Box)

ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 30303
(Post Office, State, and ZIP Code)

POD FORM 3578, Jan. 1967

☆ GPO : 1967—O-230-733

Ref

A Summary of The Appalachian Regional Development Act

PUBLISHED BY THE

AFL-CIO Appalachian Council

P. O. BOX 646

CHARLESTON • WEST VIRGINIA

AFL-CIO Appalachian Council

A cooperative effort of AFL-CIO organizations to assist in the development of Appalachia

Post Office Box 646 • Charleston, West Virginia 25323
Phone 304 344-3557

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Chairman
MILES C. STANLEY
West Virginia

Vice-Chairman
HARRY BOYER
Pennsylvania

Secretary-Treasurer
ROBERT BOLLARD
Ohio

CHARLES DELLA
Maryland-D. C.

SAM EZELLE
Kentucky

BARNEY WEEKS
Alabama

GENERAL BOARD

W. M. BARBEE
North Carolina

HAROLD BOYD
Virginia

MATTHEW LYNCH
Tennessee

W. M. MONTAGUE, SR.
Georgia

SINWAY YOUNG
South Carolina

AFL-CIO Appalachian Council

About the Council

The AFL-CIO Appalachian Council is an Amalgamation or joining together of all AFL-CIO organizations in the eleven-state Appalachian Area.

The formation of this unique regional organization is a direct result of the "Appalachian Trade Union Conference" held in Charleston, West Virginia October 12-14, 1964. Present in the conference were representatives of AFL-CIO unions from every state in the eleven-state region. At its concluding session the conference unanimously adopted a resolution urging and approving the establishment of a permanent Appalachian Organization. Specifically the resolution stated that such an organization should work toward "unearthing and understanding problems of the region, developing plans for their solution, and stimulating or undertaking specific projects or action programs for their elimination."

Subsequent to the conference, permission was obtained from the National AFL-CIO to form the organization and, in December 1964, an organizational meeting was held in Washington at which time the officers whose names appear on the opposite page were selected.

Since the conference was held in October, both the Economic Opportunities Act and the Appalachian Regional Development Act have been passed by Congress. The Council can now be of invaluable assistance in making these programs successful in the Appalachian Region.

About This Pamphlet

This pamphlet is designed to give a quick summary of the provisions of the Appalachian Regional Development Act. Many questions have been raised relative to the allocations of funds among the states to finance the various programs provided in the Act. Unfortunately, at the time of this printing, such information was not available. When it is released the Council will see that proper distribution is given this important information.

★ ★ ★

A Summary of the Appalachian Regional Development Act (1965)

The Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 (P.L. 89-4), signed by President Johnson on March 9, authorizes a variety of programs designed to stimulate the economic development of the Appalachian Region. This region of 167,000 square miles sweeps diagonally across 11 states from northern Pennsylvania to central Alabama and has a population of more than 16 million.

Appalachia contains 360 contiguous counties in portions of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio, Virginia,

OTTAWA
KENT
IONIA
CLINTON
OAKLAND
MACOMB
MCLEAN
BARRY
EATON
INGHAM
CALHOUN
JACKSON
HILLSDALE
WAYNE
MONROE BRANCH
LENAWEE
CASS
ST JOSEPH
FULTON
LUCAS
OTTAWA
SANDUSKY
ERIE
LORAIN
CUYAHOGA
LAKE
GEAUGA
DEFIANCE
HENRY
WOOD
SENECA
HURON
MEDINA
PUTNAM
HANCOCK
WAYNE
STARK
VAN WERT
ALLEN
HARDIN
MARION
HOLMES
AUGLAIZE
KNOX
COSHOCTON
LOGAN
SHELBY
DELAWARE
LICKING
DARKE
MIAMI
CHAMPAIGN
FRANKLIN
CLARK
PERRY
MORGAN
GREENE
FAYETTE
FAIRFIELD
HOCKING
ATHENS
CLINTON
ROSS
VINTON
MEIGS
HIGHLAND
PIKE
BROWN
ADAMS
SCIOTO
GALLIA
MASON
LEWIS
GREENUP
CABELL
LAWRENCE
JACKSON
VINTON
MEIGS
WAYNE
LINCOLN
BOONE
KANAWHA
LOGAN
MINGO
PIKE
FLOYD
MARTIN
BREATHITT
KNOTT
PERRY
LESLIE
CLAY
WISE
RUSSELL
LEE
SCOTT
WASHINGTON
SULLIVAN
WHITLEY
BELL
HARLAN
KNOX
LAUREL
PULASKI
CASEY
LINCOLN
ROCK CASTLE
ADAIR
WAYNE
MC CREARY
CUMBERLAND
MONROE
ALLEN
SIMPSON
LOGAN
WARREN
BARREN
METCALFE
GRAYSON
HARDIN
LARUE
MARION
TAYLOR
GREEN
BUTLER
OHIO
DAVIESS
HOPKINS
MUHLENBERG
CHRISTIAN
TODD
MC LEAN
HANCOCK
BRECKINRIDGE
MEADE
HARRISON
BOURBON
SCOTT
FAYETTE
CLARK
MADISON
ESTILL
LEE
BREATHITT
FLOYD
PIKE
MARTIN
MORGAN
MENIFEE
WOLFE
MAGOFFIN
JOHNSON
LAWRENCE
BOYD
GREENUP
CARTER
ELLIOTT
BATH
ROWAN
MONTGOMERY
BOYLE
MERCER
WOODFORD
FRANKLIN
SHELBY
JEFFERSON
SPENCER
BULLITT
NELSON
MARION
TAYLOR
GREEN
ADAIR
RUSSELL
WAYNE
WHITLEY
BELL
HARLAN
LEE
SCOTT
WASHINGTON
SULLIVAN

APPALACHIA

Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and all of West Virginia. One-third of the population of Appalachia, compared to one-fifth nationally, is beset by poverty, according to the standards established by the President's Council of Economic Advisors.

This Act is the direct result of the concerted efforts of the Conference of Appalachian Governors and the President's Appalachian Regional Commission established in 1963; it is composed of representatives of the Appalachian States and a dozen Federal agencies.

In making its legislative recommendations, the President's Commission noted that Appalachia was plagued by low income, high unemployment, lack of urbanization, low educational achievement, and relatively low living standards and that "a coordinated, adequately funded and sustained effort must be undertaken to restore the region's economic vitality." Accordingly, the Commission recommended a variety of programs designed to revitalize the Appalachian economy on four fronts:

1. Better access to and within the region;
2. Fuller development of the land and timber resources of Appalachia;
3. Improved management of Appalachia's valuable water resources, and
4. Improvements in human resources and public facilities.

In addition to providing for public investments in the Appalachian Region, the Act establishes a framework for joint Federal and State efforts to attack the region's common problems on a coordinated regional basis. The Appalachian Regional Commission will administer the Appalachian program in such a way as to promote economic growth in the Region and enable it to develop a more diversified industry.

The Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 does not contain all of the programs for which monies will be made available during fiscal year 1966. It contains only those programs requiring new legislative authorizations or modification to existing legislative authorizations.

Funds to carry out the entire program, both those provisions contained in P.L. 89-4 and those programs already authorized which require additional funds for increased activities in the Appalachian Region are provided for in a special appropriations bill recently submitted to Congress.

The main provisions of the Appalachian Regional Development Act are as follows:

Highways

An Appalachian Development Highway System will be constructed to provide access to isolated sections of the region and to make possible a greater flow of industry and tourism between areas within the region and between the region and the rest of the country. Existing roads will be upgraded and new sections constructed to open up areas with a developmental potential. A total of 3,350 miles of roads shall be built of which 1,000 miles are reserved for local access roads, to serve specific developmental facilities, including recreational, residential, commercial, industrial or like facilities.

Water Resources

A comprehensive water resources study is authorized for the entire Appalachian Region. The study will be coordinated by the Secretary of the Army, assisted by all relevant agencies. Acceleration of water facilities construction in the region is requested in the supplemental appropriation bill for Appalachia. There will be a heavy emphasis on flood control, industrial and recreational impoundments and sewage treatment plants.

Timber

The timber program includes accelerated research into end uses for the Appalachian hardwoods found throughout the region; increased national Forest Land acquisition; more access roads in National Forests to increase the cut from matured timber; assistance to local nonprofit corporations, known as timber development organizations, designed to manage and produce better grades of timber, thereby earning a greater return for the small landowner.

Land Conservation

To promote the conservation and better utilization of the region's important land and water resources, the Act authorizes a program of grants to landowners for the adoption and improvement of land treatment practices. The Department of Agriculture will administer grants for land treatment to prevent erosion and to promote soil conservation.

A special coal lands program gives the Secretary of the Interior broadened authority to seal and fill voids in abandoned coal mines, extinguish mine fires and expand the restoration of fish and wildlife sites destroyed by strip mining. The Secretary of the Interior is also directed to carry out a comprehensive strip mining study which should give the answers needed for the development of a broader strip mining program. The authorizations in the bill, together with the program to be included in the supplemental appropriations bill, will make it possible to begin a comprehensive regional program of coal lands reclamation that will enhance the region's attractiveness to industry and to tourism.

Human Resources and Public Facilities

The Act provides a specific program for the construction and operation of multi-county health centers which will contribute to the economic development of the region. A special supplement to the Vocational Educational Act of 1963 is also provided which makes $16 million available over a two-year period for the construction of vocational education facilities. In addition, the Act provides a supplemental fund to be used to reduce the local cost of participation in Federal grant-in-aid programs for the construction of public facilities.

Among the programs to be supplemented in this fashion are those providing funds for hospitals, vocational education facilities, higher education facilities, including community colleges and technical schools, libraries, educational television facilities, airports, sewage treatment plants and public recreation facilities.

There will be careful coordination of the construction activities with the Office of Economic Opportunity, directed by Mr. Sargent Shriver. The Office of Economic Opportunity will provide operating funds for activities to be carried out in many of the facilities that will be constructed with Appalachian program funds.

Coordination and Execution

An Appalachian Regional Commission is created by the Act to coordinate this new program as well as to make recommendations with regard to existing programs and to provide program planning. This Commission will be comprised of representatives from each of the eleven Appalahican States and a Federal co-chairman appointed by the President whose vote would equal the states' vote. Project applications for grants and technical assistance will be made through the state members of the Commission, who shall evaluate such applications. Only those applications for programs and projects which are approved by a state member will receive Commission approval.

The Act requires that the Commission make its investment in areas which have a potential for growth and where the return on public dollars invested will be maximized. All investments must be in accordance with overall program plans recommended by the Commission and approved by an officer designated by the President.

To enable local areas to develop projects and plans which will lead to their economic development, grant funds are provided in the Act to cover part of the administrative expenses of local development districts.

★ ★ ★

Conclusion

The labor movement has a great stake in developing the human and natural resources of Appalachia. The Council is currently planning programs and projects to assist AFL-CIO organizations to be more effective in this endeavor.

If your organization would like more specific information regarding the Applachian Regional Development Act, the Economic Opportunity Act or the activity of the Council, please contact your state central body or write directly to the:

AFL-CIO Appalachian Council
P. O. Box 646
Charleston, West Virginia 25323

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

and

CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

George Meany
President

Wm. F. Schnitzler
Secretary-Treasurer

COMMUNITY SERVICES COMMITTEE

Joseph A. Beirne
Chairman

COMMUNITY SERVICE ACTIVITIES

Leo Perlis
Director

Robert A. Rosekrans
Assistant Director

Lynn M. MacGowan
Staff Representative

Ray Andrus
Staff Representative

Edward J. Carlin
Staff Representative

815 - 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006
628-3870 AC 202

June, 1968

INTERNATIONAL AND NATIONAL UNION CSA LIAISON

Harold Angle, Director
Community Services
Allied Industrial Workers
3520 West Oklahoma Avenue
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53215
414/645-9500

William Walsh
Communications Workers of America
1925 "K" Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
202/337-7711

Elaine T. Gleason
CWA District #1
85 Worth Street - 3rd Floor
New York, New York 10003
212/349-0800

George Strick
CWA District #2
1925 "K" Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
202/337-7711

W. W. Brown
CWA District #3
307 City National Bank Bldg.
1928 First Avenue, North
Birmingham, Alabama 35203
205/328-9498

T. J. Volk
CWA District #3
307 City National Bank Bldg.
1928 First Avenue, North
Birmingham, Alabama 35203
205/328-9498

L. L. Bolick
CWA District #3
40 Pryor Street, S.W., 3rd Floor
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
404/523-2917

Albert A. Verhaeghe
CWA District #4
606 Townsend Street
Lansing, Michigan 48933
517/484-5486

Catherine Conroy
CWA District #5
7460 North Sheridan Road
Chicago, Illinois 60626
312/465-4685

A. Kenneth Ferguson
CWA District #6
1122 Paul Brown Building
St. Louis, Missouri 63101
314/421-2211

James R. West
CWA District #7
2202 Douglas Street
Omaha, Nebraska 68102
402/341-1041

Bruce A. Thoren
CWA District #8
2736 W. McDowell Road
Phoenix, Arizona 85009
602/278-0052

James Booe
CWA District #9
20 Haight Street
San Francisco, California 94102
415/552-1422

J. M. Van Houten
CWA District #9
455 Capital Mall - Suite 309
Sacramento, California 95814

Edward Carlson, Eastern Regional
Director of Community Services
Int'l. Union of Electrical, Radio and
Machine Workers
15 East 41st Street
New York, New York 10017

Kenneth Mueller, Western Regional
Director of Community Services
Int'l. Union of Electrical, Radio and
Machine Workers
Route #4, Box 154
Wayzata, Minnesota 55391

Int'l. and Nat'l. Union CSA Liaison - Cont.

Don Fancey
Int'l. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers
1200 - 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
202/265-8040

O. William Moody
Maritime Trades Dept., AFL-CIO
815 - 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
202/628-3870

Peter Voeller
Int'l. Assoc. of Retail Clerks
1741 DeSales Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
202/223-3111

Robert D. Bollard, Director
Dept. of Legislation and Community Affairs
Amer. Fed. of State, County and Municipal Employees
1155 - 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
202/223-4460

Bruce Alexander
United Steelworkers of America
1500 Commonwealth Building
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15222
412/471-5254

James McGeehan
Dist. 7 - United Steelworkers
334 Suburban Station Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19103
215/563-6826

Albert P. Delsandro
Dist. 13 - United Steelworkers
410 McKean Avenue
Donora, Pennsylvania 15033
412/379-5000

Paul Stackhouse, Sr.
United Steelworkers
District #19
200 Ross Street
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15219
412/782-1889

Lawrence A. Keller
United Steelworkers, AFL-CIO
Dist. 31, Sub. Dist. 4
720 West Chicago Ave. - Room 211
East Chicago, Indiana 46312
312/221-5727

Irvin H. Ryan
United Steelworkers, AFL-CIO
Niles Subdistrict Office
189 East Market Street
Warren, Ohio 44481
216/399-2756

Claude Ballard
Int'l. Woodworkers of America
1622 North Lombard Street
Portland, Oregon 97217
503/285-5281

UCFCA LIAISON WITH AFL-CIO COMMUNITY SERVICES

FRANCIS J. COYLE

WILLIAM A. DAVIES

GEORGE J. DOOLEY

PAUL MENDENHALL

RALPH C. SMITH

HERMAN J. YEKEL

FRANCIS J. SUGRUE

c/o Labor Participation Division, U.C.F.C.A.
820 Second Avenue
New York, New York 10017
212/687-8300

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS LIAISON WITH AFL-CIO COMMUNITY SERVICES

Kenneth L. Kramer
American National Red Cross
National Headquarters
17th & "D" Streets, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
202/RE 7-8300

Walter Holmes
American National Red Cross
Southeastern Area
1955 Monroe Drive, N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30324
404/875-7921

Lucious M. Webb
American National Red Cross
Eastern Area
615 N. St. Asaph Street
Alexandria, Virginia 22314
(Wash., D.C.) 202/737-8300

Hugh Sheehan
American National Red Cross
Pacific Area Headquarters
1550 Sutter Street
San Francisco, California 94101
415/GR4-1944

A. B. Smith
American National Red Cross
Midwestern Area
4050 Lindell Blvd.
St. Louis, Missouri 63108
314/OL 2-3600

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA LIAISON WITH AFL-CIO COMMUNITY SERVICES

Boy Scouts of America
New Brunswick, New Jersey 08903
201/249-6000

STATE AFL-CIO-CSA REPRESENTATIVES

ILLINOIS

Robert G. Gibson, Sec'y.-Treas.
Illinois State Federation of Labor
300 N. State Street - 16th Floor
Chicago, Illinois 60610
312/222-1414

INDIANA

Eve Purvis
Indiana State AFL-CIO
910 N. Delaware Street
Indianapolis, Indiana 46202
317/634-7397

MICHIGAN

Barney Hopkins, Sec'y.-Treas.
Michigan State AFL-CIO
716 Lothrop Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48202
313/872-3225

March Haas
Michigan United Fund
2216 Hemlock Street
Kalamazoo, Michigan 49001
616/344-1878

MICHIGAN - cont.

Stanley A. Lemanek
Michigan United Fund
2721 Robinwood
Saginaw, Michigan 48601
517/755-3852

Martha Reynolds
Michigan United Fund
P. O. Box 1378
201-206 Civic Office Building
Lansing, Michigan 48904
517/485-9446

Edward R. Ryan, Jr.
Michigan United Fund
2601 Debonshire
Lansing, Michigan 48202
517/485-8446

OHIO

Charles Mix
Ohio AFL-CIO
271 East State Street
Columbus, Ohio 43215
614/224-8271

PENNSYLVANIA

Charles F. Ferguson
Pennsylvania AFL-CIO
Front and Pine Streets
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17101
717/238-9351

State AFL-CIO-CSA Representatives - cont.

PENNSYLVANIA - cont.

George B. Kelly, Director
Labor Participation
Community Services of Pa.
300 North Second St., Commerce Bldg.
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17101
717/238-7365

WISCONSIN

Wilbert Walter
Wisconsin State AFL-CIO
6333 Blue Mound Road
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53213
404/771-0700

WEST VIRGINIA

Glen Armstrong, Sec'y.-Treas.
West Virginia Labor Fed., AFL-CIO
1624 Kanawha Boulevard
Charleston, West Virginia 25323
304/344-3557

CANADA

J. H. Craigs
Ontario Federation of Labour
15 Gervais Drive - Suite 202
Don Mills, Ontario, Canada
416/368-2343

AFL-CIO-CSA REPRESENTATIVES WITH LOCAL CHESTS, FUNDS OR COUNCILS

ALABAMA

Homer J. Harper
Community Chest and Council
3600 South 8th Avenue
Birmingham, Alabama 35222
205/251-5131

James E. Leachman
Community Services
P. O. Box 1561
204 St. Francis Street
Mobile, Alabama 36601
205/433-3624

ARIZONA

Glenn Bragonier
United Fund
1515 East Osborne Road
Phoenix, Arizona 85014
602/277-5421

Robert F. Hagerman
United Community Campaign of Tucson
3833 East Second Street
P. O. Box 6611
Tucson, Arizona 85716
602/793-7625

CALIFORNIA

Mrs. Sue D. Adams
Community Services Director
United Way, Inc., Los Angeles Co.
729 S. Figueroa Street
Los Angeles, California 90017
213/624-8821

Charles J. Harding
Community Services Department
United Way, Inc., Los Angeles Co.
729 S. Figueroa Street
Los Angeles, California 90017
213/624-8821

CALIFORNIA - con't.

James Trimble
Bay Area Crusade
1527 Webster Street
Oakland, California 94612
415/451-3132

Allan G. Dahlquist
United Crusade, Sacramento Area
3140 "J" Street
P. O. Box 9117
Sacramento, California 95816
916/452-8081

Robert Moeller
United Community Services
P. O. Box 2671
San Diego, California 92112
714/239-9351

Edwin B. Love
United Bay Area Crusade
2015 Steiner Street
San Francisco, California 94115
415/567-5700

Frank E. White
United Bay Area Crusade
2015 Steiner Street
San Francisco, California 94115
415/567-5700

Dave W. Williams
United Bay Area Crusade
2015 Steiner Street
San Francisco, California 94115
415/567-5700

Edward Camunez
Santa Clara County United Fund
1572 Los Padres Boulevard
Santa Clara, California 95051
408/248-8851

COLORADO

Clarence G. VanDeren
Mile High United Fund, Inc.
1375 Delaware Street
Denver, Colorado 80204
303/623-2221

Mrs. Violet L. Waggoner
Mile High United Fund, Inc.
1375 Delaware Street
Denver, Colorado 80204
303/623-2221

Joseph M. Wood
Single Fund Plan, Inc.
322 West 5th Street
Pueblo, Colorado 81003
303/542-6814

CONNECTICUT

Frank W. Connell
United Fund of Eastern
Fairfield County
932 Broad Street
Bridgeport, Connecticut 06603
203/334-5106

Frank Fallon
United Fund
One State Street
New Haven, Connecticut 06515
203/772-2010

Louis Oronzo
United Fund
One State Street
New Haven, Connecticut 06515
203/772-2010

Kenneth F. Knott
United Fund and Council
163 Woodlawn Terrace
Waterbury, Connecticut 06710
203/756-5581

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mrs. Josephine Piccolo
Health and Welfare Council
95 "M" Street, S.W., Rm. 215
Washington, D.C. 20024
202/554-1333

Clemens A. Sergott
United Givers Fund
95 "M" Street, S.W., 3rd Floor
Washington, D.C. 20024
202/554-1333

FLORIDA

United Fund of Jacksonville Area
312 West Monroe Street
Jacksonville, Florida 32201
904/356-3391

John Howard
AFL-CIO-CSA
P. O. Box 790
955 Southwest 2nd Avenue
Miami, Florida 33101
305/377-8311

GEORGIA

Joel Gay
Metropolitan Atlanta Community Services
P. O. Box 1038
167 Walton Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30301
404/525-3481

ILLINOIS

James F. Ganly
Community Fund
123 W. Madison Street
Chicago, Illinois 60602
312/372-6911

ILLINOIS - cont.

Cyril C. Murphy
Community Fund
123 W. Madison Street
Chicago, Illinois 60602
312/372-6911

Samuel Price
Welfare Council
123 W. Madison Street
Chicago, Illinois 60602
312/372-6911

Mrs. Grace Smedstad
Welfare Council
123 W. Madison Street
Chicago, Illinois 60602
312/372-6911

Dwight Patrick
United Fund of Decatur & Macon Counties
P. O. Box 1083 - 159 West Main Street
Decatur, Illinois 62525
217/422-8537

William Johnston
United Fund of Gr. E. St. Louis
507A Missouri Avenue
East St. Louis, Illinois 62201
618/397-3011

Robert T. McCormick
Tri-City United Fund
2021 Edison Avenue
Granite City, Illinois 62040
618/877-6780

Harry Van Matre
Community Chest and Council of Greater Peoria
509 W. High Street
Peoria, Illinois 61606
309/674-5181

William A. Wieties
United Community Services
730 E. Vine Street - P.O. Box 316
Springfield, Illinois 62705
217/522-8871

INDIANA

Harold Stark
United Community Services, Inc.
2001 East Columbus Drive
East Chicago, Indiana 46312
219/397-7924

Stanley Hossler
United Community Services
403 West High Street
Elkhart, Indiana 46514
219/524-1650

Bernard McAtee
Community Chest
210 Locust Street
Evansville, Indiana 47708
812/422-4108

Thomas J. Burns
United Fund
227 E. Washington Blvd.
Ft. Wayne, Indiana 46802
219/743-5471

George Hrnjak
AFL-CIO-CSA
100 East 5th Avenue
Gary, Indiana 46402
219/883-0023

Claude Downey
AFL-CIO-CSA
615 N. Alabama Street
Indianapolis, Indiana 46204
317/639-1451

Jean Paul Lushin
United Fund of Howard County, Inc.
400 North Main Street
Kokomo, Indiana 46901
317/457-6691

McClellan B. Warrell
United Fund of Delaware Co., Inc.
P. O. Box 968
615 E. Washington Street
Muncie, Indiana 47305
317/288-5586

INDIANA - con't.

Frank W. Kelva
United Community Services
120 S. Taylor Street
South Bend, Indiana 46601
219/232-8201

B. G. (Pete) Culver
United Fund of Vigo County
20 Chestnut Street
Terre Haute, Indiana 47807
812/235-6287

IOWA

Ethan Sproston
United Community Services
512 Second Avenue, S.E.
Cedar Rapids, Iowa 52401
319/364-0167

Jack L. Bohe
United Community Services
700 Sixth Avenue
Des Moines, Iowa 50309
515/244-1181

Ray W. Hodson
United Community Services
700 Sixth Avenue
Des Moines, Iowa 50309
515/244-1181

Joe Heger
United Fund of Sioux City
P. O. Box 204
7th Floor Court House
Sioux City, Iowa 51102
712/255-3551

William W. Wilharm
United Services of Black Hawk County
P. O. Box 690
1028 Headford Avenue
Waterloo, Iowa 50701
319/234-1511

KANSAS

Mrs. Lula Reider
United Fund of Wichita
212 N. Market Street
Wichita, Kansas 67202
316/267-1321

KENTUCKY

Charles T. Clark
Labor Relations Division
c/o Community Chest Bldg.
207 W. Market Street
Louisville, Kentucky 40202
502/583-2821

LOUISIANA

Edward H. Schmalz
United Fund
211 Camp Street
New Orleans, Louisiana 70130
504/522-6681

MARYLAND

Michael J. Brockmeyer
United Appeal
P. O. Box 1167 - 233 E. 21st Street
Baltimore, Maryland 21203
301/837-4524

MASSACHUSETTS

Berry Aronson
United Fund
14 Somerset Street
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
617/742-2010

Joseph D. McLaughlin
United Fund
14 Somerset Street
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
617/742-2010

MASSACHUSETTS - con't.

Mrs. Helen Chatterton
United Fund of Gr. Fall River
101 Rock Street
Fall River, Massachusetts 02720
617/678-8361

John F. O'Connor
Holyoke United Fund
276 High Street
Holyoke, Massachusetts 01040
413/532-3232

John J. Mullen
United Fund
150 Middlesex Street
Lowell, Massachusetts 01852
617/452-8991

Frank Prioli
United Fund & Council of Gr. Lynn
110 Broad Street
Lynn, Massachusetts 02108
617/598-1950

Emil Bellotti
Greater New Bedford United Fund
106 Spring Street
New Bedford, Massachusetts 02740
617/994-9625

Arthur DePietro
United Fund and Council
8 Adams Street
Quincy, Massachusetts 02169
617/479-1800

Samuel Walker
United Fund
184 Mill Street
Springfield, Massachusetts 01108
413/737-2691

Kenneth J. Mangan
United Fund
7 Oak Street
Worcester, Massachusetts 01609
617/757-5631

MICHIGAN

Wayne Cox
Battle Creek Area United Fund
182 W. Van Buren Street
Battle Creek, Michigan 49014
616/962-9538

Ed Norlock
United Fund of Bay County
514 Bay City Bank Bldg.
Bay City, Michigan 48706
517/893-7508

Bernard Dancey
Wayne County AFL-CIO
2310 Cass Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48201
313/963-4233

Eric G. DeRoss
United Foundation
1528 Woodward
Detroit, Michigan 48226
313/965-7100

Arthur McCann
United Foundation
1528 Woodward
Detroit, Michigan 48226
313/965-7100

David H. MacDonald
Red Feather Fund
202 East Boulevard Dr.
Flint, Michigan 48503
313/232-8121

Mrs. Jeane Cogan
Labor Participation Committee
United Community Services
1064 Race Street, N.E.
Grand Rapids, Michigan 49503
616/459-6281

Enoch D. Fish
United Community Services
215 Sheldon Avenue, S.E.
Grand Rapids, Michigan 49502
616/458-9659

MICHIGAN - con't.

Leonard E. Holt
United Community Services
729 W. Michigan Avenue
Jackson, Michigan 49202
517/784-0511

Robert Swander
Community Chest of Kalamazoo Co., Inc.
709 S. Westnedge Street
Kalamazoo, Michigan 49007
616/343-1577

Nolan Owen
United Community Chest, Inc.
615 N. Capitol Avenue
Lansing, Michigan 48914
517/484-1351

Oscar Wade
United Community Chest, Inc.
615 N. Capitol Avenue
Lansing, Michigan 48914
517/484-1351

Fred Campbell
c/o United Foundation
31 A Church Street
Mt. Clemens, Michigan 48043
313/465-0426

Ernest Schaner
United Appeal of Muskegon Co.
970 - 3rd Street
Muskegon, Michigan 49440
616/722-2667

AFL-CIO-CSA
Pontiac Area United Fund
P. O. Box 688
132 Franklin Blvd.
Pontiac, Michigan 48053
313/338-9211

MICHIGAN - con't.

St. Clair County United
Community Chest
P.O. Box 863 - 1723 Military St.
Port Huron, Michigan 48060
313/985-8169

Norman D. Osborne
United Fund of Saginaw County
510 Eddy Building
Saginaw, Michigan 48607
517/755-0505

MINNESOTA

Ray Allen
Community Chest
217 Torrey Building
Duluth, Minnesota 55802
218/722-7447

Mrs. Beatrice Kersten
United Fund
404 South 8th Street
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55404
612/332-5275

F. Richard Kadrie
Greater St. Paul United Fund
400 Wilder Building
St. Paul, Minnesota 55102
612/222-0311

MISSOURI

Harold Cullum
Heart of America United Campaign
320 East 10th Street
Kansas City, Missouri 64106
816/471-8030

Denver Cook
Heart of America United Campaign
320 East 10th Street
Kansas City, Missouri 64106
816/471-8030

MISSOURI - con't.

Russell E. Egan
United Fund, Inc.
417 North 10th Street
St. Louis, Missouri 63101
314/421-0606

Edward M. Tod
United Fund, Inc.
417 North 10th Street
St. Louis, Missouri 63101
314/421-0606

NEBRASKA

Henry McCourt
United Community Services
A.C. Nelsen Center for Community Services
1805 Harney Street
Omaha, Nebraska 68102
402/342-8232

Wallace O. Nelson
United Community Services
A.C. Nelsen Center for Community Services
1805 Harney Street
Omaha, Nebraska 68102
402/342-8232

NEW JERSEY

George E. Norcross
Union Org. for Social Services
720 Federal Street
Camden, New Jersey 08103
609/963-8545

Francis J. Conway
United Fund of Eastern Union Cty.
694 Bayway Avenue
Elizabeth, New Jersey 07202
201/353-7171

Julien Demeyer
Passiac Valley United Givers Fund
225 Route #46
Totowa, New Jersey 07512
201/256-8244

NEW JERSEY - con't.

Richard P. Donovan
AFL-CIO Labor Participation Dept.
United Community Fund and Council
45 Branford Place - Room 327
Newark, New Jersey 07102
201/623-6030

Alfred W. Wagner, Dir.
AFL-CIO Labor Participation Dept.
United Community Fund and Council
45 Branford Place - Room 327
Newark, New Jersey 07102
201/623-6030

Clarkson Spratford
United Fund
41 Bayard Street, P. O. Box 1187
New Brunswick, New Jersey 08903
201/247-3727

Thomas J. Dunn
Delaware Valley United Fund
602 Greenwood Avenue
Trenton, New Jersey 08601
609/392-1175

Louis J. Persico
Delaware Valley United Fund
602 Greenwood Avenue
Trenton, New Jersey 08601
609/392-1175

NEW YORK

Sam F. Lanza
United Fund of Buffalo & Erie County
35 Erie Street
Buffalo, New York 14202
716/856-4333

Anthony Costaldo
Long Island Fund
425 Broad Hollow Road
Melville, Long Island, N.Y. 11746
516/249-1100

NEW YORK - con't.

Hayes Alvis
American Red Cross
150 Amsterdam Avenue
New York, New York 10023
212/787-1000

Sid Lew
Greater New York United Fund
100 East 42nd Street
New York, New York 10017
212/986-8100

Frank LiVolsi
Greater New York United Fund
100 East 42nd Street
New York, New York 10017
212/986-8100

Gerald Waters, Sr.
N.Y.C. Central Labor Council
386 Park Avenue South
New York, New York 10016
212/679-5250

George Sparkes
United Community Chest
107 James Street
Syracuse, New York 13202
315/471-8126

Albert R. Woodard
Community Chest & Planning Council
209 Elizabeth Street
Utica, New York 13501
315/733-4691

OHIO

Clifford Skeen
United Foundation of Akron
P. O. Box 1260
90 North Prospect Street
Akron, Ohio 44309
216/762-7601

Jack McIntyre
United Foundation of Akron
P. O. Box 1260
90 North Prospect Street
Akron, Ohio 44309
216/762-7601

OHIO - con't.

Andre Carlon
Community Chest and Council
2400 Reading Road
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
513/721-3160

Jack Stiegler
Community Chest and Council
2400 Reading Road
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
513/721-3160

Hugh McCormack
United Appeal of Gr. Cleveland
3100 Euclid Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio 44115
216/881-3170

Mel Witt
United Appeal of Gr. Cleveland
3100 Euclid Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio 44115
216/881-3170

Charles Overly
United Community Council
137 East State Street
Columbus, Ohio 43215
614/228-5606

James Sanders
United Community Council
137 East State Street
Columbus, Ohio 43215
614/228-5606

J. Stanley Wysor, Labor Coordinator
United Fund
P. O. Box 67
Dayton, Ohio 45401
513/461-5810

John J. Curry
United Fund of Greater Lima, Inc.
616 South Collett Street
Lima, Ohio 45805
419/227-6341

Denis Rooney
AFL-CIO Community Services Activities
425 Winthrop Street
Toledo, Ohio 43620
419/241-5062

OHIO - con't.

Virgil Barnhart
AFL-CIO Community Services Activities
425 Winthrop Street
Toledo, Ohio 43620
419/241-5062

Donald P. Plant
United Appeal of the Warren Area
720 Mahoning Avenue, N.W.
Warren, Ohio 44483
216/392-0146

Archie J. Itts
Youngstown Area Community Chest
1000 Wick Building
Youngstown, Ohio 44503
216/746-8494

OKLAHOMA

Miss Bethel Ward
Tulsa Community Chest
602 South Cheyenne Avenue
Tulsa, Oklahoma 74119
918/583-7171

OREGON

John H. Wilson, Director
Oregon AFL-CIO-CSA
718 W. Burnside Street
Portland, Oregon 97209
503/228-9131

PENNSYLVANIA

John H. Spadaccino
United Community Services of Bucks County
413 Hood Boulevard
Fairless Hills, Pennsylvania 19030
757-5191 -- 943-1551 -- 295-6116
348-4810

PENNSYLVANIA - con't.

Edward B. Orzell
United Community Fund
930 Edgemont Avenue
Chester, Pennsylvania 19013
215/874-8646

Alton E. Ross
United Fund of Erie County
110 West 10th Street
Erie, Pennsylvania 16501
814/456-2937

Miss Gloria Jean Hendershot
Tri County United Fund
201 South Street
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania 17101
717/238-8387

Patrick Greene
Community Chest
111 Walnut Street
Johnstown, Pennsylvania 15901
814/535-2563

George T. Barberio
Community Chest of New Castle
20½ E. Washington Street
P. O. Box 993
New Castle, Pennsylvania 16101
412/658-8528

Harry J. Ely
United Fund
438 Suburban Station Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19103
215/568-0800

Benjamin T. Rickards
United Fund
438 Suburban Station Bldg.
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19103
215/568-0800

Ward Feitt
United Fund of Alleghany County
200 Ross Street
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15219
412/261-6010

PENNSYLVANIA - con't.

Paul A. Stackhouse, Jr.
United Fund of Alleghany County
200 Ross Street
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15219
412/261-6010

Theodore Bricker
United Community Services
631 Washington Street
Reading, Pennsylvania 19603
215/374-5151

Joseph F. Scanlon
Lackawanna United Fund
615 Jefferson Avenue
Scranton, Pennsylvania 18502
717/343-1267

Eugene Dyll
United Fund
300 West State Street
Sharon, Pennsylvania 16146
412/347-1269

Miss Rosalie Brader
Wyoming Valley United Fund
66 North Main Street
Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania 18701
717/822-7161

RHODE ISLAND

Michael J. Dolinski
United Fund, Inc.
333 Grotto Avenue
Providence, Rhode Island 02860
401/521-9000

Arthur R. Ferri
United Fund, Inc.
333 Grotto Avenue
Providence, Rhode Island 02860
401/521-9000

TENNESSEE

Nash Thaxton
Shelby United Neighbors
1010 McCall Bldg., P. O. Box 299
Memphis, Tennessee 38103
901/525-5602

John W. Watson
Shelby United Neighbors
1010 McCall Bldg., P. O. Box 299
Memphis, Tennessee 38103
901/525-5602

Edwin L. Bryan
United Givers Fund of Nashville & Davidson County
P. O. Box 2731
Nashville, Tennessee 37219
615/255-8501

TEXAS

Mr. Jean Savoy
United Fund of Houston & Harris County
215 Main Street
Houston, Texas 77002
713/224-1701

UTAH

W. Harry Sneed
The United Fund
72 West 2nd South
Salt Lake City, Utah 84101
801/328-0211

WASHINGTON

Paul Elliott
United Good Neighbors
107 Cherry Street
Seattle, Washington 98104
206/682-8161

WASHINGTON - con't.

Richard B. McTighe
United Crusade
South 5 Washington Street
Spokane, Washington 99204
509/747-1095

Walter Freeman
United Good Neighbor Fund
702 Broadway
Tacoma, Washington 98402
206/272-4263

WEST VIRGINIA

Wendell W. Drake
United Fund of Kanawha Valley
702½ Lee Street
Charleston, West Virginia 25064
304/343-7608

Claude J. Arnett
United Fund of Marion County
P. O. Box 228
301 Adams Street
Fairmont, West Virginia 26554
304/366-4550

Mrs. Emma Lou Kessick
United Community Services, Inc.
419 - 9th Street
Huntington, West Virginia 25725
304/522-0349

WISCONSIN

John Bretl
United Givers Fund
2059 Atwood Avenue
Madison, Wisconsin 53704
601/244-5686

Kenneth Clark
United Community Services of Milwaukee
606 East Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53202
414/271-0738

WISCONSIN - con't.

Harold C. Schrubbe
United Community Services of Milwaukee
606 East Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53202
414/271-0738

Michael T. Shokatz
United Community Services of Milwaukee
606 East Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53202
414/271-0738

James Rizzo
Racine United Community Services, Inc.
818 Sixth Street
Racine, Wisconsin 53403
414/632-5186

CANADA

William D. Kearns
United Community Fund and
United Appeal
100 University Avenue
Toronto 1, Ontario, Canada
416/366-4241

Moses McKay
United Community Fund and
United Appeal
100 University Avenue
Toronto 1, Ontario, Canada
416/366-4241

Charles Lamarche
Community Chest and Council
1625 West 8th Avenue
Vancouver, B.C.
604/731-7781

Jean-Guy Ramsey
Fed. Appeal of Greater Montreal
400 De Maisonneuve Blvd., West-Suite 1250
Montreal 2, Quebec, Canada
514/849-2351

A WASHINGTON CONFERENCE developed plans for a 50-cities drive to recruit, train and find jobs for the hard-core unemployed. The program is being carried out by the Human Resources Development Institute (HRDI), the AFL-CIO and Dept. of Labor. From left, Otto Pragan, assistant director, AFL-CIO Dept. of Education; Orieanna Syphax of Health, Education & Welfare Dept.; Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs and president of HRDI; Robert McConnin, Dept. of Labor; Merlin Taylor, HRDI executive director, and Thomas F. Royals, Labor Dept.

'Human Resources' Jobs Plan Gets Under Way in Nine Cities

The AFL-CIO's campaign to get union members more involved in manpower programs for the hard-core unemployed is now under way in nine cities—Atlanta, Boston, Cincinnati, Houston, Pittsburgh, New York, Los Angeles, New Orleans and St. Louis.

These are the first of 50 metropolitan areas in which organized labor will have a full-time manpower representative operating under the direction of the new Human Resources Development Institute in Washington.

HRDI is a non-profit corporation set up by the AFL-CIO to mobilize the resources of the labor movement in a nationwide program to recruit, train, employ and upgrade the unemployed and the underemployed. Federation Pres. George Meany is chairman of the HRDI board and Julius Rothman, associate director of AFL-CIO's new Dept. of Urban Affairs, is president.

The institute was set up with the aid of a Labor Dept. grant of $1.5 million.

"The AFL-CIO has consistently said that the road out of poverty is a good job at decent wages," Rothman pointed out. "We feel that the proper role for labor unions in helping to achieve

All HRDI staff members have a background in the labor movement, Taylor noted, plus a variety of experience in civil rights, anti-poverty programs, political action and other civic involvement. The staff will be thoroughly integrated, says Taylor, and already includes two women and six minority group members.

HRDI recently concluded a one-week training session in Washington at which top representatives from the AFL-CIO, the Labor Dept. and the National Alliance of Businessmen briefed the staff on manpower and related problems. A second conference will be held in February for new field representatives in the next cities to be staffed.

At the Washington conference, Taylor emphasized the key role that HRDI was expected to play in the AFL-CIO's total effort to help resolve what he called "the single most critical domestic problem facing the United States today—helping the hard core to acquire full economic citizenship."

"Unless we begin to successfully recruit the disadvantaged men and women in our ghettos, train them and place them in good jobs at decent wages," said Taylor, "we cannot begin to solve the crisis that is plaguing our cities. Organized labor can play a major role in creating a realistic, creative climate for developing training and placement programs."

million.

"The AFL-CIO has consistently said that the road out of poverty is a good job at decent wages," Rothman pointed out. "We feel that the proper role for labor unions in helping to achieve this goal is to get involved in the actual training of the disadvantaged unemployed worker for a place in our economic system."

Already on board with HRDI, Rothman reported, are a fulltime director and four staff representatives in the national office plus fulltime representatives in the nine pilot cities.

HRDI's executive director is Merlin L. Taylor of New Orleans. A former bricklayer and stone mason, Taylor was president and business manager of his local union for three years, during which he developed and taught an extension course for journeymen for the State Dept. of Vocational Education. He also attended an AFL-CIO Community Services course and studied at Loyola University's Institute of Industrial Relations. Taylor, 39, comes to HRDI from the Labor Dept., where he had major responsibilities in developing manpower programs.

Also in HRDI's Washington office are James D. Boyle, Olga Corey, C. R. Hollowell and Alfred P. Love. The field staff includes Peter Babin III in New Orleans, Charles E. Bradford in St. Louis, Donald W. Bridges in Houston, John T. Burnell in New York, R. J. Butler in Atlanta, Eddie Campbell in Cincinnati, Mrs. Minona J. Clinton in Pittsburgh, Paul J. Flynn in Boston and George M. Garland in Los Angeles.

of Businessmen briefed the staff on manpower and related problems. A second conference will be held in February for new field representatives in the next cities to be staffed.

At the Washington confer-not begin to solve the crisis that is plaguing our cities. Organized labor can play a major role in creating a realistic, creative climate for developing training and placement programs."

HRDI 1-10-69

Labo

PUBLISHED WEEKLY Vol. 28, No. 39 DURHAM,

LABOR'S HUMAN RESOURCES PROGRAM ARE OPERATING IN NINE BIG CITIES

WASHINGTON — The AFL-CIO's campaign to get union members more involved in manpower programs for the hard-core unemployed is now under way in nine cities—Atlanta, Boston, Cincinnati, Houston, Pittsburgh, New York, New Orleans and St. Louis.

These are the first of 50 metropolitan areas in which organized labor will have a full-time manpower representative operating under the direction of the new Human Resources Development Institute in Washington.

HRDI is a nonprofit corporation set up by the AFL-CIO to mobilize the resources of the labor movement in a nationwide program to recruit, train, employ and upgrade the unemployed and the underemployed. Federation Pres. George Meany is chairman of the HRDI board and Julius Rothman, associate director of AFL-CIO's new Dept. of Urban Affairs, is president. The institute was set up with the aid of a Labor Department grant of $1.5 million.

"The AFL-CIO has consistently said that the road out of poverty is a good job at decent wages," Rothman pointed out. "We feel that the proper role for labor unions in helping to achieve this goal is to get involved in the actual training of the disadvantaged unemployed worker for a place in our economic system."

Already on board with HRDI, Rothman reported, are a fulltime director and four staff representatives in the national office plus fulltime representatives in the nine pilot cities.

HRDI's executive director is Merlin L. Taylor of New Orleans. A former bricklayer and stone mason, Taylor was president and business manager of his local union for three years, during which he developed and taught an extension course for journeymen for the State Dept. of Vocational Education. He also attended an AFL-CIO Community Services course and studied at Loyola University's Institute of Industrial Relations.

Taylor, 39, comes to HRDI from the Labor Dept. where he had major responsibilities in developing manpower programs.

Also in HRDI's Washington office are James D. Boyle, Olga Corey, C. R. Holcwell and Alfred P. Love. The field staff includes Peter Babin III in New Orleans, Charles E. Bradford in St. Louis, Donald W. Bridges in Houston, John T. Burnell in New York, R. J. Butler in Atlanta, Eddie Campbell in Cincinnati, Mrs. Minona J. Clinton in Pittsburgh, Paul J. Flynn in Boston and George M. Garland in Los Angeles.

All HRDI staff members have a background in the labor movement, Taylor noted, plus a variety of experience in civil rights, anti-poverty programs, political action and other civic involvement. The staff will be thoroughly integrated, says Taylor, and already includes two women and six minority group members.

HRDI recently concluded a one-week training session in Washington at which top representatives from the AFL-CIO, the Labor Department and the National Alliance of Businessmen briefed the staff on manpower and related problems. A second conference will be held in February for new field representatives in the next cities to be staffed.

At the Washington conference, Taylor emphasized the key role that HRDI was expected to play in the AFL-CIO's total effort to help resolve what he called "the single most critical domestic problem facing the United States today—helping the hard core to acquire full economic citizenship."

"Unless we begin to successfully recruit the disadvantaged men and women in our ghettos, train them and place them in good jobs at decent wages," said Taylor, "we cannot begin to solve the crisis that is plaguing our cities. Organized labor can play a major role in creating a realistic, creative climate for developing training and placement programs."

HRDI

Coupled With Jobs, Wages:

Manpower Programs Set Stage For Curing Unemployment Ills

THE SOLUTION to hard-core unemployment is the solid prospect of "decent jobs at decent wages," a union manpower expert declared. That, he contended, is the motivation needed to get the disadvantaged to enter and complete training programs.

Lacking education and job experience, "you have to start from scratch in propelling" them toward jobs, said Julius Rothman, president of the Human Resources Development Institute, recently established by the AFL-CIO.

But, Rothman cautioned, "you can't deal with this group in terms of dead-end employment" at menial tasks for "wages so low that they offer no real hope." He stressed the need to develop "job ladders," so that these new workers will be able to move up as they gain skill and experience.

Rothman was questioned by reporters on the AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

The unionist said the initial aim of HRDI will be to help draw together the many existing manpower programs in 50 urban centers around the country, see that they are operating as they should, as well as "move organized labor — our local unions—in the direction of promoting manpower programs on their own." He said the effort is already under way in 10 cities, that 25 more will be in operation by mid-February and the other 15 by April 1.

ROTHMAN PRAISED the international and local unions, building trades councils and other union groups for the "excellent cooperation" they are giving the institute's program — "something they needed and wanted." They are "particularly happy to be able to get more deeply involved in manpower operations," he said.

Heretofore, he said, unions have "sort of felt that manpower programs were business' responsibility, and that while they have been consulted, it's been a sort of second cousin type thing—at arms length."

"From now on," he declared, "we are going to be involved directly, and immediately, and closely in the manpower programs at the local community level."

1-11-69
AFL-CIO

MONDAY, MARCH 17, 1969

Temporary Chairman - Julius Rothman, President, HRDI

9:00 Introduction of HRDI President and National Staff
Merlin L. Taylor, Executive Director, HRDI
Special Acknowledgement of St. Patrick's Day

9:30 Keynote Address
Dr. Emory F. Via, Director of Labor Programs
Southern Regional Council

10:00 "Organized Labor and Manpower Programs"
Julius Rothman

10:30 Coffee Break

10:45 "Government Manpower Programs: An Overview"
Robert Brown, Assistant Manpower Administrator
U. S. Department of Labor
Thomas F. Royals, Deputy Assistant Manpower Administrator
U. S. Department of Labor

11:30 Questions and Answers

12:00 "Community Resources"
William A. Davies, Labor Liaison with the United Community Funds and Councils of America
Lynn MacGowan, Staff Representative
AFL-CIO Department of Community Services Activities

12:15 Lunch

1:30 Sensitivity Session--Human Development Institute
(For all HRDI Staff who have entered on duty after December 31, 1968)
Intergroup Review
(For initial HRDI Representatives)

4:00 Break

6:00 Dinner

7:30 "Economic Impact and Manpower: Where Are The Jobs?"
Nat Goldfinger, Director
AFL-CIO Department of Research

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1969

Permanent Chairman - Merlin L. Taylor, Executive Director, HRDI

9:00 Concurrent Workshops: "Training Buddies"
Group I - Discussion Leader - James D. Boyle, HRDI
Resource - Joe Mire, Greenleigh Associates
Group II - Discussion Leader - C. R. Hollowell, HRDI
Resource - Robert Washington, Greenleigh Associates
Group III - Discussion Leader - Al Love, HRDI
Resource - Charles Slanicka, Greenleigh Associates
(Discussion Leaders will reconvene entire groups as required)

12:30 Lunch

1:45 Concurrent Workshops: "The What, How and Why of Area Representatives' Reports to HRDI National Office"
Groups I, II, III

4:00 Break

6:00 Dinner

7:15 "Organized Labor's Stake in Education"
Walter Davis, AFL-CIO Director of Education

8:00 EXECUTIVE SESSION - HRDI Staff
(Session to be devoted to providing HRDI Representatives with an opportunity for response -- no topic barred.)

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19, 1969

9:00	"Expanding Role of the U. S. Employment Service" Charles Odell, Director, USES
9:30	"Priorities of the Bureau of Apprenticeship Training" Hugh C. Murphy, Administrator, BAT
10:00	"AFL-CIO and the Hard-Core Unemployed" Jules Pagano, Vice President Greenleigh Associates
10:30	Coffee Break
10:45	Administrative Procedures of HRDI Harold Jack, Secretary-Treasurer, HRDI
11:45	"Relationships and Coordination -- HRDI and NAB" Robert Tetu, Director of Operations National Alliance of Businessmen Finlay Petree, Director of Recruiting Government Programs National Alliance of Businessmen
12:30	Lunch
1:30	"Housing and AFL-CIO Mortgage Involvement" John Evans, Director AFL-CIO Department of Urban Affairs
2:00	Model Cities Neil McArthur, Labor Relations Consultant Model Cities, HUD
2:45	Coffee Break
3:00	Concurrent Workshops: "Power and Influence Groups in the Community" Groups I, II, III
5:00	Close
6:00	Dinner

THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1969

9:00	Work Incentive Program (WINS) Merwin Hans, Chief Division of WINS U. S. Department of Labor
9:30	Questions and Answers
9:45	Comprehensive Work Training Plan (CWTP) Robert Fodor, Manpower Development Specialist U. S. Department of Labor
10:15	Questions and Answers
10:30	Coffee Break
10:45	Concentrated Employment Program (CEP) Joseph Kilgallon, Chief, CEP U. S. Department of Labor
11:15	Questions and Answers
11:30	Scope of Department of Labor Funded Programs Robert McConnon, Director of On-The-Job Training Bureau of Work Training Programs U. S. Department of Labor
12:30	Lunch
1:45	Concurrent Workshops: "HRDI's Role in MA-4 Contracts" Robert McConnon, Resource Groups I, II, III
4:00	Break
6:00	Dinner
7:15	The Civil Rights Movement and Organized Labor Don Slaiman, Director AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights
7:45	Remarks Arnold Webber, Assistant Secretary for Manpower U. S. Department of Labor J. N. Peet, Manpower Administrator U. S. Department of Labor

FRIDAY, MARCH 21, 1969

9:00 The Evolution of Apprenticeship Outreach Programs
Don Slaiman, Director
AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights

9:30 Outreach Program Field Experiences
Discussion Leader - Robert McGlotten, Staff Representative
AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights
Resources -
Napoleon Johnson, Director
Labor Education Advancement Program
National Urban League
Ernest Green, Director
Workers Defense League

10:30 Coffee Break

10:45 Job Corps Training Programs
William T. Kelly, Director of Job Corps
Office of Economic Opportunity

11:15 Job Opportunities for Disadvantaged Youth
Mildred Wurf, Acting Director for Voluntary Organizations
President's Council on Youth Opportunity

11:45 Conference Evaluation
Julius Rothman, President, HRDI
Thomas F. Royals, Deputy Assistant Manpower Administrator
U. S. Department of Labor
Emory F. Via, Director of Labor Programs
Southern Regional Council

12:30 Adjournment and Lunch

1:45 BUS LEAVES FOR WASHINGTON, D. C.

April 21, 1969

Mr. Merlin L. Taylor
Executive Director
Human Resources Development Institute
815 Sixteenth Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Dear Merlin:

Thanks for your kind letter of April 17.

Under separate cover I am sending some recent publications from SRC. As I mentioned to you at Piney Point, I think it would be useful for the southern HRDI staff people to receive our materials. If you agree, there are two possibilities. One is to send all of our publications, including the quarterly "New South", for an annual $5.00 fee which I have worked out for a fairly sizeable group of union-staff people. We would prefer this alternative if your budget allows. The other possibility is for me to send some publications on a trial basis for about six months. In either case I think we should get an evaluation from your southern staff after a period of time to see if they find them useful. If you are interested simply indicate on which basis and send the names and addresses. In any event, it would be helpful to have the names and addresses of your southern staff.

I hope the rest of the training sessions went well. Sorry my schedule did not allow for staying a whole week.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006 • TELEPHONE 638-3912

BOARD OF TRUSTEES
GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board

I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH KEENAN
JACK LYONS
WM. F. SCHNITZLER
PETER SCHOEMAN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER WHARTON

OFFICERS
JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President
HAROLD JACK
Secretary-Treasurer
MERLIN L. TAYLOR
Executive Director

April 17, 1969

Dr. Emory F. Via,
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

I'm sure I don't have to tell you how much I appreciated your participation in our Piney Point conference. I know from our staff how much you gave to them -- not just in your speech but in the many conversations they had with you.

We are all grateful for your willingness to share your commitment and experience with the Human Resources Development Institute.

Sincerely,

Merlin

Merlin L. Taylor,
Executive Director

MLT: pmt
opeiu#2,afl-cio

HRDI

AFL-CIO appoints SCME members to its Human Resources Institute

Two SCME members will play a key role in the AFL-CIO's new drive to increase union involvement in manpower programs at the local level.

They are Peter Babin III of New Orleans and Richard A. Smith of Chicago, who have been appointed to the field staff of the Human Resources Development Institute, which will spearhead the drive.

The institute is a non-profit corporation created by the AFL-CIO to mobilize the resources of organized labor to recruit, train, employ, and upgrade the disadvantaged in the nation's cities.

In 50 cities. The drive will operate in 50 cities with severe hard-core unemployment problems.

Peter Babin was on the SCME staff for eight years. He is a board member of the Greater New Orleans AFL-CIO and its representative on the New Orleans Human Relations Commission.

Richard A. Smith is president of State Department of Labor Employees Local 1006 and a member of SCME State Employees Council 34's policy, human rights and legislative committees. He is a delegate to the Chicago Federation of Labor and the Illinois State Federation of Labor.

Babin and Smith will work closely with their central labor councils and with community organizations concerned with the problems of hard-core unemployment. They will provide labor liaison to Federal agencies dealing with manpower programs in their areas.

Aug 1969 "The Public Employee"

News Letter
Virginia State AFL-CIO
9-69

MORETTI WINS APPOINTMENT

Vincent Moretti, Secretary of the Norfolk Virginia Union Labor Council, has recently been appointed an Area Representative of the Human Resources Development Institute. The organization (HRDI) has been set up by the AFL—CIO to involve more unions in job training programs to help the disadvantaged.

"Vince" was the business agent of Local 980, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL—CIO, until he recently resigned to assume his new position with HRDI. He is chairman of the Community Services Committee of the Norfolk Virginia Union Labor Council and is also a Democratic Committeeman in the City of Chesapeake.

Those in the trade labor movement who know Vince, know that he has been a real trooper in the various labor programs, both locally, and in the state. He also finds time to serve on the Boards of numerous organizations, such as: American Red Cross; Health, Welfare and Planning Council; Family Life Education; and Planned Parenthood.

HRDI's task is a critical one: To tap the talent and experience available within the labor movement to develop more effective programs for helping the disadvantaged find - and keep-good jobs at decent wages. Any member interested in HRDI may contact Vince at his office in Norfolk, at 115 Third Street, or by phoning 623-4564.

HRDI

HRDI 4 OCT 1969

PROGRESS REPORT on the first year's operations of the Human Resources & Development Institute is made to the HRDI board of trustees meeting in Washington. The trustees elected AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Lane Kirkland to succeed William F. Schnitzler to the 11-member board. Standing from left are Dir. Merlin L. Taylor of HRDI, Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers, former Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists, Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Pres. David Sullivan of the Service Employes, AFL-CIO Controller Harold Jack, Pres. Julius Rothman of HRDI, Federation Pres. George Meany and Pres. Max Greenberg of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union.

Human Resources Units Functioning in 50 Cities

Atlantic City—The Human Resources Development Institute—the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO—is tackling the problems of disadvantaged workers in their quest for economic opportunities, the Executive Council reported to the convention.

Established little more than a year ago, HRDI has operations in 50 major metropolitan centers across the country and is still growing.

Soon after its founding, HRDI went to work with a $1.5 million Labor Dept. contract helping to execute federal manpower programs and policies.

The problems of the under-employed, the under-skilled, the disadvantaged and victims of discrimination are among the chief concerns of the institute.

HRDI is designed to use and further develop the resources and skills in the labor movement in the operation of manpower programs, the council noted.

It is involved in programs to prepare minority youth for apprenticeships and to assist hard-core unemployed or under-skilled workers upgrade their job abilities.

It also functions as the liaison between labor and various government and private programs in the manpower field.

Before HRDI, the Executive Council noted, there was a lack of labor's direct involvement in training programs although there were many in its ranks who were knowledgeable in operations of manpower programs.

As a first step, HRDI carried out an intensive training program for its own staff at national and regional training meetings.

HRDI also teamed up with the National Alliance of Businessmen to expand the JOBS program (Job Opportunities in the Business Sector).

It later took over the Buddy Programs which aid the newly hired disadvantaged worker to adapt to the job and ease early employment problems.

While HRDI will assist and support current manpower programs, it will also help AFL-CIO unions to design and sponsor manpower programs of their own.

The Executive Council pointed out that the institute staff has the technical skill and knowledge to help unions in developing training proposals and negotiating with Labor Dept.'s Manpower Administration to obtain needed funds.

HRDI is also committed to work with local Model Cities administrators and with the building trades unions to recruit, counsel and train inner city residents involved in neighborhood rehabilitation and new construction.

McGlotten Appointed New HRDI Director

Jun 13, 1970

Robert M. McGlotten, a staff representative of the AFL-CIO's Dept. of Civil Rights, has been named director of the labor federation's Human Resources Development Institute (HRDI), Pres. George Meany announced.

The HRDI was established in 1968, in cooperation with the U.S. Dept. of Labor, to coordinate union and government manpower programs.

As HRDI director, McGlotten will be responsible for guiding labor activities in a wide range of manpower programs, including Job Opportunities in the Business Sector, the Outreach apprenticeship program, Model Cities, the Concentrated Employment Program, the Cooperative Area Manpower Planning System, and numerous on-the-job training programs under the Manpower Development & Training Act.

The programs McGlotten will administer "are vitally important to labor and, I believe, to the nation," Meany declared. "These are the spearheads we have established to find ways to open good and productive jobs to people who have been labeled hard to employ, and who have been pushed aside and largely excluded from our nation's economic life.

"Labor believes there is no more important task than to prove that there is room in our society for all its members, and that there is a job and a constructive kind of life for everyone."

Meany called McGlotten well qualified to guide these programs and said "the AFL-CIO Executive Council intends to see, to the best of its ability, that he has the backing he needs to help carry them out."

McGlotten, 33, is on indefinite leave from his assignment in the Dept. of Civil Rights, which he joined in April 1967. He replaces Merlin Taylor, who has returned to his post in the U.S. Labor Dept.

Before joining the AFL-CIO staff, McGlotten was a national labor relations specialist for the Opportunities Industrialization Center Job Training Program.

He is a vice president of the Negro Trade Union Leadership Council and has served as a public relations representative for Transport Workers Local 234 in Philadelphia. He was active in organizing activities of a number of unions in the Delaware Valley, including the Teachers, Steelworkers and Paperworkers.

He attended the University of Pennsylvania, St. Joseph's College Institute of Industrial Relations and the Pennsylvania State Labor Education Center.

CONGRATULATIONS are extended by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Robert M. McGlotten, the new director of the federation's Human Resources Development Institute. McGlotten, formerly a staff representative of the Dept. of Civil Rights, succeeds Merlin Taylor, who has returned to a post at the Labor Dept. Julius Rothman, left, is president of HRDI. Donald R. Slaiman, right, is the federation's civil rights director.

AFL-CIO NEWS
June 13-70

8/17/70

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
NATIONAL OFFICE: 815 16th STREET, N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3912

file (M-?)
Unions (?)

Board of Trustees
GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board
I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
LANE KIRKLAND
JOHN H. LYONS
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER P. WHARTON

Officers
JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President
HAROLD H. JACK
Secretary-Treasurer
ROBERT M. MC GLOTTEN
Executive Director

August 14, 1970

Emory Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Dear Emory:

I have forwarded the set of materials you sent me to our southern director, Pete Babin, and also discussed it with Bob McGlotten. We would like to have all our southern staff receive your materials, and also the director of our southwest region and several of our national staff members. I have marked these names on the attached staff list.

I would appreciate it if you would send us one bill at the national office.

My best, as always, to you and Margaret.

Sincerely,

Olga Corey

Olga Corey,
Communications Director

If subscription
Note of materials

OC:df
opeiu #2, afl-cio

cc: Robert McGlotten
Pete Babin

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

National Office: 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W. - Washington, D.C. 20006

202/638-3914

add to mailing list

HRDI National Office Staff

President - Julius F. Rothman
Executive Director - Robert M. McGlotten
Assistant Director - Alfred P. Love
Assistant to the Exec. Dir. - Marcia Stein
Director of Job Development - James D. Boyle
National Field Director - Charles R. Hollowell
Communications Director - Olga Corey
Program Analyst - Loretta Leen

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

EAST COAST

REGION I

Paul J. Flynn, Regional Director
44 Bromfield Street, Room 307
Boston, Massachusetts 02108
617/482-1727

BOSTON -

CONNECTICUT STATE -
Donald P. Wrenn
Area Manpower Representative
9 Washington Avenue
Hamden, Connecticut 06518
203/288-0354

REGION II

John T. Burnell, Regional Director
386 Park Avenue South
New York, New York 10016
212/MU5-9125/6

NEW YORK STATE -

NEWARK -
Earl Williams
Area Manpower Representative
744 Broad Street, Room 1120
Newark, New Jersey 07108
201/642-4134

TRENTON -
Joseph Ganie
Area Manpower Representative
900 Beatty Street
Trenton, New Jersey 08611
609/695-2004

REGION III

Ben Stahl, Regional Director
1512 Walnut Street
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19102
215/PE5-9039

CAMDEN -

PHILADELPHIA -

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

EAST COAST

REGION III (cont.)

PITTSBURGH -
Mrs. Minona J. Clinton
Area Manpower Representative
566 William Penn Hotel
William Penn Place
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15219
412/391-2267

REGION IV

James D. Boyle
HRDI National Office
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
202/638-3912

BALTIMORE -

VIRGINIA -
Vincent Moretti
Area Manpower Representative
1921 Lafayette Boulevard
Norfolk, Virginia 23509
703/623-4564

WASHINGTON, D.C. -
Mrs. Arline M. Neal
Area Manpower Representative
1148 Seventh Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
202/483-2273

WEST VIRGINIA STATE -
Lawrence Barker
Area Manpower Representative
P. O. Box 646
Charleston, West Virginia 25323
304/343-2501

SOUTH

Peter Babin, III
Regional Director
1016 Carondelet Building
New Orleans, Louisiana 70130
504/525-5577

ATLANTA -

Area Manpower Representative
501 Pulliam Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia
404/874-7928

BIRMINGHAM -
Glen Cole
Area Manpower Representative
1712 Seventh Avenue North
Birmingham, Alabama 35203
205/328-5866/7

MIAMI -
Andrew E. Dann, Jr.
Area Manpower Representative
244 Biscayne Boulevard, Suite 301
Miami, Florida 33132
305/371-4043

NEW ORLEANS -

NORTH CAROLINA STATE -
L. G. Holleman
Area Manpower Representative
P. O. Box 10805
Raleigh, North Carolina 27605
919/828-3881

TAMPA -
Harold Reddick
Area Manpower Representative
305 Morgan Street, Rooms 719-720
Tampa, Florida 33601
813/229-1495

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

CENTRAL STATES

Kara Coates, Regional Director
2310 Cass Avenue
Detroit, Michigan 48201
313/961-4705
961-4724

AKRON -
Charles T. Anderson
Area Manpower Representative
5 E. Buchtel Avenue, Room 314
Akron, Ohio 44308
216/376-4908

CINCINNATI -
Eddie Campbell
Area Manpower Representative
1015 Vine Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202
513/421-7067

CLEVELAND -
Harold Winbush, Sr.
Area Manpower Representative
715 Prospect Avenue, Suite 564
Cleveland, Ohio 44114
216/621-0908

COLUMBUS -
Clarence Butler
Area Manpower Representative
36 W. Gay Street, Suite 203
Columbus, Ohio 43215
614/224-3344

DAYTON -
Luther Holt
Area Manpower Representative
1512 West Riverview Street (Temp.)
Dayton, Ohio 45407
513/268-6300

DETROIT -

INDIANAPOLIS -
Bernard Hanley
Area Manpower Representative
803 S. Meridian Street
Indianapolis, Indiana 46225
317/638-1597

TOLEDO -
John C. Rober
Area Manpower Representative
912 Adams Street
Toledo, Ohio 34624
419/242-1476

MID-WEST

Charles E. Bradford, Regional Director
2319 Hampton Avenue, Room 108
St. Louis, Missouri 63139
314/644-0322

CHICAGO -
Richard A. Smith
Area Manpower Representative
330 South Wells Street, Room 700
Chicago, Illinois 60606
312/922-2780

KANSAS CITY -
Charles R. Kent
Area Manpower Representative
913 Tracy Street
Kansas City, Missouri 64104
816/471-0870/1

LOUISVILLE -
J. Richard Mahoney
Area Manpower Representative
112 South Fifth Street, Suite 606
Louisville, Kentucky 40202
502/584-2333

MEMPHIS -
William T. Ross, Jr.
Area Manpower Representative
136½ South Second Street
Memphis, Tennessee 38103
901/525-1114

MILWAUKEE -
James Clay
Area Manpower Representative
1012 North Third Street, Room 308
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53203
414/278-7833/4

NASHVILLE -
John Duncan
Area Manpower Representative
631 North First Street, Room 108
Nashville, Tennessee 37207
615/256-3520

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

MID-WEST (cont.)

ST. LOUIS -

WISCONSIN STATE -
Richard Sawicki
Area Manpower Representative
6333 West BlueMound Road
Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53213
414/278-7833/4

SOUTHWEST

Michael M. Arnold, Regional Director
1727 Young Street
Dallas, Texas 75201
214/748-2705

DALLAS -

DENVER -
Frank Gallegos
Area Manpower Representative
360 Acoma Street, Room 110
Denver, Colorado 80223
303/744-3124

HOUSTON -
Donald W. Bridges
Area Manpower Representative
6333 Gulf Freeway, Suite 201
Houston, Texas 77023
713/923-5535/6

OKLAHOMA CITY -
Mrs. Oneida Sawyer
Area Manpower Representative
2504 Meadowcliff Drive (Temp.)
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma ~~73106~~ 73159
405/235-3669

PHOENIX -
H. Eugene Carter
Area Manpower Representative
512 West Adams Street
Phoenix, Arizona 85033
602/271-0911

SABINE AREA -
Hugh Davis
Area Manpower Representative
1905 Fifth Street
Port Neches, Texas 77651
713/727-2731

SAN ANTONIO -
Albert Garcia, Jr.
Area Manpower Representative
109 Lexington Avenue, Room 207
San Antonio, Texas 78205
512/225-1569

WEST COAST

Lyle W. Eller, Regional Director
213 Labor Center
201 S.W. Arthur Street
Portland, Oregon 97201
503/224-9352

LOS ANGELES -
George M. Garland
Area Manpower Representative
2130 West Ninth Street
Los Angeles, California 90006
213/381-5611

OAKLAND -
William H. Burks
Area Manpower Representative
595 Sixteenth Street
Oakland, California 94612
415/465-0956

PORTLAND -

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI Regional Directors and Area Manpower Representatives

WEST COAST (cont.)

SAN DIEGO -
Frederick Martinez
Area Manpower Representative
San Diego Hotel
339 West Broadway Avenue, Suite 204
San Diego, California 92101
714/234-4189

SEATTLE -
George Williams
Area Manpower Representative
2800 First Avenue, Room 208
Seattle, Washington 98121
206/623-5393

HRDI

Reorganization Seeks to Widen HRDI Services

The Human Resources Development Institute has reorganized its national offices and field operations in an effort to improve services and to work more closely with various AFL-CIO departments.

Under the new set-up, HRDI appointed eight regional directors who are spotted at key cities across the country. Previously, field operations were directed by three national coordinators.

In announcing the restructuring, which will be effective in September, HRDI Pres. Julius Rothman and Executive Dir. Robert M. McGlotten said the changes are designed to undertake a more comprehensive effort in the AFL-CIO manpower programs.

Among the higher level positions in the national offices, Alfred P. Love was named assistant director of the institute. Charles Hollowell was appointed national field director and will oversee the operations of the regional directors. James Boyle was named job placement director.

The regional directors are Paul Flynn, with operations in Boston and Connecticut; John Burnell, New York state, Newark and Trenton, N.J.; Ben Stahl, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Camden, N.J.; James Boyle, Washington, D.C., Baltimore, Virginia and West Virginia.

Other directors are Lyle Eller for the West Coast region—Portland, Ore., Seattle, San Diego, Los Angeles and Oakland; Michael Arnold, Southwest—Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Oklahoma City, Phoenix and Denver; Charles Bradford, Midwest—St. Louis, Kansas City, Nashville, Louisville, Chicago, Wisconsin and Memphis; Peter Babin, South—New Orleans, Atlanta, Birmingham, Miami, Tampa and North Carolina; and Kara Coates, Central States—Detroit, Akron, Cincinnati, Dayton, Cleveland, Toledo and Indianapolis.

FREE!
COUPON
WORTH 10¢
On The Purchase Of
A Ride Ticket At OCEAN VIEW
AMUSEMENT PARK
NORFOLK, VA.
Seaside Park
Virginia Beach, Va.
Present Coupon at Ticket Window, Coupon Good Anytime--Except on Special Price Days--Thru Labor Day, 1970.

THE FRESHER REFRESHER

A Review of HRDI Activities

September 1969 - September 1970

Today marks HRDI's second birthday. While two years is not a big span of time in the long perspective of the labor movement, it does provide a measure in time from which to view HRDI. It provides a benchmark by which we can judge this new instrument created by the AFL-CIO to work in the field of manpower training as part of organized labor's continuing effort to broaden its service to the community, especially on behalf of the poor, the unemployed and the disadvantaged.

During its first year of life, much of the time and effort of the HRDI staff was devoted to creating the organizational structure and program of the operation. The national and local staffs had to be hired, the 50 national field offices had to be opened, staff had to be trained and administrative procedures and program relationships established. By mid-1969, HRDI was ready to move.

The following is a brief description of HRDI's activity in several key manpower programs.

Minority Hiring in the Building Trades

Probably the most significant activity of most HRDI staff representatives during the past year, has been their increasing involvement in programs related to minority hiring in the building trades. Working closely with the Civil Rights Department staff, HRDI was able to give direction and guidance to its local staff in three areas:

a. In assisting Apprenticeship Outreach programs already established, or in helping to develop new ones.

b. In the aftermath of the summer of 1969, HRDI staff in Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Seattle, and other trouble centers, was able to assist the local building trades councils by working with the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department in various ways, but particularly in keeping communications open between the building trades and the minority community.

c. As the "home town" or area-wide agreements began to develop, local HRDI staff representatives were called in by local building trades councils for assistance. This was true in Indianapolis, Detroit, New Orleans and Los Angeles, to name but a few of the cities where HRDI help was requested.

JOBS Program

While the building trades may have been the most visible and urgent part of the manpower scene, HRDI actually spent more time working on other manpower programs. For instance, almost every HRDI staff representative was instrumental in developing new contracts with employers under the JOBS program. Working closely with the local unions, the local National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) office, and the local representatives of the U.S. Department of Labor, HRDI staff have helped in numerous ways to effect a smooth and harmonious relationship between the unions and employers who had entered into JOBS training contracts.

HRDI staff was directly responsible for developing one of the largest skills upgrading program on record under the JOBS program. The HRDI staff representative in St. Louis, working with the Machinists union and the McDonnell-Douglas Company, was responsible for developing an upgrading program for about 400 workers which is being funded under the JOBS '70 program. Other HRDI staff have been instrumental in developing upgrading contracts on a much more modest scale.

Another important aspect of the HRDI relationship to the JOBS program is the training of "buddies" to help newly-hired disadvantaged workers make a positive adjustment to the job, the work-place, to other workers, and to their supervisors. HRDI staff have conducted 64 buddy training programs in 43 cities involving 1,105 workers from 222 local unions and 304 companies. This program is now regarded by many managements as an essential ingredient of their JOBS contract.

In an evaluation of a recent program that was held in Trenton, the NAB magazine, ONBOARD, quotes James Mitchell, vice president of Acme-Hamilton Manufacturing Company, as saying: "The disadvantaged stick with their buddies from the beginning. It's the buddies' job to help them along, even to the point of going out and finding a man if he doesn't show up for work." And the president of the company added: "These are disoriented people coming in off the street and we expect them to react like other workers. They need special attention from someone they can identify with . . . someone they can trust."

Another aspect of HRDI's relationship to the JOBS program is the work being carried forward in the national office of NAB by Brother Roy Siemiller, the full-time AFL-CIO liaison officer. Brother Siemiller is in almost daily contact with the HRDI national office. We are kept fully informed of all policy and administrative actions taken by NAB. In addition, Brother Siemiller has been able to convince recalcitrant local NAB personnel to cooperate with AFL-CIO unions generally, and particularly with HRDI. Beyond all this, Brother Siemiller has been very helpful in working with local HRDI staff in handling JOBS contracts which local staff feel in some way violate standards related to training that labor has traditionally upheld. HRDI's working relationship with Brother Siemiller has, over the past year, been very productive.

One last function which should be mentioned with regard to HRDI's work in the JOBS program, and that is its job as a program monitor. This is a self-assigned task but one which is most necessary. There are many companies, usually quite small, which have used the federal training programs for their own advantage. For these companies, federally-sponsored manpower training has served as a source of subsidized labor. The trainees come in the front door, spend a specified time on the job, and then go out the back door. The Senate Subcommittee on Manpower, Poverty and Unemployment, in a recent report, was able to cite a number of such companies. In addition, many JOBS contracts were written covering the type of job for which little or no training is needed - almost all of these jobs being low-paid and dead-end. Local HRDI staff make it their business, to the extent that the information is available, to look at the JOBS contracts being written in their communities. The HRDI national office has, on several occasions, called the attention of the Labor Department and NAB officials to the harmful effects generated by such so-called training programs.

Summer Youth Employment

Reports from local HRDI staff indicate that organized labor made a significant contribution to local summer youth employment programs. This program is aimed at youngsters who are still in school, to provide them with the funds that will enable them to return to school in the Fall.

Rising unemployment has seriously hurt this program. Organized labor was involved in this program in many communities and the results of the work of union leadership reflect the serious attention they gave to helping place poor youngsters in good summer jobs. In most cities, the efforts of organized labor were merged into the total community effort and there was no clear record of the jobs that were made available as a result of the intervention of union leaders. However, in ten cities the efforts of organized labor were, at least, partially identifiable. In these cities, over 1,400 summer jobs for youth were made available through the unions.

These are the over-all statistics. Perhaps a look at what happened in San Diego, where a number of unions participated in the program will best illustrate labor's concern.

Here are some of the actions that the unions in that city took at the request of the HRDI staff working through the central labor council that resulted in placing almost 600 poor young people in well-paying summer jobs:

1. The secretary of the county AFL-CIO council urged every local union to hire at least one disadvantaged youth for summer office work.

2. IBEW Local Union 465. The union requested and the San Diego Gas and Electric Company agreed to hire 160 disadvantaged youths (no dues or initiation fees).

3. Laborers' Local Union 89. Recruited and placed 300 disadvantaged minority youth in their trade at regular laborers' wage - $4.63 per hour.

4. Operating Engineers Local Union 501. Placed 5 youths.

5. Iron Workers Local Union 627 (Shopmen). Placed 21 youths.

6. Waiters and Bartenders Local Union 500. Placed 12 youths.

7. Local Union 102. (National affiliation not given.) Placed 25 youths.

8. District Council of Carpenters. Placed 20 youths.

9. Three Teamster Locals placed 25 youths.

Other Program Activity

A refreshing and heartening aspect of the local HRDI staff representative's job is his capacity for becoming involved in programs of local importance that are helpful to the disadvantaged. For instance, in some communities, HRDI staff participate in the Model Cities program, usually serving on the manpower committee. In other communities, HRDI staff has assisted local unions in obtaining OJT contracts with the Department of Labor. In many cities the HRDI staff are active members of the CAMPS Committees (Cooperative Area Manpower Planning System). This is the nearest approach to a national manpower planning system that has yet been devised.

Local HRDI staff in many cities work closely with the Work Incentive Programs (WIN), which is intended to train welfare recipients for jobs, and with the Concentrated Employment Programs (CEP), which is designed to supply disadvantaged workers in a specific area of the inner city with training and other services necessary to make them ready for placement into jobs.

These areas of program involvement serve to illustrate some of the variety of activities that local HRDI staff are engaged in.

HRDI Administrative and Structural Changes

Since early June of this year, Robert McGlotten has been the Executive Director of HRDI. He served for several years on the staff of the Civil Rights Department, and for the last year and a half, he spent much of his time working in the Apprentice Outreach Program. McGlotten's strong union background, his activities in the field of civil rights and his knowledge of the manpower field all combine with his administrative skill to strengthen HRDI. And because of his close ties with the Civil Rights Department, he has been able to strengthen the relationship between that Department and HRDI.

It should be noted parenthetically that Merlin Taylor, the first HRDI Executive Director, withdrew voluntarily and amicably to return to the Office of National Contracts of the Manpower Administration, U.S. Department of Labor, where he is responsible for all apprentice outreach programs.

In restructuring HRDI so that it can serve the needs of organized labor more effectively, the following changes have been made:

(a) National Office -

The three national coordinators positions were abolished and the following new positions were created and filled by the former national coordinators:

Assistant Director - Al Love

Director, Field Operations - Charles Hollowell

Director, Job Development and Placement Programs - James Boyle

Miss Marcia Stein was named to the post of Administrative Assistant to the Director; a new position of Director, Program Research and Analysis was created and, as yet, is unfilled; a new position of Program Analyst was created and filled by Miss Loretta Leen, formerly Administrative Assistant to the Director. Lastly, a new position of Director of Communications was created and filled by Miss Olga Corey, formerly Materials and Training Coordinator. (See Attachment A - Organization Chart.)

(b) Regional Offices -

In order to provide closer supervision and better program coordination for local HRDI staff, nine regions were created, each of which is served by a regional director. HRDI regional offices are located in Boston, New York City, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., St. Louis, Detroit, New Orleans, Dallas, and Portland, Oregon.

While the primary purpose of regionalization is to provide better service for local staff, HRDI also recognizes that its responsibility lies beyond those cities, areas and states that are currently being served by HRDI staff. The aim of HRDI is to provide assistance on manpower problems to AFL-CIO state and local central bodies whenever and wherever possible. We hope to be able to do this in two ways:

1. By extending the area of coverage of existing HRDI staff. For example, the HRDI staff representative in Norfolk, Virginia, will be given responsibility for the entire State of Virginia; the HRDI staff representative in Indianapolis will be given responsibility for all of Indiana.

2. By making the services of the HRDI regional directors available to state and local AFL-CIO councils that do not have HRDI staff, for consultation and assistance in the field of manpower training.

New HRDI Contract

The present HRDI contract with the U.S. Department of Labor was extended through November 30, 1970. We have a written commitment from the Labor Department that a new contract will be signed prior to the expiration of our present contract. Funds have been earmarked and set aside for the new contract which will extend for 12 months. In addition, we requested funds for two new activities - a job placement program in five cities, and a pilot project in the military installations either in the San Diego or the San Francisco Bay area, which would assist returning servicemen with limited skills to be place in jobs or training.

Scope of Work Under New Contract

Under the new contract, HRDI agreed to pinpoint its program activities so that the results of its work would be more easily identifiable. We agreed, among other things, to have each HRDI office work with a minimum of 20 JOBS contract proposals and/or operational contracts; to the development of buddy training programs with a minimum of 150 employers; to the development of 100 upgrading proposals covering approximately 2,000 workers; to participate in the Summer Youth Employment Program by developing job opportunities through the unions and the employers with whom they have bargaining agreements; to assist in the promotion and development of apprentice outreach contracts, as well as in the development of journeymen training programs in the construction trades. The latter would be done in close consultation with the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department.

In light of our past experience, and barring an acute or prolonged downward trend in the economy, the HRDI staff is capable of carrying out the activity to which it is committed.

Other HRDI Contracts

Until February 1970, HRDI had only one contract - the basic contract with the Department of Labor. Last Winter, HRDI, somewhat reluctantly, accepted the responsibility for sponsoring the Apprentice Outreach program in Memphis. While the contract is small in dollar terms, it was an important development in the life of HRDI, in that it marked the first venture of HRDI in direct program sponsorship.

The second contract that HRDI entered into as a direct program sponsor was with the New York State Department of Labor, to operate a job placement program through the Syracuse Central Labor Council. The Syracuse Central Labor Council has cooperated fully with HRDI in developing this program and will provide free rent and other services for the program staff. We expect this program to start up around mid-September.

The third contract that HRDI has entered into is with the national headquarters of OEO to operate five job placement programs (in addition to the five such programs approved by the Department of Labor) in as many cities. This contract will extend over a period of 14 months from August 1970.

Job Development and Placement Program

The fact that HRDI has undertaken the task of establishing Job Development and Placement Programs in eleven cities, makes this a priority program. As such, this program deserves some further explanation.

The Job Development and Placement Program is based on the assumption that jobs can be opened up for the disadvantaged, the minorities, and the unskilled through the use of union channels. Union officers and business representatives, because of their relationships with employers, can facilitate the placement of minority and disadvantaged persons into a wide variety of good jobs which offer regular wage increases and opportunities for moving up the job ladder.

This concept was tested in New York City in a program sponsored by the New York City Central Labor Council. From its inception in late March 1968, through December 1968, with a one-man staff, 973 workers were placed into jobs. In the calendar year 1969, 2,516 workers were placed with an 80 percent retention rate. This program, funded by the U.S. Department of Labor has expanded to offices in South Bronx and Brooklyn (Bedford-Stuyvesant area), in addition to its offices in the Central Labor Council.

The program which HRDI proposes to establish in five cities will be patterned after the New York City program. HRDI will work with each of the eleven AFL-CIO central labor councils in setting up the program. Responsibility for all fiscal matters, over-all program coordination, staff training and supervision will rest in the national office of HRDI. Each local program will be staffed by a project director, one job developer/interviewer and one secretary. When space is available in the local central labor council, the program will be housed there. The local central labor council full-time executive will be asked to assume day-to-day supervision of the staff.

The jobs that are most usually available for the type of worker who comes to the AFL-CIO Job Development and Placement Program fall into several categories but most of them are in the service trades. Retail stores, food chains, building service, laundries, hotels and motels, restaurants, and light assembly work. In many instances, when further training is needed to upgrade the worker, OJT contracts have been arranged between the union and the employer.

In addition to the New York City Program, the Alameda County Central Labor Council is sponsoring a similar program, and the Cincinnati Central Labor Council expects to initiate a similar program shortly.

The Rise in Unemployment and HRDI

The rise in unemployment has, of course, created many problems in the manpower field. Both the JOBS program and other manpower training programs are finding fewer takers. Not only are fewer training programs being initiated, but the number of trainees involved is smaller than in the past. Some employers, taking advantage of the loose labor market, are reverting to their earlier practice of demanding unreasonable qualifications for their trainees which has served as a further deterrent to launching new training programs.

It is obvious that training programs in a period of rising unemployment are not the answer for the unemployed and disadvantaged workers. The resistance of the Administration to a program of public service employment continues to block the one sure road that would open up good, socially useful employment to those workers who have not been absorbed into the private sector of the economy.

Despite the state of the economy, unions in communities and industries that have been relatively uneffected by unemployment will be urged by HRDI staff to become involved in federally-funded training efforts such as JOBS and MDTA-OJT, Public Service Careers, Job Corps, as well as others. Many AFL-CIO affiliates have shown great willingness to sponsor such programs but a substantial number have remained indifferent.

The Job Ahead

Union leadership at all levels needs to be convinced of the importance of manpower training programs not only as a socially useful device to prepare the disadvantaged for jobs, but also to meet the manpower needs of their own industries.

In the year ahead, HRDI will direct some of its efforts at working more closely with the national and international unions. But since manpower problems are, to a large degree, related to the local scene, it is obvious that the major arena for HRDI's work will continue to be in the local community.

In addition to working more closely with the national and international unions, HRDI staff will, in the year ahead, spend more time with state and local central body leaders discussing not only the role of HRDI but the broader need for labor's involvement in all aspects of manpower programming at the local and state levels.

The Administration is determined to put the operating responsibility for all manpower programs into the hands of the states under the banner of the "new federalism." Several administrative actions have already been taken toward this end. This trend obviously will place increased responsibility on the AFL-CIO state bodies for dealing with manpower problems. State AFL-CIO leadership will have to become more familiar with all aspects of manpower legislation and manpower programs. Local central body leaders will, in turn, have to become involved in local planning for manpower programs, become aware who the local program sponsors are, what kind of training they are proposing, the impact of training programs on the local job market, and so on.

HRDI staff is planning to initiate a series of informational conferences and meetings for local unions and state and local central body leaders. We would also like to bring together representatives of various national and international unions to determine how HRDI can help them with their training problems. Three national unions have already requested help from HRDI in dealing with the specific manpower needs in their industries.

HRDI's work, to a large degree, is directly related to helping disadvantaged workers, especially those from the minority groups, become part of America's work force. Organized labor has said time and again that the way out of poverty is a good job at decent wages. To the extent that HRDI has been able to create training opportunities and jobs for disadvantaged workers, to that extent have we helped to move these workers out of poverty.

The local HRDI representative is, in a real sense, the spokesman for the disadvantaged worker, who is the target for most federal training programs. The HRDI staff representative has insisted that training be realistic, preparing the trainee for existing jobs at decent pay. He has urged employers to upgradethe skills of disadvantaged workers who had proven their ability on entry-level jobs. He has insisted that employers provide all necessary supportive services to those trainees who need them. It is fair to say that the presence of HRDI in the community has made a very real difference in the kind and quality of training programs being operated.

A Final Word

Throughout the two years of its existence, HRDI has had the encouragement and cooperation of President Meany and Secretary-Treasurer Kirkland. Their counsel, guidance and concern have not only helped keep the HRDI on a straight course, but has also been a constant source of encouragement to the officers and staff. Their identification with HRDI has given it wide acceptance at all levels of the AFL-CIO and with its affiliates.

The technical proficiency and competence of Secretary-Treasurer Harold Jack in dealing with HRDI fiscal matters has been of the highest order. And Robert Mayer's sound legal advice has enabled HRDI to comply with the letter of the law at all times.

The HRDI staff, both national and local, continues to perform at a high level of competence. Turnover of staff has been low and morale has been high, despite the long delays and the consequent uncertainty resulting from the slow pace of contract negotiations with the Labor Department.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
NATIONAL OFFICE: 815 16th STREET, N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3912

Board of Trustees
GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board
I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
LANE KIRKLAND
JOHN H. LYONS
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER P. WHARTON

Officers
JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President
HAROLD H. JACK
Secretary-Treasurer
ROBERT M. MC GLOTTEN
Executive Director

September 9, 1970

Mr. Emery Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emery:

Olga Corey has informed me of the plans that you previously had for an Area Manpower Conference sponsored jointly by the HRDI, Southern Regional Council, and Georgia State University. I think the idea is a splendid one but due to HRDI's inactivity in the Atlanta area at this time, I would suggest that we postpone any definite planning until a later date. We hope to have our Atlanta office staffed within the next 60 days and once our new staff person is selected, we can pursue the conference at that time.

In the meantime you might contact our new Southern Regional Director, Peter Babin, III, 1016 Carondelet Building, New Orleans, Louisiana 70130, 504/525-5577 and discuss this matter with him.

Your comments on the aforementioned would be appreciated. Looking forward to seeing you in the very near future.

Sincerely,

Robert M. McGlotten,
Executive Director

RMcG:pmt
opeiu#2,afl-cio
cc: Peter Babin, III
C. R. Hollowell

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AFL CIO

WASHINGTON D.C. SEP 10 '70

U.S. POSTAGE .06

PB METER I.D. 875969

Mr. Emory Via, Dir., Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Conference
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

NATIONAL OFFICE: 815 16th STREET, N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3912

Board of Trustees

GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board

I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
LANE KIRKLAND
JOHN H. LYONS
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER P. WHARTON

Officers

JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President

HAROLD H. JACK
Secretary-Treasurer

ROBERT M. MC GLOTTEN
Executive Director

September 23, 1970

File HRDI

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.,
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia, 30303

Dear Emory:

Thank you very much for your letter of September 18th, regarding a Manpower Conference in Atlanta.

I will be in touch with you as soon as we have selected a new HRDI Area Representative for Atlanta so that we can discuss this possibility further.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Bob

Robert M. McGlotten,
Executive Director

opeiu #2, afl-cio
RM/dej

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AFL CIO

WASHINGTON D.C. SEP 24 '70

U.S. POSTAGE .06

PB METER P.D. 875369

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.,
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia, 30303

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

Olga Corey
Editor

September 1970 Volume 1, Number 1

HRDI PLANS FOR FUTURE EXPANSION

HRDI begins its third year with a new director, a streamlined structure and a deeper understanding of its role as the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO.

The new director is Robert M. McGlotten, whose 12 years experience in the labor movement includes staff work for the American Federation of Teachers, the Transport Worker, the United Papermakers and Paperworkers, and the United Steelworkers of America.

Before joining HRDI, McGlotten was with the AFL-CIO civil rights department, working with local building and construction trades councils to set up programs for recruiting and training minority youngsters to qualify for apprenticeship.

McGlotten also represented the AFL-CIO at the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) serving as Vice President for Labor Relations.

In announcing McGlotten's appointment, AFL-CIO President George Meany pledged the support of the Federation to HRDI's efforts to increase union involvement in manpower programs for the disadvantaged:

> "These programs," said Meany, "are the spearhead we have established to open up good and productive jobs to people who have been labeled hard-to-employ and who have been pushed aside and largely excluded from our nation's economic life."

Serving with McGlotten are Alfred P. Love as assistant director and Charles R. Hollowell as national field director. James Boyle will direct HRDI's job development and placement program.

In addition, eight regional directors have been appointed to coordinate activities in the 40 cities and six states where HRDI operates. They will also be available to share their knowledge about manpower policies and programs with labor organizations in those communities which do not have HRDI staff.

Speaking to the new directors at a meeting in Washington, AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer Lane Kirkland called HRDI "a basic trade union function" and "an integral part of the Federation's activities."

> " No manpower program that will ultimately help working people can be effectively mounted," said Kirkland, "without the input of those who represent the working people of America -- the AFL-CIO."

HRDI President Julius Rothman closed the three-day directors' meeting with a challenge:

> "HRDI, of necessity, has been a flexible operation," said Rothman. "With unemployment on the rise, and the problems of the disadvantaged increasing, that flexibility will be tested. The labor movement, more than ever, needs HRDI's know-how to deal with the problems ahead."

HRDI'S NEW REGIONAL STRUCTURE

MIKE ARNOLD (Dallas)
Dallas/Fort Worth, Denver, Houston, Oklahoma City, Phoenix, San Diego

PETER BABIN (New Orleans)
Atlanta, Brimingham, Miami, New Orleans, North Carolina

CHARLES BRADFORD (St. Louis)
Chicago, Kansas City, Louisville, Memphis, Milwaukee, Nashville, St. Louis, State of Wisconsin

JOHN BURNELL (New York)
New York City, New York State, Newark, Trenton

KARA COATES (Detroit)
Akron, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Detroit, Indianapolis, Toledo

LYLE ELLER (Portland)
Los Angeles, Oakland, Portland, San Diego, Seattle

PAUL FLYNN (Boston)
Boston, State of Connecticut

BEN STAHL (Philadelphia)
Camden, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh

Jim Boyle, of the National HRDI staff, will continue to handle Baltimore, Virginia, Washington, D.C. and West Virginia

HRDI HELPS FIND JOBS FOR SUMMER YOUTH

This year's summer youth program was badly hurt by rising unemployment.

In city after city, the number of jobs fell far short of what was needed and what was hoped for.

However, reports for the HRDI field staff indicate that organized labor was able to make a significant contribution to summer youth programs in their cities.

Beginning in early spring, HRDI set out to do two things -- to help get unions involved in the program and to let the community know of labor's interest and commitment.

Central and state labor bodies were urged to pass resolutions of support for the summer youth program -- and did.

Key labor leaders served on city-wide committees, issued statements to the press, appeared on local TV shows, spoke at community meetings and urged their local unions to help in any way possible. The labor press lent its support.

In some areas, where labor had not been asked to participate, HRDI volunteered help -- and it was quickly accepted.

As summer approached, HRDI became more involved in actual job solicitation. In most cities, HRDI operated as part of the Mayor's Committee on Youth Opportunity: usually, this meant working as part of the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) team to get job pledges from employers.

> For example, HRDI's John Duncan contacted 30 Nashville companies and got pledges for 187 jobs.

In some cities, all job soliciting was done by employers and HRDI was asked to contact the local unions in those companies that were organized. In a number of cities, HRDI staff found additional jobs by directly contacting employers -- usually at the suggestion of the local union involved.

In San Diego, Fred Martinez helped place 300 youngsters through Local 89 of the Laborers union and another 160 at San Diego Gas and Electric through Local 465 of the Electrical Workers union.

In New York City, John Burnell and Local 3 of the Electrical Workers found jobs for 132 youngsters.

In Newark, Earl Williams found jobs for 76 youths at stores, factories, offices, car washes and small contractors.

In Kansas City, Charles Kent placed 34 youths at Ford Motor and Western Electric.

In Milwaukee, Jim Clay placed 40 youngsters at A. O. Smith with the proviso that if they finished high school, the company would give them full-time jobs.

As it became more and more clear that there would not be enough jobs in the private sector, HRDI was asked to use its contacts to find jobs in non-profit organizations.

Earl Williams was instrumental in finding jobs for 36 youths with Essex County, New Jersey agencies and another 15 with East Orange agencies.

Joe Ganie placed 24 youngsters through the Trenton Board of Education.

Al Garcia found 20 hospital jobs and six jobs at local housing projects in San Antonio.

Bill Burks found jobs at the Port of Oakland and two Oakland hospitals.

John Rober placed youngsters with the State Highway Department in Toledo.

Minona Clinton placed youngsters at the Port Authority Transit in Pittsburgh.

At the same time, HRDI helped raise money for summer youth programs in their cities, either directly through the labor councils, or by soliciting individual local unions. HRDI's efforts were particularly successful in Dayton, Miami and St. Louis.

Also in St. Louis, HRDI's Charles Bradford recruited ten members of the Labor Council Women's Auxiliary to volunteer their services as phone solicitors.

In cities where transportation was a problem, HRDI also played a role. For example, Gene Carter in Phoenix and John Rober in Toledo helped win support for getting their city some of the federal transportation finds that were made available for summer youth programs this year.

Many cities used "Job Fairs" to bring youngsters and employers together. HRDI and labor involvement was heaviest in Dallas, Denver, Houston, New Orleans and San Diego. In San Diego, Fred Martinez received a Certificate of Appreciation from the mayor -- even though he wasn't officially a member of the Job Fair Committee.

In Birmingham, the "Work-A-Teen" program was headquartered in the HRDI office. Working closely with NAB, HRDI's Glen Cole supervised the phone soliciting for jobs and set up three-day training sessions for the youngsters, who were sent over by their high school counselors.

Gardening and clean-up jobs were found for 72 boys and Mothers' Aide and Nursing Home Aide jobs for 57 girls. Each trainee carried a "Work-A-Teen" identification card and was available for work on 24 hours notice. Many of the youngsters will continue to work on afternoons and Saturdays during the school year.

And the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union did its part by providing one full-time and four part-time jobs for the summer.

MORE HAPPENINGS AROUND THE COUNTRY THIS SUMMER

CHICAGO.....Training began under the now-funded Chicago Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity Inc. to increase minority employment in the building trades. Ninety men, from ages 17 to 40, are enrolled in an eight-week program conducted by Local 150 of the Operating Engineers.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI representative Arline Neal has been elected to the 21-member National Labor Advisory Committee of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

INDIANA.....HRDI President Rothman and Director McGlotten spoke at sessions of the State Summer School in Bloomington. Rothman also spoke to the OEO Midwest Labor Leadership Training Conference.

SOUTH CAROLINA.....Ninety blacks and other minority youths will be prepared for apprenticeship in the building and construction trades in four new Urban League programs in Aiken, Charleston, Columbia and Greenville. They will receive ten weeks training to pass entrance exams in the trades plus additional counselling after they become apprentices.

TENNESSEE.....HRDI's Memphis representative, Bill Ross, conducted the session on manpower training at the Tennessee State Labor School in Gatlinburg. Ross also served as a resource in the workshops on public relations and community relations.

ST. LOUIS.....The Ironworkers have adopted a national program to increase minority employment. The union hopes to recruit 100 already-experienced mechanics who can qualify as journeymen immediately. Another 500 will enter an upgrading program at whatever level is appropriate to theri skills and experience. The Labor Department has funded the 18-month, $1.2 million contract.

CONNECTICUT.....State Labor President John Driscoll has appointed HRDI representative Don Wrenn to the Economic Opportunities Committee which reports to the state AFL-CIO convention this month.

NORTH CAROLINA.....HRDI's role as the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO was discussed at the Young Workers School in Raleigh. HRDI representative L.G. Holleman was the speaker. Twenty-six union members under 30 from 11 southern states attended.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....A program to create 150-200,000 new public service jobs is proposed in a bi-partisan bill which goes to the Senate in September. The bill provides federal funds for 80% of the cost of creating jobs in local hospitals, schools, police and fire departments and other agencies. Up to 3 billion dollars is authorized for the first year of operation.

HOUSTON.....HRDI representative Don Bridges was one of the experts on hand to brief teenagers at the 5th Texas AFL-CIO Summer Youth Citizenship Conference. Youngsters attending this annual five-day conference are sponsored by local unions to help defray expenses and Bridges was responsible for contacting some 100 locals.

WISCONSIN....."The Crisis in Our Society" was the subject of talks given here by HRDI Director Robert McGlotten, who spoke at summer schools conducted by the Molders and the Machinists.

PHOENIX.....HRDI representative Gene Carter reports a successful Labor and Manpower Conference jointly sponsored by HRDI, the Phoenix and Maricopa Federation of Labor and Lodges 715 and 763 of the Machinists' union. Speakers from labor, business and government discussed current programs for helping the disadvantaged.

TRENTON.....Commencement speaker at ceremonies of Trenton Junior High School Number Five was HRDI representative Joe Ganie. Ganie is a member of the Trenton School Board.

# # # # # # # # #

MEMO FROM THE DESK OF:

Gwen Sapp

Apprenticeship - Outreach
South Carolina

Columbia - Milt Green
(803) 754-6524-

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

OCTOBER, 1970 Vol. I, No. II

Olga Corey
Editor

NO MATTER HOW YOU FIGURE IT, UNEMPLOYMENT HAS HIT AMERICA HARD!

More than four and a half million men and women were out of work -- and actively looking for work -- in September.

Nearly a quarter of those out of work had been without jobs for 15 weeks or more -- the highest this figure has been since 1965 and double what it was a year ago.

> The total unemployment figure includes 1,562 men 20 years and older, and 1,598,000 women 20 and over, and 1,131,000 teenagers of both sexes.
>
> Rates for both white and Negro workers were up in September. The white rate rose from 4.8 to 5.1 percent, the highest since July 1963. The Negro rate was at 9 percent, up from 8.4 percent in August and slightly more than the high reached earlier this year.

ENTIRE CITIES HAVE BEEN AFFECTED BY THE SHARP RISE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

The jobless rate has hit 6% or more -- which the Department of Labor classifies as "substantial" -- in 35 major metropolitan areas: this is the largest number of metropolitan areas to be affected since 1964 and 30 more than a year ago.

Three cities remain on the Labor Department's list of areas with "persistent" unemployment: this means unemployment has been 6% or more for at least a year and 50% or more above the national jobless figure for several years.

> HRDI Representatives service seven of the major metropolitan areas with "substantial" unemployment -- Detroit, Kenosha (Wisconsin), New Britan (Connecticut), New Orleans, Portland (Oregon), Seattle, and Racine (Wisconsin).
>
> All three cities with "persistent" unemployment -- Cleveland, Newark, and Oakland -- have HRDI Area Manpower Representatives.

One final statistic --

> Unemployment in the construction industry has hit 13.8% -- more than double the national average.

The worsening unemployment situation comes as no surprise to HRDI. Weekly reports from HRDI field staff have been sending up warning flags for some time.

For example, Wisconsin HRDI Representative Dick Sawicki reported on unemployment in Milwaukee among the building trades on April 17, 1970:

> "There are 2,650 building trades journeymen out of work. Eighty-nine apprentices are unemployed and another 530 are on the waiting list to be indentured."

On April 27, Sawicki was in Janesville, Wisconsin (population 43,500) and reported:

> "A thousand people have filed for unemployment compensation here. I have not seen such long, long lines of people waiting to file, not since the Fifties."

The effect of the overall economic picture on HRDI activities will be discussed in depth at a meeting of HRDI's National Staff and Regional Directors later this month and at a full staff meeting in November.

ROTHMAN REPORTS TO THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Closer cooperation between HRDI and organized labor was stressed by HRDI President Julius Rothman in his report to the HRDI Board of Trustees on September 10.

AFL-CIO President George Meany, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, presided.

Rothman indicated that, in addition to working more closely with national and international unions, HRDI would spend more time with state and local central bodies "discussing not only the role of HRDI but the broader needs for manpower programming at the local and state levels."

President Rothman also emphasized the significance of HRDI's operation to the labor movement's dedication to improving conditions for all Americans.

> "The local HRDI representative is, in a real sense, the spokesman for the disadvantaged worker, who is the target for most federal training programs.
>
> "The HRDI staff representative has insisted that training be realistic, preparing the trainee for existing jobs at decent pay. He has urged employers to upgrade the skills of disadvantaged workers who had proven their ability on entry-level jobs. He has insisted that employers provide all necessary supportive services to those trainees who need them.
>
> "It is fair to say that the presence of HRDI in the community has made a very real difference in the kind and quality of training programs being operated."

MINORITY APPRENTICESHIP INCREASES

Three thousand young Blacks, Mexican-Americans, Puerto Ricans and American Indians entered the building and construction trades during the year ending June 1970 as a result of the Apprenticeship Outreach program.

This is nearly twice the total number of minority youth who were apprenticed during the first two years of the program.

Apprenticeship Outreach recruits minority youths and provides special training for from four to ten weeks to prepare the young workers for apprenticeship exam in their chosen trade. Since the program began, a total of 6,914 minority youth have been apprenticed in 18 different building and construction trades.

According to Department of Labor figures just released, more than half the apprentices are in five trades -- carpenters (1,410), electricians (746), plumbers and pipefitters (643), painters (633), and sheet metal workers.

Labor Department statistics also indicated that during the year ending June 1970, the largest increase in minority apprentices was made by carpenters (641). Next came the painters (310), electricians (309), plumbers and pipefitters (275) and operating engineers (216).

The Apprenticeship Outreach approach was designed by the AFL-CIO Civil Rights and Building Trades Departments to increase minority participation in the building and construction trades. Local Building Trades Councils actually conduct 26 out of 78 projects now in operation. Other sponsoring agencies included the National Urban League (29) and the Workers' Defense League (16). HRDI operates the program in Memphis.

NEW MANPOWER HEAD APPOINTED

A union man has been chosen to direct the Department of Labor's manpower programs.

He is Paul Fasser, Jr., of the United Steelworkers of America, who has been named U.S. Manpower Administrator and Deputy Assistant Secretary for Manpower.

In his new post, Fasser will direct the Labor Department's $2.6 billion effort to find jobs and training opportunities for the jobless and the underemployed.

BIRMINGHAM.....Jobs for 61 disadvantaged workers have been made available under a JOBS '70 contract which HRDI's Glen Cole helped negotiate. The Tutwiler Hotel and Local 886 of the Hotel and Restaurant workers are cooperating in the program, which includes 11 different occupations. The hotel has also agreed to have HRDI train union members as buddies for the new workers.

PITTSBURGH.....Trainees at the Opportunities Industrialization Center here will learn about labor unions during their orientation program, thanks to efforts of HRDI's Minona Clinton. The labor education course includes six once-a-week sessions and will use labor and community resources.

TAMPA.....HRDI's Hal Reddick has been recruiting minority youths for the Urban League's LEAP program to prepare them for apprenticeship in the building and construction trades.

TOLEDO.....At the request of the University of Toledo, HRDI's John Rober helped to put together a program to have trainees at the Office of Economic Opportunity Skill Center do remodeling work at the University. Thirty-five trainees are now getting practical experience which will help them qualify for membership in five building trades unions -- the Carpenters, Painters, Plumbers and Steamfitters, Electrical Workers, and Sheet Metal Workers, with the cooperation of the local Building Trades Council.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI Regional Director Ben Stahl reports funding of two new JOBS '70 contracts. One provides for hiring 125 disadvantaged workers at Building Maintenance, Inc. where Local 125 Service Employees International Union is the bargaining agent, and the other for 30 slots at Oscar Mayer whose employees are represented by Local 195 of the Meatcutters union.

KANSAS CITY.....The Greater Kansas City Central Labor Council has set up a Manpower Advisory Committee. HRDI's Charles Kent is the chairman.

RALEIGH.....HRDI Director Robert McGlotten addressed the North Carolina AFL-CIO convention here on HRDI and manpower programs.

NEW YORK.....Furniture Workers Local 140, with the help of HRDI Regional Director John Burnell, has put together a consortium of 15 companies that have agreed to hire 140 disadvantaged workers, 70 at a time. This program is funded by the New York State Department of Labor.

TAMPA.....HRDI Representative Hal Reddick spoke to undergraduates at the University of South Florida in a panel on the problems and attitudes of the inner city. Reddick talked about AFL-CIO's program for helping the disadvantaged through union involvement in manpower programs.

INDIANAPOLIS.....The Indianapolis Plan for Equal Employment, Inc. has been awarded $449,982 by the U.S. Department of Labor for a program to increase minority employment in the building trades. Under the plan, 80 minority youths will be prepared for apprenticeship openings in the various trades. The plan will also upgrade the skills of 420 minority construction workers to enable them to achieve full journeyman status and union recognition.

BIRMINGHAM.....HRDI's Glen Cole reports that the Joint Apprenticeship Committee will operate a 10 contractor consortium for training 10 bricklayers with funds allocated under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

OKLAHOMA CITY.....HRDI's Oneida Sawyer reports the awarding of a JOBS '70 contract for 50 slots to the Hol-O-Met Corp. Included in the contract is a clause providing for HRDI to train union members to serve as buddies to help the new hires adjust to their jobs.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI Regional Director Ben Stahl has put together an On-The-Job-Training program to instruct 24 women in the new food-serving techniques. The program is being sponsored by the School District of Philadelphia in cooperation with Local 434, School Cafeteria Workers Union and is being funded through the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council. Eight present employees and 16 newly-hired are involved.

NEW YORK.....HRDI Regional Director John Burnell reports that a 20-week program to train clerk typists is now underway. Local 153 of the Office and Professional Workers' Union sponsored the program, which was funded as an MA-6 contract. The union and HRDI took the initiative in bringing together employers who have contracts with Local 153. HRDI also helps in the recruiting.

TOLEDO.....HRDI Director Robert McGlotten spoke to the Ohio State Building Trades convention on "The Role of HRDI in Developing Manpower Programs."

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

NOVEMBER 1970 VOL. I, NO. III

Olga Corey
Editor

NEW PROGRAMS --

Organized labor in Syracuse is mobilizing union resources to find jobs for 200 disadvantaged workers.

The drive is sponsored by the Greater Syracuse Labor Council and its 92 affiliates -- in co-operation with the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute. The New York State Department of Labor is contributing $43,000 for operating expenses.

Here's how the Syracuse program will work --

> All Syracuse business agents, local unions, and national union staff representatives will be asked to canvass the companies they deal with for job openings. These job opportunities will be reported to the Syracuse Council's job development and placement staff. The Council will work with the New York State Employment Service, the Urban League and PEACE (Syracuse's anti-poverty agency) in finding workers to fill the openings. Once the workers are placed, the Council will keep in touch with them to provide help or counselling that may be needed.

The Syracuse program is part of a nationwide effort by HRDI to open up job opportunities for the poor, for minorities and for the underemployed. James Boyle, of HRDI's national office, heads the drive and reports that labor councils in ten cities will be starting similar operations. Union-sponsored programs already exist in Oakland, California and New York City.

Speaking at the Labor Council luncheon which launched the Syracuse program, HRDI President Julius Rothman pointed out that in a period of increasing unemployment, unions can play a key role in finding jobs that might not be available through other channels.

Rothman emphasized that this concern for the disadvantaged is part of the labor movement's commitment to full employment as a national goal. Said Rothman:

> "We believe that only a good job at a decent wage gives a man the dignity and security he needs to become a useful member of society."

AND NEW FACES AT HRDI

HRDI has new staff in four cities -- Atlanta, Baltimore, New Orleans and New York.

> In Atlanta, the new man is Walter C. Rucker, editor and former secretary for Local 32 of the United Federation of Postal Clerks.
>
> In Baltimore, HRDI will be represented by Joseph Jones, president of Local 716 of the United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum and Plastic Workers.
>
> In New Orleans, Ernest Colbert, Jr. succeeds Peter Babin, III, who is now Regional Director for HRDI in the south. Colbert, a member of the Laborers' union, was on the staff of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees at the time of his appointment.
>
> And in New York, Henry E. Kaltun, lawyer and former business representative for the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, District 15, succeeds John Burnell. Burnell has been named Regional Director for New York and New Jersey.

HRDI's Job Development and Placement Program has named Dorothy R. Harding as its Director of Research and Evaluation. Mrs. Harding was formerly Administrative Assistant to the President of Local 82 of the Building Service Employees Union.

UNEMPLOYMENT STILL RISING -- HITS HARDEST AT YOUNG, BLACKS

Unemployment continues to increase and youth unemployment is higher than it has been since 1964.

Figures now in for the third quarter of 1970 show that 4,341,000 Americans were jobless -- as compared to 3 million a year ago. The number of men and women unemployed 15 weeks or more is nearly twice what it was a year ago.

Hardest hit were young people between 18 and 21 -- particularly blacks. While over-all youth unemployment hit 15.7%, unemployment among black youth went up to 30%. Although non-whites constitute only one-eighth of this age group, they accounted for one-third of the increase in unemployment over last year.

There was a significant increase in unemployment among young men, which rose from 11.5% last year to 15.5% this year, as compared to the increase from 14.3% to 15.9% for young women.

Unemployment among non-whites continues to be higher than among whites. For example, the number of black men who were jobless increased 4% over last year while the number of unemployed white men increased 2.3%.

The already-poor parts of the country continue to suffer more severely than the rest of the nation. While over-all national unemployment hit 5.2% this year, unemployment in areas designated as poverty neighborhoods went up to 8.3%.

And five more major labor areas have just been added to the list of those experiencing "substantial unemployment" -- 6% or more. Included are HRDI cities of Los Angeles/Long Beach and San Diego.

UNEMPLOYMENT SHORT-CIRCUITS NAB-JOBS PROGRAM

Increased unemployment is one reason the National Alliance of Businessmen's JOBS program failed to reach its goal of finding jobs for 338,000 disadvantaged workers, according to a study made for the Department of Labor by Greenleigh Associates.

The study cites several other problems which hindered the NAB-JOBS (the Job Opportunities in the Business Sector) effort. They are --

Lack of sufficient support for the program in the local business community -- except for those firms actually involved.

A negative attitude toward both business and government among those residents of poverty areas that the program was designed for.

Employer resistance to federal guidelines.

The 137-page report suggests two major shortcomings in the NAB-JOBS program:

The majority of jobs offered were "low-level, dead end jobs, which are, and have been technologically threatened for some time."

Not enough use was made of the supportive services available from federal agencies, to help the disadvantaged worker increase his chances of job success and improvement.

Positive benefits of the program, to both the worker and the employer were cited:

Average family income of the disadvantaged worker -- if he stayed with the program -- rose from $2,438 to $3,600 a year.

While 15% of those who entered the program were on welfare, only 5% of those who remained found it necessary to get public assistance.

Generally, employers found that they encountered far less problems in hiring the disadvantaged than they had anticipated.

Employers also found that their entry requirements --particularly educational-- were unrealistic and could be lowered without affecting production.

The report was based on interviews with JOBS trainees, company officials, manpower program specialists, community action agencies, grass roots organizations, public officials, schools personnel, health and welfare agencies and the communications media in ten metropolitan areas.

PORTLAND.....HRDI's Lyle Eller helped put together a Chamber of Commerce consortium which provides for 120 training slots. The three companies involved are the First National Bank of Oregon, the U.S. National Bank of Oregon and Pacific Northwest Bell. At Eller's suggestion, Portland CEP (Concentrated Employment Program) will provide the supportive services. The program has been approved and is awaiting funding.

ANAHEIM, CALIFORNIA.....HRDI Director Robert McGlotten spoke to the National Joint Apprenticeship Conference of the Operating Engineers on "New Training Needs and Opportunities."

PHILADELPHIA.....The National Institute of OIC (Opportunities Industrialization Center) will work with inner-city black employers to promote NAB-JOBS contracts for hiring and training the disadvantaged. The 18-month program is funded by the Labor Department for $327,866 and will operated in 30 cities.

TOLEDO.....HRDI's John Rober has been named to represent labor on the MDTA Advisory Committee of the Board of Education.

GULFPORT, MISSISSIPPI.....Field Director Charles Hollowell and Regional Director Pete Babin met with 125 Seabees who were discharged here to advise them of job opportunities in their trades, what union benefits they could expect and how their construction experience in the service would affect their apprenticeship status. Another session will be held in Port Hueneme, California, next month.

COLUMBUS,OHIO.....HRDI was the subject of a speech by Executive Director Robert McGlotten to the Ohio State Apprenticeship Conference.

COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.....The Kentucky State AFL-CIO voted to set up a statewide Human Resources Development Committee to work with HRDI.

LOS ANGELES.....HRDI's George Garland has been appointed to the Technical Advisory Committee on Testing of the California Fair Employment Practices Commission. Garland represents labor on the committee, which is analysing the effect of testing on fair hiring practices.

NEW ORLEANS.....HRDI's Peter Babin reports that the Greater New Orleans AFL-CIO Council has just set up a Manpower Advisory committee to work with HRDI.

NEW YORK.....HRDI representative John Burnell reports that an MA-5 contract has been awarded to nine employers under contract to Local 1707 Community and Social Agency Employees Union. Twenty-three women have been hired and are being trained for nine secretarial and 15 clerk-typist jobs. The starting rate is $2.25 an hour.

BIRMINGHAM.....HRDI's Glen Cole reports that the JOBS '70 contract for four slots at Gold Seal Pet Food includes a provision for HRDI to train buddies to work with the new employees. Local 422 of the Packinghouse Workers represents the company and will provide the buddies.

OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA.....Bill Burks has been appointed to the MDTA Advisory Councils of both Alameda and Contra Costa Counties.

NEW YORK.....HRDI's John Burnell reviewed a JOBS training proposal at the request of the Laundry Workers Joint Board. The program now has union approval for 250 job slots in seven companies which have contracts with the union. Supportive services will be provided by OIC.

BIRMINGHAM.....Mayor George Seibels has appointed HRDI representative Glen Cole to serve on the Mayor's Committee on Apprenticeship and Training.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI's Arline Neal has been elected a vice-president of the Health and Welfare Council of the National Capital Area.

SAN ANTONIO.....HRDI representative Al Garcia has just been elected to the Board of Directors of the Community Welfare Council as labor's representative.

SEATTLE.....HRDI's George Williams has been elected a member of the Everett County Joint Apprenticeship Committee.

SALT LAKE CITY.....HRDI President Julius Rothman spoke on "The Role of Organized Labor" to the 34th annual meeting of the Interatate Conference of Employment Security Agencies.

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

DECEMBER 1970 VOL. I, NO. IV

Olga Corey
Editor

HRDI GETS SET FOR MEETING NEW CHALLENGES

HRDI's plans for 1971 are geared to the hard economic fact that jobs are getting scarcer and scarcer -- for everyone.

At a four-day meeting in Kansas City, HRDI's national and field staff reviewed past successes and disappointments, analyzed new developments in manpower legislation and set priorities for the months ahead.

Underlying the discussion was an awareness of rising unemployment -- currently at its highest in 7½ years. The question before the conference was : WHAT ARE THE SPECIFIC CONTRIBUTIONS THAT HRDI AND ORGANIZED LABOR CAN MAKE TO GOVERNMENT MANPOWER PROGRAMS FOR THE DISADVANTAGED?

The answers are spelled out in the new one-year contract between HRDI and the Labor Department which provides HRDI with $2,180,280 to continue to serve as the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO.

New elements in the HRDI program include --

Job Development and Placement

As jobs get scarcer, informal channels of finding jobs become more important. For example, union officers may know of jobs at the companies they represent -- or may be able to develop jobs there -- which can then be made available to the disadvantaged.

HRDI, working with local councils, will set up job development and placement programs in at least five cities, with a goal of placing 20 persons a month in each city. James Boyle, of the HRDI National Staff, will direct the new HRDI program.

Assistance to Returning Servicemen

HRDI will develop a program for helping returning veterans find jobs -- or job training opportunities -- in their home towns. This program will have two parts --

> An HRDI staff person will be stationed at the discharge center and will advise the veteran of what chance there is of his finding a job in his home community, using the skills he has. If further training is advisable, the veteran will be told of what opportunities exist.
>
> HRDI field staff in 50 cities will furnish information on local jobs and training programs and will follow-up with the veteran when he returns home.

Charles R. Hollowell National Field Director will be in charge.

Upgrading Programs

As part of its overall program of cooperation with the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB), HRDI will emphasize the development of JOBS contracts for upgrading employees who might otherwise be locked into low-level jobs. Other opportunities for upgrading programs will be explored.

Working with International Unions

HRDI will step up its program of providing technical assistance on manpower programs to AFL-CIO international unions. It will encourage unions to develop national training programs, where feasible, and will help resolve problems that may arise in developing such programs. HRDI Assistant Director Alfred P. Love will be in charge.

Job Corps

HRDI will play a more active role in working with existing Job Corps Centers and in encouraging international unions to sponsor their own training programs at Job Corps Centers.

Minority Employment in the Building Trades

HRDI will help develop programs to recruit, tutor, train and place minority workers with construction experience on jobs that will lead to full journeyman status.

HRDI will offer technical assistance, when requested, to local Building and Construction Trades Councils and local unions involved in developing "home town" area-wide agreements to increase minority employment in the building trades.

HRDI will continue to work with existing Apprenticeship Outreach programs, providing whatever help is needed. Where no program exists, HRDI staff will actively assist in developing such programs.

In all these activities, HRDI will work in close cooperation with the AFL-CIO's Civil Rights Department and Building and Construction Trades Department.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI has appointed Michael J. Nash as its Director of Program Analysis. Nash formerly was Assistant Director of Project Build, the Greater Washington Central Labor Council's program for recruiting minority youth into the building trades. Before that, he was in charge of the AFL-CIO Building Service Employees' Custodial Maintenance Training Project here. He previously worked on the staff of the Catholic Interracial Council for three years.

HRDI's program analysis branch is responsible for analysing data from HRDI's fifty field offices to determine local and regional trends and relate them to the overall manpower picture. Nash will be assisted by Loretta Leen, Program Analyst.

HOUSTON.....HRDI's Don Bridges reports that the University of Houston's Public Service Careers program is now in operation. Fifty disadvantaged workers will be trained for clerical, professional and custodial jobs. There will also be an upgrading program for 50 employees already working there. In addition, to the on-the-job training, the program provides for classroom instruction at the University and elsewhere.

BOSTON.....HRDI's Paul Flynn reports a highly successful Veterans' Job Market here. The two-day Job Mart was attended by 23,000 veterans and 220 companies. HRDI represented the labor movement and assisted in the planning and running of the program.

NASHVILLE.....Organized labor's support has been enlisted for an intensive new program to help ex-convicts adjust to society. At the request of the warden of the Tennessee State Prison, HRDI's John Duncan helped set up the program and represented Nashville labor on the overall coordinating committee. Duncan also spoke to the inmates at the prison on what job opportunities would be available to them and how labor could help.

DENVER.....HRDI's Frank Gallegos conducted a four-hour session on the problems of the disadvantaged worker for employees at the Union Mattress Company. This is one of the companies that participated in HRDI's program to train buddies for the newly-hired disadvantaged employees. Local 22 of the Upholsterers is the union involved.

LOUISVILLE.....HRDI's Dick Mahoney, at the request of the Employment Service, helped set up the Job Bank for the Frankfort area. It is expected to be operational early next month.

OAKLAND.....Local 29, Office and Professional Employees, is graduating its first WIN trainee after a 12-week training program to upgrade her secretarial skills. Local 29 has agreed to place the trainee with an organized company in the area. WIN is providing the funds.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's Ben Stahl reports that the Building Trades Council here has signed a contract with the Philadelphia Housing Authority to train one hundred residents of three housing projects, aged 18-21, for jobs as maintenance aides. The Council will provide teachers for the 4-6 week classroom training in carpentry, plumbing, electricity, plastering and landscaping. All trainees will become union members after 30 days.

NEW YORK CITY.....HRDI is helping win support for a program to find meaningful employment for rehabilitated narcotics addicts. Two Retail Clerks' locals -- 888 and 1500 -- have already agreed to find jobs with companies where they are the bargaining agent.

RALEIGH.....HRDI's L.G. Holleman reports approval of an on-the-job training program at Cross Poultry Company through the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council. Forty trainees start work early in January. Local 525 of the Meatcutters union is the bargaining agent.

NEW YORK CITY.....HRDI's Henry Kaltun and Local 1199 of the Drug and Hospital Workers have developed a program for hiring 40 disadvantaged workers as nurses' aides, orderlies, dietary aides and housekeeping aides at Long Island Jewish Hospital. Twenty-two weeks of on-the-job training is provided, after which the trainees will receive $118 a week. The program begins this month.

CANTON.....At the request of the NAB office here, HRDI's Akron representative, Charles Anderson, has been working with their staff on the whole question of labor and community involvement in the program.

SAN DIEGO.... HRDI's Fred Martinez has been appointed to the Board of Directors of the Urban Coalition as representative of the Economic Opportunity Commission here.

OAKLAND.....HRDI's Bill Burks reports that three Building Trades unions are helping train 40 minority youth working on low-income housing rehabilitation in the inner city. Local 36 of the Carpenters, Local 29 of the Painters and Local 216 of the Sheet Metal Workers are providing instructors for the 42-week program funded by MDTA. Both the on-site and classroom training are provided under the sponsorship of the local Building Trades Council.

WILMINGTON,N.C....."HRDI and New Manpower Legislation" was the subject of a talk here by HRDI Director Robert McGlotten at the Southern Advanced Labor School here. Fifty-five trade unionists from 13 states attended.

MADISON, WISC.....HRDI's Dick Sawicki has arranged for business agents from the Madison Building Trades Council to talk to trainees at the Apprenticeship Center sponsored by the Great Lakes Inter-Tribal Council. The trainees study eight weeks in classes of 15 and are apprenticed when the program is completed.

CAMDEN, N.J.....A seven-county NAB operation has been set up here and HRDI's Ben Stahl will be working closely with it.

MILWAUKEE.....HRDI's Jim Clay has been working with trainees at the Opportunities Industrialization Center to provide them with some help and counselling during their training period.

STORRS, CONN.....HRDI's Don Wrenn represented AFL-CIO at a seminar of the University of Connecticut's Vocational Education Fellows. Wrenn spoke to them on the role of vocational education in existing manpower training programs.

ALBUQUERQUE.....HRDI Director McGlotten spoke on the need for a closer association between vocational education and apprenticeship at the Rocky Mountain States Apprenticeship Conference.

PHOENIX.....A labor-sponsored conference here on problems of aging was attended by 43 retired workers from five international unions. HRDI's Gene Carter was one of the speakers and acted as official recorder.

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

JANUARY 1971 VOL. I, NO. IV

HRDI

Olga Corey
Editor

AFL-CIO OPENS DRIVE TO HELP VIETNAM VETERANS FIND JOBS

AFL-CIO President George Meany has called upon organized labor to help find jobs for veterans returning from Vietnam.

In a letter to all AFL-CIO State and City Central Labor Councils, Meany stated the AFL-CIO's "moral commitment" to help find employment for the one million servicemen who will return to civilan life sometime this year.

Specifically, Meany urged support for the new AFL-CIO Veteran Assistance program which the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute is developing in cooperation with the U.S. Departments of Labor and Defense. HRDI's Charles Hollowell is in charge.

> "With the full cooperation of your Council in this program," wrote Meany, "organized labor can begin to repay a portion of the debt we all owe the men who defended freedom in Vietnam."

The program will get underway next month at four military separation centers, in the San Francisco Bay area. William H. Burks, former HRDI Area Manpower Representative in Oakland, is in charge there.

Details of the new program were spelled out in a letter to the Councils from HRDI President Julius Rothman and Executive Director Robert McGlotten. Here's how it will work --

> HRDI will have a staff person at each separation center. His first job will be twofold -- to brief each returning veteran about jobs and job opportunities in his home town and to get some idea of the serviceman's skills and job preference.
>
> He will also make sure the veteran has the name and telephone number of the HRDI staff representative in the city closest to where the veteran lives.
>
> Or, if there is no HRDI office in the area, the serviceman will be given the phone number of the closest AFL-CIO Central Labor Council office.

The HRDI man at the base will then forward all the pertinent data about each serviceman to the HRDI (or AFL-CIO Council) office which the veteran will be contacting. The job of the local HRDI (or AFL-CIO Council) staff person is to help the veteran, in every way possible, to find a suitable job -- or a meaningful job training program.

HRDI's letter points out the urgency of the problem --

> Many of the returning servicemen will be seeking their first full-time job
>
> Most of them are in the 20-24 age group, which is hard hit by rising unemployment.
>
> Nearly 20% have less than a high school education.
>
> Approximately 10% are members of minority groups.
>
> And many will be returning to urban centers where unemployment has been the worst.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE WORSE THAN EVER -- AND STILL RISING

Unemployment continues to rise and is at its highest peak in nine years.

For the first time since 1964, there are more than a million men and women who have been without a paycheck for 15 weeks -- or longer.

Overall unemployment is up 3.5% over a year ago with almost every major category of industry affected. In the construction industry, joblessness has hit 11% as compared to 6% a year ago.

In the white collar field -- particularly among technical and professional workers -- unemployment is at its highest since 1958.

During 1970, unemployment hit hardest in the already-poor neighborhoods of our cities --

> 7.6% of the residents in these poverty areas were without work -- as compared to 5.5% last year.
>
> 24% of the teenage residents of these areas were jobless -- as compared to 19.9% a year ago.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics --

> "The general decline in economic activity in 1970 reversed the improvement that has been made by poverty area residents between 1967 and 1969."

AFL-CIO ACCELERATES DRIVE TO FIND JOBS FOR THE DISADVANTAGED

In spite of the bleak unemployment picture, organized labor is continuing its drive to help find jobs for the disadvantaged.

In three cities -- Milwaukee, St. Louis and Washington, D.C. -- HRDI has opened up Job Development and Placement offices in cooperation with the Central Labor Councils.

> In Syracuse, the Job Development and Placement Program -- in its first month -- was able to place 21 applicants. Cooperating unions were Local 116 of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers, Local 12 of the Carpenters, Local 545 of the Operating Engineers, Local 105 of the Roofers and Local 320 of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

Seven additional cities are expected to set up Job Development and Placement Programs shortly. HRDI's James Boyle is in charge.

HRDI APPRENTICESHIP OUTREACH REPORTS 100% RETENTION RATE

HRDI's Apprenticeship Opportunity Program in Memphis is not having much of a drop out problem!

So far, 25 minority youth have been indentured as apprentices -- and all 25 are still on the job.

Another 17 applicants have been placed in well-paying jobs, according to HRDI Area Manpower Representative Bill Ross.

The Program is also making a special effort to help returning servicemen and is currently helping 42 young Vietnam veterans find jobs or job training.

NORTH CAROLINA.....HRDI's L.G. Holleman has been named Co-Chairman of the Manpower Committee of North Carolina Community Action Corporation. The corporation was set up to analyze the manpower needs of the State and make recommendations for the future.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI's Charles Bradford spoke to the Missouri delegation of the House of Representatives on what the St. Louis community -- labor in particular -- is doing to meet the problems of unemployment. Bradford serves as Manpower Chairman of the Mayor's planning group "Challenge of the '70's," which is analyzing the needs of the total community.

PHOENIX.....HRDI's Gene Carter reports success in refunding the Ironworkers Indian Reservation Apprenticeship program. Local 75 is the union involved.

NEW YORK.....HRDI's John Burnell reports approval of a NAB-JOBS consortium to provide 600 entry-level jobs for the disadvantaged. Local 153 of the Office and Professional Workers, Local 3 of the Newspaper Guild, the National Maritime Union and Locals 1 and 2 of the Utility Workers are among the unions involved. Fifty-two companies are participating.

TOLEDO.....HRDI's John Rober has been elected to the Occupational Work Experience Advisory Committee of the Toledo Board of Education.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's Ben Stahl reports that 36 companies will hire 179 disadvantaged workers under an MA-6 contract with the Philadelphia Manpower Consortium. Unions involved were Local 724 of the Machinists, Local 375 of Pulp and Sulphite Workers, Local 10 of the Laundry Workers, Local 333 of the Papermakers, Local 196 of the Meatcutters, Local 415 of the Retail Clerks, Local 155 of the United Electrical Workers, the Textile Workers Joint Board and Locals 463, 596 and 837 of the Teamsters.

NEW ORLEANS.....HRDI's Ernest Colbert represented labor on a 30-minute TV show called "Opportunities Line." Purpose of the program is to tell the community what the local job situation is. Colbert emphasized AFL-CIO's involvement in placing returning servicemen.

PHOENIX.....HRDI's Gene Carter will represent labor on the Governor's Task Force which hopes to provide jobs for 50,000 returning servicemen during the next 12-18 months.

HOUSTON.....HRDI's Don Bridges reports 16 enrollees in a Skill Center program to train clerks and checkers for major grocery chains. Classes run up to eight weeks, depending upon individual progress. Bridges helped develop the program and Local 455 of the Retail Clerks is providing the instructor. Funds are provided under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton is helping the Operating Engineers expand their contacts in the community to recruit more trainees for their Apprenticeship program.

ST. LOUIS.....James Adams, President of Local 396 of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Ironworkers, is HRDI's new staff member here. Adams is a delegate to the Greater St. Louis Labor Council, the St. Louis Building Trades Council and the Missouri State Labor Council. He succeeds Charles Bradford, HRDI Regional Director for Illinois, Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee and Wisconsin.

DETROIT....."Unions' Adaptation to Changes in the Labor Force" was the subject of HRDI Director Robert McGlotten's talk to 150 members of the Industrial Relations Research Association. McGlotten spoke at IRRA's 23rd annual meeting here.

ERIE, PA.....HRDI's Minona Clinton reports funding of a consortium sponsored by the Urban Coalition here to hire 40 disadvantaged workers. Union support came from Local 1637 of the Electrical Workers, Local 38 of the Molders and Local 12850 of District 50.

PORTLAND.....HRDI's Lyle Eller has arranged a tour of the Job Corps Residential Manpower Center here for 15 key area labor leaders. They will study the type of vocational training being offered and explore areas of increased cooperation between the local labor movement and the Job Corps.

FORT WORTH.....New HRDI rep here is Michael McMillan, Vice-President of Local 263 of the Ironworkers and a delegate to the Tarrant County Central Labor Council. A graduate of the Harvard University Trade Union program, McMillan also attended the Texas AFL-CIO Law Institute and Texas AFL-CIO Advanced Leadership Conference. McMillan will service both Dallas and Fort Worth and will work closely with Regional Director Mike Arnold.

NEW YORK.....Thirty inner-city students have just completed a Work-Study program sponsored by IUE Local 408 in cooperation with the optical industry and the New York City Board of Education. Retention rate was 100% and HRDI's John Burnell has promised HRDI help in setting up similar programs in the industry.

TOLEDO.....HRDI's John Rober was the main speaker at a union members' seminar on manpower programs co-sponsored by HRDI and Community Services. Rober organized the seminar which included speakers on the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB), On-the-Job Training (OJT) and programs for returning servicemen.

TAMPA.....HRDI's Hal Reddick has put together a program for hiring disadvantaged workers and training them as cable splicers and telephone installers. Local 108 of the Electrical Workers is sponoring the program with funds provided by the Hillsborough County Board of Public Education. Six to nine months training will be provided for 40 trainees at a time with a goal of training a mininum of 200 workers. IBEW members will be used as instructors and the Local 108 hall will be the training facility.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton has been elected chairman of the Apprenticeship Information Center.

ST. LOUIS.....A key feature of the AFL-CIO education conference here was a closed circuit TV interview with four brand new AFL-CIO members -- aged 20 to 29 -- on their views of the labor movement. HRDI's Charles Bradford and Jim Adams helped find the four young trade unionists, who were members of the Retail Clerks, the Sheet Metal Workers, the Carpenters Joint Council and the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers.

Other HRDI staff participating in the conference were Mike Arnold, Eddie Campbell, Minona Clinton, Olga Corey and Bill Ross. Conference theme was "Reaching the Union Member."

NEWARK.....HRDI's Earl Williams is working closely with District 10 of the Painters' union on recruiting for their pre-apprenticeship training program.

HAZELTON, PA.....HRDI's Ben Stahl reports funding of a JOBS '70 contract for 25 entry level jobs and four upgrading slots. Local involved is United Textile Workers 1171-A.

NEW ORLEANS.....HRDI's Ernest Colbert has been appointed to the Mayor's Youth Opportunity Council to begin preparation for the 1971 summer program.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....A three-day seminar on Manpower Problems at the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center featured a number of HRDI staff members. Executive Director Robert McGlotten spoke on "Opening Employment Opportunities for Minority Groups in the Construction Industry," Regional Director John Burnell and McGlotten jointly conducted a session on HRDI, and Regional Director Charles Bradford discussed Upgrading programs in the panel on "How Programs Operate." HRDI co-sponsored the seminar.

The seminar was an in-depth examination of present programs and new policies that can be expected in the future. HRDI Area Manpower representatives Don Bridges, Jim Clay and Joe Jones participated, as did the HRDI headquarters staff.

AKRON.....HRDI's Charles Anderson has been named to the Training Needs Committee of the MDTA Advisory Committee.

CHICAGO.....A veteran Steelworker has been named to the HRDI staff here. He is Harry Gough, active member and Civil Rights Chairman of USA Local 1438.

Employers push hard against drug abusers

Employees who use drugs are more likely to be fired than are those suffering from alcholism and emotional ilness, the Bureau of National Affairs reports.

Most companies have yet to develop policies and means for dealing with industry's newest headache—drug abuse—and in their absence management has adopted a stern attitude, the BNA study showed.

Typically, the report said, the drug user faces termination upon detection, rather than any of the counseling or assistance commonly provided by long-established and fairly liberal policies for handling alcoholics and emotionally disturbed employees.

BNA and the American Society for Personnel Administration surveyed 200 executives in large and small businesses. The findings are contained in a report entitled "The Employee with Problems."

The hard-nosed attitude toward drug addicts is due in part to a fear that the drug user will "contaminate" other employees before any rehabilitative steps can be taken. Employers reported that the number of drug users in industry has increased since a similar survey of employee problems was conducted two years ago.

The study also found that alcoholism is the more common of the three problems. But most employers said they do not feel that alcoholism and emotional illness are any more common now than two years ago.

Checks with prior employers and pre-employment physicals are the most effective means of detecting such problems among new job applicants. Such detection methods as application blank inquiries on arrest records and medical history are not reliable, employer representatives report.

Job performance and absenteeism are the key factors in detecting drug abuse, alcoholism or emotional illness among employees already working for a company. Company executives polled in the survey said that practically all of the detection methods used by their firms are dependent on observations made by an employee's immediate supervisor.

Although the supervisor is the mainstay of the early warning system on the existence of an employee's problem, most companies do not permit the supervisor to deal with the employee's problems alone, the study found.

Professional assistance is most frequently given in dealing with drinking problems. Help in dealing with emotional problems is provided less frequently, and assistance in the area of drug abuse is relatively uncommon.

IAM fighting strike insurance for USA's local service airlines

The IAM will oppose the airlines' recent admission of six local service carriers to their Mutual Aid Agreement, a strike insurance plan.

John Peterpaul, IAM airline coordinator, said admission of the local service airlines will be opposed at a Civil Aeronautics Board hearing Feb. 2 in Washington, D.C.

The IAM will cite their admission as another reason for CAB rejection of the entire plan, Peterpaul said. The IAM and other major ai rtransport unions oppose the pact on grounds that 12 years of experience show that it prolongs rather than prevents strikes.

The local service airlines admitted are Mohawk, Frontier, North Central, Piedmont, Ozark and Hughes Air West. Mohawk has been shut down since early November by a Pilots strike, idling 500 IAM mechanics and other ground service employees. They are now in negotiations for a new contract.

Under the Mutual Aid plan Mohawk can start drawing benefits equal to 35 per cent of its normal shutdown operating costs retroactive to Jan. 1.

Last July Mohawk and North Central asked the CAB to disapprove the agreement because local service airlines weren't included. CAB would not disapprove on this ground and urged the trunk and local service airlines to get together.

The Wall Street Journal recently reported that during the five-month Northwest Airlines strike by the Airline Clerks, Northwest received amounts estimated at upwards from $20,000,000 from other airlines through the pact. Earlier in 1970, National Airlines drew $25,000,000 during a four-month strike of Air Line Employees Association.

During the Northwest strike, which idled nearly 4,000 IAM members, U.S. Reps. Donald Fraser and Joseph Karth of Minnesota and seven other House members introduced bills to outlaw the Mutual Aid agreement.

In addition to the local service airlines, carriers that have been in the pact for some time include Northwest, National, United, Eastern, Braniff, Trans World, American and Pan American.

Chamberlain

Lower employee payments to rail pension plan sought

Reducing employee contributions to railroad retirement and increasing employee benefits from the unemployment and sickness plan are top goals of the Railway Labor Executives' Association in 1971, Charles Chamberlain, chairman, reports.

These and other proposals were made at a recent RLEA meeting in Washington, D.C. RLEA unites the IAM and 13 other rail labor unions.

Under the RLEA proposal, the present 50/50 employee-employer contribution to the Rail-Road Retirement Fund would be changed to a 75 per cent employer, 25 per cent employee ratio. An increase in the employer-paid taxes to the Railroad Unemployment and Sickness Insurance plan would bring about an increase in benefits to employees, under the RLEA plan.

RLEA also recommended establishment of an emergency railroad commission to deal with rail industry problems on a continuing rather than stop-gap basis. The commission could consider railroad nationalization in whole or in part, develop new sources of capital for railroads and help bring about much-needed reform of the Railway Labor Act.

RLEA went on record favoring the abolition of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The organization said it would wholeheartedly support adequate funding for the new Railpax corporation and "for the new railroad safety program, the high-speed ground transportation program and all other Federal programs aimed at improved transportation by rail."

Reminder

When is your next union meeting? Better plan to be there.

Machinist Photo

Five IAM members on manpower staff

Five members of the IAM are now working full time on the field staff of the Human Resources Development Institute, the manpower training arm of the AFL-CIO. Charles Hollowell, the national field director, reports that the IAM now has the largest representation on his staff of any international union. Shown here, as they greet Robert M. McGlotten, right, the executive director of the Institute, are Hollowell, Henry Kaltun, Eugene Carter, Frank Gallegos and Charles Bradford.

Hollowell is a member of IAM Local 834, Wichita, Kan. Bradford, the Midwest regional director, is president of IAM Local 41, St. Louis, Mo. Kaltun, recently retired directing representative for IAM District 15, is the manpower representative for the New York City area. Gallegos, a member of IAM Local 606, Denver, Colo., is also a manpower representative as is Carter, who belongs to IAM Local 715, Phoenix, Ariz.

The Institute, which is three years old, is presently working at job upgrading of the under educated and under skilled already on the job. It is also establishing a new program to help locate job training opportunities for returning service men from Vietnam.

Veteran wins $430 from G.E.

Terry Dubay, left, member of IAM Local 1256, Portland, Me., shows Grand Lodge Rep. Roger Hare a check for $430 Dubay won from General Electric, South Portland.

Hare reports that Dubay worked at G.E. before becoming a member of the IAM. While at G.E., Dubay was drafted into the Armed Forces. He served a tour of duty in Vietnam. When Dubay returned, G.E. refused to re-hire him at his old job rate.

Dubay took a job with the Portland Co. as an assembler and became a member of Local 1256. He told Hare and local members of his treatment by G.E. Hare made several inquiries and appealed through the Veterans Administration on Dubay's behalf. G.E. paid the $430 as compensation.

Pennsylvania Machinists Council schedules second editors-public relations conference

The Pennsylvania State Council of Machinists has announced that it will conduct another session for local and district editors' and public relations committeemen in conjunction with its 25th annual convention June 10-13, 1971. Participants in the Council's first editors' conference in 1970 rated it a success.

William Cockerill, public relations director for the Council, reports that the second editors' conference will be held June 9, at 3:30 p.m. at the Yorktowne Hotel, York, Pa. A financial officers' meeting will be held at the same time and date. Members will receive more details soon.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS AND AEROSPACE WORKERS

1971

MACHINISTS LEA

"Learning union skills for progress" is the theme of the 20 Machinists' Leadership Schools scheduled at colleges and universities across the United States and Canada in 1971. The schools offer training for local IAM leaders to help them cope with the varied and complex problems facing union members.

John Brumm, IAM education director, reports that 13 of the schools will be for first-year students. These schools are known as Leadership Schools I. The course of study focuses on teaching the fundamentals of trade unionism and the basic laws, policies and operations of the IAM.

Second year students—those who have attended leadership schools in other years—will attend Leadership School II. Instructions at these schools will build on the first-year studies and probe into more complex aspects of union policies and programs.

Leadership Schools are sponsored by the IAM Vice President in each territory for local leaders in that territory. They will be held at leading universities in the United States and Canada (see map below). The programs are planned and conducted by the IAM Education Department and territorial Education Representatives in cooperation with the universities.

Again this year, there will be two schools for French-speaking members, one Leadership I, and one Leadership II.

Purpose

Machinists' Leadership Schools offer planned courses of classroom instruction on workers' problems and union techniques. They help local union leaders develop the skills required to improve union operations and activities.

Officers, stewards and committeemen study and discuss problems facing unions today to help prepare for tomorrow's programs. Special attention will be given to methods of arousing members' in activities.

Leadership School I (First year)

The 13 Leadership I schools plar consists of four classes: Trade uni legislative issues; collective bargai ministration, and improving con union. In addition, the one week an opportunity to participate in with local lodge activities.

Leadership I schools are open to stewards, committeemen and inte have not attended a previous M School.

Leadership School II (Second yea

The seven Leadership II schools classes and a workshop which expa in Leadership I training. The classe gaining, government and politics, a community. Workshops will be techniques of communication whic in every day local operations. In provides an opportunity for stud current developments in the IAM ment generally.

Leadership II schools are open have attended a former Basic or and have not attended a former ship II school.

Who should attend

Lodges should select active men from schools to put their knowle union. Both Machinists' Leadership designed particularly for officers, members of local union education tive, MNPL and publicity committe terest in local union

ned for this year will onism and the IAM;
ning and union ad-
mmunications in the schedule will provide workshops associated local union officers, rested members who achinists' Leadership

r)

will consist of three nd on subjects started
s are: Collective bar-
nd the union and the devoted to exploring the student can use
ddition, the program
y and discussion of
and the labor move-

nly to members who Leadership I school
Advanced or Leader-

bers who will return
dge to work for the
I and II schools are committeemen and
, negotiating, legislaes.

Instruction

Teachers at each school include IAM staff members, university faculty members, representatives from the AFL-CIO and other organizations involved in labor education. Talks, films and discussions are included in the one-week program.

Cost

The cost of tuition, food and lodging is $90. Locals sending students should also consider lost time, travel cost and miscellaneous expenses.

Activities

Each Machinists' Leadership School opens on Sunday afternoon and continues through Friday afternoon. The schools are a one-week residential, serious study program. All participants should be made aware that the week will involve a concentrated period of class study. Certificates will be awarded to those who participate in every phase of the program.

Applications

More detailed information will be sent to all locals and districts. Officers are requested to read this information carefully before submitting applications. This precaution can reduce errors.

Locals are urged to send in applications as soon as possible. There is a limit on the number of applicants that can be accepted at each school. The IAM Education Department expects that most schools will be filled by April 15. Applications will be accepted in order of their receipt depending on space available at the particular university.

Applications and additional copies of this announcement for posting on bulletin boards are available. Write IAM Education Department, 912 Machinists Building, Washington, D.C. 20036.

DERSHIP SCHOOLS

Leadership Schools I

(First year)

May 16-21
Maison Montmorency
Courville, Que.
(French)
(Canadian territory)

May 30-June 4
Queen's University
Kingston, Ont.
(Canadian territory)

June 6-11
West Virginia University
Morgantown, W. Va.
(Great Lakes territory)

June 13-18
University of the South
Sewanee, Tenn.
(Great Lakes and Southern territories)

June 20-25
University of Oklahoma
Norman, Okla.
(Southern territory)

July 18-23
University of Illinois
Urbana, Ill.
(Midwest territory)

July 25-30
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wis.
(Midwest territory)

Aug. 1-6
Rutgers University
New Brunswick, N.J.
(Northeast territory)

Aug. 8-13
University of Oregon
Eugene, Ore.
(Northwest territory)

Aug. 15-20
University of Calif. at Berkeley
Berkeley, Calif.
(Southwest territory)

Ohio State University
Columbus, Ohio
(Great Lakes territory)

Aug. 29-Sept. 3
Wendigo Conference Center
Lac du Bonnet, Man.
(Canadian territory)

Sept. 12-17
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wis.
(Midwest territory)

Leadership Schools II

(Second year)

May 16-21
Indiana University
Bloomington, Ind.
(Great Lakes territory)

June 6-11
Maison Montmorency
Courville, Que.
(French)
(Canadian territory)

June 27-July 2
University of Missouri
Columbia, Mo.
(Midwest territory)

July 4-9
Carleton University
Ottawa, Ont.
(Canadian territory)

July 11-16
University of Connecticut
Storrs, Conn.
(Northeast territory)

July 25-30
UCLA, Arrowhead
Lake Arrowhead, Calif.
(Southwest territory)

Aug. 1-6
University of Illinois
Urbana, Ill.
(Midwest territory)

Attention Air Transport Lodges

In two of the Leadership II (Second year) schools, there will be a section of the collective bargaining class especially for members of Air Transport lodges. These are the schools at the University of Indiana, May 16-21, and the University of Illinois, Aug. 1-6. Air Transport lodges are encouraged to send participants to either of these two Leadership II schools.

A union grows in Central Texas

Full house—The hall was filled for the first meeting of IAM Local 2427, Temple, Tex. C. L. Gresham, representative of District 776, Fort Worth, addresses the membership.

In Temple, Tex., midway between Waco and Austin, big things are happening. A trade union is growing.

IAM Vice President George Watkins of Dallas, reports that the first IAM contract for 468 employees of the American Desk Manufacturing Co., is now being negotiated. That contract will also be the first industrial union agreement in this town of 31,000 people.

Watkins explains that the happening at Temple is part of the emergence of the New South. Trade union growth is catching up with the industrialization. As a result, wages and working conditions are beginning to improve despite the handicaps of so-called "right-to-work" laws.

When the IAM's new Southern territory was reorganized two years ago, Vice President Watkins gave organizing the number one priority. Since then it has become the territory's number one success story.

The photos on this page show the employees of American Desk Co., at their first meetings as members of IAM Local 2427. The basic work they did in these photos and the work they are doing now at the bargaining tables are helping a union grow in central Texas.

Leadership—Local, district and international representatives brief the new members. Head table, l to r, Walter Jones, president of Local 2427; Grand Lodge Rep. Nep Peralta; Art Madrid, representative for District 177, San Antonio; V. T. Taylor, representative for District 776, Fort Worth; C. L. Gresham; Irene Sadler, local trustee; Tom Saffold, recording secretary; Pedro Naranjo, local vice president; and J. E. Floyd, District 776.

Machinist Photos

Initiation—Here are some of the 200 employees of American Desk taking their IAM obligations. They were initiated by Vernon McKimmey, administrative assistant to Vice President George Watkins of Dallas.

Greetings—McKimmey brings greetings from Vice President Watkins as he addresses a membership meeting of Local 2427.

Officers—The first officers elected by members of IAM Local 2427 are, front row, l to r, Lawrence Carter, secretary-treasurer; F. Arguelles, shop committee; Tony Yepez and Irene Sadler, trustees. Back row, l to r, Robert Wilkerson, trustee; J. T. Bone, sentinel conductor; Tom Saffold, recording secretary; Pedro Naranjo, vice president; and Walter Jones, president.

Negotiators—Members of the IAM negotiating committee for the first contract at American Desk are, l to r, Walter Jones, Pedro Naranjo, Elmo Winkler and Johnny Cruz.

HRDI

WEEK OF FEBRUARY 1, 1971

AFL-CIO UNIT AWARDED $2.2 MILLION CONTRACT
TO AID MANPOWER PROGRAMS

WASHINGTON -- The AFL-CIO has been awarded a new contract by the Labor Department to continue its assistance in Federal manpower programs for another year, Assistant Secretary of Labor Malcolm R. Lovell, Jr., recently announced.

The contract between the Manpower Administration and the labor organization's Human Resources Development Institute (HRDI) is for $2,180,280 to help labor and management to recruit, train, employ, and upgrade the skills of the unemployed and underemployed.

Under the terms of the contract which will run through December 1971, HRDI, operating in 45 major labor areas, will:

-- Work with the National Alliance of Businessmen and the Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program to promote approximately 800 projects with employers and unions;

-- Promote the "buddy system" of training with 150 employers, mostly in the JOBS program, matching experienced workers with trainees;

-- Upgrade 1,500 individuals, working with employers, both inside and outside the JOBS program;

-- Promote Neighborhood Youth Corps summer programs with employers and unions;

-- Assist in post-training placement of Job Corps men and women and in locating qualified instructors for Job Corps installations;

-- Develop jobs and placements among employers in five selected cities, working with local labor councils and unions, with a target of 20 persons a month for a total of 1,200 placements. The cities are tentatively Dayton, Atlanta, Dallas. Milwaukee, and Pittsburgh;

(MORE)

-- Begin a pilot recruitment program in the San Francisco Bay area for returning servicemen who seek training in the construction trades;

-- Assist in all apprenticeship entry preparation programs for minority youths wherever HRDI operates in the same locality;

-- Help to place about 2,000 minority group construction workers in 15 cities through the journeyman training programs for upgrading skills; and

-- Work with "hometown" minority-group hiring plans in the construction industry by providing technical assistance to building trades councils developing such plans.

HRDI is a nonprofit corporation set up by the AFL-CIO to mobilize the resources of the labor movement in manpower programs. Its chairman is Federation President George Meany. Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO's Department of Urban Affairs, is president.

Thirty international labor unions are represented by HRDI, founded in 1968 with the aid of a Labor Department grant.

Under its first contract with the Manpower Administration, HRDI set up staff and operated in 45 major labor areas, introduced the buddy system with more than 100 employers, promoted JOBS hiring and upgrading programs with more than 500 employers, and promoted the Neighborhood Youth Corps summer program among unions.

# #

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
501 PULLIAM STREET, S.W., ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30312 (404) 524-0222

WALTER C. RUCKER
Area Manpower Representative

Board of Trustees
GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board
I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
LANE KIRKLAND
JOHN H. LYONS
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER P. WHARTON

Officers
JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President
HAROLD H. JACK
Secretary-Treasurer
ROBERT M. MC GLOTTEN
Executive Director

February 4, 1971

Mr. Paul Anthony, Executive Director
SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 Forsuth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Anthony:

I thought you would be interested in reading the enclosed address, "Black Rage White Fear: The Full Employment Answer", by Bayard Rustin.

This booklet contains the text of Mr. Rustin's address to the - 1970 CONVENTION OF THE BRICKLAYERS, MASONS AND PLASTERERS INTERNATIONAL UNION.

I hope you find it interesting and helpful.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely and fraternally,

Walter C. Rucker

Walter C. Rucker
Area Manpower Representative

WRC/db
opeiu #2
AFL-CIO

L Rollader

biographical sketch

MAR 1 0 1971

ROBERT M. MCGLOTTEN

Executive Director, AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute

Robert M. McGlotten was appointed Executive Director of the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute on June 1, 1970. At the time, he was serving as a staff representative for the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department.

In his new post, McGlotten directs a field staff of AFL-CIO manpower specialists in forty cities and six states: their job is to increase union involvement, at the community level, in manpower programs for the hard-to-employ.

A native of Philadelphia, McGlotten is a member and former staff representative of the Transport Workers Union. His 12 years in the labor movement have also included assignments with the American Federation of Teachers, the United Papermakers and Paperworkers, and the United Steelworkers of America.

During his three years with the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department, McGlotten negotiated Apprenticeship Outreach contracts with the Labor Department which brought 6,500 minority workers into apprenticeship programs of the building and construction trades unions, increasing minority representation from 2% to 11%.

McGlotten also represented the national AFL-CIO at the National Alliance of Businessmen, serving as Vice-President for Labor Relations.

Before coming to the national AFL-CIO, McGlotten served as National Labor Relations Specialist for the Opportunities Industrialization Center's 26-city job training program for the disadvantaged.

McGlotten attended the University of Pennsylvania and was graduated from St. Joseph's College for Industrial and Labor Management. He served in the U.S. Army.

A Vice-President of the Negro Trade Union Labor Council since 1962, McGlotten is an advisor to the Workers Defense League and is a member of the Urban League and the NAACP. He belongs to the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials and the Industrial Relations Research Association.

-30-

September 1970

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

MARCH 1971 VOL. I, NO. VI

Olga Corey
Editor

HRDI

AFL-CIO LEADERS EXPLORE IMPACT OF NEW MANPOWER POLICIES

New directions in the operation of manpower programs was the conference theme that brought together HRDI staff and key union leaders from 17 states.

At HRDI-sponsored meetings in Atlanta, Chicago and Philadelphia, officials of 14 State Labor Federations and 19 Central Labor Councils aired their concerns about recent developments in manpower training and discussed problems of mutual concern with Regional Manpower Administrators of the Department of Labor.

Specifically, labor wanted to know what effect the trend towards greater decentralization of manpower programs would have.

The need for greater union participation in manpower programs at the local level was expressed earlier this year in HRDI President Rothman's report to the AFL-CIO Executive Council, which said --

> "The Labor Department's Manpower Administration has been pressing for decentralization and de-categorization of manpower programs in anticipation of future legislation.
>
> With the expected enactment of public service employment legislation, and with possible changes in the welfare structure relating to manpower training, the push to use state and local governments as the key agents in manpower programming and administration will go on.
>
> This presents a challenge to the HRDI, that we cannot, and do not wish to evade."

HRDI called the meetings to provide a forum for the labor movement to indicate its frustrations -- as well as its goals -- in helping to find meaningful jobs for the unemployed and the underemployed. Additional meetings will be held in San Francisco and Dallas in April.

At each meeting, HRDI Executive Director Robert McGlotten outlined the new directions HRDI is taking in its role as manpower arm of the AFL-CIO.

> Assistant Director Al Love reported on HRDI's stepped-up technical assistance to International Unions in developing training programs.
>
> National Field Director Charles Hollowell described HRDI's pilot Veterans' Assistance Program for helping returning servicemen find good jobs or training opportunities in their home towns.
>
> And Jim Boyle, Director of Job Development and Placement, detailed the progress being made in HRDI's 11-city program for using union channels to find jobs for the disadvantaged.

State Federation officers who attended the meetings were:

A.G. Trammel, Secretary-Treasurer, Alabama Labor Council, AFL-CIO
Harold Bockman, President, Delaware State Labor Council, AFL-CIO
Thomas Schrank, President, Delaware State Building Trades Council, AFL-CIO
H.H. Mabry, Secretary, Georgia State AFL-CIO
John Norris, Staff Representative, Indiana State AFL-CIO
E.J. Bourg, Secretary-Treasurer, Louisiana AFL-CIO
August Scholle, President, Michigan State AFL-CIO
Claude Ramsay, President, Mississippi AFL-CIO
Wilbur Hobby, President, North Carolina AFL-CIO
Pat Greene, Director of Community Services, Pennsylvania AFL-CIO (for President Boyer)
Lee Case, Secretary-Treasurer, Tennessee State Labor Council, AFL-CIO
Julian Carper, President, Virginia State AFL-CIO
Miles Stanley, President, West Virginia Labor Federation, AFL-CIO
John W. Schmitt, President, Wisconsin State AFL-CIO

Central Labor Council officers at the three meetings were:

Thermon Coggins, President, Birmingham Labor Council, AFL-CIO

J.C. Turner, President, Greater Washington Central Labor Council

B.C. Parker, President, Hillsborough County Central Labor Council (Tampa)
Ed Stephenson, President, Dade County Federation of Labor(Miami)

John Wright, President, Atlanta Labor Council

Al Towers, Assistant to the President, Chicago Federation of Labor and Industrial Union Council

Bernard Hanley, President, Central Labor Council of Marion County (Indianapolis)

Herb Hale, Secretary, Greater Louisville Central Labor Council

A.P. Stoddard, President, Greater New Orleans AFL-CIO Council

Thomas Turner, President, Metropolitan Detroit AFL-CIO

J.E. Jervis, President, Asheville Central Labor Union, AFL-CIO

James Culver, Secretary, Trumbull County AFL-CIO Council (Warren, Ohio)
Lewis Eiben, Assistant to the President, Cleveland AFL-CIO
Robert Kidney, President, Akron Labor Council, AFL-CIO
William P. Sheehan, Executive Secretary-Treasurer, Cincinnati AFL-CIO Labor Council
Dale Stormer, President, Toledo Area AFL-CIO Council
William E. Wycoff, President, Greater Canton AFL-CIO Council

Marvin Wallace, President, Norfolk Union Labor Council

Warner Schaefer, President, Milwaukee County Labor Council, AFL-CIO

Also in attendance were representatives of AFL-CIO Regional Offices -- James Freeman in Atlanta, Dan Healy in Chicago and Joe Garvin in Philadelphia.

Representing the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department were Director Don Slaiman, who spoke at the Philadelphia meeting, Southern Area Director Al Kehrer who attended the Atlanta meeting, and Staff Representative William Pollard who was in Chicago.

SEATTLE..... HRDI Executive Director Robert McGlotten met with delegates to the National Convocation of Opportunities Industrialization Centers here to discuss areas of cooperation between the HRDI and OIC.

BIRMINGHAM.....HRDI's Glen Cole helped develop a JOBS '70 contract for 22 jobs at Cosper Foundry, working with Local 256 of the Molders' Union.

PHILADELPHIA.....Jimmy Jones, Jr. has been named Director of the HRDI Job Development and Placement office here and Robert Fleuhr is the Job Developer. Jones is a member of Local 103 of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and formerly headed the Apprenticeship Outreach Program in Camden, New Jersey. Fleuhr was an organizer for Local 1199 C, the National Union of Hospital and Nursing Home Employees of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union.

MILWAUKEE....HRDI's Jim Clay worked closely with the just-funded JOBS '70 contract to place 52 disadvantaged workers at three companies. The unions involved are Local 5503 of the Communications Workers of America and Lodge 66 of the Machinists.

ST. LOUIS.....The HRDI Job Development and Placement office here is now in operation and Harry Van Romer of Carpenters Local 1596 is the Director. Ted Jackson of Local 788 of the Transport Workers is the Job Developer.

KANSAS CITY....HRDI's Charles Kent reports funding of two JOBS '70 contracts to provide a total of 25 jobs. Service Employees Local 96 is the bargaining agent at Pitts Commercial Janitorial Service, which is hiring 20 disadvantaged workers. The other five jobs are with Jack Witherspoon Tire Company, where the workers are represented by the Automotive Petroleum and Allied Industries Union Local 522.

NEW YORK CITY.....HRDI's Henry Kaltun worked with Service Employees Local 32B on a NAB JOBS program for hiring 100 disadvantaged workers. Cooperating companies are RCA, Alcoa and Rockefeller Center.

ARLINGTON, TEXAS.....HRDI is one of the sponsors at a Labor Leadership Program at the University of Texas Campus here. HRDI's Mike Arnold helped develop the program, which includes nine evening lectures on labor and community development.

MILWAUKEE.....The Job Development and Placement program is in full swing here. Heading it up is Nellie Wilson, formerly AFL-CIO's staff representative with the OEO Leadership Training Program for the state of Wisconsin, and a member of Directly Affiliated Local Union 19806. James Zancanaro, of Laborers Local 113, is the Job Developer.

INDIANAPOLIS.....Richard D. Cobb has been appointed Area Manpower Representative here, succeeding Bernard Hanley, who was elected President of the Marion County Central Labor Council. Cobb is the former President of Local 1262 of the Steelworkers and served as Vice President of the Marion County Central Labor Council for three years.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's new representative here is Charles J. Sims, former President of Local 165 of the IUE and an active member of the IUE Social Action-Civil Rights Committee. Sims succeeds Ben Stahl, now HRDI Regional Director for the Mid-Atlantic states.

NEW ORLEANS.....HRDI's Ernie Colbert reports funding of a JOBS '70 proposal for hiring 10 disadvantaged workers at the Boland Machine Manufacturing Company. Colbert helped put the program together and worked with the unions involved -- Boilermakers Local 37, Ship Carpenters Local 584, Marine and Shipyard Local 821, Plumbers and Steamfitters Local 60, Laborers Local 89, Painters Local 1244 and Cresent City Lodge 37 of the Machinists.

TAMPA.....HRDI's Hal Reddick spoke to a special meeting of Tampa area labor leaders to discuss HRDI's programs and goals. Thirty full-time officers and staff attended, including Florida State AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurer William Allen.

NEW YORK CITY.....HRDI's Henry Kaltun developed an upgrading program to train 42 assembler technicians at Kollsman Instrument Corporation. Machinists' Local 797 is the bargaining agent.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton helped develop an orientation program for high school counselors. Mrs. Clinton is chairman of the Pittsburgh Apprenticeship Information Center, which is sponsoring the course.

WEST VIRGINIA.....HRDI's Larry Barker reports funding of three JOBS '70 contracts which will provide 75 jobs for the hard-to-employ. Barker worked with United Mine Workers District 17 on developing the contract. The three companies involved are Associated Furniture, Big Mountain Coal and the Walker Machine Company.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's Ben Stahl has put together a second, expanded training program for cafeteria workers in the public school system here. Ten weeks of on-the-job training will be provided to 48 new employees and 16 employees already on the job will get ten weeks training to upgrade their skills. The first program upgraded 8 workers and provided training for 16 new workers.

SAN FRANCISCO.....HRDI's Bill Burks has met with more than 1,000 returning servicemen at Treasure Island Naval Base here to explain HRDI's program to help them find jobs -- or job training opportunities -- when they return to their home towns.

COLUMBUS.....The Director of the new HRDI Job Development and Placement office here is Verlin Sparks of Local 2342, United Steelworkers of America. Phyllis Tucker, Local 1632, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees is the Job Developer.

NORFOLK.....HRDI's Vince Moretti reports funding of a 17-company consortium which will provide jobs for 122 disadvantaged workers. The unions cooperating on this are Local 919 of the Auto Workers, Local 684 of the Boilermakers, Local 1163 of the Laborers and Local 147 of the Operating Engineers.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI President Julius Rothman has been appointed to the President's Jobs for Veterans Committee. Twelve AFL-CIO International Presidents were also appointed, including two HRDI Trustees -- United Steelworkers of America President I.W. Abel and the Operating Engineers' Hunter P. Wharton.

CHICAGO.....HRDI's Gene Gough spoke on HRDI and its goals at the monthly meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor and Industrial Union Council.

ATLANTA.....The Atlanta Labor Council voted to set up a Veterans' Manpower Committee to work with HRDI's Walter Rucker.

PHOENIX.....HRDI's Gene Carter helped develop the Urban League Labor Leadership seminar here which was attended by 35 trade unionists including members of all minority groups. HRDI Executive Director Robert McGlotten spoke to the group on "HRDI and the Labor Movement."

CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS.....HRDI's Paul Flynn met with the South Middlesex Labor Council here to discuss the Veterans' Assistance Program. A five-man Veterans' Committee was appointed by the Council.

ATLANTA.....HRDI President Julius Rothman spoke to the Textile Workers Union Executive Board meeting here on HRDI and manpower programs.

MEMPHIS.....HRDI's Bill Ross reports funding of two On-the-Job Training programs at Burgie Foods and Memphis Sash and Door. Local 282 of the Furniture Workers is the union involved.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI President Julius Rothman and Area Manpower Representative Arline Neal conducted sessions on "Labor and the Community" for the Leadership Training Institute of the American Federation of Government Employees 12th District.

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

APRIL, 1971 VOL. I, NO. VII

Olga Corey
Editor

HRDI

AFL-CIO HELPS OPEN UP JOBS AT MISSISSIPPI SHIPYARDS

Organized labor will play a major role in recruiting and training some 10,000 Mississippians for skilled jobs at Litton Industries' Pascagoula shipyards.

Recruiting has already begun for jobs as welders, shipfitters, pipefitters, electricians, machinists and sheet metal workers under the joint direction of the AFL-CIO Human Resources Development Institute and the A. Phillip Randolph Institute Education Fund/Workers Defense League.

Many of the jobs to be filled are at the new Ingalls shipyard which has a $2.6 billion contract with the Navy to build 30 nuclear destroyers during the next 10 to 12 years.

> A special Outreach program to find and train workers is being developed by WDL for the Mississippi State AFL-CIO and the Pascagoula Metal Trades Council. A recruiting desk, manned by HRDI and WDL has been set up in the local Mississippi State Employment Security office.
>
> HRDI will also recruit and train local union members already working at the yards to act as "buddies" to the new workers.
>
> And under a new agreement negotiated with the company by the AFL-CIO Civil Rights and Maritime Trades Departments, some 300 workers who were "locked in" to low paying, dead-end jobs, will be able to move into better jobs.

At the request of Mississippi AFL-CIO President Claude Ramsay, HRDI drafted a training proposal to meet the manpower needs at the new shipyard. A special Presidential Task Force reviewed the proposal and accepted all of HRDI's recommendations. Requests for funding have already been submitted.

HRDI Southern Director Pete Babin moved quickly to find staff and headquarters and the HRDI Pascagoula office is now in full swing.

1,500 BUDDIES EXTEND HELPING HAND TO NEW WORKERS

This month, HRDI begins its third year of training union members to be "buddies" to newly-hired disadvantaged workers.

The theory behind the buddy training program is a simple one --

> The first days on a new job are hard for everyone.
>
> But for a worker who has had no work experience, the situation is doubly difficult.
>
> Supervisors can help. Union stewards and officers can help. But what this new worker needs most is someone to act as a friend when things don't seem to be going too smoothly, either on or off the job.

And more than 1,500 union members across the country have been trained by HRDI to do just that.

> HRDI's first buddy training program was held in St. Louis on March 11 and 12, 1969. The 16 buddies were volunteers from five different local unions and were chosen by the unions in cooperation with the companies involved.

Since that time, HRDI has trained members of 248 different local unions in 48 cities. More than 400 companies have cooperated with the program. Of the 1,512 buddies, 577 were members of minority groups.

The buddy program could never succeed without strong support from the labor movement. Central Labor Councils in city after city have loaned their facilities, paid for meals, urged local unions to cooperate, spoken at training sessions, and even paid for lost time when the companies were unwilling to do so.

Fifty-seven different International Unions have cooperated with HRDI's buddy program.

> The largest on-going buddy program is the one at Western Electric near Kansas City, where 210 members of CWA Local 6360 have been trained as buddies over a 15-month period -- and another session is scheduled later this month. HRDI's Charles Kent is in charge of this program.
>
> The largest one-shot program was the one conducted by HRDI's Hal Reddick in Tampa, which trained 95 members of Local 433 of the Boilermakers Union, who work at the Tampa shipyards.
>
> Heading the list of the other cooperating unions is the United Steelworkers of America with 129 buddies for 22 locals in 12 cities.
>
> The Plumbers and Pipefitters and the Service Employees are next with 78 buddies from each International. Then comes the Retail Clerks with 62, the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers with 58, the Machinists with 56, the Amalgamated Meatcutters with 45 and the IBEW with 41.

The actual buddy training uses a variety of teaching techniques to help the buddy relate to the problems of new hires. Actual situations are presented to the group for their solution. For example --

> What do you do if the new worker wants to borrow five bucks from you the first day on the job?
>
> What do you say to the other workers in the department when a disadvantaged worker is given a break after showing up drunk -- for which other worker have been fired or disciplined?
>
> How do you handle the supervisor -- or union steward -- who's afraid you're infringing on his job?
>
> What do you do about the new worker who works hard, and produces, but can't seem to get to work on time?
>
> How do you help a Spanish speaking worker who feels left out because he isn't included in the lunchtime bull sessions?

After two days of training, the buddy is assigned to one -- or more -- of the new hires. Then the problems presented in the classroom become real ones.

> The National Alliance of Businessmen works closely with the HRDI on this program -- by letting the HRDI know which companies plan to hire the disadvantaged, by setting up briefing sessions on the buddy program for key management personnel, by supplying films, training materials and supplies, by helping make program arrangements -- and sometimes picking up the tab for the buddies' lunches during the two-day training sessions.

There are no figures to illustrate to what extent the buddies have improved retention -- nothing except the testimony of company after company that this is the case.

> A Houston company increased its retention to 85% after instituting the HRDI's buddy program -- as compared to an overall NAB retention figure of 54%.
>
> A Birmingham company with a retention figure of practically zero was able to keep 80% of its new hard-core workers after introducing the HRDI buddy program.

And in New Orleans, a buddy intervened with both the company and the union to reinstate a hard-core employee who had been fired for tardiness before the buddy had been given a chance to work with him. The man was rehired, assigned a buddy, and has had a perfect attendance record from then on.

The AFL-CIO is proud of the role it has played in helping thousands of disadvantged Americans adjust to the world of work and in increasing understanding among its union members for the difficulties and frustrations faced by the hard-core unemployed.

HRDI HOLDS REGIONAL MEETINGS IN DALLAS AND SAN FRANCISCO

HRDI staff met with city and state labor leaders from the West and the Southwest this month at meetings in Dallas and San Francisco. The purpose of the meetings was to discuss new trends in manpower programming and how these trends affect the labor movement. Similar conferences were held last month in Atlanta, Chicago and Philadelphia.

Attending the Dallas meeting, in addition to HRDI staff and U.S. Department of Labor Regional Manpower Administrator William T. Bailey, were:

J. Bill Becker, President of the Arkansas State AFL-CIO

John L. Campos, State Director, Operation SER

Ellis Barrera, also of Operation SER

Gene Freeland, Secretary-Treasurer, Dallas AFL-CIO Council

Don A. Horn, Secretary-Treasurer, Harris County AFL-CIO Council

Dave Keeler, Secretary-Treasurer, Dallas Building and Construction Trades Council

Donald Kirkham, President of the Oklahoma County AFL-CIO Council

Nicholas Kurko, Director of AFL-CIO Region XVII

Henry L. Likes, President of the Oklahoma State AFL-CIO

Cletus E. Ludden, President of the Denver Area Labor Federation, AFL-CIO

Henry Munoz, Director of the Human Resources Department, Texas State AFL-CIO

Herrick S. Roth, President of the Colorado Labor Council, AFL-CIO

Santo Ruiz, Staff Representative, AFL-CIO Department of Civil Rights

J. W. Sifford, President of the Tarrant County Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO

A.P. Stoddard, President of the Greater New Orleans AFL-CIO Council

And attending the San Francisco meeting, in addition to HRDI staff and Associate Regional Manpower Administrator Phillip Lawlor, were:

Sigmund Arywitz, Executive Secretary-Treasurer, Los Angeles County Federation of Labor, AFL-CIO

Daniel V. Flanagan, Director, AFL-CIO Region XXII

William Gilbert, Assistant Director, AFL-CIO Region XXII

Ray Gonzales, State Director, Operation SER

Abe Newman, Director of Community Services, Central Labor County of Alameda County, AFL-CIO

R.R. Richardson, Secretary Treasurer, San Diego-Imperial Counties Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO

PORTLAND.....HRDI's Lyle Eller reports funding of a 50-company consortium to hire 105 disadvantaged workers. Eller worked closely with NAB and the unions involved in the development of this program. The unions are Local 2009 of the Carpenters, Local 3-246 of the Industrial Workers of America, Local 1311 of the Machinists, Local 324 of the Meatcutters and Locals 2500 and 2750 of the Lumber and Sawmill Workers.

NEW YORK CITY.....At the request of Coalition-JOBS (NAB), HRDI's Henry Kaltun was a key resource in NAB's three-week training for 20 loaned executives who will be serving as NAB Job Developers.

MILWAUKEE.....HRDI's Dick Sawicki was appointed by Wisconsin State AFL-CIO President John Schmitt to represent labor on the Opportunities Industrialization Center here.

TOLEDO.....HRDI's John Rober reports that building trades unions here are helping renovate the Chase Park Community Center to make room for day care facilities for the children of working mothers in the area. The Ironworkers built the fire escape and the Carpenters and Painters will be doing the repair work. Rober did the contacting that made the union cooperation possible.

MILWAUKEE.....HRDI's Dick Sawicki is one of three labor representatives on the Advisory Committee of the Milwaukee Area Technical College-Milwaukee Campus.

TAMPA.....HRDI's Hal Reddick reports that both the Hillsborough County Central Labor Council and the Tampa-area Building Trades Council have voted support for the Veterans' Assistance Program. Reddick is a member of the Labor Council's Veterans Committee.

PENNSYLVANIA.....HRDI's Ben Stahl has been meeting with Pennsylvania State AFL-CIO President Harry Boyer to discuss labor's relationship to state and federal manpower programs.

HOUSTON.....HRDI's Don Bridges is helping Local 84 of the Ironworkers recruit over-30 minority workers for its Journeymen Training Program. The program will provide training for 40 men.

SAN DIEGO.....HRDI's Fred Martinez reports funding of a $384,000 NAB-JOBS consortium which will provide 113 jobs for the disadvantaged. Martinez worked closely with NAB on this and with the business agents of the unions involved -- Locals 36, 481, 542, 683 and 986 of the Teamsters.

SAN ANTONIO.....HRDI's Al Garcia reports funding of an On-the-Job Training program which provides 15 weeks of pre-apprenticeship training for 15 trainees. Garcia helped Local 14 of the Carpenters union develop the contract.

DANVILLE, KENTUCKY.....HRDI's Kentucky representative, Dick Mahoney reports that the Central Labor Council here has set up a committee to work with Mahoney on manpower programs.

KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI... .HRDI's Charles Kent reports that the Greater Kansas City Central Labor Council has set up a Veterans' Assistance Program.

TRENTON.....HRDI's Joe Ganie helped develop a Career Opportunity Program to provide 72 para-professional jobs and training in the Trenton public school system. The trainees will be able to take college level courses in order to eventually qualify as teachers. Thirteen slots for veterans are included in the program, which begins next month.

NEW YORK CITY.....HRDI's John Burnell was one of the panelists in WABC-TV's filmed discussion of the Cooperative Education program, which provides high school students with out-of-school learning opportunities. The program was one in the series "Its All About Young People."

RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA.....Two New Careers trainees will be working for the North Carolina AFL-CIO here -- thanks to HRDI's L.G. Holleman and AFL-CIO State President Wilbur Hobby.

BIRMINGHAM.....HRDI's Glen Cole has been appointed to the three-member Evaluation and Status Committee of the Concentrated Employment Program here to evaluate community representation on the CEP Governing Board.

NEW ORLEANS.....HRDI's Ernie Colbert will represent labor on a special city-wide task force set up by the Mayor to find city jobs for veterans.

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

MAY 1971 VOL. I, NO. VIII

Olga Corey
Editor

HRDI

HRDI SPEARHEADS AFL-CIO PROGRAM FOR RETURNING VETERANS

The AFL-CIO pilot Veterans Assistance program is now in full swing at Treasure Island Naval Station and Oakland Army Terminal.

Returning soldiers, sailors and marines at these West Coast separation centers are meeting with HRDI staff to find out what the opportunities for jobs -- or training -- are in their home towns.

HRDI then forwards information on the veteran's skills and job preferences to the HRDI office -- or AFL-CIO Labor Council -- in the veteran's home town. By the time the veteran gets home, he has someone to talk to who can give him the kind of specific information he needs.

Bill Burks, formerly HRDI Area Manpower Representative for Oakland, is in charge of the West Coast operation. Assisting him are Jesse Cooksey at Oakland, and Joseph R. Goglio, Jr. at Treasure Island.

Cooksey is Vice-President of Local 3009 of the Laundry and Dry Cleaners Union and a delegate to the Alameda County Central Labor Council.

Goglio is the former Business Agent for Hospital and Institutional Workers Union Local 250 (SEIU) in San Francisco.

HRDI's National Field Director for Special Projects, Charles Hollowell, is in charge of the HRDI veterans national program and reports that HRDI has so far counselled more than 6,000 veterans at the two bases and -- upon request -- made 507 referrals.

AFL-CIO Central Labor Councils are setting up Veterans Committees to work with HRDI staff. In those cities where HRDI has special AFL-CIO Job Development and Placement offices, veterans go directly there for help.

Other programs to help veterans have been launched by several building trades unions under the Department of Defense OPERATION TRANSITION. These programs provide 240 hours of pre-apprentice training by union journeyman instructors at military installations throughout the country.

The Carpenters have expanded their program and will be training 2,400 veterans at ten installations.

The Bricklayers are providing training at 11 bases for 2,600 servicemen.

The Operative Plasterers have a program for 1,440 veterans at 12 bases.

All three programs provide job counselling and placement assistance at the end of the training period.

UNEMPLOYMENT STILL RISING, HITS YOUTH HARDEST

The days get longer and hotter, teenage unemployment continues to rise, and the prospect for summer youth jobs gets bleaker.

> Last month, 16 to 19 year olds were jobless at a rate nearly THREE TIMES HIGHER THAN THE NATIONAL AVERAGE. For black teenagers, the unemployment rate was even higher -- more than five times the national average.

Overall unemployment in April hit 6.1 percent, just under the nine-year high of 6.2 recorded last December by the Labor Department.

Hardest hit were the already poor neighborhoods, where unemployment during the first quarter of this year hit 9.6 percent, as compared to 6.3 percent a year ago. In the 100 cities included in this survey, white unemployment increased 38 percent over a year ago, just slightly under the increase of 41 percent for minorities.

> AGAIN, TEENAGERS WERE THE HARDEST HIT. Joblessness for whites hit 18.1%, black teenage unemployment was more than twice as high.

And, for the first time in ten years, there has been a significant increase in the number of Americans living in poverty. According to the Census Bureau figures, THIRTEEN PERCENT OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WERE LIVING BELOW THE POVERTY LEVEL DURING THE YEAR JUST ENDED. This represents an increase of 5.1 percent and reverses a ten year trend during which the number of poor was gradually declining. The year 1970 was also the first in nearly a decade that the median income of American families failed to rise.

Prospects for summer youth are not good.

The National Alliance of Businessmen has pledged that it will try to find jobs for 150,000 disadvantaged youth this summer.

And the State Employment Security offices have set a goal of 250,000 summer youth jobs in both the private and public sector.

And the U.S. Civil Service Commission hopes to find 50,000 federal and -- perhaps -- 25,000 state and local government jobs.

> However, the U.S. Conference of Mayors estimates that 641,639 FUNDED SUMMER YOUTH JOBS ARE NEEDED IN THEIR 465 MEMBER CITIES.
>
> According to the Labor Department, mayors will be playing a key role in coordinating summer youth activities. The President's Council on Youth Opportunity, which formerly coordinated goverment efforts to find summer youth jobs, was disbanded last month.

In cities staffed by HRDI, labor is already involved in making plans to help find summer youth jobs -- despite the unemployment situation. In this effort, HRDI works through the Central Labor Councils, Building Trades Councils and local unions in the area.

> LAST YEAR, ORGANIZED LABOR IN HRDI CITIES FOUND JOBS FOR MORE THAN 2,000 YOUNGSTERS.

MEMPHIS.....HRDI's Bill Ross reports refunding of HRDI's Apprenticeship Outreach program here. The program, directed by Don Arant, Sr. of Operating Engineers Local 369, will recruit and tutor 50 minority youths for apprenticeship in the building trades. Last year, HRDI placed 34 in the building and construction trades as craftsmen and 27 as construction laborers.

MISSISSIPPI.....Carol B. Turner has been appointed HRDI Area Manpower Representative for the State of Mississippi. A Vice-President of Machinists' Local 1133, Turner is also Vice-President of the State Council of Machinists and a Delegate to the Metal Trades Council of Pascagoula.

OKLAHOMA CITY.....Thirteen AFL-CIO members completed a two-day buddy training program conducted by HRDI's Oneida Sawyer. They are members of Local 329 of the Carpenters and Local 1524 of the Firefighters, and have volunteered to help newly-hired disadvantaged workers on the job.

SAN ANTONIO.....HRDI's Al Garcia reports that 32 of the 50 youngsters he referred to the Civil Service Commission will be placed on summer jobs.

TRENTON.....HRDI's Joe Ganie placed twelve workers at Atlanta Products and Kohn's Bakery and spent two days counselling the new hires. Local 167 of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers is the bargaining agent at Kohn's.

CLEVELAND.....HRDI's Harold Winbush has been appointed by the Mayor to the Public Employment Committee of the Manpower Planning and Development Task Force.

BIRMINGHAM.....Alabama State Labor Council, AFL-CIO President Barney Weeks will head a statewide Alabama AFL-CIO HRDI Advisory Committee.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's Charles Sims reports funding a NAB-JOBS contract for twelve slots at Merit Metals. Local 837 of the Teamsters is the union.

PORTLAND.....HRDI's Lyle Eller has been appointed labor's representative on the Mayor's Manpower Commission.

CHICAGO.....HRDI's Gene Gough has been appointed to the Mayor's Task Force for Veterans.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton reports funding of a program to upgrade 15 employees at Hillman Barge Company and provide entry-level jobs for 15 disadvantaged workers. Local 3312 of the Steelworkers is the union.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI's Arline Neal has been re-appointed to the Model Cities Commission by the Mayor.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....Forty-eight placements were made by the HRDI Job Development and Placement office here during April, reports Larry Owens. Laborers' Local 456 placed eight on construction jobs with a starting salary of $4.82 an hour. Other locals helping in placement included Local 82 of the Service Employees, Local 77 Laborers and Teamsters Local 639.

HOUSTON.....HRDI's Don Bridges has been named chairman of the Manpower Committee of an experimental Group Guidance program which helps youngsters make informed decisions about their job future -- while they are still in school. Bridges is responsible for coordinating labor's part in this program. So far, 16 Houston and Harris County high schools -- 13 of which are in low income areas -- are participating in the two-year program.

CHICAGO.....HRDI's Gene Gough reports funding of a JOBS program at Inland Steel that will provide jobs for 520 disadvantaged workers. Hiring began this month and will continue at the rate of 20 a week. Local 65 of the Steelworkers is the bargaining agent.

ST. LOUIS.....Members of six building trades unions here attended a buddy training program conducted by HRDI's Jim Adams. The six buddies are members of Bricklayers Local 1, Carpenters Local 47, Ironworkers 396, Laborers 42, Operating Engineers 513 and Sheet Metal Workers 36.

COLUMBUS.....Thirteen buddies were trained by HRDI's Clarence Butler to work with newly-hired workers at four companies here. The buddies belong to Local 2306 of the Machinists, Local 505 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees, Local 379 of the Retail Clerks and Local 2342 of the Steelworkers.

MIAMI.....HRDI's new Area Manpower Representative here is James O. Savits. Savits is President of Local 511 of the Transport Workers Union and a member of the Dade County Federation of Labor Executive Board and Community Services Committee. Savits is a member of the Board of Directors of Goodwill Industries and serves on the Budget Committee of the United Fund and the Health Planning Council of Dade County.

TRENTON.....The Central Labor Council and the Mercer County National Alliance of Businessmen have agreed to jointly review and coordinate all summer youth employment pledges. HRDI's Joe Ganie will represent the Labor Council.

MILWAUKEE.....HRDI's Nellie Wilson reports placing ten men and five women through the AFL-CIO Job Development and Placement office. Unions that assisted in the placement included Local 444 of the Retail Clerks. Local 9 of the Office and Professional Employees, Local 150 of the Service and Hospital Employees, Local 122 of the Hotel, Restaurant Employees and Bartenders Union and Local 989 of the Memorial Park and Cemetery Employees.

NORFOLK.....HRDI's Vince Moretti reports that Seaward Luggage Company has been awarded a NAB-JOBS contract to hire and train 188 disadvantaged workers. Local 524 of the Leather Goods Workers is the bargaining agent.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton reports funding of a hiring program for the disadvantaged at the Western Division of Pennsylvania Bell Telephone. Thirty-six entry level jobs are provided in the contract and the company expects to ask for another 36 after a year. Local 1944 of the IBEW is the bargaining agent.

BALTIMORE.....HRDI's Joe Jones reports that eighteen jobs for the disadvantaged have been opened up through funding of a NAB-JOBS contract at Ratrie, Robbins and Schweizer Inc. Union involved is Laborers District Council.

PHILADELPHIA.....The Pennsylvania Heavy and Highway Contractors Bargaining Association is hiring 20 disadvantaged under a just-funded NAB contract, reports HRDI's Charles Sims. District 50 of the Allied and Technical Workers. is the union involved.

NORFOLK.....HRDI's Vince Moretti reports approval of a NAB-JOBS contract he helped put together which will provide 122 job slots at five organized companies here. The unions involved are Local 648 of the Boilermakers, Local 2514 of the Carpenters, Local 919 of the Auto Workers and Locals 307 and 397 of the Laborers.

NEW YORK.....HRDI's John Burnell is the 1970 recipient of the Black-American Heritage Citation for Labor given by the JFK Library for Minorities. The awards are given annually to outstanding representatives of labor, business and government.

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

JUNE 1971 VOL. I, NO. IX

Olga Corey
Editor

HRDI REPORTS UNION JOB PLACEMENT PROGRAM PROGRESSING RAPIDLY

The AFL-CIO's new Job Development and Placement Program is now operating in Cincinnati, Columbus, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Syracuse and Washington D.C.

In each of these seven cities, HRDI staff is working with Central Labor Councils to find jobs for disadvantaged workers -- largely unskilled -- by using union contacts.

> This is the beginning of a national effort by AFL-CIO to open up opportunities for the poor, for minorities and for the under-employed.

As unemployment rises, informal channels of finding jobs become more important. Union officers may know of jobs at the companies they represent -- or may be able to develop jobs there -- to which unemployed workers can be referred.

While many of the jobs are unskilled, they offer higher wages, better working conditions and more fringe benefits than are usually open to the unskilled worker, because they are in organized plants. They also offer a chance to move up on the job ladder.

> For example, eight of 48 placements made by HRDI in Washington D.C. in April were on jobs with a starting salary of $4.82 per hour.
>
> Placements, of course, vary with the employment picture. However, the Columbus office has found jobs for 37 workers and 46 workers have been placed by the Milwaukee office.

All applicants for jobs in this program must meet the "poverty" definition. This means that HRDI staff maintain close contact with community organizations -- in addition to working with the State Employment Service in their cities.

Some of the organizations making referrals to the AFL-CIO Job Development and Placement Program have been --

- Apprenticeship Information Centers (AIC)
- Concentrated Employment Program (CEP)
- Model Cities groups
- Opportunities Industrialization Centers (OIC)
- Spanish-American Centers
- Summer Youth Programs
- United Appeal
- Urban League
- Young Women's Christian Association (YWCA)

Many local youth groups and neighborhood organizations are also playing an active role.

In other words --

> HRDI staff works with local AFL-CIO leaders to find the jobs, and
>
> HRDI works with government agencies and community organizations to find the people.

The AFL-CIO Job Development and Placement Program was officially launched in Syracuse late last year. Speaking at a luncheon sponsored by the Greater Syracuse Central Labor Council, HRDI President Julius Rothman described the new program as part of the AFL-CIO's commitment to full employment. Said Rothman:

> "The AFL-CIO believes that only a good job at a decent wage gives a man, or woman, the chance to achieve dignity and security and become a useful member of society.
>
> "We need to make a special effort to make that chance a reality for the unemployed and the underemployed."

Each city participating in the program has a professional staff of two -- a Director and a Job Developer. James D. Boyle, of the HRDI National Office in Washington D.C., serves as National Director of the program. Working with him are Richard G. Womack, Assistant Director, and Mrs. Dorothy R. Harding, Director of Research and Evaluation.

> Newest members of the staff are the Director and Job Developer for Cincinnati. The Director is Ralph J. Cannon, Recording Secretary of Local 1 of the Plasterers and Cement Masons and a delegate to the Cincinnati AFL-CIO Labor Council, the Cincinnati Building Trades Council and the Ohio Conference of Plasterers and Cement Masons.
>
> Working with him as Job Developer will be Willie Mae Bolden, an active member for 10 years of Local 771 of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, particularly in the area of community services and civil rights.

Union cooperation is the key to the program's success. So far, 36 local unions have been able to place workers directly on jobs at the companies they represent. These locals have been affiliated with the following international unions:

International Brotherhood of Bookbinders
Carpenters and Joiners of America
Communications Workers of America
International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers
International Union of Elevator Constructors
International Union of Operating Engineers
Hotel and Restaurant Employees' and Bartenders' International Union
Allied Industrial Workers International Union
International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers
Laborers' International Union of North America
Leather Workers International Union of America
Office and Professional Employees International Union
United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry
Retail Clerks International Association
Service Employees International Union
Sheet Metal Workers International Association
American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees
United Steelworkers of America
Textile Workers Union of America

The program is expected to be operating in 10 cities by July 31.

HRDI TRAINS FOR GREATER UNION PARTICIPATION IN MANPOWER PROGRAMS

Organized labor will be playing a greater role in community manpower planning -- and will need greater technical know-how to do it.

> This was the theme of regional training conferences in New Orleans, Phoenix and Hampton, Virginia, for all HRDI national and field staff.

Purpose of the three-day meetings was to prepare HRDI staff for the new, decentralized operations of the Manpower Administration, effective September 30. Under this new set-up, a network of Manpower Planning Councils will be created at the local and state level. Their job will be to advise Mayors and Governors on manpower needs and priorities and to make recommendations for program funding.

> HRDI staff presently serve on state or local CAMPS (Cooperative Area Manpower Planning Systems) committees which the Councils will be replacing. All Mayors and Governors are advised by the Manpower Administration to appoint representatives of organized labor to these Councils.

HRDI Executive Director Robert McGlotten talked to the staff about their new role. He said:

> "Our opportunity to affect manpower planning is greater than ever before -- and so is our responsibility. As the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO, we must supply the technical expertise that will make it possible for labor representatives to make effective use of their new role in manpower planning at the local and state level."

BOSTON.....Thirteen blacks are training for jobs in the broadcast industry under a NAB-JOBS program that HRDI's Paul Flynn helped develop. The program provides for 26 weeks full-time training at Boston University's radio station for one management and 12 technician jobs. The trainees' salaries are being paid by six cooperating radio and TV stations. Local 1228 of the Electrical Workers worked with Flynn on the program.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton reports funding of a thirteen-week program to train 30 cashier checkers. Mrs. Clinton worked with the Appalachian Council on the program and with Local 1407 of the Retail Clerks and Local 500 of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters.

CINCINNATI.....Classes begin next month for a training program developed by HRDI's Eddie Campbell and Local 20 of the Stationary Engineers. The program provides six hours' training for 15 weeks for refrigeration, air conditioning, firemen and licensed engineer jobs. At least 40 trainees will be in the program and Local 20 has promised to place all graduates on jobs.

NORFOLK.....Fifty local union officers and union counsellors are studying the problems of new employees -- and disadvantaged workers in particular -- as part of a new training program put together by HRDI's Vince Moretti and sponsored by HRDI and the Norfolk Union Labor Council. The six-week training program is being held at Old Dominion University.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....Fifty minority contractors will receive training and technical assistance under a program which HRDI's Arline Neal helped develop. The program is funded by Model Cities and is endorsed by the Washington Building Trades Council.

DENVER.....A five-week training program is now in operation at the Laborers' Training Center here. HRDI's Frank Gallegos worked with the Laborers' District Council on the program, which is funded as a NAB-JOBS '70 contract. Thirteen companies are participating in the program and will provide jobs -- and 19 weeks on-the-job training -- for the graduates.

OKLAHOMA CITY.....HRDI's Oneida Sawyer reports approval by the Oklahoma State AFL-CIO Executive Council of a resolution supporting the Veterans' Assistance Program.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's Charles Sims reports funding of a JOBS '70 program to provide 39 jobs for the disadvantaged at Ebby Company. Local 123 of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers is the bargaining agent.

ATLANTA.....HRDI's Walter Rucker will work with "Summer Jobs Atlanta" and will be provided office space at their headquarters. HRDI is one of 14 organizations cooperating in the program which is being coordinated by North Georgia NAB.

SAN DIEGO.....The North Island Navy Base here has agreed to hire 40 graduates from the Economic Opportunity Commission's Operation Mainstream program as a result of a meeting set up by HRDI's Fred Martinez. EOC is paying wages and supplying supportive services for the trainees, who are being prepared for public service jobs.

PASCAGOULA.....HRDI's Carol Turner reports that training has started for 75 jobs as pipefitters, outside machinists and pipewelders at Litton shipyards here. Another 75 trainees are expected to take the 12-week course in September.

PHILADELPHIA .....HRDI's Charles Sims reports funding of a second training program with the School District of Philadelphia and School Cafeteria Workers Local 434. The program provides training for 48 new workers on entry-level jobs and upgrades the skills of 16 employees already on the job. The program is funded through the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council and is a repeat of a successful program which provided training for 24 workers -- 16 new hires and eight already employed.

NORFOLK.....HRDI's Vince Moretti reports funding of a NAB-JOBS consortium for 122 slots. Moretti helped develop the contract and recruited union members at the four organized companies to serve as buddies to the new employees. Unions involved were Local 684 of the Boilermakers, Local 1138 of the Laborers, Local 417 of the Operating Engineers and Local 919 of the Auto Workers.

HOUSTON.....A 22-week pre-apprenticeship program is now underway at the Skill Center here to train 20 men and two women for jobs in the meatcutting industry. The program was developed by HRDI's Don Bridges and Local 408 of the Meat Cutters for disadvantaged workers referred by the Houston Concentrated Employment Program (CEP). Local 408 is supplying the equipment and the instructors. Trainees receive $41 a week plus $5 for each dependent and $2 for travel expenses. Graduates will be employed at a starting salary of $3.30 an hour.

SAN ANTONIO.....Eighteen apprentices in their fifth year of training as refrigeration fitters have volunteered to be buddies to some of the younger, minority apprentices and have completed a two-day buddy training program conducted by HRDI's Al Garcia. Garcia has conducted similar programs for 5th year apprentices in the plumbing and welding apprenticeship programs.

PITTSBURGH.....A 26-week Apprentice Meat Cutters training program developed by the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council with HRDI's Minona Clinton is now underway. Training will be provided for new workers on entry-level jobs and three workers already on the job will be trained for better jobs.

PHILADELPHIA.....HRDI's Ben Stahl reports that thirty 10th grade students at Mastbaum School here are enrolled in a new pre-apprenticeship carpenters' training program. The thirty students were selected from over 200 students throughout the city. Those who graduate will automatically be indentured as apprentices.

WEST VIRGINIA.....HRDI's Larry Barker reports funding of a NAB-JOBS '70 program which will provide jobs and training for 40 truck drivers and 40 heavy equipment operators. Barker worked with the Allied Technical Workers and the West Virginia Contractors Bargaining Association in developing the program.

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

Olga Corey
Editor

JULY 1971 VOL. NO. X

RDT

On July 12, the Emergency Act of 1971 became law.

It will provide approximately 150,000 new public service jobs for the unemployed and the underemployed during the next two years with the federal government paying 90% of the cost.

The new job-creation goes into effect nationally when overall unemployment remains at 4½% or more for three consecutive months. If the unemployment rate drops, no new monies will be obligated but projects underway will continue.

Congress has authorized $750 million for the first year and $1 billion for the second year to carry out this "general assistance" part of the program. Each state is entitled to at least $1.5 million the first year.

Another $250 million will be made available for "special assistance" to inner city depressed areas -- such as Bedford-Stuyvesant , Hough, Watts -- where unemployment has been averaging 6% for several months. These funds are not affected by any drop in the national unemployment rate.

Total cost of the overall program is $2.25 billion for a two-year period.

Cities of at least 75,000 population, states, governmental units such as school boards, and Indian tribes can apply for funds under the Act.

They must provide assurance that the jobs are not dead end jobs and will lead to permanent employment.

Eighty-five percent of the federal share must be used for salaries and other employee benefits.

No more than a third of the jobs requested by one unit can be allocated to professional jobs -- except teachers.

No job can pay more than $12,000 a year out of the federal share.

The new jobs can be in any public service occupation -- health care, public safety, education, crime prevention, housing, sanitation, recreation, transportation and environmental protection.

Special features of the bill of interest to union members include --

If a proposal includes hiring people for jobs covered by a collective bargaining agreement, the union involved must be notified and given time to comment to both the applicant and the Secretary of Labor.

Public workers who are laid off can be rehired.

Workers on the new jobs must be paid either the state or federal ($1.60) minimum wage, whichever is higher -- or the prevailing wage paid by the employer for similar work.

HRDI President Julius Rothman, in commenting on the new legislation, said --

> "The Public Service Employment program will provide useful employment for at least some of those who are unemployed and underemployed and at the same time supply our cities with much-needed services.
>
> "HRDI and the AFL-CIO intend to do everything we can to expedite the effective implementation of the Act."

Rothman indicated that all HRDI field staff have been advised to inform locals of AFL-CIO unions of public service employees that HRDI is available to provide technical assistance when so requested.

SPECIAL AFL-CIO CONFERENCE ON JOBS MEETS IN WASHINGTON

Six hundred trade unionists from throughout the United States came to Washington for a two-day Jobs Conference sponsored by the AFL-CIO.

They heard speaker after speaker -- union leaders and members of Congress both -- describe the economic situation in phrases that included "a backwash of uncontrolled inflation and unemployment" and "just plain lousy."

AFL-CIO President George Meany opened the meeting with this summary of the problem --

> "5 million workers are unemployed.
>
> "Hundreds of thousands have exhausted their unemployment compensation.
>
> "The cost of living is going up at an annual rate of about 6%.
>
> "In three years, a half-million American jobs have been lost because of outmoded foreign trade policies.
>
> "The number of people who live in poverty has grown to over 25 million.
>
> "The unemployment rate among returning GI's is over 13%.
>
> "Among construction workers unemployment is over 10%."

Meany urged a comprehensive national job-creation program to make full employment a reality.

A working session of the conference -- attended among others by HRDI national staff and regional directors -- dealt with Public Service Employment. Details of the new legislation were discussed and proposals were made to involve organized labor -- especially AFL-CIO affiliates that represent public service workers -- in making sure that the guidelines and regulations developed by the Labor Department are in line with the intent of the legislation.

NAB CONFERENCE HEARS MEANY'S VIEWS ON JOBS AND JOB TRAINING

In a speech for the National Alliance of Businessmen, President Meany also referred to rising unemployment and pointed out that manpower programs are helpful only when there are jobs available after the training period is over.

> The Meany speech cited HRDI's efforts in the Veterans' Assistance program as an example of organized labor's efforts in job placement. He cited June figures indicating that 207 veterans from two West Coast separation centers had been placed by unions in their home towns at jobs averaging $3.06 an hour.

HRDI Trustee Roy Siemiller, who serves as Vice President of NAB for Labor Relations, delivered the speech on behalf of President Meany.

COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.....Thirty-six residents of the Model Cities area here are getting training for jobs as carpenters, cement masons, plumbers and sheet metal workers under a program that HRDI's Eddie Campbell helped put together. The trainees get six hours training a week for four months at the Northern Kentucky Area Vocational School. Graduates will be referred to the Journeymen Employment and Training program in Cincinnati.

WILMINGTON, DELAWARE.....HRDI's Ben Stahl reports funding of a Public Service Careers program to hire and train 50 disadvantaged workers in all departments of the city government and upgrade 31 workers already on the job. HRDI worked with the Mayor, the Labor Department and Local 320 and District 81 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees to make sure of union involvement in this and all future training programs where there is a bargaining agent. Wage rates on the entry-level jobs range from $2.29 to$3.86 an hour.

NEW YORK CITY.....HRDI's Henry Kaltun is working with the city's Narcotics Commission to help find on-the-job training openings for addicts certified by the Commission as ready for training. The program is funded by the New York State Department of Labor. Trainees can be paid up to half of their salaries for a maximum of 39 weeks.

OKLAHOMA CITY.....At the request of Painters'Local 807, HRDI's Oneida Sawyer met with 30 trainees in their Journeymen Upgrading Program to discuss the problems of the disadvantaged workers and organized labor's role in manpower programs. The one-day session was part of a 10-week training program which is funded by the Painters'Union.

SAN DIEGO.....HRDI's Fred Martinez has been appointed to Mayor's New Jobs Task Force.

TOLEDO.....HRDI's John Rober helped develop an on-the-job training program for two entry-level jobs and four upgrading slots at Romanoff Electric. Local 1076 of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was the bargaining agent.

CAMDEN, NEW JERSEY.....HRDI's Joe Ganie is serving as a training resource in a program to improve the skills of para-professionals in hospitals, schools and libraries. Thirty trainees are in the program which is sponsored by the Camden County Council on Economic Opportunity and funded by the Labor Department.

CONNECTICUT.....HRDI's Don Wrenn reports that 56 union members have been trained as "buddies" and will be working with newly-hired workers in their plants. At Groton, the 25 "buddies" are members of Boilermakers'Lodge 614 working at General Dynamics. At Waterbury, 31 members of the Autoworkers' Union employed at Scovill Manufacturing and at Chase Copper and Brass went through the program. Training was conducted by HRDI.

NEW YORK CITY.....Graduate students in education at St. John's University heard HRDI's John Burnell speak on the relationship of school guidance counselors to manpower programs and the labor movement.

PITTSBURGH.....HRDI's Minona Clinton has been appointed a member of the Governor's Human Services Task Force.

TAMPA.....HRDI was the main sponsor of a brainstorming session on the problems of finding jobs for summer youth. HRDI's Harold Reddick developed the program in cooperation with NAB and the Mayor's Youth Council. Nineteen representatives of labor, business, the employment services and community agencies attended the all-day meeting.

NORFOLK.....A unique program is underway at Chesepeake County Jail to provide job training and rehabilitation to prisoners BEFORE their release. This new program -- first of its kind in the State of Virginia -- was developed by HRDI's Vince Moretti working with the City Sargeant. It provides opportunities for selected prisoners to work for participating companies during the day and return to jail at night. Moretti represents labor on the steering committee for the work-release program.

TRENTON.....HRDI was one of the sponsors of an all-day "Rap-In" at Rider College here. Sixty high school and college students talked with the experts on youth employment, educational opportunities, legal rights and military service. HRDI's Joe Ganie spoke on "Organized Labor, Manpower and the Community."

BIRMINGHAM.....Forty disadvantaged workers are getting eight weeks on-the-job training as bricktenders under a program that HRDI's Glen Cole helped put together. Cole worked with Hod Carriers and Laborers' Local 559 and the Employment Service to get the program funded.

WASHINGTON, D.C.....HRDI's Arline Neal has been appointed to the Mayor's Manpower Advisory Board.

LOUISVILLE.....Seven members of Local 369 of the Electrical Workers have volunteered to be "buddies" to new workers hired at Queen Products under a JOBS '70 contract. HRDI's Dick Mahoney is in charge of the "buddy" training program.

SAN JUAN.....HRDI's John Burnell spoke on "HRDI and the AFL-CIO's Role in Manpower Programs" at a conference of Local 2614 of the American Federation of Government Employees here.

HOLLYWOOD, FLORIDA.....HRDI's Oneida Sawyer represented labor on a panel discussing "Women and Apprenticeship" at the Southern States Apprenticeship Conference here.

SAN DIEGO.....HRDI's Fred Martinez played a key role in getting approval from the California Human Resources Department for a program which is training 256 disadvantaged workers on jobs averaging $2.50 an hour. Unions cooperating with Martinez on the program are Local 465 of the Electrical Workers, Locals 229 and 627 of the Ironworkers and Locals 775 and 1125 of the Machinists.

GRENADA, MISSISSIPPI.....Forty disadvantaged workers will be hired at the Binswinger Mirror Company here. HRDI's Carol Turner worked with Glass and Mirror Workers Local 1967 to get union concurrence for the NAB-JOBS '70 contract.

WEST VIRGINIA.....HRDI's Larry Barker reports funding of a statewide program to provide 10 weeks skill training for 100 experienced barbers and 20-22 weeks training for two new hires. Barker worked with the West Virginia Journeymen Barbers' Union and the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council to develop the program.

AKRON.....HRDI's Charles Anderson has been helping recruit blacks for jobs as interviewers with the Social Security Administration.

NEW ORLEANS.....HRDI's Ernest Colbert conducted a four-hour session on the problems of the disadvantaged as part of the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee's six-week training program for union counselors. The 36 counselors are members of 16 different unions.

Human Resources Development Institute

Transmittal Slip

DATE: 7/28/71

TO: Emory Via

FROM: Olga Cruz

☐ Note and File	☐ Prepare Reply For My Signature
☐ Note and Return To Me	☐ Take Appropriate Action
☐ Return With More Details	☐ Per Your Request
☐ Note and See Me About This	☐ Signature
☐ Please Answer	☐ Advice Please
☐ For Your Approval	☐ Attach Complete File and Return

COMMENTS:

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
NATIONAL OFFICE: 815 16th STREET, N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3912

Board of Trustees
GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board
I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH A. BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH D. KEENAN
LANE KIRKLAND
JOHN H. LYONS
PETER T. SCHOEMANN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER P. WHARTON

Officers
JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President
HAROLD H. JACK
Secretary-Treasurer
ROBERT M. MC GLOTTEN
Executive Director

July 28, 1971

Mr. Reese Cleghorn, Editor
SOUTH TODAY
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Reese:

Thanks so much for mentioning our HRDI Newsletter in SOUTH TODAY. I hope some of your readers will be interested. All our southern field staff get your publications and have been much impressed.

Sometime ago, I spoke briefly with Emory Via about the possibility of a story on Pascagoula for your newspaper and I promised to get some material together when the program was further along.

We now have a state HRDI representative stationed in Pascagoula and the Workers' Defense League has opened an Outreach office there. I enclose some background material on the operation: let me know if you're interested.

Sincerely,

Olga Corey

Olga Corey,
Communications Director

OC:df
opeiu #2, afl-cio

enclosures

What's Happening

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20006 (202) 638-3914

George Meany
Chairman of the Board

Julius F. Rothman
President

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director

Olga Corey
Editor

HRDI

SEPTEMBER-OCTOBER 1971 VOL. I, NO. XII

AN EDITORIAL

HRDI has been, to a considerable extent, identified with many of the recent major manpower programs developed under the aegis of the Manpower Administration. This is completely understandable in light of HRDI's commitment to assist in the promotion and development of these programs, and to stimulate organized labor's participation in them.

To assume that HRDI has been content to limit its activities only to these programs is to ignore a whole area to which HRDI staff has given leadership, guidance and direction. These activities are largely related to manpower programs developed in the local community designed to meet specific needs.

In this connection, the HRDI staff representative has sometimes been the initiator of local programs, sometimes he has been the facilitator, sometimes the catalyst. But in almost every instance the HRDI representative has been the person with the technical skill, the knowledge and the ability needed to put a program together, get it funded and into operation.

The HRDI staff in many communities found time to work with prisoners - in released-time programs, in finding jobs for those who have served their term, and in counselling. They served on anti-poverty agency committees and boards dealing with job training, and they served on official local manpower planning bodies and contributed toward the development of program standards and objectives for a large part of the whole community manpower package.

HRDI takes pride in the involvement of its local staff in a variety of manpower programs that are helping to prepare minority and disadvantaged workers for a place in our economic system. And we are particularly pleased that a number of the projects and programs they are involved in are directed at young people. The objective of these programs is to enable those youngsters who come from disadvantaged backgrounds to get involved in imaginatively designed programs that lead to real jobs and good pay.

For example, an existing high school in Jamaica, New York, a mile from John F. Kennedy International Airport, was completely refurbished and opened this Fall. This school will offer courses and programs related to aviation and the air transport industry. The change-over from a traditional high school to one that intended to encourage minority youth to enter the aviation industry was sparked by an HRDI staff representative, who involved the representatives of the aviation industry, all unions in the transportation field, the community, and the New York City Board of Education.

The pre-delinquent training project that the HRDI representative developed in conjunction with the Houston-Gulf Coast Building Trades Council, is another example. And in two dozen or more cities, HRDI can point to hundreds of disadvantaged youngsters who had jobs this summer only because the HRDI representatives made it their business to work with unions and employers in tracking down every possible opening. And in Philadelphia, it was the HRDI staff that made it possible for the Negro Trade Union Leadership Council to get a grant from the Neighborhood Youth Corps that paid over 500 disadvantaged youngsters for performing socially useful jobs in public and nonprofit agencies.

It is indeed true that HRDI has been identified with the large national manpower programs. It is equally true that HRDI staff has made a solid contribution to their local communities by using their skill, knowledte and resourcefulness to help the unemployed and disadvantaged become self-supporting, productive human beings.

HRDI EFFORTS TO UPGRADE A VOCATIONAL SCHOOL PAY OFF

In Jamaica, classes began this month for youngsters at August Martin High School, a new city-wide comprehensive school specializing in aviation studies.

The story of Martin High School really begins in 1960 when HRDI's John Burnell, a member of Local School Board District 28, became concerned with the morale at a vocational high school, then called Woodrow Wilson. Although the school had a capacity of 2,200, there were only 1,000 students enrolled and 500 attending classes. Graduating classes averaged 125.

Because the school was located just a mile from Kennedy airport, Burnell began to think about turning it into a school specializing in some area of aviation. A survey of the job situation in the industry indicated that ground support personnel at New York's three major airports outnumber flight personnel by 7 to 1. So Burnell went to work.

> First, he contacted the unions involved -- Machinists, Transport Workers, Service Employees and Teamsters -- and won their support. Then he approached the Aviation Industry Committee of Greater New York and the Port Authority of New York, which owns the airport, to interest them.
>
> At the same time, Burnell used his contacts with the New York City Board of Education and the United Federation of Teachers to get them working on curriculum ideas. And finally, he touched base with the parents groups and community organizations in the area to explain the whole concept to them.

In 1969, an Advisory Commission to the new school was established, with Burnell as a member. In 1970, the Board of Education voted its approval and renamed the school after a black aviator killed while flying emergency relief supplies to Biafra as a volunteer with the International Red Cross.

> It took a long time, but the dream became a reality. And as a result, thousands of New York City children will get a better education and have a chance for a better job.

MIAMI....Ray Link has been appointed to head up the Job Development and Placement office here. Link is the former business agent of Local 365 of the Painters Union and a delegate to the Dade County Federation of Labor, the Miami Building Trades Council and Painters District Council 56. He is a former trustee of the United Fund of Dade County and a member of the Dade County Personnel Board.

Assisting Link will be Willie Nicholson, member of Local 478 of the Laborers, who served for five years with the Miami Police Department and worked part time with the YMCA as a Youth Counsellor.

LOS ANGELES....HRDI's George Garland is working with the Teamsters on their Transportation Opportunities Program (TOPS) which provides special assistance to veterans in preparing for the written portion of the truck driver test.

SAN JUAN....HRDI's newest office was opened with Governor Luis A. Ferre and Labor Secretary Julia deRivera de Vincenty doing the ribbon cutting. The Governor and the Secretary both praised the work of HRDI in speeches at the dedication luncheon hosted by Keith Terpe, president of the Central Labor Council. Speaking for HRDI were President Julius F. Rothman, Executive Director Robert M. McGlotten and Regional Director John Burnell.

HRDI's representative in Puerto Rico is Harold M. Nugent, a long-time resident of Puerto Rico and formerly an organizer for the Seafarers International Union.

NORFOLK....HRDI's newest Job Placement office is headed by Thomas G. Bunting, former business agent for the Virginia State Building Trades Council. Bunting is a member and former business agent of Local 83 of the Asbestos Workers, AFL-CIO. He is a Vice-President of the Southeastern Building Trades Conference and serves on the Virginia Safety Codes Commission as an appointee of the Governor.

Assisting Bunting is Edward D. White, a member and Vice-President of Local 684 of the Boilermakers, AFL-CIO. White serves as a delegate to the Port Council of Norfolk and the Norfolk Union Labor Council, AFL-CIO.

NEW YORK CITY....HRDI's Henry Kaltun brought together Local 1175 of the Laborers and the Transurban Corporation, industrial housing builders. The result was a NAB MA-6 contract to hire and train 55 people on entry-level jobs which start at $3.00 an hour and increase to $3.20 an hour after 30 days.

NEW YORK CITY....Training in how to handle new air conditioning equipment is being given to 100 new workers at the World Trade Center as a result of a NAB JOBS '70 contract which Henry Kaltun helped expedite. The jobs pay $4.00 an hour during training. Local 32B of the Service Employees is the union involved.

ST. LOUIS....HRDI's Jim Adams is responsible for initiating a program to provide on-the-job training for window washers with a starting rate of $2.69 an hour and an increase to $3.19 after six months. Adams interested Local 51 of the Service Employees Union and arranged meetings between NAB, the Department of Labor and the company.

CAMDEN, NEW JERSEY....HRDI's Joe Ganie helped develop a contract to provide on-the-job training for veterans for jobs as tool machine set-up operators. The trainees start at $2.50 an hour and will be earning $2.80 an hour when the 22-week training is completed. Ganie worked with Camden NAB on the program, which is funded by the New Jersey Department of Labor and Industry.

HOUSTON....Eighteen trainees -- including one woman -- have completed the 26-week Meatcutters Apprenticeship course which HRDI's Don Bridges developed in cooperation with Local 408 of the Meatcutters. The graduates -- all black or Spanish-speaking -- are now being placed on jobs by the Local and will continue to study four hours a week for nine months. Three veterans are among the trainees.

INDIANAPOLIS....HRDI's Richard Cobb reports the scheduling of a fifth course to train professional truck drivers. Prototype for the eight-week course was developed by HRDI in cooperation with the Central Labor Council of Marion County and Local 135 of the Teamsters. The program is funded by the State's Vocational Education System and includes extensive road training as well as 140 hours of classroom instruction.

SAN DIEGO....HRDI's Fred Martinez reports approval of a comprehensive manpower plan for the San Diego area to provide the entire spectrum of manpower services -- job market analysis, recruitment and counselling, job placement and training and supportive services. Martinez helped develop the plan for spending more than a million dollars of combined Labor Department, San Diego County and Office of Economic Opportunity funds: it will be administered by the San Diego Economic Opportunity Commission, which Martinez heads. Some of the programs already in operation include New Careers Operation Mainstream and JOVE, a special program to help find jobs for former convicts.

SEATTLE....HRDI's George Williams played a key role in developing an MDTA-funded training program for aerospace engineers laid off by the Boeing Company. Twenty-four trainees are working at Freezer Research Incorporated under this "special impact" program. Another 1,000 applications are on file if the program is extended.

CROZETT, VIRGINIA....HRDI's Vince Moretti worked with Local 29 of the Teamsters here on a program to hire and train 210 disadvantaged workers at Morton Foods Company here under a NAB JOBS '70 contract just funded.

SAN DIEGO....Two hundred disadvantaged workers will be hired and trained for jobs in the hotel and restaurant industry as a result of a program developed by HRDI's Fred Martinez in cooperation with NAB. It provides on-the-job training for jobs as cooks, engineers, janitors and office workers and includes special instruction in English as a second language. Cooperating unions are Locals 402 and 500 of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers, Local 501 of the Operating Engineers and Local 102 of the Service Employees.

TOLEDO....HRDI's John Rober will represent organized labor on the Veterans Task Force of the Toledo City Council.

MEMPHIS....Thirty disadvantaged workers now have jobs at Wabash, Inc. here under a NAB JOBS '70 contract which HRDI's Bill Ross helped develop.

SAN ANTONIO....A successful pre-apprenticeship program developed by HRDI's Al Garcia in cooperation with Local 2 of the Bricklayers resulted in indenturing 15 minority youth. The Local is now conducting a second eight-week training program, working with the local Outreach program to recruit trainees.

NASHVILLE....HRDI's role in helping prisoners find jobs and start working before their final release was recognized when HRDI's John Duncan received one of 14 certificates awarded by the Governor of Tennessee for outstanding contributions to the program.

AKRON....HRDI's Charles Anderson will represent labor on a new Advisory Committee to the MDTA Training Center here.

CAMDEN, NEW JERSEY....HRDI's Joe Ganie was successful in bringing together local NAB representatives and the management of Custom Alarms Systems, Inc., a minority-owned business. The result was a NAB JOBS '70 contract to hire and train protective signal repairmen who will be guaranteed $2.50 an hour when they finish their training.

CHICAGO....HRDI's Gene Gough worked with Local 1033 of the Steelworkers to train 22 union "buddies" to help newly-hired disadvantaged workers at Republic Steel get through their probationary period.

PITTSBURGH....HRDI's Minona Clinton has been appointed to membership in the Manpower Advisory Council of the Bureau of Employment Security. She also has been appointed a member of the Governor's Human Services Task Force.

ATLANTA....HRDI's Walter Rucker worked with Firemen and Oilers Union Local 288 to get union cooperation on a NAB JOBS '70 program to hire 35 disadvantaged workers at Kearney-National here.

PITTSBURGH....Seventy-eight disadvantaged workers are being hired at Westinghouse Electric here under a NAB JOBS '70 contract that HRDI's Minona Clinton worked on with Local 601 of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers. The jobs have a starting rate of $3.19 an hour.

ATLANTA....HRDI's Walter Rucker reports success in developing a program which will train 40 Model Cities residents to qualify for apprenticeship programs in bricklaying and carpentry. Rucker first interested Local 8 of the Bricklayers and Local 2358 of the Carpenters and then sold the idea to Model Cities and set up the final meeting between Model Cities and the Building Trades Council to work out details. The program provides for trainees to move at their own pace and enter apprenticeship programs as soon as they are ready.

CINCINNATI....HRDI's Eddie Campbell played a key role in developing 18 contracts under which 138 disadvantaged workers received on-the-job training in 26 different job classifications. Cooperating unions are District Council 51 of the State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 1224 of the Electrical Workers, Local 177 of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers and Local 42 of the Roofers.

WATER VALLEY, MISSISSIPPI....HRDI's Carol Turner reports funding of a NAB JOBS '70 contract for hiring 90 disadvantaged workers at Motts, Inc., after Turner and Local P 1224 of the Meatcutters first made sure that all laid-off workers were recalled.

HRDF Speech

Hunger Task —

Employment Task
Dan Revin Textile worker
3 kys, Training of white who is now a supt.

Existing Transp. patterns — re jobs
summary DOT Secy.

Urban planning Task —
Rapid Transit Stops
Black access for many thousands — no occupan
Atl. Stadium Story —

Trans. example

Books & Studies say: efficiency determines
It's important

But political power
enters into actual determination
Who has it?

If we have recognized
a social problem — such as hard ~~core~~ Unemployed
Do we leave it to the "pol Power" of the Unemployed to work out or do we act?
What way will they express their "power" and why

Md.

Some of you are old timers — &
Will take new Committment & new Study & insights

You will be project oriented — & I hope result oriented —
there will be times of leading the lab. mov. on spec.
issues — analysis at another

Long time love affair with the labor movement
(esp. what it could be)
All of professional life has been related to it

People oriented,
disinterested, concerned

Now I know it's argued that all of union activity is for folks — not so — Some is institutional and too much is just for some folks —

Transition from Youth to jobs

College & Univ are a form of transition & training -

What provision for
H.S., or drop out

Shifting the cost of flexibility in our society onto those least able to afford it - e.g. push Unemployment up to reduce inflation

Transferring from hand to machine labor

Changing Society — Jobs

Need — Bless Bed
— Unemployment
Underemployment
Ghetto & Slum
Welfare Rev of 30's vs. 60's
Pull out of poverty
Pull to extent

"Causes" of Poverty
Institutional
Age
Education & Training
Discrim
Location — Region, Rural Poverty, Slum

Human Capital Concepts
Training for Profit
Discriminating & for individuals
Can lead to

Cures —
Job matching Services
Strong economy
Training & Education
Interim Measures
Reducing Discrimination
Sensitiveness and highly structured Jobs, where need not be —

Chidings & Praise

The Challenge of the week
of their work

Labor obstacles

Prejudice — Race, Racial Destiny

Union structure & rigidities
(relying rules for future growth)

Union Image
Part of what HRDI will change

A CONVERSATION

On Revolution

Scott Buchanan

with

Joseph P. Lyford

Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions

G 1/5/71

This is one of a series of Conversations about issues involved in the maintenance of a free society. These Conversations and related materials are published by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions at Santa Barbara, California. The Center is the main activity of The Fund for the Republic, Inc.

The studies of the Center are devoted to clarifying basic questions of freedom and justice, especially those raised by the emergence of twentieth century institutions. Among the areas being studied are the economic order, the political process, law, communications, science and technology, the American character, war as an institution.

Scott Buchanan, professor of philosophy, former Dean of St. John's College, and Consultant to the Center, is the author of several books. Lippincott has recently published a new edition of his 1929 study, Poetry and Mathematics. Joseph P. Lyford has been a member of the executive staff of the Fund for the Republic since 1955 after a number of years in journalism.

The Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions is a non-profit educational enterprise established by the Fund for the Republic to promote the principles of individual liberty expressed in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Contributors to publications issued under the auspices of the Center are responsible for their statements of fact and expressions of opinions. The Center is responsible only for determining that the material should be presented as a contribution to the discussion of the free society.

Sample copy free. Prices on bulk orders, and a full list of other Center publications, will be provided on request to Box 4068, Santa Barbara, California. Tape recordings of this Conversation, running approximately 59 minutes in length, are available at $5 each from the Center.

Copyright © 1962 by The Fund for the Republic, Inc.
There are no restrictions on the use of this material.

On Revolution

Lyford: Despite the fact that the world is now being swept by a whole series of revolutions in Africa, Asia, Latin America, the standard literature in the West on the subject of revolution is very small. Justice William O. Douglas of the United States Supreme Court says that in his travels in Asia he finds that the only literature on revolution being read by the Asians is Communist literature. Yet we Americans consider that our nation is a prime example of a country born out of revolution.

Buchanan: It might be worthwhile to recall that probably the first use of the word revolution in the Western tradition is in Plato. In his dialogue, The Statesman, he describes revolution in perhaps its most comprehensive terms. He is imagining that the government of human beings was originally government by gods. In their control of the world things improve as if they were wound up on a spindle to achieve a high tension and power control. Then at a certain point the gods decide that they will let this unwind, and this is the period when human beings take over.

After this happens, human beings become worse and worse at the art of government, until finally government degenerates into a kind of chaos, anarchy, tyranny, and so forth. When it gets bad enough, the gods decide they will take over again, and so they begin – perhaps through a man–to wind up the process again, and it begins to improve.

It is interesting that when Virgil celebrated the beginning of the Roman Empire in the Aeneid, he went back to the fact that "pious Aeneas" was an agent of the gods when he founded Rome, that Troy was a case where humans had let government run down, and that Aeneas was taking over under the auspices of the gods in establishing Rome.

Revolution here means something very profound. It reminds us of a number of things about governments that are very important, including the fact that they are not eternal. The Roman Empire boasted to be a thousand years long, but it wasn't boasted even by the poets to be more than that.

Lyford: How would you define revolution in terms of the American tradition? Harvey Wheeler, in the Center's Occasional Paper, The U.S. and Revolution, makes the point that although we Americans consider that we were born in revolution and in a sense have a corner on revolution, our revolution actually was an eighteenth century middle-class liberal revolution with no relevance to the types that are taking place today. He says that we have to adjust our attitudes if we are to understand the current revolutionary ideology, which is much fiercer, more violent, and more disruptive than we had in 1776.

Buchanan: I think it is true that the American Revolution and the French Revolution and the so-called British Revolution of the seventeenth century were all revolutions in behalf of the bourgeois idea, the modern liberal idea. Of course there had been revolutions before that, revolutions in behalf of the nobility; and since then there have been many revolutions, small and big, in behalf of the proletariat. If we are talking about a principle of revolution or of a revolution as a general human fact, it goes much farther than the ordinary American understanding of our revolution. Someone has said that the American Revolution was actually brought off by conservatives, by aristocrats. Our understanding of it is pretty well colored by that fact.

Lyford: The world, it's been said, owes all its onward impulses to men ill at ease. The happy man inevitably confines himself within ancient limits. Since we are an affluent, comfortable society we are mainly concerned with preserving the status quo. How can an American be a revolutionist unless he is one of the minority of the dispossessed?

Buchanan: Now we are moving into another sector: what the causes of revolution are. I use the word "cause" here in two senses; that is, the efficient cause, what makes it take place; and the cause in the other sense of what human beings want, what they will fight for in the end. It is often said that revolutions don't come off unless people are hungry. In my opinion revolutions don't happen unless there is a deep sense of injustice. This is what moves people in both senses of "cause." It makes them act and also tells them what they are acting for.

Lyford: How can we really be said to be in sympathy with revolutions in other parts of the world, because don't they affect the status quo as far as we're concerned? Doesn't this make us enemies of revolution?

Buchanan: Yes, but if we were sensitive to the state of affairs in this country now, I think we would find enough injustice to make us think about revolution. Galbraith and other people have said that affluence somehow snows us under. We lose our sensitivity. Of course the revolutions in Africa, South America, and Asia, if I'm right about my assumption of injustice as being the cause, are based on very deep and inveterate injustice. These people have been aware of injustice a long time. It's only their expectation now that they can do something about it that makes it so vivid to us. I think we will come to comprehend it. We may even comprehend Russia a little better if we understand their revolution in this way.

Lyford: Justice Douglas says that the United States, because of its revolutionary tradition and tradition of political independence, should support revolutions everywhere in the world. Doesn't this statement need to be qualified? There are revolutions that are anti-democratic and destructive of world order.

Buchanan: The Justice was very interesting about this. I remember his saying that he thought young men ought to go to the Middle East, and if they would sit down in any café with any group of people there and talk about the American Revolution the people would probably produce one overnight. Everything was so ripe for it. I think he is very sensitive to this and perhaps not too concerned about what the ins and outs of revolutions are.

What you are saying is that there is a difference between revolutions. Some are destructive; some of them might be constructive. There is a drift of opinion at present—in the writings of Rebecca West, for instance—that revolutions are vicious. These people look over history and conclude that there has never been a good revolution. Their point is that what the revolutions started out to achieve never came off. The people who started them suffered a good deal, destroyed a good deal, and never realized their original vision.

I am a little out of patience with that point of view because this means that revolution is not about anything very important. I think revolutions go through a stage at which any aims that there might have been at the beginning have to be reconsidered, and perhaps lost, and new aims gained because of what was learned during the revolution.

Revolution is a very profound thing if it is a real one. It means that the people who revolt get re-educated as well as the people against whom they're revolting.

Lyford: But when we look at the situation in Cuba, for example, where there is certainly an economic, political, and social revolution, the great majority of Americans would say that this revolution, despite the evils of the government it displaced, has set Cuba back. Is this a realistic attitude toward what is happening in Cuba? Do you think that the American attitude toward the Cuban revolution shows a lack of understanding of what a true revolution means?

Buchanan: Our view of Cuba at present is very characteristic of our general view about revolution. This goes back to Harvey Wheeler's remark. We tend not to look at the situation before the revolution, what brought it off, what injustices were there. We simply look at it as to whether it is a good thing now. Even if the country may be in the middle of its struggle we say, well, this isn't as good as we are, when, of course, we should be realizing that a lot of the people are saying that anything is better than the injustice they had lived under, and they mean anything. And they are still looking for the right thing to come out of it.

In a very interesting little book on Cuba, Sartre claims from long acquaintance with Castro that it was a pragmatic revolution, that Castro didn't know what he was aiming at. Of course, Sartre with his existentialism was thinking that this was a revolution almost on the existential metaphysical principle, and was praising it for that.

Lyford: It gets back again, it seems to me, to the fear that the American people have of any sort of civic violence, a fear that perhaps stems from the fact that we are a society that worships equilibrium. We tend to say that we have achieved a balance. People who are rude, who make nasty speeches, who cause strikes, students who might riot or demonstrate in universities on political issues, all of these things are bad for the body politic. When this happens abroad, we are much more disturbed because of our psychological commitment to maintaining stability, whether it is an actual stability or not.

Buchanan: When you consider the sort of mystery there is about civic order, what it is that maintains it, or perhaps more radically what it is that can initiate it and establish it, I suppose there is a good deal of profound wisdom in our fear of revolution. There is something here, the mystery of political community, that we don't really understand well enough to re-establish after we have destroyed it, and therefore we tend to want to hold on to what we have, no matter how bad it is.

Perhaps this would be the point to bring in the notion that is now running strong in the world, stemming from Gandhi more than anyone else but going back to people like Tolstoy, too, that there can be a non-violent revolution. This is not the same thing as saying that we don't want revolutions because they are disorderly. Non-violent civil disobedience can be very disorderly in its effect on the body politic. But it does say that perhaps something can be saved if there isn't too much violence. Violence is an irrational and terrible thing.

It may be that in the next period of the world's history this will be the great discovery, that revolutions can happen without violence if there is enough understanding of what the revolutionary process is. To put it in its most paradoxical form, a legitimate government should be able to find some way of extending its understanding, its intelligence, its reason, and its tolerance to the revolutionary process. I sometimes think that the only future for this country is that it will realize this about the revolutions all over the world and will help to bring a theory of revolution to bear upon our foreign relations. It would be a great thing if we could discover what it is that would bring revolution in as a legitimate process.

Lyford: I'm not sure that we haven't already made great progress in discovering how to build into our own system opportunities for revolutionary activity. Take the case of the Negro, who is attempting by civil disobedience, by passive resistance, sometimes by the courts and the political process, to change the whole fabric of society so that he can take his place in it. This seems to me to show that we can entertain revolutionary activity in our society and that far from being broken apart by it, or being bathed in blood, we find we can proceed in a relatively orderly fashion.

Another revolutionary type of activity perhaps is the sort of thing that took place during the depression, when the threat against established institutions and against the traditional techniques of dealing with economic and social problems was so great that it socialized the outlook of most of our national leaders.

Buchanan: Yes, both are worth remembering. And any success we have had has been due to the fact that somebody took thought in the generation before or perhaps several generations before about the injustices involved and tried, to use the phrase of Roosevelt, to stretch the powers of government to comprehend the injustice and to do something about it.

In that sense, although it is paradoxical to say so, a government can somehow prepare itself for a revolution against itself and gain in depth of understanding and even of justice by doing so. I suppose the ballot is the great classical case. The ballot took the place of a revolution, and now we have regularized it so that every four years in the case of the national government, and in shorter intervals in other cases, we arrange to have a revolution. We kick the rascals out, is the phrase. This is a fairly violent phrase in its origin. It's humorous now because we do it with the usual business about campaigns and elections, but even in these you find the spirit is there. There is a fight.

Fighting is a good word when you use it politically. We're going to fight for this, we're going to kick the rascals out, we're going to get rid of the tyrannies involved in an old regime that has become all tangled up. The ballot is a great example of an orderly process that now manages to use the principle of revolution periodically in political life and community life. This is a great discovery. There must be other things of this sort. This is what we are looking for.

Take the history of labor unions. First in Europe, and then in this country, almost everything that labor did in its initial attempt to organize itself was literally illegal, so that there grew up a tradition among labor people of the threat of illegal activity. In fact, governments responded very often by making laws against what labor unions were doing and thus making them illegal. There was a kind of conspiracy between the two, to recognize an ordeal by combat. We now have, since the New Deal and the Wagner Act, a kind of legitimacy in the labor union. This legality was achieved by illegal activity in the past – steady, persistent, and finally fairly successful.

The interesting thing about all this is that the labor unions, because of their success, have lost a great deal of their revolutionary spirit. And of course we're puzzled by this. Isn't it interesting that the labor movement, having won its battles, should be somehow at an end?

Lyford: But isn't this due, again, to the fact that we are an affluent society, that we don't have the popular discontent that seems to be the necessary ingredient to revolutionary activity? If there is a change, then the union again becomes militant.

Buchanan: I have a German friend who was a fighting socialist all his life, a Marxian; in fact, he boasted some years ago that he was lecturing on eight radio stations in Germany for the socialist party and talking Marxism. One of the ironies of this, he said, was that this, saying he was Marxist, was his way of telling people that he wasn't a Communist because the Communists were no longer Marxian. But he had a kind of crisis within himself when he went back to Germany after the war and discovered that the labor movement, the socialist party in Germany, didn't know what its aims were any more. I asked him, "What went wrong?" And he said, "The wages are too high." Then he laughed and said, "This is a terrible thing. What are we going to do about it now?"

But perhaps we ought to say a word here about a continuing fighting labor movement that exists in this country right now and has us puzzled. Jimmy Hoffa, according to . . .

Lyford: You mean he's a revolutionary?

Buchanan: Yes, according to some academic people who have made a study of Hoffa.

Lyford: But I thought all revolutionists were hungry men, men with small financial resources, who were on the bottom of the heap. Mr. Hoffa rather reverses that description, doesn't he?

Buchanan: Well, he is hungry for power, but he is aware of some injustices still going on. He hasn't quite fallen for his own affluence. The story about him is that his appearance of illegality is an accident or a consequence of the fact that he is still a militant labor leader. He is still fighting for a new kind of union in this country, which is just forming itself.

For instance, the people who have studied this say that there is no case of Hoffa's ever calling an unjustified strike. There is no case of his doing something that is against the interest of the labor movement as a whole.

Lyford: Hoffa is probably a militant labor leader in the sense that he is leading an organized revolution within labor and is seeking control of the labor movement. But he certainly doesn't have the social or economic militancy that would cause him to be looked on as a revolutionary by business. Paul Jacobs, the director of the Center's labor study, said that businessmen find it very easy to deal with Hoffa. They feel that he's not tainted with ideological considerations, with these rather old-fashioned ideas about management's exploiting the workers. He is the kind of man you can sit down at a table with and sign a paper with, and then when the paper is signed he sees that his end of the deal is kept up. I just wonder whether, when you say he is a militant labor leader, this doesn't have to be kept in mind.

Buchanan: What you are saying is reminiscent of conversations between American businessmen and Stalin at one stage. Do you remember? Joe Stalin was someone who could get along with American businessmen but not with American politicians. I don't mean to be saying that American business is socialistic, or labor-minded, or anything like that, but there is a kind of conspiracy here among them against the government. They understand each other when they meet. I should think that a businessman would understand Jimmy Hoffa. He might not approve of all his behavior, because there is a real labor element in Jimmy Hoffa that businessmen wouldn't like, particularly after a certain point.

Lyford: When I look back through the history of the strikes and the violence that took place between labor and management in the latter part of the nineteenth century I get a very different picture of militancy. I remember the Coeur d'Alene Massacre and the shooting of the Governor of Idaho, the violence of the Pullman strike, and the Wobblies and Big Bill Haywood, and the constant beating up of people on both sides. This is the violent kind of revolutionary activity that seems pretty much to have disappeared. But suppose we suddenly became discontented again, suppose the bottom dropped out of the market and unemployment went up to 30 million people. There would be a sudden change. Unions would not be what they are today. They would then become instruments for probably violent social and political and economic reform.

Buchanan: Yes, I suppose this is true. It's rather like what is being said now about the bomb. If we got into all-out war and devastation took place on a large scale, American society would have to be reorganized suddenly and spontaneously. This would be a revolution of a sort. You can say this, of course, about the New Deal, when an emergency precipitated inventive new forms and incipient revolutions were absorbed by the government. But I am not sure that this helps us to understand the principle too well.

Let's see if I can put it another way. Given the situation in the world at present—two-thirds of the people in real poverty and increasing poverty and the other third getting more and more prosperous—it will be necessary, if we are going to be democratic and live a life in common, for the democratic system or the governmental system to extend itself in areas that now seem to us violent, dark, and in some deep way incomprehensible. We are going to have to take a chance. We won't have the blueprints for this; we will have to learn by doing.

A friend of mine in India, a socialist, had a platform for his party some years ago—I believe it still is in effect —that had three things in it. One was the use of the ballot. Another was constructive, voluntary labor; that is, community labor on roads and latrines and things like that.

Lyford: The spade.

Buchanan: The spade. And, third, jail-going. This was the willingness to go to jail for a cause. This man happens to be a Gandhian. He practices civil disobedience. I saw him recently in Athens and he said that he had a record now of nineteen periods in jail, and the last one was not so long ago. What he is doing is trying to get the Congress Party to extend its intelligence, its sympathies, its feelings, far enough to take into account the deep poverty and lethargy and disorder that exist in the Indian villages. This is something that I think we have to understand. We are not so far removed from this problem. If we did understand, we would recognize a lot of what is happening in our country that we don't understand at present.

Lyford: Why don't we have more jail-going of this type? I know we have people who refuse to go under during the air raids, and we have people who climb up on the nuclear submarines at New London and are carted off to jail. But we tend to regard them as isolated fanatics and don't pay much attention to the significance of how they are demonstrating their disagreement. Do you think that a new attitude about going to jail for your beliefs would be a healthy thing in our society?

Buchanan: Well, it is interesting that academic people more than other people in this country are thinking about this at present and, as you know, are doing things about it. College students who are going on freedom rides are going to jail. They know they are going to jail. That's their intention. And in some cases they are saying, I am willing to die for this. This is another point beyond jail-going which has something to do with revolution. Revolutionaries are not very good unless they are willing to die for their cause.

I think we have a long tradition in our past that is not completely dead at present; it's coming to life. And this would be a great thing. We would be joining the human race here a bit. You know, it is a remarkable fact that in Asia, Africa, and probably in South America, which I know less about, you haven't quite got your credentials unless you have a jail record. You are not quite decent. You're not certified as honest unless you have been to jail.

Lyford: In our country if you have a jail record you can't get a job.

Buchanan: That might go along with it. I'm not sure about these people in Asia, Africa, and in South America. I don't know whether they can get other jobs or not. They don't bring that into it because they have a badge of honor. They get a job in a revolution.

Lyford: There is a difference between being thrown in the pokey by a government that is an alien government —being thrown into jail in Indo-China because you are a threat to the French or being thrown into jail in India because you're protesting against the presence of Lord Halifax—and being thrown into jail in the United States because you don't like something that has been done with the national budget. Here you don't have the advantage of being regarded as a protester against foreign intervention or exploitation; you are simply regarded as Thoreau was. Don't most people still think that Thoreau was somewhat of a crackpot?

Buchanan: I think everybody reads his essay on civil disobedience as a piece of American folklore that is pretty distant. They don't take it very seriously. They think of Thoreau as just a type.

Lyford: He's good for a laugh. When Emerson came to see him in jail and said, "What are you doing in there, Henry?" Thoreau looked out through the bars and said, "What are you doing out there, Ralph?"

Buchanan: Yes. That's the proper spirit for these people. And that is more or less what my Indian friend is saying even to me. He's sort of saying, "What are you doing out there?"

I think perhaps we ought to fill in a little of this. There is a theory back of my friend, which is Gandhi's. You must remember that Gandhi was trained in England as a lawyer. Although when he was in London getting his training he had some doubts about the British Empire, when he got to Africa, where he lived for some time, he began taking corporation cases, and he says in his autobiography that one assumption he always made was that the law was just. But the facts he would present very often proved the law unjust. And it was at that point, where the courts in some way fudged the evidence or couldn't take it on, that Gandhi began thinking about civil disobedience.

I think this is a very important point about revolution. That is, in some way the assumption that the law is just gives the revolutionary a kind of floor to operate on, although his intention is to show that in the end the law is not just. A revolution is supposed to bring around the case in such a form that the injustice of the law will appear in the material, in the fact.

Now, my Indian friend is an old friend of Nehru, and it is Nehru who he considers puts him in jail. He assumes that Nehru is the government. And there is a funny story that is told about the two of them. Nehru sends him fruit when he is in jail, it is said. It's a very interesting relation that they have. My friend will never say that this is really true, but he likes to hold this up as a kind of picture of what is going on all the time between the two of them, in which Nehru almost likes him to go to jail because Nehru is an old jailbird too.

Lyford: If this were transferred to the American political scene, where political oppositions would put each other in jail and send each other fruit, we would have quite a revolutionary atmosphere. Of course we do have people who, right along in these post-war years, have gone to jail on a basis of principle, who plead the First Amendment or the Fifth Amendment, and not all of them Communists by any means. But they are subjected to discredit and are generally regarded as ruffians in their efforts to maintain some principle.

What about the West Coast lawyer who crossed out that part of a loyalty oath which said that he would not engage in any effort to overthrow the government by revolution? He justified his crossing out this section by saying, I don't know what this government might be ten years from now. Suppose it turned into a fascist or Communist dictatorship. I would reserve my right to revolt against it. He's talking Lincoln to me.

Buchanan: I wonder about this. I'm thinking of Gandhi now. I wonder if it wouldn't be a better thing to sign the oath and go to jail.

Lyford: Why would you be put in jail by signing it?

Buchanan: Well, what are the evidences for or against your belonging to such-and-such an organization or advocating things the loyalty oath says you shouldn't advocate? They are very difficult to prove. In certain courts, and given a certain temper of the country, you probably couldn't prove your innocence. Perhaps it would be more telling to go to jail and let this be a kind of witness to what has happened, rather than to dodge the oath itself. Although Gandhi knew that certain British laws were not just, he assumed they were. And he found the leverage that proved they weren't just by going to jail himself. There were occasions when the judge said, "Oh, we won't send you to jail now," and Gandhi said, "It's your duty, Mr. Justice, to send me to jail."

This is a technique that is worthy of consideration, and I'm considering it myself.

Lyford: The university would seem to be a potential source of revolutionary ferment in this country. Do you think it might be a channel of revolutionary activity if such activity ever began to be noticeable in our society?

Buchanan: The evidence for the university's being a revolutionary agency in our society is almost nonexistent. I remember, when I was looking up years ago the history of the great disputations in the medieval university, I discovered that there were disputations of the medieval kind in American universities before our Revolution. In fact, our present commencement exercises are imitations of medieval disputations. One of the favorite topics for disputation by students before the assembly and before the president of the college and the faculty in those days was whether people have the right of revolution or not. This was a kind of fermenting doctrine long before the Revolution. But outside of that kind of thing there is very little evidence for our universities ever having that kind of function in our society.

However, there is an interesting unrest on the part of American students at present. When they look at the world outside their own country they are beginning to ask why it is that all revolutionary movements seem to have their home in the universities. And they are beginning to wonder why they don't do this, too. We had a paper read to us here at the Center some months ago by a sociologist at the University of California, who saw some signs in universities of a revival of political thought and political action. But he concluded that it was a false dawn because these students, no matter what they developed in the way of political awareness and commitment at the university, would have no place to go after they graduated. There is no place for them to take on political responsibilities. The present political parties have no ideas. You have to get into it by some other kind of activity which is not really political in its origin. He was saying that these things would therefore have a short life.

On the other hand, a group of younger students who also were here were saying that they weren't afraid of their future in politics. They would take their chances on that. They thought that they ought to be responsible at least when they were students. They were also saying another thing, and that was that they had a responsibility to the university they belonged to to be revolutionary. The education they are getting is dull and conformist and affluent in its source and in its general temper, and this is intolerable to them. They themselves are graduate students who are going to spend the rest of their lives teaching, and they have formed a kind of national organization. It's not a tight organization at all, it's built around a magazine they get out, called New University Thought, in which they are trying to find out these two things: what issues should they as citizens take to be politically important for the country, and, secondly, what can they do about reforming and re-establishing American university education on a good basis.

These boys seemed to me very serious and very able. I was perhaps most impressed by the fact that they could see the difficulties they were in and what the problems were.

Lyford: Against this picture is the system under which attendance at college has become primarily a social function. You go to college in order to be rendered more acceptable. A boy who goes to college with the idea of being tapped by General Electric for a top engineering job some day is not going to get very far if he is known as a troublemaker. He is not going to be acceptable in Grosse Pointe society, perhaps, if he is known to have a jail record or to have had his head cracked when he was demonstrating against bomb tests, or to have been put in jail in the South because he got on a bus with some Negroes.

In contrast to this is the situation at, say, the University of San Marcos in Lima, Peru. The Vice-Rector there told me that not only are the students there in order to train themselves as leaders of their country, and in a very revolutionary atmosphere, but they participate in the administration of the university. This can have bad effects, too, of course. But there is an ideological ferment going on in this university and in others in Latin America that seems to be totally lacking in most of our own universities. How can this be changed? Doesn't it require a basic psychological change in the reasons people go to college?

Buchanan: Yes, and I must say I am not very optimistic about this. Some things have to get worse before they get better. These students that I was talking about are very much aware of what you are talking about. They are also very much aware of what they are being taught as having a curious smearing effect on most of their concerns. Sociology is a specialist in this kind of thing at present. A good many sociologists don't know what the word justice means. They say this. I think they mean it in the sense that they can't find out where it belongs.

It's awfully hard to know what will produce a change because, you know, the natural sciences and the social sciences are big business today, academically speaking. They are very strongly entrenched departments with very high competition in them. Most of what the students are learning in these fields tends to dull their judgment on political issues.

Lyford: Let me make a 180-degree shift and quote Richard Hofstadter, who has said that the real revolutionaries in this country—the people who are intent on overturning the established customs and even the law of our land as it has developed—are not the Leftists but the extreme Right-wing elements. Is it possible that a member of the John Birch Society, who is committed to such techniques as the suppression of opinion with which he doesn't agree and the indoctrination of people in our armed forces with the thesis that democracy is really mobocracy, who believes that the democratic process should be replaced by government by the elite, is it possible that this type of person is the real revolutionary? Isn't he trying to sponsor a revolution or to foment one?

Buchanan: Of course, one of the great puzzling phenomena of our time is that there are revolutions of the Right and of the Left all over the world and that these are in some way organically connected. I don't know what the cause-and-effect relation was between Russia and Germany during the Hitler period, but there are people who say that there is a very strong influence both ways in imitation and in the general common revolutionary notion. If you read the first chapters, the first half actually, of Hitler's Mein Kampf, you get the most drastic critique of the democratic process that you can find almost anywhere.

I think we have to admit that revolutions might happen from any side here. If I am correct, there is a sense of injustice back of the extreme Rightist at present. He is feeling disfranchised in some way. His understanding of things is being violated by what is going on. The general paradoxical situation surrounding the cold war has everybody puzzled. If he is a little simple-minded, he will go off on one simple solution the way Leftists sometimes do on their side.

I think one has to admit that there is a genuine revolutionary base here, although it may be very small. This is a part of the general mutual persuasion that goes on in society, persuasion not always reasonable, sometimes coercive and sometimes very vicious-looking. I know some people would say about the Rightists what some other people say about Russia, that they are stinging us into a kind of life, they're gadflies in the sense that Socrates was. They are making us stand to our colors a bit, making us ask ourselves whether we really believe in free speech among other things, and whether we want them to be allowed to talk. This is a pretty good test of how closely we hold to our principles, it seems to me. I'm not sure that the Birch Society is a bad thing in this sense.

Lyford: I wonder whether there is any real relationship between Leftism and Rightism and the revolutionary temper. It seems to me that we tend to think of a revolutionary as being a Leftist or a Communist.

Buchanan: Let's see if I can restate our problem. Let's say that our society is based upon a revolutionary foundation, that the right of revolution is the fundamental right, as we stated in our Declaration of Independence, and that all the sanctions in our society that hold us together finally run back to this thing. This is nothing more than to say that government rests on the consent of the governed. When you haven't got consent, you go into a constitutional deliberation, a constitutional convention if you like. What is happening now is that we are realizing more than we did a hundred years ago, or whenever it was that things seemed stable, that revolution is at the base of things. We are frightened of it because we are not used to looking at it this way, but actually what is taking place is a new constitutional convention.

As to the Birchites and the Leftists, whoever they are, or whoever else may be around dissenting from our general common life, these people are raising basic questions to be solved. We should be reconsidering our democratic form of government, or our republican form if you want to use the Birch expression for this. It is the duty of people who are concerned about government to respond to these things in as reasonable and sensitive and understanding a way as possible, and, as far as possible, to legitimize these revolutionary activities, including the Birchites.

For about two years now we at the Center have been getting papers from everywhere in the world – some from European writers, some from our own people in the academic community and from people in real politics in this country—and they show very little faith in the democratic process. They are saying that probably we have to give up and settle for an elitist form of government. These are serious people who mourn this for the most part, but they have no answers to such matters as the Birchites are raising. If we haven't got a better answer than we seem to have, then the Birchites had better talk; we'd better have a lot of people talking, and making us all talk better than we have been.

Lyford: I'd like to go back, before we end, to another person whom I think you consider somewhat of a revolutionary. At least he was the great apostle of nullification. Perhaps you would like to give me your feeling about the argument that John C. Calhoun made for the right on the part of the governed to resist arbitrary acts by the government.

Buchanan: Yes. I'm a sort of convinced Calhounist. I had never read him until about ten years ago and I was terribly impressed. I think everyone ought to read his great papers. He was talking for something that bears heavily on what we are saying here. He was stating very simply that the government in the ordinary sense of the word is made in two parts. One is the Constitution and the other is the operating government.

The Constitution rests on unanimous consent. Now one shouldn't take this too literally; it doesn't mean that 100 per cent voted to ratify it. This is far from the truth, as everybody knows. But in a period of years after the ratification of the Constitution it shifted from being a matter of controversy to being a kind of sacred document. Everyone stood by the Constitution as the great glowing truth that we all live by.

The Constitution had provisions of a very general nature, but the operating government is another matter. By the time Calhoun was writing, the government had become a matter of political parties and of majorities winning elections and votes of various kinds. He saw this as a power complex that the Constitution was supposed to hold in check. And when things happen such as making tariff laws, which were a great cause in his time, and things like the threat of emancipation of the Negroes, they stirred him to his toes and made him say that we had better find a way of deciding when we are making politics and when we are making the Constitution. And anything that is of irrepressible importance to even a small minority of the community should be made a constitutional matter and should be decided on constitutional grounds, and unanimously if possible.

Lyford: Within the Senate, the Congress, or . . .

Buchanan: As a matter of fact, he was following the rule for the amendment of the Constitution. Run the required majority up as high as you can—at least three-quarters or more—on issues that touch the minority the way tariffs did or the Emancipation Proclamation might. He said that if you don't do this you have civil war, or revolution. And of course he was all too right. They found no way of considering these issues on any higher level than they considered other things. They didn't make the distinction he wanted. His proposal was that when the government didn't respond to a minority the way it ought to, the minority had a right and a duty to nullify the law that was passed, and this would be a signal to the general populace, the general community, that here was a constitutional question.

Lyford: But the great tragedy was that the nullification procedure was not taken in this sense. It was not taken as a signal that a constitutional issue had been raised of the gravest importance and would have to be decided as a constitutional issue. It was simply considered the opening gun of the civil war.

Buchanan: That's right. He was pleading for what we were talking about earlier, some way of legitimizing the revolution. He was saying that when you get an irrepressible conflict, as he called it, something that is of vital importance to a minority, there should be some formal means to refer it to the right deciding body. This is never done; there is no provision made for such a procedure; hence, the civil war. And I would add what he can't say because he isn't around: hence, American politics ever since.

We have had power politics degrading itself lower and lower in this country because we cannot make this distinction. Power politics takes over and minorities become desperate. Every time we try to solve it, we get into a position that is very like what Calhoun described. We get nullification. The whole question of integration at present has raised this issue again.

Lyford: But the great difference, it seems to me, between the time of Calhoun and the present time with regard to the integration decisions of the Court is that the battle is being fought in the courts and as a constitutional issue rather than as an armed conflict. At least we have progressed that far.

Buchanan: Yes. The judicial system can help in this situation. But Calhoun was asking for more. Let me see if I can put what Calhoun was saying in a nutshell so that it fits with what you were just now saying. I am sure that he would agree with us that political battles are better fought in elections, legislative debates, and by the adversary system in the courts than by armed conflicts. But he found that even in his time many of the political processes had been reduced in practice to power politics, which he identified with the manipulation and coercion of numerical majorities.

He seems to have been willing to tolerate rule by numerical majority in the many urgent matters with which the government has to deal. But for the few important matters that mean life or death for the body politic he proposed the other procedures for which he is famous—as he called them, the procedures of the concurrent majority. Let a minority that sees the injustice and tyranny in a law passed by the numerical majority have the right of negating, vetoing, nullifying, that law as a step in getting it reconsidered as a constitutional question under rules that require deeper deliberation and approximation to unanimity, something that would compare with the verdict of a jury or the resolutions of a Quaker meeting. It seems to me that Calhoun was asking for the invention of an institution or a procedure that would formally admit civil disobedience, not only as a legitimate procedural step in self-government, but also as the pledge of a new faith in deliberation as the method of discovering political truth.

Calhoun's failure to provide the invention that the concurrent majority required, and the persistence of the problems of power politics about which he warned us, these together with the very dramatic fact that the Supreme Court by a unanimous decision raised the unfinished business of the Civil War to a constitutional level, perhaps ought to revive Calhoun's thought about rebellion and revolution in the mid-twentieth century.

Lyford: Well, I think perhaps we have proved that we do have a number of incipient revolutions taking place within our own country; we do have some institutions that could prove susceptible to acting as instruments of revolution. Perhaps America is not as completely removed from the meaning of the word or the practice of the act as we thought when we began our discussion.

Buchanan: Perhaps we ought also to keep reminding ourselves that America has now joined the world and that the problems of revolution and order in the United Nations continually throw light on our domestic scene.

July, 1962

Other Conversations in This Series

The American Character

. . . excerpts from remarks by 28 participants in the Center's conference inaugurating its Study of the American Character

The Political Animal

Robert M. Hutchins with Joseph P. Lyford

A CONTRIBUTION TO
THE DISCUSSION OF
THE FREE SOCIETY

A NEW PARTNERSHIP

JOBS

National Alliance of Businessmen

Business and Government Combine Forces to Attack the Problem of the Hard-Core Unemployed

J
O

B
S

THE PROBLEM

Today's chronically unemployed, unlike those of the 30's, are not merely the victims of an economic cycle. They are the permanently poor. Their plight is accentuated rather than eased by America's growing affluence. They sink deeper into the sediment of society while scores of millions of their neighbors are productively employed and thousands of new jobs are created each day. Their situation does not get better with the passage of time. It gets worse.

Hard-core poverty is a heavy burden for the country. Each year billions of dollars are lost in income and spent on welfare because of unemployment. But there is a greater cost, a human one.

Lacking job skills, work experience, education or social acceptance, the hard-core unemployed remain jobless and hopeless. And so do their children. And their children's children.

For these people, the American dream — that everyone with a strong back and a willing heart can get a job and progress to the limit of his ability — is a hollow one. Its echoes produce human despair and are a primary cause of the physical deterioration of our cities.

The urban crisis intensifies during the summer when schools close and millions of young people throng the streets of the inner-city with no constructive outlet for their energies. Many of these youth are poor, many are Negro or other minority group members, and they are trapped in the heat and the squalor of the nation's ghettos.

The seriousness of the problem has led government and business to explore new roads to manpower use. The National Alliance of Businessmen — the JOBS program — is a major step in this effort.

In the past year, thousands of private firms working with the Alliance have successfully hired and trained hard-core people for work previously performed only by those already educated and trained.

But the Alliance is a continuing effort, for thousands upon thousands of hard-core unemployed people, whose potential is just as great, still lack the opportunity to use and develop their ability.

THE PROGRAM

Six out of seven jobs in the United States and the knowledge and ability to train people for these jobs exists in private industry.

With this in mind, the President proposed a partnership between government and business, a partnership joining industry resources for hiring and training and government resources for identifying and locating the unemployed to fill these jobs.

Many who are presently unemployed can become productive members of our economy by simple changes in existing entry level standards. But many others require special programs in recruiting, training, counseling, etc., which add substantially to normal industrial personnel costs.

To underwrite these costs, Congress has appropriated funds to reimburse industry for the extraordinary costs of hiring and training the hard-core. The mechanism is a simple contract with the Department of Labor.

The National Alliance of Businessmen has a single purpose: to solicit, recruit for, and fill, jobs in the business sector for the hard-core unemployed. The Alliance directed its initial effort to the nation's fifty largest metropolitan areas.

In each of these target cities, the National Alliance of Businessmen has a full-time team of volunteer executives, directed by a metropolitan chairman who is appointed by the President, businessmen loaned by their companies, and a representative of the Department of Labor.

In each city the Alliance:

- Conducts an annual pledge campaign, contacting companies directly, or through existing local organizations, to persuade them to provide jobs for the disadvantaged.
- Works with local public and private organizations to identify and recruit disadvantaged persons to fill these jobs.
- Expedites contracts so companies may receive government funds to offset the extraordinary costs of training programs.
- Works with companies to help provide training programs for first-line and other supervisors that will improve retention rates.

Providing jobs and training for the hard-core unemployed will not by itself end poverty in this nation. Employment is only part of the answer for disadvantaged and minority groups. But it is an indispensable part of the final solution, and it is the part that private business, through NAB, is best equipped to provide. It has been abundantly clear, in the Alliance's first year, that the American business community can and will rise to this challenge with vigor and determination.

JOBS

National Alliance of Businessmen

726 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20235

HRDI

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

JOB TRAINING • EMPLOYMENT • UPGRADING

(10 copies

One of the most difficult periods for a new employee is his or her first days at work. Fitting into the company routine, finding the way around the plant or office, timing the coffee and lunch breaks, discovering the best bus route or fitting into a carpool and, above all, learning the new job, are critical issues in job adjustment. This is the make-or-break time, and even for people with extensive work experience it is a trying time. How much more difficult this period is for a person with little or no work experience and especially a disadvantaged hard-core worker.

In order to assist the new employees in this job adjustment, the Department of Labor is developing a program for older rank-and-file workers to be Buddies to the newly hired disadvantaged.

The Buddy system is one facet of the total JOBS program designed to train and provide steady employment for the country's hard-core unemployed. In support of that broad objective, the Buddy system was conceived in order to assist recruits in acclimating themselves to their new work environment through the counseling and guidance of co-workers or peers. In the past, Buddy programs have been found successful in similar applications and it is expected that assigning a man, experienced in shop routines and workday problems, to assist each hard-core recruit should contribute significantly to keeping the disadvantaged permanently employed.

Two consulting firms have been contracted to implement a pilot Buddy project in five selected cities. Greenleigh and Associates, with the aid of the

What would 94P
on edl level?

of the AFL-CIO's Community Services unit and in conjunction with each city's central labor body and all of the participating unions, are to organize and coordinate the project. The Radet Corporation will design and conduct workshops for training Buddies in their role as advisors. Both consultants will work together closely to implement the overall system and to evaluate the effectiveness of the pilot project.

Development of the entire system will proceed through five distinct stages:

(1) After selection of the pilot cities, separate meetings for local labor and management leaders will be arranged for the purpose of gaining program acceptance and support. The meeting should be attended by unions and companies invited to join the Buddy program. An attempt will be made to impress these representatives with the meaning and potential of the program and make them cognizant of the benefits, such as lower worker turnover rates, which can accrue to participants.

(2) Following these meetings, a joint conference of labor and management will be held in each of the five cities. During this one-half day orientation period, a description and explanation of the Buddy training program will be presented and a further effort will be directed toward gaining general support for the system. The full cooperation of labor and management at all levels can greatly facilitate the organization and implementation of the entire system.

(3) Throughout the first two stages, and for three weeks following the conclusion of the joint conference, Greenleigh and Associates will be working to establish training schedules, to arrange "released time" for Buddy trainees, to choose alternative training sites, to select and recruit the Buddy trainees themselves, and to coordinate efforts in each city. It is during this stage that the information and expertise of the AFL-CIO's participating union leadership should prove particularly useful.

(4) Actual training of the Buddies, who are to assist the hard-core recruits both inside and outside the shop, will be launched as soon as all arrangements and selections have been completed. The responsibility for designing the training program rests with The Rodet Corporation. As presently conceived, the purpose of the training is to assure the effectiveness of the entire Buddy system. It has three broad objectives:

a. Obtain acceptance of the Buddy role, and develop at least an elementary skill in carrying out that role in handling the various problem situations likely to arise in the Buddy's relationships with the newly hired person;

b. Develop skill in dealing with the Buddy's co-workers when such problem situations inoolve this "peer group"; and

c. Develop skill in dealing with the Buddy's supervisor and shop steward when problem situations involve them.

Each workshop will prepare from 9 to 21 trainees over a period of 18 hours (two to three days). The methods of training will draw from techniques familiar in adult education and industrial training: those, such as role playing, which involves the participant in relevant activity rather than in purely passive listening; and those techniques which place the trainee in situations similar to those which he is likely to encounter on the job. In most cases, the training can help the trainee see that there are several possible ways of reacting constructively to a given situation likely to arise within the shop. The training can also help him see which ways of reacting are destructive.

Contact be 2 initial training sessions (small groups) & then 1 or 2 follow ups.

The trainer will return to each city within three weeks for a brief refresher meeting with the trainees. The value of this follow-up meeting is greatest for those Buddies who have been assigned a disadvantaged worker since the completion of the workshop.

Consultants relation to training?

(5) The fifth and final state of the pilot Buddy project is an evaluation of the total system's effectiveness. The Radet Corporation will attempt to assess the success of the training program. A field investigator will visit each city within four to five weeks following the workshop for individual interviews with each trainee, his supervisor, and the disadvantaged worker assigned to the Buddy trainee. During these interviews, the investigator will collect the data necessary to determine the impact of training, the degree to which the trainee has carried out the Buddy role, and the effects on the newly hired disadvantaged worker.

The Radet Corporation also proposes to collect certain impressions from the trainer, trainee, and other observers during the training period. These impressions will be used to establish how completely the trainees are involving themselves in the Buddy program.

In addition, Greenleigh and Associates will also conduct an evaluation of the acceptance and usefulness of the overall system. Attempts will be made to measure the variety of approaches that have developed in the five cities, to categorize elements of success and to identify problem areas and critical issues in the Buddy system for the purpose of eliminating or mitigating the difficulties and standardizing the successes. The final evaluation and report of each consultant will recommend measures which can be invoked to increase the overall effectiveness of the system and to streamline its implementation in additional cities.

How far should Consultant go beyond Buddy System — e.g. have Buddy & Union call Stewards' meeting with Consultant participating
Any "special" work with new employees other than Buddy?

What Compensation or other incentive for Buddies?

HRDI

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20006 • TELEPHONE 638-3912

BOARD OF TRUSTEES
GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board

I. W. ABEL
JOSEPH BEIRNE
MAX GREENBERG
PAUL JENNINGS
JOSEPH KEENAN
JACK LYONS
WM. F. SCHNITZLER
PETER SCHOEMAN
P. L. SIEMILLER
DAVID SULLIVAN
HUNTER WHARTON

OFFICERS
JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President
HAROLD JACK
Secretary-Treasurer
MERLIN L. TAYLOR
Executive Director

HRDI OPERATIONS MANUAL

POSITIONS UNDER THE HRDI

The HRDI is authorized to establish two positions in 50 of the major cities in the United States. One position is that of the area manpower representative, the other is the secretary to the representative.

PAY

Depending upon the date that area representatives and secretaries enter on duty with the HRDI, the initial period that will elapse prior to the issuance of a paycheck will be usually two weeks or in some cases three weeks. The normal policy of the HRDI in holding back checks is five days or one working week.

Paychecks for the field staff are mailed out of the national office on Wednesday of every other week. Depending upon the geographical location of the office, checks are mailed either by regular delivery or airmail. It is hoped that these checks will arrive by Friday.

In the event a paycheck is not received after the expiration of a reasonable time (Wednesday of the following week), notify HRDI in Washington. Under normal circumstances, a new check will be issued by the secretary-treasurer and a stop order issued on the lost check. Should you receive the lost check after receipt of the substitute check, you are instructed to tear off the signature of the secretary-treasurer, Harold Jack, and return the check to the national office.

HOLIDAYS

The employees of the HRDI are to adhere to the authorized holidays of the Central Labor Body in their respective communities.

PAY DEDUCTIONS

Tax deductions, including state and local where required by law, will be reflected on your salary check stub. Specific written authorization is required for any other form of saving or deduction.

WORKING TIME

Official working hours of the HRDI field offices will adhere directly to the accepted working hour schedule of the Central Labor Body in their area. In the event the Central Labor Body does not have a full time executive staff, the hours of work shall commence at 8:00 A.M. and end at 5:00 P.M.

VACATION

The policy of the HRDI in the establishment of paid vacation is based on the AFL-CIO allowance of two weeks or ten working days. Each employee of the HRDI will accrue 6.6 hours each month (based on 80 hours representing two full weeks). Each employee may have vacation time made available to them upon written approval by the executive director.

All accumulated vacation should be used within the calendar year or for the first year of operation of the HRDI. All vacation accrued during 1968-69 must be used by December 31, 1969. Each employee is cautioned to record very carefully all time spent outside the official capacity of the HRDI. Periodically, audits will be made of all offices.

ABSENCES

Employees of the HRDI may be granted absence from the official duties of the HRDI to conduct personal business up to one and a half hours per month. Any absences in excess of two hours should be charged to vacation.

SICK LEAVE

The HRDI policy on sick leave is intended to adhere to that policy of the AFL-CIO: no specific number of hours for sick leave is accrued on an annual basis. Employees are expected to use official sick leave time very prudently. However, if absence indicates abuse on a wide scale, this policy will be rescinded.

REMOVAL FOR CAUSE

Occasionally, in the operation of a program such as the HRDI, it becomes necessary for the removal of an employee (technical or clerical) because of non-performance of duty or adverse activity within the community. When and if an employee is being considered for termination, two weeks notice will be given of the intention of the HRDI to carry out the termination provision. In the event the employee makes every effort to correct the deficiency, the termination procedure may be suspended. All clerical terminations will be made in accordance with the contract which is being negotiated between the Office and Professional Employees International Union and HRDI. Appeal procedure is provided for in the contract. All technical employees shall have the right of appeal to the president of HRDI and/or the board of trustees.

AN EMPLOYEE'S DECISION TO LEAVE THE HRDI

Each employee of the HRDI who decides to leave the organization for personal reasons or improvement must provide the HRDI with a minimum of two weeks written notice. Additional time and consideration should be given so that a substitute may be selected and orientation given while the office is still operational.

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Special attention should be paid to the Special Provision which is Clause No. 6 of the HRDI Contract concerning political activity:

SPECIAL PROVISION

CLAUSE NO. 6 POLITICAL ACTIVITY

"No funds hereunder shall be used for any partisan political activity or to further election or defeat of any candidate for public office; nor shall they be used to provide services, or for the employment or assignment of personnel in a manner supporting or resulting in the identification or such purposed with (1) any partisan or non-partisan political activity or any other political activity associated with a candidate, or contending faction or group, in an election for public or party office, (2) any activity to provide voters or prospective voters with transportation to the polls or similar circumstances in connection with any such election, or (3) any voter registration activity."

INSURANCE COVERAGE

The Employees Welfare Plan of the AFL-CIO is the plan for the HRDI. A booklet describing the benefits has been sent to each employee under separate cover. The insurance is effective 30 days after the date of employment. All claim forms will be provided by the national office and should be returned thereto when a claim for benefits is being submitted.

SURVIVORS

In order for survivors to receive monies owed to an HRDI employee who is deceased or incapacitated, the survivor or beneficiary must make a written request for such payment. This is intended to apply to all unpaid salary, travel reimbursement, miscellaneous expenditures, unpaid vacation (accrued during the calendar year), fractional deductions on U.S. Savings Bonds and any other category that the deceased may have monetary reimbursement due as a result of official business of the HRDI.

HRDI employees should make survivors or beneficiaries aware of the following procedures:

1. A written claim for the benefits described above must be submitted.

2. A copy of the certified death certificate must accompany the claim.

3. The claim and certificate must be addressed as follows:

Survivor's Benefit
Human Resources Development Institute
Office of the Executive Director
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

EAL
393-4000

8

EAL Nat'l
9:50 — 11:28

12:25 —
11:40
9:15 — ~~PA~~
Clinkett

DL
296-7000

This section describes the disadvantaged and the problems they face. It discusses their physical needs, their attitudes and feelings, their mobility, their educational limitations, lack of job skills and limited employment experience, problems arising from lack of well-formed job habits and attendant problems of personal finance.

The section also discusses the kind of transformation that frequently takes place when disadvantaged individuals get and hold real jobs. It also deals with problems arising during the period of transformation.

These pages were originally developed for the use of employers who take part in the NAB/JOBS program. They are included here for background use by instructors in the Buddy program.

I. WHO ARE THE DISADVANTAGED?

The disadvantaged are known by many names for many reasons. They are not only minority citizens but represent all ethnic groups. They are often identified as our jobless, our poor, our under-educated, our young, our old. Basically, an individual is considered to be disadvantaged if he or she is a member of a poor family, unemployed, underemployed or not seeking work but should be. They will also possess one or more of the following characteristics:

a. School dropout

b. Special employment problems including being of a minority

c. Under 22 years of age

d. Over 44 years of age

e. Handicapped

It has been found after reviewing thousands of people who have passed through or who are enrolled in other programs, that many possess one or several of the above characteristics. A profile of the typical hard-core trainee is as follows:

Has been unemployed for eighteen months;

Never received intensive skill training;

Parents were unskilled;

Lives with one and one-half families;

Needs eye glasses, dental work;

Has seen a physician only once in his life;

Is married with three children;

Has no transportation;

Has a sixth-grade education;

Has had some contact with the law, and has spent at least 30 days in jails.

WHAT ARE THEIR NEEDS?

1. Physical

It has been found that they need a thorough physical examination. As mentioned above, they have seen a doctor only once in their lives. There is much evidence to indicate that for some, glasses will need to be prescribed and dental treatment required. No doubt for some, the examination will reveal the need for innoculations and corrective surgery before a person could go to work. Remedial medical and dental care may extend into the training period and consequently the employer must be prepared to allow time off for this essential need.

2. Attitudes and Feelings

The attitudes and feelings of some of the disadvantaged may pose a problem to an employer at the time of recruitment and the early training. For the most part these are conflicting attitudes or feelings rather than negative or positive ones. They have their origins in the trainees' personal history of failure to find opportunities for job, personal, and social satisfactions. The trainee may be somewhat cautious of taking you at your word, distrustful when you tell him about the opportunities obtainable for him by working for you, and lacking in confidence in his ability to satisfy you as an employer. However, we have found that these characteristics of the trainee change as he is given the kind of training he needs to succeed on the job. Step by step success in learning your job requirements will build the attitudes necessary for the trainee to retain the job.

3. Transportation

Except for those trainees who can conveniently walk to work, travel to the place of employment may present a problem. Until this problem is solved it will be a major (but not the only) cause for tardiness and absences from work. It is not a problem of the trainee alone because it involves his family too. Employers must be prepared, through counseling and other assistance if necessary, to assist the trainee in learning how to solve his personal and family transportation problem so that he can meet his work schedule.

4. Education

Additional or remedial education often must be provided for the unemployed. Almost all programs contain a job-related basic education or communicative skills program component in them, because most hard-core:

a. Have a tested third to sixth grade reading level;

b. Have a tested fourth-grade math level;

c. Because of (a), few can speak or write with clarity, organization, and meaning at more than a primary school level; and

d. Few can fill out employment forms, or follow written job instructions.

5. Job Skills

The work history of the unemployed usually shows temporary work at temporary jobs requiring little if any skill. Such jobs have not helped the person learn either technical skills or steady work habits. A few possess technical skills learned in military service but these are not always directly applicable to their local community's industrial needs. They all need technical training that is specific to the job for which they are hired. Industry has demonstrated its capacity to teach technical skills to employees, and the unemployed have demonstrated that when modern training technology is used in training programs they can and do learn necessary job skills.

6. Work Habits

Job training for the unemployed requires training in work habits. Employers cannot assume that habits of living as unemployed persons will disappear the moment unemployment ends and employment begins. Habits of punctuality, regular attendance, attention to safety requirements, care of tools and equipment, and other job related behaviors must be taught. Learning such required behaviors takes time, the same as learning technical skills takes time. Recent data from on-the-job training programs indicate that training in both work habits and in job skills is required for the disadvantaged population.

7. Personal Finances

In the absence of steady income at a living wage the personal finances of many unemployed persons are in disarray. A new job immediately presents a problem of money management on which the employee needs practical counseling. Creditors may press for wage garnishment while acute personal and family needs oftentimes will lead to unwise credit buying. It is to the interest of you as employer as well as to your trainee to provide counseling and other assistance lest these money crises drive the trainee from his job.

II. WORK POTENTIALS OF THE DISADVANTAGED PERSON

Evidence is accumulating rapidly from the private sector that when a real job, at a living wage, with equal opportunity for advancement, plus effective on-the-job training is offered members of this population, they can and do achieve as well as persons from other population groups. Their goals are the same as those of any other group; their potential capabilities for productive work too are the same.

The job expectations of the disadvantaged person, however, may be very limited because of previous failure to find the quality of employment which you will provide. Many have been involved in menial, short-term jobs; some have been involved in other publicity-sponsored programs which failed to equip them for, or to provide them with, a real job. This leaves them with much distrust, uncertainty and unwillingness to experience still another failure in the world of work. These limiting expectations do yield, fortunately, to feelings of confidence and trust when the job situation warrants such positive feelings.

The dress, speech, and personal appearance of the disadvantaged reflects the sub-cultures to which they belong. This is particularly true of those whose identifications are with the Black and the Mexican-American sub-cultures. It is apparent, too, that a very powerful motivation among these ethnic minorities is to find secure and meaningful places in the occupational systems of society. We have found that they will modify any personal behavior, speech, or dress to meet objective job requirements. Subjective requirements which they will interpret as rejection of their cultural values will be resisted. In this regard, too, the disadvantaged member of the ethnic minority is like any of us who take pride in our cultural values.

A major problem in training members of ethnic minorities is to establish mutually understandable person-with-person communications. Words and gestures mean different things in different cultures. It is necessary for everyone who interfaces directly with the trainee to understand his own and the trainee's communication behavior, both in speech and action. His own awareness of his speech and vocabulary limitations will cause him to be uncertain of himself. His cultural limitations, as they relate to this kind of situation, will cause him to be unsure of you.

These pages offer a discussion guide for the film, The Way Out. You may want to use the questionnaire that is included, or you may find an unstructured discussion following the film preferable.

There is no need to obtain written answers to the questions, but you may want to write them on the blackboard as you develop answers through group discussion.

MOVIE DISCUSSION

You probably have some reactions to the movie you just saw. You will want to discuss your reactions to the movie and the people in it with the people in your group. Here is a list of the people you saw:

white Kentuckian; said the supervisor is the key grey haired Negro woman - "didn't like her face either"

heavy Spanish-American of Indian appearance, "It starts to get into your head"

young Negro girl who doesn't go to appointments anymore

young Negro with goatee and black shirt; married at 18

Menominee Indian man who couldn't get an apprenticeship

Chippewa Indian girl from reservation

young Negro who can make more money hustling

Appalachian white man, "only second grade, but I've learned a lot"

young Negro who hit foreman young white Appalachian man in black shirt young Negro with moustache and white turtleneck, "My family's my incentive" young Spanish American, "They call you 'greaser'" white girl with high pitched voice, "You know, he kept saying 'speed it up' "

Single out some of the individuals who made an impression on you one way or the other, and then answer some of these questions:

1. How did you react to them as individuals? as a group?

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

2. Would you want them as co-workers?
   Yes No

3. What would it take to make them productive workers?

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

4. How do you think other workers would react to them? Helpfully? or Critically? or Both? Discuss.

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

FOR: Discussion Leaders

SUBJECT: Workshop on "Policy and Relationships"

The following are possible points for discussion. You are free to use these or any others which bring out the central points of individual cases.

It is not essential that all cases be discussed.

In each case where policy is known, it is essential that this be clearly understood and that expected long term relationships are understood.

CASE #1

1. What strategies would you employ to make contact with NAB, explain the program and enlist their cooperation? Discuss local, state and national officials who are familiar with program and can back you up.

2. Is the information requested available to the public?

3. What other sources may have the information?

4. Discuss available resources in a community -- recruiting organizations? Possibilities include YMCA-YWCA extension programs for hard-core youth, Neighborhood Youth Corps' out-of-school population, CEP and New Careers. HRDI personnel should meet with representatives from all the manpower programs and request referral services. Private voluntary agencies, such as Catholic Charities and United Jewish Appeal, can also be enlisted.

CASE #2

1. What relationship can be encouraged which will enable action to take place?

2. What reassurances can you provide to both the leadership in apprenticeship programs and CLC that you are not and will not overstep into their authority?

3. How can you successfully stress that these programs will not infringe upon internal union activities nor hinder apprenticeship programs?

4. How can you elicit their cooperation?

CASE #3

1. As an HRDI representative, should you be trapped into playing one side against the other?

2. Can you accept a position such as the one described here without discussion with the Central Labor Council?

3. What contacts can you make with Black leadership to determine status of labor council in the community and what recommendations the leadership would make on your participation? What resources can you tap to make such contact possible?

4. Can you find the spokesmen for this community? Perhaps you can schedule a private meeting with church leaders or community organization leaders within the ghetto at a place within the ghetto so that you can listen to that point of view and apply what you hear to the solution of the problem?

5. What can you do to modify the attitude of the Model City director toward the local labor group?

CASE #4

1. What is the policy on labor standards for hard-core new hires?

2. Discussion point: Importance of separating collective bargaining issues from manpower functions.

3. Discussion point: Successful hiring programs are those which have involved union and management from inception through training into implementation.

CASE #5

1. Is this a significant break-through for the HRDI area manpower representative? Or is it an activity he should refuse? Or one he should discourage? Why?

NO.

REPORT WRITING WORKSHOP

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

ACTIVITY RECORD & REPORT

SUBMITTED BY JOHN DOE AFL-CIO MANPOWER REPRESENTATIVE

CITY Podunkville STATE Alaska DATE February 20, 1969

Union	Fed.	State	Area	Comp.	Other	Description or Remarks
4						International & District labor leaders in regard to Labor survey
1				4		Met with American Airlines representatives, Mr. Richard Wright, counselor; Mr. LeRoi Jones, personnel director; and Mr. C.C. Cummings, personnel relations - and Machinists Local #1778 President Howard Hughes - buddy system was discussed. Meeting lasted from 10:30 a.m. to 11:45 a.m.
	2		5		12	Attended day long program initiating election campaign for Model Cities Board. Meeting well attended by mayor, federal manpower representatives, representative of Department of Labor and various other dignitaries.
	1					St. Louis Director AIC
1						Met with Mr. Ralph Yarbough Business Agent for IBEW Local #123. He informed me that his company was negotiating a contract with the Labor Department that would include over 100 trainees.
			1			Community Service Agency representative in regard to Buddy Program.
			1			Met with Mr. Longworth Metro Director regarding problems of lists and hiring dates.

NO.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

ACTIVITY RECORD & REPORT

SUBMITTED BY AFL-CIO MANPOWER REPRESENTATIVE

CITY STATE DATE

Union	Fed.	State	Area	Comp.	Other	Description or Remarks
				1		Met with Everett Smith to discuss change in Buddy Program as was brought out in Denver. Will redesign our program to that effect.
						Spent day in office contacting various Business Agents in regard to survey of unions required by national office.
						Orientation Conference, Cleveland, Ohio.
1						Met with Mr. John McHenry, Business Manager of Hatters' Union. I informed Mr. McHenry that all garment industry unions cannot participate in manpower programs. Received this information from USES and NAB.
						Spent three hours writing report.

TO: Discussion Leaders

SUBJECT: Ideas for Workshop on "Dealing With Our Contacts"

CASE STUDY: JOBS IN INDUSTRY FOR THE HARD-CORE UNEMPLOYED

I. In January 1968, the Mayor of New Britain, Connecticut convened a conference for the purpose of discussing what could be done in the field of job opportunities for the hard-core unemployed. Representatives of industry, labor, civic organizations, clergymen and city officials participated.

The conference had no structure, no program, no planning.

Discussion

1. Should hard-core be represented at such a conference, either through the local community action group or other poverty organizations?

2. Isn't this a superficial way to approach the problem of employing hard-core persons?

3. What kind of structure or hidden agenda, or open agenda, would you prepare to handle a conference of this type? Would you leave it open-ended or would you provide for a course of action?
Would geography make a difference in how you handle the planning for such a conference? What do we mean by geography and how would you plan to accomodate cultural differences based on geography?

4. Would you use communicators, i.e., public relations personnel or community relations personnel in planning for such a conference? What do you visualize as their role?

5. Do you agree that "it is important" to upgrade persons presently employed by different employers, and the hiring of minority groups, in the 'so-called' unemployed status to fill jobs which required less skill to perform? If you agree with this statement, why do you? If you disagree, at what point do you disagree?

6. What do you feel should be the objectives of a program to hire hard-core people?

II. As a result of a telephone conversation with a corporate official in his plant, Mr. Morris met with officials of his local union to see what could be done about employing hard-core persons.

The union president was very enthusiastic about the idea. Other union officials were skeptical. But a tentative plan did develop and Mr. Morris was to back-stop the program as a follow-up person.

1. Drawbacks are generally related to an unwillingness to accept. What problems do you see inherent in a plan to employ hard-core persons, if you are a union official? Do you challenge non-acceptance on the part of union personnel, work around it, or develop an alternate plan? How would you proceed to involve union officials in a productive program?

2. Up until this point, the plan to hire unemployed people seems to be simply an idea. It has no formal structure and has not yet involved peer employees, or company supervisors. Do you agree that action can take place without formal planning as Mr. Morris indicates: What is the degree of success you can anticipate for a program of this type? What components would you add to ensure effectiveness or success?

3. What weaknesses do you recognize in Mr. Morris' description of his meeting with union officials? With representatives of the company? What strengths could Mr. Morris or you gain from the Office of Economic Opportunity? How would you allocate the resources there?

4. Do you feel that Mr. Morris handled the preliminary discussions effectively? Would you have made any changes? If so, what changes? If not, why not?

III. In July, seven months after the initial conference, the company hired seven young men from the poverty community. They had poor personal records and a poor employment record.

Mr. Morris began working with them and helping them and discovered that they needed support far beyond the minimal counselling he was able to offer. Plant workers were resentful of any personal interest which the young men seemed to need. A special method had to be developed to provide assistance for thses young men.

1. How were the young men recruited? Can we make some assumptions here? What would be the best way to recruit such employees? Would you require a screening process? What requirements would you list for employment of hard-core?

2. What kind of orientation was provided to the new employees? Were they introduced to plant procedures? Were peer employees involved in seeing that the young men's experience on the job was a successful one?

3. If the purpose of the program was to hire the hard-core, and once hired the young men immediately got into trouble, doesn't that prove that people from this sector don't want to work?

4. The jobs provided for these young men were mainly clean-up detail. A job should be enough. What's wrong with that assumption?

5. Do you find any differences between this population and other working groups?

6. How do you define hard-core?

7. What positive aspects of the life of a young man from this population can you build on as you assist companies and unions work out training programs?

8. How would you help these young men become acculturated to the world of work? What techniques would you employ to neutralize peer workers, supervisors and union members in their antagonisms toward newly-employed workers from hard-core areas? Do these same antagonisms exist toward new workers from normal backgrounds?

9. Is the experimental system which Mr. Morris describes enough of a plan to handle these new employees? What would you add or subtract to make their first work experience a successful one?

10. Why does Mr. Morris persist in calling the new employees "boys"? Perhaps the selection of a liasion person between the union, company and employee should be made more judiciously. Do you agree? Disagree ? And if so, why?

11. What is wrong with the statement: "I made recommendations to the people in charge and the entire problem was handled by...assistant employee relations director of the company?"

IV. Mr. Morris considered the program successful because the company showed an interest in the people and problems of the community. He credits the company with its perception in recognizing that it needed to hire "these fellows" to do certain jobs. He offers no criticism of the supervisors or peers who exhibited antagonisms toward the new employees. And he claims that the young men had good job experiences.

1. Of the seven young men who were hired at the beginning, five remained through the summer? Should a follow-up on any dropouts in programs with which you will be connected? If you do, what kind of insights do you hope to gain from such a study?

2. Apparently the plant did provide job opportunities for hard-core employment. In your opinion, did the plant do its part to help the situation? How would you establish a situation where the plant could more equitably do its share?

3. What kind of feedback would you establish to encourage the plant to do more?

4. If company representatives were informed of the diluted effect of their program, would they be motivated to provide better jobs and for longer periods of time?

5. Why does the writer apologize for the antagonisms? Does such apology establish a positive environment for the world of work?

6. Would the supervisors give the young men who worked for them good references for future employment?

7. What system would you establish to ensure some impact on the worker as well as on the supervisor?

8. What does the writer mean when he says that the young men earned money with which they could buy some of the good things in life which they were never able to enjoy before. Why does the writer assume that young men from hard-core backgrounds want to earn a few dollars so that they can run out and buy good things? Doesn't that put a superficial tag on the whole concept of hiring hard-core persons? And even if that's what the young men wanted to do, should this be the rationale for hiring the hard-core?

9. Does he have any facts as to what happened to these employees once the summer was over? What skills did they learn from their employment experience? Was any plan created by the city, which initiated the idea, to continue the program or plan for its expansion?

10. How would you arrange for a program's continuation or expansion so as to increase the benefits accrued to the individual, to the plant, to the community? Do you see the union role here as an activator?

V. This was not Mr. Morris' only contact with hiring disadvantaged persons. In April, 1968, Mr. Morris worked with the neighborhood services program of OEO and he referred Negroes and Puerto Ricans to the company for employment. The company has also hired persons with criminal records.

Mr. Morris works closely with the company and with the the anti-poverty agency in following up these employees and in providing them with minimal supportive services.

He also outlines some procedures which should be followed if companies are to have successful programs for hiring hard-core persons.

1. Mr. Morris seems to be a social worker in disguise. How would you strengthen his hand in dealing with agencies, companies and unions in developing hard-core employment programs? What relationships would you establish if you were in his shoes to ensure equal employment opportunities?

2. What reinforcement measures would you advocate to assist hard-core persons to come to work on time and be responsible employees? If you were in charge of the personnel office at a plant and you had hired some workers from this social level, what kind of support would you provide?

3. What overtures would you make to management and union personnel so that jobs would be upgraded to provide meaningful employment at a decent salary?

4. What assistance can unions give to management to see that work-experience does have a payoff, to the plant, to the union, to the individual and through him to his community?

5. What tradeoffs would you make with local unions, supervisory personnel and corporate representatives to ensure program quality and effectiveness?

6. How do you react to the obvious featherbedding which Mr. Morris believes will provide the plant with adequate protection on the production line?

7. By linking the Ford Motor Company with the need to hire five persons to get enough production from two workers, doesn't Mr. Morris leave an impression that management is actually participating in such a program? As labor representatives do you find such a program adequate to the need? Would you advocate it to a company owner? If not, why not? What alternatives would you recommend?

8. What support staff would you recommend to plant owners? What roles would they play? What services would they provide? Based on this discussion, could you draw up a tentative table of organization for in-plant support, staff needs and lines of responsibility?

9. What sensitivities and accomodations would you recommend as part of an employment package for the hard-core?

10. What modifications and relaxations would you prescribe in employment practices to assist the hard-core in, first, employability and, second, retention?

11. How would you use volunteers and professionals in support programs?

12. What recommendations would you make to your union, to local unions, to local industries to encourage their participation in such programs?

13. Do you believe your recommendations or are you accomodating to them?

WORKSHOP CASES
DEALING WITH OUR CONTACTS

The following cases are adaptations of actual situations reported from the field. They raise important questions of policies or relationships. In each case, what do you see as the main question(s) and how would you handle them?

1. Having problems getting lists of employers from NAB and the Building Trades Council apprenticeship programs are encountering difficulties locating recruits. Consulting USES and LEAP.

2. Met with Central Labor Council and I am finding that the few unions that have apprenticeship programs are very protective of them and somewhat resent HRDI's efforts in the area. Additionally, I'm under pressure to clear practically everything I do with CLC's executive secretary. This is beginning to hamper my activity.

3. Met with local director of Model Cities program and was invited to participate in drive to elect local board. The director suggested that since labor had such a poor image in the black community, if I involved myself with this effort, then my job would be a lot easier in the community.

I asked if he had been in contact with the Central Labor Council to determine if official representatives from the local Labor Council would assist in the effort. The director said that he didn't think much of the local labor group and that if I expected to be successful I would have to let it be known, now, how I was going to relate to the community.

It was my impression when I began my work that relationships between labor and this community were strained; I decided that my efforts would improve relationships so I accepted.

4. Met with executive secretary of Mytown Labor Council and the president of Bookbinders Local 007 to find out why the union would not accept a supplemental agreement proposed by the HUB Publishing Company to hire the unemployed.

According to Bookbinder's local president:

a.) The company has a long record of disputes and contract violations with the union.
b.) The company has set up training program (MOTH-OJT) without consulting union.
c.) Trainees were started at hourly rate lower than the standard.
d.) During work slowdown, company laid-off four regular employees and kept trainees.
e.) Present arrangement is in violation of contract and union is contesting it.
f.) Union is not opposed to participating in programs to help unemployed but insist that present contract be honored; program does not violate worker's rights or undermine union.

My observation is that plant has good possibilities for training programs if these problems can be overcome.

5. Attended meeting on 2/5/69 at state capitol called by the governor to serve as vice-president of Implementing Committee for the development of human resources for future goals of the state. Others participating were the NAACP state director, the Public Welfare director, the city Urban League director, and a professor. The sub-committees--on employment, poverty and income maintenance and community development will be organized.

WORKSHOP CASES
IMPROVING OUR REPORTING

It has been said that writing reports is a neglected art in labor circles because people are too busy doing things. Given the nature of HRDI's operation, certain minimum reporting is indispensible. The reports you prepare have the following uses: 1) It provides information to national HRDI and AFL-CIO on what is happening in the field; 2) It indicates what programs you are developing; 3) It provides information for official transmittal; 4) It provides opportunity for the broadened population (outside of labor and government) to be informed, and 5) It serves as a basis for self-evaluation.

The purpose of this workshop is to remind us of the scope of the information needed. A simple guide is to see whether our reports have answered the following questions: who, what, where, when, why, results and follow-up.

The attached cases are adaptations of actual reports from the field. How would you improve each?

BUDDY TRAINING WORKSHOP

This is a "how to do it" session. It is a workshop on how to use some of the materials in the buddy training program. The ideas that are discussed and practiced here will be of use in many other situations.

People learn by:

a. Being told (reading, lectures, panel discussions)
b. Being shown (movies, slides, field trips)
c. Doing (role-playing, job-training, etc.)
d. Participating in discussions

Each method has its uses. We will get some practice in using two of these -- discussions and role-playing -- and discussing the use of movies.

DISCUSSIONS

A. Turn to pages 12 and 13 of your Instructor's Manual for Training Buddies for discussing:

1. When is it used
2. What are its values
3. What are its dangers
4. The role of a discussion leader

B. Turn to pages 33a to 37 for practice cases.

ROLE-PLAYING

A. Turn to page 26 and 27 of your Instructor's Manual for Training Buddies for discussing:

1. Technique and purpose of role-playing
2. Steps in conducting role-playing

B. Turn to pages 38, 43, 46, 49, 52 and 59 for practice cases. For "observers" use page 42.

MOVIES

1. What checks do you make before the session opens to be sure the room and equipment are ready?

2. How do you introduce the movie and prepare the audience?

3. How do you conduct the discussion when the movie has been shown? (See page 20 of Instructor's Manual)

HRDI

Human Resources Development Institute

HRDI

MANPOWER ARM OF THE AFL-CIO

- What is HRDI?
  The Human Resources Development Institute is a new, non-profit corporation established by the AFL-CIO executive council in September 1968.

- What does HRDI do?
  HRDI works at the community level to develop more effective job and training programs for the disadvantaged through greater union participation.

- How does HRDI operate?
  HRDI has field representatives in 50 cities with severe hard-core unemployment problems. They analyze the job and training needs of their communities and work with unions, industry and the government to design programs which meet their needs. Where the need is not being met, HRDI encourages unions to sponsor innovative manpower programs of their own.

- Who are the HRDI field representatives?
  HRDI has recruited an integrated staff of men and women from 27 different national unions. They have been involved in a wide range of civic and community organizations. They share a commitment to the job of bringing America's disadvantaged into full economic citizenship.

- Who are the disadvantaged?
  They are men and women who have trouble finding—or keeping—decent jobs because of a combination or race, age, lack of skill, poor health, inferior education or problems.

- Are the hard-to-employ all members of minority groups?
  No. However, unemployment among non-whites today is twice what it is among whites.

- What is the relationship of HRDI to the AFL-CIO?
  HRDI was set up to be the manpower arm of the AFL-CIO. It is governed by an 11-member board of trustees, all of whom are members of the AFL-CIO executive council. AFL-CIO president George Meany is chairman of HRDI's board and Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO department of urban affairs, is president of HRDI. HRDI is headquartered in the AFL-CIO building in Washington, D.C.

- What is HRDI's relationship to the labor movement locally?
  The HRDI field representative is an integral part of organized labor in his city. He works closely with all the local unions in his community. In most cities, the central labor body provides office space for HRDI in its headquarters. This cooperation makes it possible for HRDI to achieve its goal.

- What is HRDI's relationship to the business community?
  HRDI works closely with the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) in its Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program for hiring and training the disadvantaged. An AFL-CIO representative serves full time as labor liaison to NAB at NAB headquarters in Washington. Local HRDI representatives work closely with local NAB staff wherever possible.

- Is the AFL-CIO's interest in manpower new?

  No. The labor movement played a key role in passing the Employment Act of 1946: this law stated for the first time the government's responsibility in achieving the goal of full employment.

  AFL-CIO was instrumental in winning support for the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962 which for the first time committed substantial federal funds to training and upgrading the nation's work force.

  AFL-CIO was a strong advocate of programs for training the disadvantaged under the Economic Development Act and the Economic Opportunity Act.

  AFL-CIO continues to press for adoption of a coordinated federal manpower policy to make better use of all the nation's human resources—including the disadvantaged.

- Have AFL-CIO unions sponsored any training programs?

  Yes. Many unions have been sponsoring On-the-Job Training (OJT) programs under the Manpower Development and Training Act (MDTA). Some unions conduct training programs of their own without federal assistance. In 52 cities, local building trade councils are cooperating with minority group organizations and the Department of Labor in programs to recruit and prepare minority youth for entry into apprenticeable crafts.

What federal manpower programs is HRDI involved in—and how?

- Job Opportunities in the Business Sector

  HRDI cooperates with the National Alliance of Businessmen (NAB) in their program to hire, train and upgrade the hard-to-employ.
  In plants where the disadvantaged are hired, HRDI recruits workers who act as volunteer "buddies" to help the new employees adjust.

- Apprenticeship Outreach

  HRDI representatives actively promote programs to recruit more minority youth for jobs in the apprenticeable trades.
  HRDI cooperates with the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, the National Urban League, the Workers Defense League-A. Philip Randolph Institute and the U.S. Department of Labor in promoting these programs.

- Model Cities

  HRDI representatives work out local agreements between unions and community groups that make it possible to hire and train area residents for jobs in rebuilding their neighborhoods.
  HRDI representatives play an active role in Model City planning groups wherever possible.

- On-the-Job Training

  HRDI representatives encourage local unions to sponsor their own training programs for the hard-to-employ under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

- Concentrated Employment Program

  HRDI representatives work closely with local CEP programs which are designed to give the disadvantaged in slum areas the individual help they need to get and keep a decent job.

- Cooperative Area Manpower Planning System

  HRDI representatives present labor's point of view on local and state CAMPS committees. These committees develop manpower blueprints for effective use of all federal manpower programs to meet local job and training needs.

A Human Resources Development Institute

has been set up by the AFL-CIO to involve more unions in job training programs to help the disadvantaged.

The AFL-CIO has long maintained that the best way out of poverty is a good job at a decent wage.

For many Americans, however, this way out has not been available. Because of skin color, lack of skills, poor health, inferior education, age, language problems—or a combination of these—there are men and women in this country who cannot find consistent, meaningful employment. . .
These are the "disadvantaged" and the "hard-to-employ."

Our economy is expanding. Our capacity to produce has been increasing steadily since 1961. In the last five years, some 7½ million new jobs have been created—an average of 5,000 new jobs each day. Yet hundreds of thousands of Americans have been unable to share in this economic growth. . .
These are the "disadvantaged" and the "hard-to-employ."

In 1968, a survey of our 50 major cities indicated that there were 500,000 men and women who had serious employment problems or who had never had a job at all living in the slums of our metropolitan centers.

Because the AFL-CIO believes that human resources are a nation's most valuable asset, it has established a Human Resources Development Institute to operate in the 50 cities where the problem of hard-core unemployment is most severe.

HRDI's task is a critical one: to tap the talent and experience available within the labor movement to develop more effective programs for helping the disadvantaged find—and keep—good jobs at decent wages.

Through HRDI, the AFL-CIO is developing a staff of community-based employment specialists who come from and understand the labor movement, who understand manpower programs and who understand the needs and problems of the hard-to-employ. Their expertise provides a new and important element in the nation's effort to use its human resources more effectively.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

GEORGE MEANY
Chairman of the Board

JULIUS F. ROTHMAN
President

HAROLD JACK
Secretary-Treasurer

MERLIN L. TAYLOR
Executive Director

HRDI

PUTTING LABOR IN WORK TRAINING

Union 'Institute' Boosts Manpower Programs At the Local Level

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

PUTTING LABOR IN WORK TRAINING

Union 'Institute' Boosts Manpower Programs At the Local Level

By KENNETH FIESTER

Despite an academic sounding title which even its beneficiaries would not recognize, the Human Resources Development Institute (HRDI) is wholly engaged in the pragmatic job of helping Federal manpower programs work the way they were intended to.

HRDI is a nonprofit corporation created by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in September 1968. It promptly received a $1.5 million grant from the Department of Labor to initiate a "nationwide program to recruit, train, employ, and upgrade the unemployed and underemployed," to quote the official announcement. The initial grant was for an 18-month period. Another $728,000, extending the contract to November 30 of this year, was granted last spring, and a third agreement calling for approximately $2 million for 12 more months of operation at an increased level of activity recently was approved by the Labor Department.

In official descriptions, HRDI's objectives are arrayed in formal ranks of paragraphs of purpose headed by flag words like "mobilize," "develop," "establish," "work with," and "provide." But these paragraphs describe the program HRDI is able to carry forward only after its unwritten basic objectives are attained. There are three of them:

- Overcoming, or at least rendering inoperative, the fear, prejudice, resentment, misunderstanding, and skepticism aroused in many local unions—leadership and rank-and-file alike—by proposals to use extraordinary procedures to inject into the work force "strangers" under outside sponsorship.
- Convincing field-level government officials and employers that the labor movement is both able and anxious to participate in manpower programs of every kind—and that its local participation is essential to the programs' success.
- Reaching the hard-core jobless, especially young members of minority groups, with believable evidence that the job opportunities are for real.

Just below this trio of basics is an operational goal shared by nearly everyone involved in government manpower affairs—better coordination among the wide range of manpower programs created by separate laws over more than a decade. Legislative proposals to achieve this are being debated by Congress; meanwhile, HRDI strives for a sort of ad hoc equivalent through its own field representatives.

These field staffers also carry the major burden of the three basic objectives listed above—objectives which deserve fuller examination.

The first—building local union support of manpower programs—deals with an issue that is at once the most widely known and the least understood. Television scenes of confrontations at construction sites, complaints by minority-group spokesmen, promulgation of community racial quotas for employment on Federal projects—these and similar happenings have combined to tag the building trades unions as archtypes of unregenerate discrimination and therefore unyielding foes of manpower development.

Mr. Fiester is a freelance writer with extensive experience in the labor movement.

Minona Clinton, HRDI representative in Pittsburgh, lectures on the buddy system to union members being trained to help disadvantaged workers.

Trainee Donna Lidwin (left) works with her buddy, Eleanor Marsolek, on set assembly at the E-Z Paintr Corporation in Milwaukee. Mrs. Marsolek, a member of the Upholsterers Union, got her buddy training through HRDI.

All this has obscured a simple truth: Any established work force, craft or industrial, north or south, viscerally resists any significant change, having learned through experience or the gospel of elders that change is the harbinger of hard times. This is neither a craft nor a racial matter. Even if all the charges of bigotry were true, by far the greatest "labor" obstacle to manpower development and training still would be economic fear. Since economic fear is the fiend incarnate of unionism, a union representative is an ideal and often indispensable agent in exorcising it.

This is not to say that HRDI has the primary responsibility for implementing AFL-CIO civil rights policies or even for winning union acceptance of manpower development programs. Central to an understanding of HRDI is the knowledge that in a programmatic sense it is not primarily responsible for anything. Thus it is free of the rigidities that often constrain those involved in programs they themselves conceived, and in a better position to go about the job of making the programs work.

There are no job descriptions for HRDI staffers, for their jobs beggar description. They do what needs to be done in the city where they are assigned. They are catalysts, honest brokers, exhorters, mediators, helping hands, and sympathetic ears, often to several parties at once.

Take the matter of union resistance. In terms of official union policy, there is no such thing. The AFL-CIO, each of its affiliated unions, and every independent union of any consequence are on record in uncompromising support of all the manpower programs, with heavy stress on their civil rights impact. Nor are these mere paper policies; with few exceptions the national leadership has applied heavy pressure for their implementation.

But all kinds of snags remain at the local level, often including old quarrels and personal dislikes. Sometimes the personal differences may be between levels in the same union. Whatever the local hangup, the injection of sweet reasonableness in the form of an HRDI man, with good trade union credentials and attuned to, but not involved in, the sources of trouble, may be just what is needed.

Understandably, there is no disposition at HRDI to identify, much less detail, cases of union resistance overcome by its efforts. Outside of oldtime revival meetings, there are few among the redeemed who enjoy recitals of their past transgressions. However, the large number and variety of manpower programs being conducted on a continuing basis with union help or on union initiative indicate that progress has been substantial toward the first of the basic objectives.

'Outreach' Encouraged

The second objective—convincing employers and government officials of labor's concern—would seem to be within easy reach once the first is attained, but this is not necessarily so. For one thing, widely accepted images get in the way. The superficially informed tend to assume that craft unions will resist manpower programs and industrial unions will not—an almost perfect formula for offending one and antagonizing the other. An HRDI field man, well versed in the local labor scene, can do much to avert mishaps based on such mistaken assumptions.

Other obstacles to the second objective are less charitably viewed by HRDI. These involve occasional attempts by employers to use manpower programs as a means of obtaining labor at pay levels below the going rate. Identifying and heading off these excursions is a top priority item to HRDI leaders, and their concern is shared by manpower agencies and management groups. Any corollary between manpower development programs and efforts to get workers at substandard pay rates would not only insure union hostility, it also would further alienate the presumptive beneficiaries of the programs, whose alienation is already sufficient to be the subject of HRDI's third basic goal—convincing the hard core that jobs are available to them.

HRDI is active in the "outreach" program, which seeks minority candidates for apprenticeship and provides special schooling for those who need it to qualify. In some areas local building trades councils sponsor outreach programs, in other places the effort is conducted by the Workers Defense League, a human rights organization which pioneered in the development of outreach techniques, and the Urban League. By mid-1970, 63 outreach programs had indentured more than 8,000 apprentices.

HRDI's role in outreach is to encourage expansion and provide local liaison and followup. In at least one instance HRDI became the contracting agent for a pre-apprenticeship training program.

Outreach is only one phase of HRDI's attack on reluctance, skepticism, and defeatism among the hard-core jobless. Its best known operation is the "buddy program," primarily applied in factory work but lately extended to the apprenticed crafts as well.

The buddy system developed from the cooperation between the AFL-CIO and the NAB on the Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) Program, which is designed to put the hard-core jobless to work in private industry. In each plant where disadvantaged workers are to be hired, an appropriate number of union members are trained to serve as mentors of the newcomers.

'Buddies' Smooth Transition

As HRDI puts it, the buddy system "provides the new hire with a friend who will help him through his probationary period. The buddy lends assistance both on and off the job. At the worksite the buddy is assigned to the same work group as the new employee and stays close to him throughout the day, including lunch and coffee breaks. . . . The buddy is able to develop good work habits in the new employee and give him helpful tips. . . . The buddy helps the new worker by assuring that he gets to work on time, arranging transportation and solving problems that adversely affect his work."

The need for this, of course, arises from the fact that few of the genuinely hard-core jobless have had work experience of any kind. The whole concept of regular hours and regular duties, and the very environment of the workplace are strange. What is taken for granted by a youngster from an average family, even on his first job, may be enough to frighten away a youngster from the ghetto, and older recruits, too. Job retention was the reef on which many early efforts at hard-core hiring foundered.

The buddy system is no cure-all, but it has been a resounding success. Excerpts from the reports of buddies at a rubber plant in New Jersey indicate how it works —and sometimes doesn't:

- "I had a number of problems to take care of. One who could not come on time and I had to pick him up every day the first week. He didn't even have money for transportation. After he received his first paycheck he still came late so I persuaded him to buy an alarm clock and paid half of it out of my own pocket, but he still came late. Finally, remembering what we had learned at the training institute, I suggested that he be transferred to the night shift, and now he is always on time. He is a very good worker and picked up the job well; 22 years old and only worked such jobs as dishwasher before."
- "I had two new workers assigned to me, one of them only a couple of days ago. The other one is very young and a wild sort of a fellow, rather difficult and one has to stay with him all day. We also got him transferred to the morning shift at his request. He is sort of suspicious of my role as a buddy."
- "My major problem has been job matching. The training doesn't always seem to be the appropriate one."
- "I had four assigned to me. Three of them didn't seem to have any problems but one made up for them. He was absent 2 or 3 days a week with all sorts of excuses. It was his first job. He didn't like the smell of the hose and we put him in another department. However, he didn't like the night shift and when we offered to change that, it turned out that he was going to school and simply found studying and working just too much."

These reports were from an early program, but are considered typical except that the operations have become smoother with time. By now, more than 200 companies in some 50 cities have buddy setups. Nearly 1,000 members of 47 national unions have served as buddies.

Aside from helping tremendously in making new recruits permanent members of the work force, the buddy program has the additional advantage of insuring the cooperation of the local union in over-

Pretending she is blind to find out what it feels like to be unsure, Carrie Atkins of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Union puts her trust in Lillie Cox of the Office and Professional Employees Union and Sampson Saunders of Project Build, a Washington, D.C., apprenticeship and pre-apprenticeship training program. The exercise was part of an HRDI buddy training seminar at American University in Washington, D.C.

Mary Martin of the National Association of Letter Carriers finds out how an outsider feels as she tries to break into the circle during the American University buddy training program.

Tony Costa (center) discusses his on-the-job training in a New York furniture manufacturing plant with John Burnell (right), New York regional director for HRDI, and Monroe Cranston, director of the job training project, which is a cooperative effort of Local 76-B of the United Furniture Workers Union, the furniture industry, and the New York State Department of Labor.

coming the instinctive resistance of established employees. As mentioned earlier, this resistance is basically economic. A related source of resentment is that older workers feel they were never given the kind of opportunities now extended to the newcomers.

A cross section of these reactions is contained in an analysis on the same operation from which the above buddy reports were taken. Here is the key passage. "The program has aroused a good measure of opposition among the rank and file, partly directed against the new employees coming in and partly against the buddies. There is much tension and animosity. Even some older black employees are opposed to the program and, in fact, are taking bets that it will fail. Some of the blame for the opposition must be put on the misleading publicity which led the older workers to believe that the new employees would get more money than they were receiving.

Older Workers Complain

"More serious perhaps, the older workers complain that they don't have the same opportunities that the new employees have, e.g., they have never been shown around the plant to find the most suitable place for them to work, and some of them have never been out of their own department. Also, a rumor was going around that prisoners would constitute the bulk of the new employees coming in. Finally, some of the older employees, including an ex-president of the union, accused the buddies of being tools of management and suspected them of making more money."

Under these circumstances, having the active support of the local union leadership is indeed indispensable.

So much acclaim has been given to the buddy program that Julius F. Rothman, HRDI president, fears it has drawn attention from the organization's other functions. "The buddy program was necessary and it was something we could get started quickly," he says. "But it's only a small part of what we do."

Among these other activities, a current favorite with Rothman and HRDI's executive director, Robert M. McGlotten, is a job development and placement program started on an experimental basis in New York City and now being extended to five other cities. The prototype was launched in March 1968 by the New York City Central Labor Council and the City's Human Resources Administration. It is now being funded directly by the U.S. Department of Labor. Characteristically, HRDI's function has been to accelerate, improve, and extend an activity which antedates it.

The key word in this New York operation is "placement." It is a single-minded continuing campaign to put poor people who need jobs on somebody's payroll. In essence the program is a clearinghouse between the business agents of a couple of hundred local unions, who keep a sharp eye open for available jobs, and almost a hundred public and private agencies of every description. There is a minimum of matching up; these are entry-level jobs. But they are union jobs, and $2 an hour as a supermarket bagger is a long cut better than nothing.

In its first full year (1969) this operation, staffed by one man and a secretary, placed more than 2,500 workers. Follow-up is provided by the local business agents, and by post card inquiries of the employing firms.

Three-quarters of the workers placed are black, and another fifth are Puerto Ricans or other Spanish Americans. The great majority are young. The program has won considerable prestige in the New York ghettos, HRDI leaders say, because it has achieved credibility—the jobs are there. Now and then the job openings have included training opportunities, but this has been coincidental. When applicants need medical care and other services, efforts are made to put them in touch with the right agencies. But the big thrust has been to get people on the payroll.

The program could not have succeeded without the right kind of person in charge of it, and this clearly is true of every HRDI effort. The scope of an HRDI field representative's tasks suggests why it took the organization a fair amount of time to select and train its staff of about 50.

Nearly half of the field staffers are Negroes or Spanish Americans; a number are women. About half are members of craft unions or unions with craft connections, such as the Laborers and Machinists. A heavy majority have served as officers of their local unions and of city and State central bodies. Most have been involved in civil rights, education, and community services activities, and at least half have served on civic committees or commissions, held office in fraternal or veterans' organizations, and otherwise mingled widely outside union ranks.

What they actually do on the job ranges from small items to large ones. Following is a summary of one fortnight's reports, just as prepared by HRDI for its own use except for minor editing to eliminate names:

Atlanta — The Plumbers and Steamfitters are sending letters to all licensed black plumbers inviting them to join the union. They are also running an ad in the city's black newspapers.

Birmingham — Two manufacturing firms that are merging have agreed to a program for training welders, grinders, and handlers. Ironworkers and Shopmen Local 539 are working with the program which will place both men and women at a ratio of 85 percent black and 15 percent white. One of the firms previously lost a JOBS contract because it was not an equal opportunity employer.

Denver — HRDI representative has been appointed to the Mayor's Youth Commission and will be actively involved in planning the summer youth program. He played a key role in last year's successful program and the committee is considering a full-time youth placement program.

Los Angeles—We are helping Firefighters 1014 in their program to recruit more blacks.

Memphis — HRDI's Apprenticeship Outreach Program is in full swing. A director and two recruiters have been hired and applicants are being interviewed for the 50 slots available under the $66,000 contract with the Labor Department. Recruiters are using local offices of the Memphis community action agency.

Nashville—We are working with AFL-CIO Urban Affairs Department on a proposal for using Building Trades Council funds to help finance moderate income housing through the AFL-CIO Mortgage Investment Fund.

Oakland — Trainees in the culinary class at the East Bay Skills Center have been guaranteed jobs by the East Bay Restaurant Association. This came about through the joint efforts of HRDI, the Oakland Central Labor Council, and Locals 228 and 823 of the Restaurant Workers.

Oklahoma City—-A successful buddy training of 53 plumbers and pipefitters has been held in conjunction with the Oklahoma City Building Trades.

Phoenix — The Retail Clerks have agreed to help the Concentrated Employment Program find jobs for 30 graduates of a Manpower Development and Training Act cashier training project. The union will set up an employees' council to work on job placement. RCIA also is helping to set up a similar program designed for Indians.

Pittsburgh—An Opportunities Industrialization Center-sponsored retail trade consortium will train checkers, stockers, clerks, and register operators. The $63,000 contract calls for a total of 60 slots and was worked out in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council.

San Antonio — The local Building Trades Council has approved a JOBS contract proposal submitted by an Associated General Contractors consortium for 150 pre-apprenticeship training slots.

St. Louis—At the request of the Central Labor Council, HRDI is working with IAM District Lodge 837 and McDonnell-Douglas on an affirmative action program to increase minority employment. We met with the union officers and stewards and won approval for an HRDI-sponsored steward training program to deal with any problems that may arise. Also, the company has agreed to use HRDI-trained buddies in the five departments in which the new hiring is expected to take place.

An obvious question is how all these operations are faring in a softening job market.

"Reasonably well," says McGlotten. "There has been a slacking off in the JOBS programs, but not as much as a couple of newspaper stories indicated. And we are looking toward an expansion of our operations in the public sector, which isn't as much affected."

Work Varies, Goals Don't

Actually, according to its own self-description, HRDI should have plenty to do for a long time to come. Here's how it concluded a report to the AFL-CIO Executive Council:

"The work of the local HRDI representatives will vary from city to city, depending on the types and variety of manpower programs in each community and the extent of the current AFL-CIO involvement in these programs. However, the goals are the same in each community. First, HRDI will strive for maximum involvement of AFL-CIO unions in existing manpower programs—along with management and government. Second, HRDI will evaluate existing manpower programs to see if they are training the hard-core for jobs that actually exist, for jobs that are not 'dead-end,' and for jobs that will permit the trainee to move up the ladder.

"In addition, HRDI will stimulate the development of upgrading programs so that workers can be helped to advance in both skills and earning power. Third, HRDI will encourage AFL-CIO unions, wherever possible, to sponsor meaningful and innovative programs of their own, making use of government funds for experimental and research projects as well as for straight training. Hopefully, each HRDI field representative will become a catalyst in his community, working cooperatively with other elements in that community, to help the disadvantaged to achieve full economic citizenship." □

A Reprint from the December 1970 Issue of the U. S. Department of Labor's Monthly Magazine MANPOWER—

Additional copies available from

AFL-CIO HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT
815 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20016
(202) 638-3914

Info - ILGWU

14 December 1965

Mr. Saul Nesselroth
International Ladies Garment
Workers Union
1710 Broadway
New York, New York

Dear Saul:

This letter responds to your request for information on rental of duplicating machines. A. B. Dick seems to make the best offer. Either a hand operated mimeo or a spirit duplicator could be had for fifteen dollars per week from them. They offer no two-day rate; indeed, at first there seemed to be no one-week rate. They would need at least a few days notice.

The other companies ranged from $17.50 for 24 hours to $25.00 for two days but usually did not have a hand-cranked machine.

Hope this helps.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:jb

ILG

Dead

March 24, 1966

Miss Margaret Leonard, Editor
Southeastern News
1065 Gordon Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30310

Dear Cissie:

Could we place an order for your News on an exchange basis for our New South?

How was Savannah?

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning
Administrative Secretary
Labor Program

/jb

File with ILGWU Pol. Ed Cay

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION • AFL-CIO

SOUTHEAST REGION

457 PLASTER AVENUE, N. E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30324
TELEPHONE (404) 872-8161

Louis Stulberg
PRESIDENT

•

Martin J. Morand
DIRECTOR

May 19, 1966

Mr. Emery Via
Southern Regional Council
Five Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emery:

This note will confirm the fact that we will be expecting you to attend our conference in Daytona Beach at the Voyager Beach Motel. Your room reservation will be made as of Friday night, June 3rd.

If for any reason you cannot attend or your plans change, please let me know as soon as possible.

Fraternally,

Martin J. Morand

Martin J. Morand
Director

MJM:f

file copy.

ILGWU

19 May 1966

Miss Josephine Clark
Room 43
Colonial Manor Hotel
Brewton, Alabama

Dear Miss Clark:

Mr. Emory Via asked that I send the enclosed portions of questionnaires to you.

Sincerely,

Joan C. Browning

JB

BOBBY KENNEDY LIBRARY

May 24, 1966

Miss Josephine Clark
Colonial Manor, # 43
Brewton, Alabama

Dear Jo:

Thanks so much for sending copies of the materials from the school system regarding their compliance with the Office of Education guidelines. It is always useful to get copies of the actual documents coming out of desegregation moves. Our thanks.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

DA

Since I don't always know when I'd caused someone troubles, I thought it not in appropriate to share this with you. Please return.

Sam

E V -

Excellent - would you send a copy to Mildred for "Commendations file"

I made 2 copies
MJ

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION • AFL-CIO

SOUTHEAST REGION

457 PLASTER AVENUE, N. E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30324
TELEPHONE (404) 872-8161

Louis Stulberg
PRESIDENT

•

Martin J. Morand
DIRECTOR

June 8, 1966

Mr. Emery Via
Southern Regional Council
Five Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emery:

I don't know what your reaction to the Conference was, but I am anxious to hear. As for myself, I was more than pleased. The Saturday morning session which you moderated brought out some deep seated problems, but at least it got them to the surface where we can begin to deal with them. Apparently some of our Negro members were encouraged for the first time to raise some grievances, not only at the session, but privately following the session. And these things we certainly need to know about.

Perhaps, more significant was the comment made to Maida Springer by a couple of our Atlanta members (well in their beers at the time) that for the first time the Union had convinced them that there is a reason why they should be concerned about the rights of Negroes. Of course, balancing out such testimonials was the negative comment of some of our Klansman members who were present. And then, there is Billie Solesby! Billie, I am told, is insisting that her local COPE committee send a letter of protest to the bus company which brought them down because of a statement by the bus driver on the return trip that the "coon" was not with them.

The reactions are multiple, and various, and multi-famous. "Justice thou art afoot, take what course thou wilt!"

Thank you for your magnificant, catalytic effect. I think we may be able to promote some broader interests in SRC and its interest in the Labor Movement out of this Conference.

Fraternally yours,

Martin J. Morand

Martin J. Morand
Director

MJM:f

ILGWU

June 10, 1966

Miss Billie Solesby
I.L.G.W.U.
116 Hub City Courts
Spartanburg, South Carolina

Dear Billie:

Who is Billie Soleshu? I am so sorry for the goof. On rereading my letter to you I saw that we had let it go out with your name completely misspelled. A Solesby by any other name is probably not the same. In any case I prefer to deal with the one I know. Let me know if I can be of any help.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

June 7, 1966

Miss Billie Soleshu
I.L.G.W.U.
116 Hub City Coarts
Spartanburg, South Carolina

Dear Billie:

It was very good to see you again at Daytona Beach. I do not find a letter from anyone in Spartanburg waiting for me at the office. Just know that I will be happy to cooperate in any possible way in discussing, planning, or carrying out the program involving your union and/or others in the Spartanburg area. Please let me know if I can be of help.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

LOCAL # 581

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION AFL—CIO

7114 LONE OAK ROAD
SPARTANBURG, S. C.
29303

TELEPHONE 585-3070

2

6/12/66

Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
201, 5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emory,

Thank you for your very nice letter. George Griffin of the C.L.U. said that his secretary had quit, but he still intends to get in touch with you. I will call him as soon as this Primary Election is over (June 14th) and offer the services of our Local's secretary.

Joe Ferguson , our B.A. knows of your interest in our Education Project and he will try to help also.

We will be in touch with you soon. Thanks for everything.

Sincerely,

Billie Solesbee

Billie Solesbee
#581
Spartanburg, S.C.

ILGWU (AFL-CIO)

Dead

June 14, 1966

Mr. Marty Morand, Director
Southeast Regional Office
I.L.G.W.U.
457 Plaster Avenue, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

Dear Marty:

I guess we did not have a clear understanding regarding expenses in connection with your Daytona Beach education conference. In the event that you mean to cover them -- those which you have not already covered at the conference itself -- I list the following:

local transportation ($2.00, $2.50)	$4.50
meals	2.00
air transportation	1.79
miscellaneous expenses . . .	.75
	$ 9.04.

The low air fare is a kind of fluke since I added the Daytona trip onto a Washington trip. But without going into all the details the $1.79 represents the actual cost of my trip to Daytona Beach to the Southern Regional Council.

Would you please have the check, if one is coming, made out to the Southern Regional Council, Inc.

Thanks so much for your kind letter. I did think it was a good conference and was happy for the opportunity to share in it with you.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

INTERNATIONAL LADIES' GARMENT WORKERS' UNION • AFL-CIO

SOUTHEAST REGION

457 PLASTER AVENUE, N. E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30324
TELEPHONE (404) 872-8161

Louis Stulberg
PRESIDENT

•

Martin J. Morand
DIRECTOR

March 7, 1967

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emory:

At long last! I will be in contact with you before March 20 to make arrangements for the trip to Florence.

Cordially,

Mac

RM/es

Encl.

March 30, 1967

Mr. Gus Tyler
Education Director
International Ladies Garment
Workers Union
1710 Broadway
New York, New York 10019

Dear Gus:

My schedule calls for me to be in New York on Wednesday, April 5. I would like to call you after I have arrived to see if it would be convenient for us to get together for a few minutes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

April 13, 1967

Mr. Gus Tyler
Education Director
International Ladies Garmet
Workers Union
1710 Broadway
New York City, New York

Dear Gus:

It was good to see you while I was in New York last week. Thanks so much for your time and good advice. The union will be hearing from us before too long.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

April 21, 1967

Mr. Ramelle McCoy
Southeastern Region
International Ladies Garment
Workers Union
1065 Gordon, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Ramelle:

The enclosed bill from the restaurant at the Holiday Inn in Florence, South Carolina was sent to me.

You may want to look closely at it because it certainly does not look like twenty-five to thirty desert orders. I wonder if these were not the orders of the group that had the room which we were supposed to have met in. Eventually after their meal was over we did meet in the room. You will recall that the ILGWU group had desert in the main dining room prior to our meeting. I don't know that there would be any great difference in the total charges between the deserts and this bill for meals, but that is a matter for you to worry with.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/jd

enclosure

June 13, 1967

Mr. Gus Tyler
International Ladies' Garment
Workers' Union
1710 Broadway
New York, New York 10019

Dear Gus:

I would like very much to have a copy of your paper to the Spring Meeting of the IRRA in Detroit. It was thoughtful and useful which is what I would have expected. Would it be possible for you to send me a copy?

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EFV/csb

October 9, 1968

Mr. Remel McCoy
South East Regional Office
International Ladies Garment Workers Union
457 Plaster Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

Dear Remel:

After talking with Paul Matthais, Director of the South Carolina Council on Human Relations, we have decided that the persons who would be most helpful in discussing Day Care Center problems in South Carolina would be Mrs. Mellie Barlow, Day Care Center Director (OEO), Florence, South Carolina, phone 662-0568; Professor Merril Palmer, Clemson University, office phone 654-2421, extension 434, residence 654-5605.

It could be that A. A. Huggins who is the Executive Director of the OEO programs in Florence could also be of some assistance. His number is 662-2579.

You will note that Mrs. Barlow has been directing a center. Professor Palmer was active in a local council on human relations effort to establish a center.

Matthais reports that it is his understanding that there is no current money available for Day

(OEO)

Care Centers.

I trust this helps. Hope the Legislative Institute went well. Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Education Project

EFV/km

SPEED LETTER®

TO Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street N.W. Atlanta, Ga. 30303

FROM W. Patrick Flack, Th.G.W.U.
C/O Holiday Inn Down Town
Florence, S.C.

SUBJECT Publications

(C.C. R. MacCay)

FOLD

MESSAGE DATE Dec 30 1968

In facing the welfare issue with our members I will need some publications of "Know your Rights", with the members here. Civil Rights is number one. So I start here. To help me bridge the gap I need the above publication. Please send me as many as you can. I have 289 members here and a number in Lake City, S.C.

SIGNED W. Patrick Flack

REPLY DATE 12/31/68 19

Good to hear from you. I am sending 25 copies free. We try to lose as little as possible on publications, but we could let you have up to 300 copies for 10¢ each which is half our listed bulk rate. Let me know what you would like for me to do. Best personal wishes.

FOLD

SIGNED Emory Via

GrayLine "SNAP-A-WAY" FORM 44-902 3-PARTS
WILSON JONES COMPANY • © 1961 • PRINTED IN U.S.A.

RETAIN WHITE COPY, RETURN PINK COPY

January 16, 1969

Mr. Ramelle MacCoy
International Ladies Garment
Workers Union
Southeastern Region
457 Plaster Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

Dear Ramelle:

I thought I had forwarded these expenses to you earlier, but I was wrong. My transportation costs to participate in your program in Florence, Alabama on December 7, 1968 were as follows:

Air Fare	$ 39.90
Taxis	12.45
Total	$ 52.35

It seemed to me you had arranged a rewarding tour for the Birmingham group.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program

EV/km

Enc.

Doing Some Soul Probing Together

ILGWU members are learning more about themselves and their relationships with others as a result of attending human relations institutes planned for them by the Union. Members from Cartersville, Ga., attended a workshop given by the Human Development Institute at Stone Mountain. Members from Fayetteville and Greeneville, Tenn., attended a similar workshop in Cleveland, Tenn.

At these workshops, they were encouraged to talk about what they really felt and what their problems really were, in order to grow as people.

Here is what Velva Cook of Local 514, Greenville, wrote about the HDI workshop she attended:

"This was the most amazing thing I have ever experienced.

"I had missed so many things in life or misunderstood them. I can see lots of things from a different point of view now.

"It is amazing what you can experience in such a short time. I feel I am and can be so much more aware of my feelings and what they mean.

"This will take time and experience but I feel it will help me to help others more easily and also accept help from others.

(Continued on Page 3)

Called "Inspiring"

Members Tell Of Reactions To Institutes

(Continued from Page 2)

"I think everyone needs to learn to recognize what their feelings mean to them and how to obey them. I believe this is needed very much in the business world."

The others who attended these workshops were also very enthusiastic about them. They were: from Cartersville, Phyllis Holsomback, Leone Craig, Edna Smith, Ona Bell Tilley, Frank Howell, Louise Owens, Rachel Cagel, Mary Ward, Donna Sue Adams, Clyde Mansfield, Sue Arthur, Juanita Massey, Grace Abercrombie, Jewell Goodson, and Evie Gravely.

From Fayetteville were Lucille Watson, Mable Hopkins, Beatrice Simmons, and Darlene Franklin.

From Greenville was Beatrice Jenkins.

SCLC Workshop

Union members participated in a different kind of workshop held jointly with people from the Southern Christian Leadership Conference at the Dorchester Community Center near Savannah, Ga. This was an experience to enable people to learn and express what they felt about people of other races.

Helen Thomas of Local 458, Talladega, Ala., had this to say about the experience:

"I cannot express in words what it has meant to me.

"I had never attended a meeting of this type before. It was very inspiring, relaxing and helpful to me. I wish every member of the ILGWU could attend a meeting of this type with the wonderful leaders we had.

"Ed asked us to ask ourselves what would I be today if I had been born black. This is just one of the many questions asked that have made me start thinking about the problems facing blacks and to understand their problems better. All in all, it was a soul-searching experience for me."

And Billie Solesbee, of Local 581 in Spartanburg, S. C., told of a different kind of experience:

"I remember 'Lonzie,' a Negro from Selma, Ala. He is in his 40's, a painter, and the father of 10 children.

"We could both recall breakfasts of fat-back and gravy. (Grits and redeye gravy were a treat because that meant we had ham fat to make the gravy.) My father worked for $7 a week in a textile mill and there were seven in the family.

" 'Lonzie' was raised on a tenant farm. His life was not much different from mine as far as material things were concerned. We were both poor. Comparatively speaking, even today, we are still poor.

" 'Lonzie' wants the same opportunities for his children that I want for mine. We both know we are going to have to work hard to get them. He is concerned with humanity. He is willing to give of himself, whatever

(Continued on Page 5)

Soc. Garment Worker 3/69

Understanding Is Theme Of Relations Workshops

(Continued from Page 3)

he can, to assure, not just survival, but all good things that make life more meaningful.

"If we never learn anything else as Union members and as human beings, we should learn this:

Understanding Others

"If we do not help each other to a better standard of living, either equal to, or better than we now have, we can never hope to have more than a token improvement in existing standards. As long as we do not try to understand others and ourselves, we will not have unity among our members. Without unity, we lose our strength. Our Unions and our country could be destroyed.

" 'Divide and conquer' is a basic concept of the strategist. Those who wish to destroy us, can and do use this principle against us.

"We are presented each day with an opportunity to do something meaningful and constructive. How do you react to this opportunity? It is a challenge to all of us. With the traditional dedication of Unionists, I feel that this challenge will not only be met, but won."

Billie ended her letter with a quotation from Dante:

"The hottest places in hell are reserved for those who, in times of great moral crisis, maintain their neutrality."

Others who attended the SCLC workshop were:

Bonnette McClendon, Lillie Erwin, Ersley Taylor, Mamie Martin, Mae Howell, Cartersville, Ga.; Viola Scott, Talladega, Ala.; Cynthia Taylor, Lola Dixon, Tuskegee, Ala; Frances Colvin, Mary Rettino, Montgomery, Ala.; Carol Ann Benefield, Sterling Simmons, Town Creek, Ala.; Mildred Carr, Lucille Kent, Charity Johnson, Estelle Ackerman, Panama City, Fla.; Johnny Spears, Ara Mae White, Charlotte, N. C.; Dora Hunter, Ronnie Enroughty, Nashville, N. C.; Rosalee Tucker, Frances Caldwell, Spartanburg, S. C.; Ed Poston, Bernice Lynch, Betty Hanna, Lula Gooding, Doris Floyd, Brenda P'Simer, Mandy Nixon, Emmie Miles, Rebecca Matthews, Ida Mae Lee, Mary Ard, Dorothy Powell, Lake City, S. C.

PROGRAM

EFFECTIVE UNION ACTION IN CIVIL RIGHTS
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center
April 5 - 10, 1970

SUNDAY, APRIL 5

7:00 p.m. - 8:30 p.m. OPENING REMARKS

Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
Director
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

Donald Slaiman
Director
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

Frederick O'Neal
President
Actors' Equity Association

Chairman: Jacqueline Brophy
Staff Associate
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

MONDAY, APRIL 6

9:00 a.m. - 10:20 a.m.
and
10:40 a.m. - 12:00 Noon

THE '60s AND THE '70s

Bayard Rustin
Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Chairman: Donald Slaiman

1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m. PARTICIPANTS' REPORTS ON UNION EXPERIENCES

3:10 p.m. - 4:30 p.m. ECONOMIC, POLITICAL AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF SPANISH-SPEAKING AMERICANS AND OTHER MINORITIES

S. Q. Chano Merino
Field Director
AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education

Chairman: Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7

CURRENT PROGRAMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

9:00 a.m. - 10:20 a.m.

Joint Apprenticeship Program:
Its Purpose and Programs

Ernest Green
National Director
Joint Apprenticeship Program
Workers Defense League

Chairman: Robert McGlotten
Staff Representative
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

10:40 a.m. - 12:00 Noon

Human Resources Development Institute:
Its Purpose and Programs

Merlin L. Taylor
Director
Human Resources Development Institute
AFL-CIO

Chairman: Doris Hardesty
Administrative Assistant
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m.
and
3:10 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.

PARTICIPANTS' REPORTS ON UNION EXPERIENCES

Labor Studies Center

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8

CURRENT PROGRAMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST

9:00 a.m. - 10:20 a.m.

A. Philip Randolph Institute:
Its Purpose and Programs

Ernest McKinney
Assistant to the Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Chairman: William E. Pollard
Staff Representative
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

10:40 a.m. - 12:00 Noon

Southern Regional Council:
Its Purpose and Programs

Emory Via
Director, Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council

Chairman: E. T. Kehrer
Southern Area Director
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

1:30 p.m. - 3:00 p.m.
and
3:20 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES IN THE FIELD OF CIVIL RIGHTS

William Brown
Chairman
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission

David L. Rose
Chief of Employment Section
Civil Rights Division
U.S. Department of Justice

John Wilks
Director
Office of Federal Contract Compliance
U.S. Department of Labor

Chairman: Thomas E. Harris
Associate General Counsel
AFL-CIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 9

9:00 a.m. - 10:20 a.m.
and
10:40 a.m. - 12:00 Noon

WHO'S WHERE AMONG BLACK ACTIVISTS AND ORGANIZATIONS

David V. J. Bell
Assistant Professor, Political Science
Michigan State University

Chairman: Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.

1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m.
and
3:10 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES IN THE FIELD OF CIVIL RIGHTS

Howard Glickstein
Staff Director
U.S. Commission on Civil Rights

Jerris Leonard
Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights
U.S. Department of Justice

J. Stanley Pottinger
Director, Office of Civil Rights
U.S. Department of Health, Education & Welfare

Samuel J. Simmons
Assistant Secretary for Equal Opportunity
U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development

Chairman: Walter Davis
Director
AFL-CIO Education Department

7:00 p.m. - 9:30 p.m.

WHAT IS THE FUTURE FOR BLACK YOUTH?

Robert Curvin
Extension Specialist
Bureau of Community Services
Rutgers University

Norman Hill
Associate Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

FRIDAY, APRIL 10

9:00 a.m. - 10:20 a.m.
and
10:40 a.m. - 12:00 Noon

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Chairman: Donald Slaiman

opeiu#2

EMORY F. VIA

File

AFL-CIO
LABOR
STUDIES
CENTER

WASHINGTON, D. C.

EFFECTIVE UNION ACTION IN CIVIL RIGHTS
April 26-30, 1971

EFFECTIVE UNION ACTION IN CIVIL RIGHTS

APRIL 26 - 30, 1971

AFL-CIO LABOR STUDIES CENTER

WASHINGTON, D.C.

FOREWORD

Welcome to the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center. We hope that the course of study in which you will be engaged will be interesting and worthwhile.

The basic role of the Center is to help maintain and develop leadership within the AFL-CIO through education and training. An equally important role is that of bringing together labor leaders from a variety of unions in order that they might learn from one another and thus gain a better understanding of the labor movement as a whole.

While formal or even adult education is not the only road to effective leadership, there is little doubt that it is an important, if not an essential, ingredient in a rapidly changing and increasingly complex world. Therefore, we will attempt through the selection of top teaching talent, the development of pertinent materials and the effective use of educational techniques to create a climate for learning and discussion which will help the "student" to better meet the challenges that face the labor movement, and, indeed, the society of which we are a part.

However, if we are to fulfill our role and accomplish our goals we will need your help. We will need your active participation in the class discussions and your constructive criticism of what we are doing and how we are doing it.

We ask that you give us this help.

PROGRAM

MONDAY, APRIL 26

9:00 a.m. - 12:00 noon	WELCOME
	Fred K. Hoehler, Jr. Director AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center
	Jacqueline Brophy Program Chairman Associate Professor School of Labor & Industrial Relations Michigan State University
	OVERVIEW
	John A. Morsell Assistant Executive Director NAACP
1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m.	PARTICIPANTS' REPORTS ON UNION EXPERIENCES
3:10 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.	REPORT FROM THE A. PHILIP RANDOLPH INSTITUTE
	Norman Hill Associate Director A. Philip Randolph Institute
5:00 p.m.	RECEPTION

TUESDAY, APRIL 27

9:00 a.m. - 12:00 noon

ADMINISTRATION'S ROLE IN CIVIL RIGHTS

David L. Rose
Chief, Employment Section
Civil Rights Division
U.S. Department of Justice

Howard Glickstein
Staff Director
U.S. Commission on Civil Rights

John de J. Pemberton, Jr.
Deputy General Counsel
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission

John Wilks
Director
Office of Federal Contract Compliance
U.S. Department of Labor

Chairman: Thomas E. Harris
AFL-CIO Associate General Counsel

1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m.

MANPOWER ACTIVITIES FOR MINORITY YOUTH

Ernest Green
National Director
Joint Apprenticeship Program
Workers Defense League

Napoleon Johnson
Director, LEAP
National Urban League

Robert M. McGlotten
Executive Director
Human Resources Development Institute
AFL-CIO

3:10 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.

VOICE OF THE CRITIC

William B. Gould
Professor
Wayne State University Law School

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28

9:30 a.m. - 12:00 noon	CONGRESSIONAL BLACK CAUCUS The Honorable Charles C. Diggs, Jr. Congressman, 13th District Michigan The Honorable Augustus F. Hawkins Congressman, 21st District California
1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m.	PARTICIPANTS' REPORTS ON UNION EXPERIENCES

THURSDAY, APRIL 29

9:00 a.m. - 10:20 a.m.	SCHOOLS, RACE AND THE TEACHERS' UNION Albert Shanker President United Federation of Teachers
10:40 a.m. - 12:00 noon	WOMEN AT WORK Jacqueline Brophy
1:30 p.m. - 2:50 p.m.	SCHOOL INTEGRATION AND QUALITY EDUCATION Emory F. Via Director, Labor Program Southern Regional Council James T. Harris Executive Director National Catholic Conference on Interracial Justice Emanuel Muravchik Executive Director Jewish Labor Committee Chairman: Walter Davis, Director AFL-CIO Department of Education
3:10 p.m. - 4:30 p.m.	IMPLEMENTATION OF LEGISLATION AND PROPOSED LEGISLATION Marvin Caplan Director, Washington Office Leadership Conference on Civil Rights William E. Pollard Staff Representative AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department Thomas Harris

FRIDAY, APRIL 30

9:00 a.m. EXECUTIVE SESSION

Chairman: Don Slaiman
Director
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

Adjournment by 12:00 noon

PROGRAM STAFF

Jacqueline Brophy	Associate Professor, School of Industrial Relations, Michigan State University
Marvin Caplan	Director, Washington Office, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights
Charles C. Diggs, Jr.	Congressman, 13th District, Michigan
Howard Glickstein	Staff Director, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights
William Gould	Professor, Wayne State University Law School
Ernest Green	National Director, Joint Apprenticeship Program, Workers Defense League
James Harris	Director, Catholic Conference on Interracial Justice
Thomas E. Harris	AFL-CIO Associate General Counsel
Augustus F. Hawkins	Congressman, 21st District, California
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.	Director, AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center
Napoleon Johnson	Director, LEAP, National Urban League
Robert McGlotten	Executive Director, Human Resources Development Institute
Kenneth Meiklejohn	Legislative Representative, AFL-CIO Legislative Department
Emanuel Muravchik	Executive Director, Jewish Labor Committee
John De J. Pemberton, Jr.	Deputy General Counsel, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission
David L. Rose	Chief of Employment Section, Civil Rights Division, U.S. Department of Justice
Albert Shanker	President, United Federation of Teachers
Donald Slaiman	Director, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department
Emory F. Via	Director, Labor Program, Southern Regional Council

CENTER STAFF

Robert S. Bell	Education Specialist
John Bufe	Intern
Sue Anna Cellini	Receptionist
Thomas J. Golatz	Education Specialist
Archie Green	Education Specialist
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.	Director
Lisa Portman	Assistant to the Director
Otto Pragan	Senior Staff Associate
Thomas Probey	Controller
Marjorie Rachlin	Senior Staff Associate
Brian Ruonavaara	Intern
Douglas Smyth	Education Specialist
Janis Strange	Secretary
Brenda Weis	Secretary

PARTICIPANTS

ROBERT J. AGNES
Secretary-Treasurer, Local 372
Service Employees Intl. Union
67 East Madison Street
Chicago, Illinois 60602

REV. DAVID A. BOILEAU
Director
Institute of Human Relations
Loyola University
New Orleans, Louisiana 70118

866-5471 x 247
(Hom. - 897-3311
R 628 Bed A

EVELYN DUBROW
Legislative Representative
Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union
1710 Broadway
New York, New York 10019

ALEX FULLER
Director, Civil Rights Department
United Steelworkers of America
1500 Commonwealth Building
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania 15222

JAMES GARY
Special Representative
Intl. Union of Operating Engineers
1125 17th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

WILLIAM GARY
Administrative Assistant to the President
Intl. Union of Electrical Workers
1126 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

RAYMOND L. GRAY
Director, Fair Practices Department
American Federation of Government Employees
400 First Street, Room 503
Washington, D.C. 20001

ALBERT HERLING
Director of Public Relations
Bakery & Confectionery Workers Intl. Union
1120 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036

JACK JOYCE
Treasurer
Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers Intl. Union
815 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

E. V. LEWIS
Assistant to Intl. President
American Federation of Musicians
641 Lexington Avenue
New York, New York 10022

F. A. O'CONNELL
Legislative Director
Transport Workers Union
100 Indiana Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001

T. W. ODENEAL
General Organizer
Bridge, Structural & Ornamental Iron Workers
8324 N. 5th Avenue
Birmingham, Alabama 35206

PETER OTTLEY
President, Local 144
Service Employees International Union
797 8th Avenue
New York, New York 10019

JOHN J. PECORARO
Legislative Representative
Brotherhood of Painters and Allied Trades
1925 K Street, N.W., Suite 203
Washington, D.C. 20006

ROBERT E. POWELL
Vice President
Laborers' International Union
905 16th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006

MERLIN TAYLOR
Assistant to the President
Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers Intl.
815-23 15th Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

JAMES TURNER
United Rubber Workers
87 S. High Street
Akron, Ohio 44308

HOLLIS C. WARD
Staff Representative, Fair Practices Department
American Federation of Government Employees
400 First Street, N.W., Room 503
Washington, D.C. 20001

ROOSEVELT WATTS
International Vice President
Transport Workers Union of America
1980 Broadway
New York, New York 10023

AL WICKMAN
Education Director
Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers
International Union
1840 California Street
Denver, Colorado 80202

LABOR STUDIES CENTER INC.

AFL CIO

MAY 6 1971

May 3, 1971

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for making the trip to Washington to talk to the Institute on Effective Union Action in Civil Rights. It was a good session but somehow I felt we didn't make the best use of your talents. We are going to improve the format and I hope you will allow us to call on you again in the future.

Send your airline ticket stub and note of other expenses to me, or better, directly to Thomas Probey, Controller, Labor Studies Center, and we'll forward a check to you.

Sincerely,

Jackie

Jacqueline Brophy
Conference Chairman

JB:smc
opeiu#2

AFL-CIO
LABOR STUDIES CENTER
BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Chairman
George Meany
President
AFL-CIO

Secretary-Treasurer
Lane Kirkland
Secretary-Treasurer
AFL-CIO

Assistant Secretary
Walter G. Davis
Director of Education
AFL-CIO

Executive Director
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

I. W. Abel, President
United Steelworkers
of America

Joseph A. Beirne, President
Communications Workers of America

Wilbur J. Cohen, Dean
School of Education
University of Michigan

John R. Coleman, President
Haverford College

Paul Douglas

Paul Hall, President
Seafarers International Union

Paul Jennings, President
International Union of Electrical,
Radio and Machine Workers

Theodore Kheel, Attorney-at-Law
Battle, Fowler, Stokes and Kheel

Frederick O'Neal, President
Actors' Equity Association

Bayard Rustin, Executive Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Peter T. Schoemann, President
United Association
of Journeymen and Apprentices
of the Plumbing and
Pipefitting Industry

Miles Stanley, President
West Virginia Labor Federation

Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., President
New York City
Central Labor Council

Hunter P. Wharton, President
International Union of Operating Engineers

Willard Wirtz
Attorney-at-Law

1500 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NORTHWEST • WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

May 20, 1971

Mr. Thomas Probey, Controller
Labor Studies Center
AFL-CIO
1500 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

Dear Mr. Probey:

My expenses in connection with my presentation to the Institute on Effective Union Action in Civil Rights (April 29, 1971) are:

Air Travel (Atlanta-Washington and return)	$92.00
Hotel and meals	29.30
Total	121.30

The receipts are attached. You will note that the airline ticket is for a more extensive trip, but the Labor Studies Center is being charged for its portion.

The check may be made out either to me personally or to the Southern Regional Council, Inc.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms
Encls.

LABOR STUDIES CENTER INC.

AFL CIO

I/ Requests

F: Labor Studies Center

June 14, 1971

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Via:

We are preparing a labor seminar for a group of interns from the Joint Center for Political Studies. I've enclosed a pamphlet explaining what the Joint Center is all about as well as a copy of our prospective program. The purpose of programs run for groups outside the labor movement is to acquaint them with the AFL-CIO and labor's involvement in areas of their concern.

As you will note, William Lucy will conclude the seminar by discussing the Memphis Sanitation Strike as a concrete example of labor action in civil rights. Searching for informational material on the background and incidentals, etc. of the strike, we unanimously decided that J. Edwin Stanfield's two articles "In Memphis: Tragedy Unaverted" and "In Memphis: More than a Garbage Strike" best meet our needs. - Harper to America

Would you kindly send us thirty copies of each? We need them by June 18, so if you could do it by first-class mail we can handle the tab for the entire bundle.

Sincerely,

John Bufe

John Bufe

Barry

JB:js
opeiu#2
enclosures

(202) 659-5957 (?)

[operator: What does AFL-CIO stand for?]

AFL-CIO
LABOR STUDIES CENTER
BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Chairman
George Meany
President
AFL-CIO

Secretary-Treasurer
Lane Kirkland
Secretary-Treasurer
AFL-CIO

Assistant Secretary
Walter G. Davis
Director of Education
AFL-CIO

Executive Director
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

I. W. Abel, President
United Steelworkers of America

Joseph A. Beirne, President
Communications Workers of America

Wilbur J. Cohen, Dean
School of Education
University of Michigan

John R. Coleman, President
Haverford College

Paul Douglas

Paul Hall, President
Seafarers International Union

Paul Jennings, President
International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers

Theodore Kheel, Attorney-at-Law
Battle, Fowler, Stokes and Kheel

Frederick O'Neal, President
Actors' Equity Association

Bayard Rustin, Executive Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Peter T. Schoemann, President
United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry

Miles Stanley, President
West Virginia Labor Federation

Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., President
New York City Central Labor Council

Hunter P. Wharton, President
International Union of Operating Engineers

Willard Wirtz
Attorney-at-Law

1500 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NORTHWEST • WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

Labor Studies Center

PROGRAM

FRIDAY, JUNE 25, 1971

Chairman: Barrett Seeley

9:00 a.m. - 9:30 a.m. — Welcome and Opening Remarks

Speaker: Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
Director
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

9:30 a.m. - 10:30 a.m. — History of Black Labor in U.S. to 1880

Speaker: Alvin Thomas
Intern
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Department

10:30 a.m. - 10:45 a.m. — Break

10:45 a.m. - 12:15 p.m. — Blacks and Organized Labor Since 1880

Speaker: Ernest R. McKinney
Assistant to the Executive Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

12:15 p.m. - 1:15 p.m. — Lunch (provided by Center)

1:15 p.m. - 2:15 p.m. — HRDI and Labor's Involvement in Manpower

Speaker: Robert McGlotten
Executive Director
Human Resources Development Institute, AFL-CIO

2:15 p.m. - 3:30 p.m. — Labor and Civil Rights Legislation & Implementation

Panel Discussion: Kenneth Young
Legislative Representative
AFL-CIO Legislative Dept.

William Pollard
Staff Representative
AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dept.

3:30 p.m. - 3:45 p.m. — Break

3:45 p.m. - 4:45 p.m. — The Memphis Sanitation Strike: A Case Study in Trade Unionism and Civil Rights

Speaker: William Lucy
Executive Assistant to the President
American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

LABOR STUDIES CENTER INC.

AFL CIO

File

JUN 30 1972

June 28, 1972

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Resources Development Center
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

We are in the process of bringing up to date our biographical information on those individuals who have worked with us from time to time and, hopefully, will work with us again in the future.

We will appreciate your sending us a copy of your resume or vitae for introductions and inclusion in notebooks where appropriate.

Sincerely,

Fred

Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.

FKH:bl
opeiu#2

AFL-CIO
LABOR STUDIES CENTER
BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Chairman
George Meany
President
AFL-CIO

Secretary-Treasurer
Lane Kirkland
Secretary-Treasurer
AFL-CIO

Assistant Secretary
Walter G. Davis
Director of Education
AFL-CIO

Executive Director
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

I. W. Abel, President
United Steelworkers
of America

Joseph A. Beirne, President
Communications Workers of America

Wilbur J. Cohen, Dean
School of Education
University of Michigan

John R. Coleman, President
Haverford College

Paul Douglas

Paul Hall, President
Seafarers International Union

Paul Jennings, President
International Union of Electrical,
Radio and Machine Workers

Theodore Kheel, Attorney-at-Law
Battle, Fowler, Stokes and Kheel

Frederick O'Neal, President
Actors' Equity Association

Bayard Rustin, Executive Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Peter T. Schoemann, President
United Association
of Journeymen and Apprentices
of the Plumbing and
Pipefitting Industry

Miles Stanley, President
West Virginia Labor Federation

Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., President
New York City
Central Labor Council

Hunter P. Wharton, President
International Union of
Operating Engineers

1500 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NORTHWEST • WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

RAYMOND M. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
C. G. GOMILLION, VICE-PRESIDENT
LUCIUS H. PITTS, VICE-PRESIDENT
VIVIAN W. HENDERSON, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
GEORGE H. ESSER, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
52 FAIRLIE STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303
522-8764

July 5, 1972

Mr. Fred H. Hoehler, Jr.
Labor Studies Center, Inc.
1500 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

Dear Fred:

A copy of vita is enclosed as you requested.

Best personal Wishes.

Sincerely,

Emory

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/gms

LABOR STUDIES CENTER INC.

AFL CIO

File

December 1972

As the holiday season draws near, all of us at the Labor Studies Center send our greetings and our best wishes for the New Year.

Plans for our new campus have been drawn up and approved. Work is underway, and when the renovation and building are finished, we will have attractive dorms, cafeteria, classrooms and assembly hall set on our own campus of 47 acres on the outskirts of Washington. Hopefully we will be holding programs there next fall.

Meanwhile -- back at the ranch -- we have many interesting Institutes going on this spring. A reminder about these programs will be mailed to you and your unions shortly after the New Year.

We hope to see you again soon -- drop in for a chat and some of our marvelous coffee (?) whenever you can.

J. Douglas Smyth

Russ Allen Janis Strange

Marge Rachlin Brenda Ski

Pam Schneider

Lisa Portman

Carol Gilbert

Dick Stober Brenda Lansdown

Tom Dooley

1500 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NORTHWEST • WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

The American Federationist

January 1973

24 AFL CVRT
EMORY F VIA
52 FAIRLIE ST NW SRCI
ATLANTA GA 30303

See Cartoons for clips

The 93rd Congress: Initiative or Inaction?

AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center, Inc.
1500 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20005
(202) 659-5797

APPLICATION FORM

Name of applicant _____

Address _____

_____
city state zip code

Phone _____ Date of application _____

Union position _____

Sponsoring union _____

_____
signature title

Subject and date of institute for which application is made

_____
institute subject institute date

17 17

AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center, Inc.
1500 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20005
(202) 659-5797

APPLICATION FORM

Name of applicant _____

Address _____

_____
city state zip code

Phone _____ Date of application _____

Union position _____

Sponsoring union _____

_____
signature title

Subject and date of institute for which application is made

_____
institute subject institute date

17 17

72 73 CATALOGUE

File [post 1973]

AFL-CIO
LABOR STUDIES CENTER
INC.

File - Labor Studies Center

19 seventy-one seventy-two

CATALOGUE

AFL-CIO
LABOR
STUDIES
CENTER
INC.

AFL-CIO LABOR STUDIES CENTER, INC.

70/71

CATALOGUE

WELCOME

TO THE AFL-CIO LABOR STUDIES CENTER

F. C.

Welcome to the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center. While you are with us we will do all that is possible to make your stay pleasant and rewarding. Should you have any questions or suggestions, please do not hesitate to bring them to our attention.

The purpose of the program that you are attending is to provide you with the maximum amount of information possible on the subject under discussion and in the time available. We hope that the informal atmosphere and the use of effective teaching techniques and pertinent materials will combine to stimulate discussion and increase learning.

The Center

In September 1967, the AFL-CIO Executive Council authorized a study looking into the feasibility of establishing a national labor studies center. The 1967 AFL-CIO Convention approved this plan of action and the AFL-CIO Education Department was directed to make the study. The AFL-CIO Executive Council, in February 1969, adopted the proposals contained in this study and approved the establishment of the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center. Thus, a permanent national center for labor studies became a reality on Labor Day 1969. The first institute began on December 7, 1969.

The AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center is an incorporated, non-profit educational institution governed by a Board of Trustees, composed of labor leaders, educators and public members.

The purpose of the Center, as adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in February, 1969, is as follows:

1. To develop trade union leadership through training programs in the various technical skills required of a union leader.

2. To develop trade union leadership through educational programs in the social sciences and humanities in order that technical skills be buttressed by a firm grounding in theory and philosophy.

3. To develop and engage in education programs and provide information about the labor movement which will carry its basic philosophy to all parts of the community.

4. To involve the students in the problems of the total labor movement and thus strengthen all affiliated organizations.

The First Year

From December 7, 1969 through June 26, 1970, the Center ran 23 education and training sessions ranging from several hours to three weeks in length involving 372 students and 107 instructors and speakers. Sixty-seven unions and state and city central bodies participated by enrolling officers and staff.

The Future

The educational goals of the Center will be developed in several stages over the next decade. In this beginning stage, the curriculum is aimed primarily at full-time international and local union staff through resident programs for staff development and institutes in specific subject areas.

Later, when the Center is well underway, it will also develop courses and programs for local union officers and rank and file members.

The Facilities

The temporary quarters of the Center are in Suite 24, 1500 Massachusetts Avenue in Washington. It is located just five blocks from the AFL-CIO Building at 815 16th Street, and only a few blocks from the city's main shopping quarters.

There are currently three classrooms, a library lounge, a coffee and reception area and staff office space at the Center. The largest classroom can comfortably seat 25 persons "conference" style, while the smaller can seat 17 persons each. The library and coffee lounges provide ample room for informal discussions.

The Center library contains a selection of labor and labor-related books. Students are urged to check out these books during their stay at the Center, and are encouraged to make use of the library at the AFL-CIO Building to supplement our collection.

In addition to the library, the Center is developing a paperback section which will offer selected titles for sale at cost.

There is a wide range of audio-visual equipment available at the Center including a 16mm projector, tape recorders, a complete video recording system, an opaque projector and a transparency maker.

SELECTED POINTS OF INTEREST IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

AFL-CIO Headquarters - 815 16th Street, N.W., 293-5000; Hours: 9:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The White House - 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., 456-1414; House: 10:00 a.m. - Noon, Tuesday through Friday, 10:00 a.m. - 2:00 p.m. Saturdays. Special V.I.P. tour at 8:00 a.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Free.

The Washington Monument - On the Mall at 15th Street, N.W., 381-7316; Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m. daily and Sunday. Free. 10¢ charge for elevator ride to the top with children under 16 admitted free.

The Capitol: Senate Side - Phone 224-3121; Hours: 9:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. daily; 40-minute tours of the Capitol are 25¢ for adults and free for children.

The Capitol: House Side - Phone 224-3121; Hours and tours same as above.

The Jefferson Memorial - South bank of the Tidal Basin. Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 12:00 midnight, daily and Sunday. Free.

The Lincoln Monument - West Potomac Park at the foot of 23rd Street, N.W. Hours: 8:00 a.m. - midnight. Daily and Sunday. Free.

The Supreme Court - First and Maryland Avenue, N.E.; EX 3-1640; Hours: 9:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday; 9:00 a.m. - Noon Saturday; Cost: free.

Ford's Theater and Petersen House - 511 10th Street, N.W. 381-7316; Hours: 9:00 a.m. - 12:00 Noon, Monday through Saturday; 9:00 a.m. - 9:00 p.m. Sunday. Free.

National Geographic - 17th and M Streets, N.W. 296-7500; Hours: 9:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. Monday through Saturday; Cost: Free. Visit Explorers' Hall, depicting the history of discovery and exploration. National Geographic maps and books are sold over the counter.

MUSEUMS

National Archives - Between Constitution and Pennsylvania Avenues, 7th and 9th Streets, N.W.; WO 3-6404; Hours: 9:00 a.m. - 10:00 p.m. Monday through Saturday; 1:00 p.m. - 10:00 p.m. Sunday. Free. Here you will find such historically significant documents as the "Declaration of Independence," "The Constitution" and "The Bill of Rights."

The Smithsonian Institution - Four museum buildings located in the same area on the Mall near the Washington Monument: Museum of History & Technology (12th & Constitution Avenue, N.W); Arts and Industries Building (9th & Jefferson Drive, S.W.); Museum of Natural History (10th & Constitution Ave., N.W.); Air and Space Building (10th & Independence Ave,, S.W.) Hours: 10:00 a.m.-5:30 p.m. daily. Free.

The National Gallery of Art - 6th and Constitution Avenues, N.W. 737-4215; Hours: 10:00 a.m. - 9:00 p.m. daily and Saturday; 12:00 Noon - 10:00 p.m. Sunday. Free.

The Corcoran Gallery - New York and 17th Streets, N.W.; ME 8-3211; Hours: 10:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday; 9:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Saturday; 2:00 p.m. - 5:00 p.m. Sunday. Free. An outstanding collection of contemporary American art.

The Phillips Collection Gallery - 1600 21st Street, N.W.; DU 7-2151; Hours: 11:00 a.m.- 10:00 p.m. Monday; 11:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday; 2:00 p.m. - 7:00 p.m. Sunday. Free. An excellent collection of leading Impressionist and Post-Impressionist works.

THEATERS, CONCERTS AND FILMS

Many concerts and stage productions (both indoors and outdoors) take place in Washington throughout the year. First-run films and new foreign movies are also abundant. For current information, check with either the Center staff or the entertainment section of Washington's daily newspapers.

OTHER INFORMATION

Airports

There are three airports serving the Washington area:

Washington National Airport is a short, 15-minute drive from town with cab fare running approximately $2.50 for the first person and less for each additional passenger.

Dulles International Airport, a vast, magnificent structure designed by Saarinen, is 27 miles from Washington. Cab fare is expensive. Limousine service is $2.50 and leaves from the Albert Pick Motel (12th and K Streets, N W.).

Friendship Airport serves both the Baltimore and Washington areas. It is a 30-minute drive from the District. Cabs are expensive, but the Limousine service, leaving from the Albert Pick Motel, is $2.50 each way.

Airlines

The principle airlines flying to and from the Nation's Capital are:

Allegheny	- ST 3-4500	Northeast	- 783-0840
American	- EX 3-2345	Northwest	- 337-0611
Braniff	- ST 3-0144	Piedmont	- DI 7-1800
Delta	- 296-7000	TWA	- 659-1000
Eastern	- 393-4000	United	- 893-3400
National	- 549-7633

Railroads

All railroad service to and from Washington, D.C. operates from historic Union Station, located near the Capitol Building. For passenger information, call EX 3-7900.

Bus Terminals

There are two bus terminals serving the Washington area from different parts of the country. They are Continental Trailways, located at 12th and New York Avenue, N.W. (RE 7-5800) and Greyhound at 1110 New York Avenue, N.W. (NA 8-8000).

Cabs

Washington taxis are plentiful (except when it rains) and reasonable. The fare system is based on five different zones within the city.

Blue Laws

Washington bars and night clubs close at 2:00 a.m. weekdays and midnight Saturday and Sunday. Since only wine and beer may be served on Sunday, most places do not open. Liquor stores are closed at 9:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, at midnight on Saturdays and all day Sunday.

Churches

For complete church listings, consult your hotel directory or the Yellow Pages. Those included here are listed primarily for their historical interest. The National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception (Catholic), Michigan Avenue and 4th Street, N.E. is the largest Catholic church in the U.S. and the 7th largest religious structure in the world. St. John's Church at Lafayette Square, N.W., next door to the AFL-CIO Building, is known as the "Church of Presidents." It is Episcopal, as is the famous Washington Cathedral at Wisconsin & Massachusetts Avenues, N.W. A fascinating church is the Mosque, 2551 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., the first Moslem church ever built in the U.S. St. Matthew's Cathedral (Catholic) on Rhode Island Avenue at Connecticut Avenue, N.W., is where the Kennedy funeral was held, attended by President De Gaulle, Haile Selassie and hundreds of other dignitaries.

1-M St. Delly
2-O.F.C. Cafeteria
3-Nat. Geographic Society
4-B'nai Brith
5-Grammercy Inn
6-Holiday Inn
7-Temple Liquor & Beer
8-Esso Car Repair & Service
9-Hanky Panky Dellicatessen
10-Gem Cleaners & Launderet
11-Copley's Sandwich Shop
12-Lee's Laundry & Dry Cleaning
13-Paramount Steak House
14-17th St. Laundromat
15-Delicatessen & Milk Bar
16-Diplomat Liquors & Beer
17-Trio Restuarant & Bar
18-Alturas Hotel-Restuarant
19-Foundry Methodist Church
20-Nat. Wildlife Federation
21-First Baptist Church
22-Holiday Inn
23-Orbit Dry Cleaners
24-Mama's Italo-American Rest.
25-United States Post Office
26-Mid-City Dry Clean & ShoeShop
27-5¢ & 10¢ Haberdashery
28-Savon Liquors & Beer
29-Ridgeway Delicatessen
30-H.Ray Drugs & Sundries
31-Valet Shop-Laundry & Dry Cleaning Services

Wash. Trujs

Statement Before the Senate Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity

BY

GEORGE D. FISCHER, PRESIDENT
NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION
1201 SIXTEENTH STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20036

Distributed by
The NEA-Center for Human Relations to the 108th NEA Convention in San Francisco

Statement of
George D. Fischer, President
National Education Association
before the
Senate Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity
June 16, 1970

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

I am George D. Fischer, President of the National Education Association. With me at the witness table are Dr. Sam Ethridge, Assistant Executive Secretary for Teacher Rights and Mr. Stanley J. McFarland of the Office of Legislation and Federal Relations. Other members of the NEA staff who have special knowledge and experience related to the Committee's concern are also present and available if needed to clarify or expand on any matter in which the Select Committee has an interest.

The National Education Association is a professional, independent, private nonprofit organization of educators. The NEA was established 113 years ago. It is the largest professional association in the United States. Our membership of 1,100,000 includes professional educators in institutions ranging from pre-school through graduate and adult education. The majority of our members are classroom teachers in the public schools in all states, territories, and the Department of Defense Overseas Schools. The policies of the Association are established by our annual Representative Assembly comprised of 7,200 delegates from the state and local affiliated organizations. The administration of the Association is under a 96-member board of directors elected by the state associations and a 9-member executive committee, elected by the Representative Assembly. Members of both governing bodies serve for overlapping three-year terms.

Persons with me here today are from the staffs of the Center for Human Relations, the Professional Rights and Responsibilities Commission, the Division of Field Services, and the Office of Legislation and Federal Relations.

The NEA has been actively promoting integrated education for several decades, but particularly after the Supreme Court Decision of 1954. Our interest in the subject of the Select Committee's deliberation is reflected in several resolutions adopted by the NEA Representative Assembly in Philadelphia in July 1969. Most of these are based on resolutions of previous years.

The most pertinent resolutions are:

C-1. Educational Opportunity for All

C-4. Desegregation in the Public Schools

C-5. A Competent Educator in Every Professional Position

C-9. Physical Environment for Learning

C-13. Cultural Diversity in Instructional Materials

C-30. Nondiscriminatory Personnel Policies

C-37. Continuing Employment and Fair Dismissal Practices

C-39. Public Understanding

C-40. Civil Rights

C-44. Defense of Educators

C-47. Desegregation as Association Policy

Resolution C-47, Desegregation as Association Policy, speaks to the NEA objective established in 1965 that there shall be only one affiliated state association in any state. It was once the practice in several states, all in the Southeast, to have two education associations, one for black educators, one for white. The NEA itself as a national organization has always been fully integrated. During the period 1965 to 1969 all of the dual associations merged into a single state affiliate except those in Mississippi and Louisiana. The white associations in both states have been expelled from the NEA. The former black associations are currently the official NEA affiliates, which white teachers in small numbers are joining.

In January and February of 1970, on direction of the NEA Board of Directors and Executive Committee, 27 members of the NEA staff were sent to Mississippi and Louisiana as task forces to report on-the-scene observations of violations of the letter and spirit of the laws and regulations pertinent to desegregation of public and tax supported schools. The cumulative reports of these task forces have been discussed with members of the Select Committee and staff and are filed with this statement for the record.

These task forces identified specific cases which we believe to be indicative of widespread conditions, not only in Mississippi and Louisiana, but in other states as well.

Before citing specifics I should like to ask that the record include the NEA Special Study in East Texas, Beyond Desegregation: The Problem of Power. The locale of this study is limited to East Texas, but we believe it captures the bitter flavor of the entire deep South on the issues of desegregation and integration. We believe this is important to this Committee's work.

Treatment of Students

While the data we gathered relate largely to the plight of educators in the South, our concern is not only for them, but more deeply for the children of both races concerned.

The black children, by seeing black teachers and administrators downgraded or fired, are impressed with the feeling that blackness is a mark of inferiority. Their reaction in many cases is one of self-hate, although in recent years this has been replaced by feelings of rebellion. The white children, on the other hand, are led to believe that their whiteness makes them superior persons. This condition perpetuates the thoroughly discredited myth of white superiority and inhibits their future adult life, making it difficult for them to operate effectively in a multi-racial world.

In many so-called integrated schools the children are segregated by race into separate classrooms. In some instances the children are segregated within the classroom. Except for competitive athletic teams in some cases, virtually all extracurricular activities are segregated. When black and white schools' student bodies are merged, almost always the black school's trophies awards, etc. are left behind, not transferred and displayed in the "integrated" school. There are reported instances where white faculty members refer to black students openly as "spooks" or "niggers," where the blacks are seated in a corner of the room, with the white teacher turning his back on them for the entirety of the class periods.

Whatever progress might have been made in improving educational opportunities for black students has been jeopardized by submersion of their interests and needs and accomplishments in the current desegregation process. In most instances the pattern of desegregation is one way, involving the transfer of black students to formerly all white schools. Black schools, many of them more modern than those formerly for whites only, are abandoned or closed. In at least one situation, because the school system operates a segregated busing system, black children must board buses at 5:30 a.m. After the blacks are dropped off at school, the buses make second runs to pick up white children.

In one reported instance white students received written notice of their school assignment, while black children were first informed of their assignment by the school bus driver at the time of pick-up.

It was reported by students and black teachers that in case of inter-racial fights the white students frequently are not punished, but teachers may and do use corporal punishment on the black students involved.

Treatment of Teachers and Administrators

As an organization of professional educators we have a major responsibility to protest the unprofessional treatment of educators whenever or wherever it occurs. One arm of the NEA is our DuShane Emergency Fund for Teacher Rights which, after investigation, assists teachers in legal actions in matters pertaining to their professional employment. When necessary the DuShane Fund also provides subsistence loans or grants to individuals pending the outcome of litigation. Currently on hand we have 181 applications from black teachers and principals alleging violation of their professional rights for reasons of race. It must be pointed out that this number represents only a tiny fraction of the scope of the problem. For perfectly understandable reasons, hundreds of persons who have suffered demotion, dismissal, or harrassment do not pursue the matter. They are for the most part older individuals who cannot bring themselves to take action because their family members in the community would suffer with them. The East Texas Report (page 39) states the situation well:

"The initiative of black teachers to effect change is stifled, not only because of the immediate fear of job loss, but because teachers, too, have to deal with white bankers, white creditors, white landlords, and white judges. Teachers, too, fear physical as well as economic reprisal. The very weight of white dominion has a chilling effect."

I believe it is beyond the scope of the imagination of anyone here to really understand the courage displayed by the black teachers who do peacefully protest injustice, and I honor them. We are equally proud of the courageous white teachers who sustain their efforts.

As some specific examples, we have on-the-spot evidence that in eleven counties in Mississippi black principals have been demoted as desegregation took place. Also, a black principal in Louisiana, holder of a masters degree in administration, with high commendation for his two years service as a junior high principal, was reassigned to teach fifth grade and was replaced by a white teacher without professional administrative experience or qualification. On protesting his lack of professional preparation to teach fifth grade the black principal was reassigned to a 7th grade post in an integrated school. Another black principal whose school was closed was demoted and assigned to teach mathmatics to 180 pupils grades 4 to 7. He has 27 years tenure in the district. He is not certificated to teach math. As of February 1970 he had been "observed" by the supervisor six times in a two week period. No assistance or constructive criticism was offered. The supervisor's only comment was that the former principal does not know his assigned subject, and therefore should be fired.

These are not isolated instances, but are typical of general practice. In virtually every instance a black principal is either reassigned to teaching duties, often in an area and grade level for which he is not qualified, or is listed as assistant principal, frequently with no office and limited to routine clerical tasks such as taking attendance or collecting school lunch money. It is rare that a reassigned black principal ever comes in contact with white pupils or teachers.

It is not uncommon for black teachers, when reassigned to desegregated schools, to be denied classrooms. They become "floaters" moving from room to room during the school day. There are numerous cases of persons being reassigned out of their field of preparation. For example, a black English teacher is assigned to teach French. This is regarded as a ploy to allow dismissal of teachers for incompetence at the end of the school year.

A black science teacher with a master's degree from New York University formerly taught grades 9-12 in an all black school. After desegregation he was reassigned as an eighth grade teacher, and a white former vocational agriculture teacher was hired to teach 9th grade science. The black teacher's excellent laboratory was removed from the black school and placed in the vocational agriculture teacher's 9th grade class, where it is seldom used. The black former science teacher is now a "floater", has no assigned classroom, has to carry his science equipment with him.

Black teachers are forbidden to deal with discipline problems which instead must be referred to white principals. In one school, the principal has allegedly authorized white teachers to use corporal punishment on black pupils who misbehave.

In 1965 the NEA conducted a study which was jointly financed by the NEA and the U.S. Office of Education. The report of this study is entitled Task Force Survey of Teacher Displacement in Seventeen States. The situation described in this five-year-old survey accurately portrays the situation today in those localities which are now being forced to integrate. A more recent report from the Georgia Teachers and Education Association, NEA's integrated affiliate shows that the student-teacher ratio for whites is 18.5 to one, while the student-teacher ratio for blacks is 29.2 to one.

It is becoming widespread practice in the desegregated school systems to require that teachers take such texts as the National Teacher Examination, developed by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, New Jersey. NEA does not object to periodic evaluation of a teacher's academic competence. However, we strongly object to the misuse of this instrument as a means of discriminating against black teachers. The test is designed solely to measure a teacher's academic knowledge of subject matter. It in no way measures qualitative characteristics such as rapport with students, skill in instructional techniques, and other vitally important essential components of good teaching. Requiring a certain score on the National Teachers Examination as the sole criterion for hiring or retaining any teacher is unsound professional practice. The use of periodic evaluation to help identify areas of strength and weakness in a teacher's academic preparation as a guide to further inservice training in his field is valid, but should never be used as a hiring or firing criterion.

Facilities, School Buses and Instructional Materials

Some strange use and misuse of school buildings is evident in several states. When desegregation occurs (and incidentally, most usually with no involvement of the black community in development of the plans) school boards frequently downgrade or close the black schools. In several cases newer and well equipped black schools were closed while white schools were overcrowded.

In one Louisiana parish the public school board has leased a public school building for $500 annually to the newly-created private segregated school for white children. The $500 fee includes school books and instructional equipment. NEA investigators were told that the plant was constructed with federal money, but were unable to verify or disprove this allegation. The white high school principal and several school board members are leaders of the private school group. In another community a newspaper report indicates the public school board sold a public school to a private group under a sealed bid for $501.50. At the same meeting the board spent over an hour discussing how to cut school costs.

In another situation where a segregated private academy was established the board of education gave the private school an estimated $55,000 worth of textbooks. Teachers in the public schools state they do not have enough textbooks for their pupils. In the same school system the private school uses the public school buses. There are other examples of sale or lease of public school buildings to private school groups but we do not have data as to dollar amounts involved.

There are indications that tuition to the private schools is $400 to $500 per year. The cost would be much higher except that public school materials, buses, and textbooks are frequently given to the private schools by public school officials. There is also evidence that white teachers have been kept on the public school payroll until the end of the school year, although they are teaching in the private school.

The local and state school officials are not alone responsible for the conditions which are contrary to the spirit and letter of the integration laws. In an article in the Washington Monthly, Peter Gall, a former member of the Office of Civil Rights staff in HEW, states the situation succinctly:

> "From almost its first month, the Nixon Administration began to nibble away at our program. First, the desegregation guidelines were weakened in a joint HEW-Justice statement drafted primarily at the White House. Then several school districts got favored treatment that violated all the standards that had been maintained until then. Then Secretary Finch sent a letter to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, asking for a delay for 30 Mississippi school districts, in what then appeared to be (and was later held to be) direct conflict with rulings of the Supreme Court. Finally, the Administration adopted the code words "bussing" and "neighborhood schools" as the definition of the Supreme Court, Congress, and the previous Administration, that the issue was equal educational opportunity under a very explicit law..."

The firing last week of Commissioner of Education James Allen, virtually the only voice in the Nixon Administration expressing deep commitment to the cause of integration, is the latest negative event in this sequence.

It is small wonder that the resistance of the white power structure in the South remains strong.

Conclusion and Recommendations

We urge the Committee not to believe that our concern for human rights of pupils and teachers is limited to blacks or to one region of the country. We are equally concerned, as we trust the Committee is, with similar problems facing Indians, Spanish Americans, Orientals, and members of other ethnic minorities. Our concentration in this statement on the problems of blacks in the South results from our being able to report specifically on actual cases in that area because of the recent activity of our staff task forces. The NEA Center for Human Rights is in the process of developing similar data relative to Spanish Surname Americans.

The exhaustive study by the Senate Special Sub-Committee on Indian Education thoroughly documents conditions affecting our Indian citizens. Our efforts in this area will be to furnish leadership and to coordinate with Indian groups to seek improvements in the education of Indian children and youth. It is important to note that the problems of ethnic groups differ in many respects and the solutions will be equally varied. The one common denominator affecting all is, of course, white racism. We believe the NEA has a major responsibility to work to eliminate this evil wherever it exists, including among our own membership.

We recommend that the Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity conduct on-the-spot investigations in the South, the Southwest, and in various areas of the North and West where de facto and de jure racial discrimination exists.

We recommend that legislation providing massive general federal aid to education, equal to 30% of the total cost of public education, be enacted with full protection that federal funds may not be used in racially segregated schools.

We recommend removal of restrictions prohibiting the use of federal funds for financing pupil transportation if local authorities so choose.

We recommend that the Government Accounting Office investigate alleged charges of misuse of federal education funds as charged by NAACP and others.

We recommend that S 1951, the Professional Negotiation Act, be enacted to provide a federal agency to which teachers may have recourse through their associations in settlement of grievances.

We recommend that S 3887, Mobile Teachers Retirement Act be enacted to facilitate the movement of teachers to different states without loss of retirement benefits.

We recommend strong and swift action by the Department of Justice and the Office of Civil Rights of HEW and the courts in cases affecting the civil rights of teachers.

We recommend that the Select Committee make the widest possible use of the news media to inform the public as to the Committee's findings as your investigation progresses rather than waiting until work is completed.

We recommend the immediate official release of the report of the White House Task Force on Urban Education.

We appreciate this opportunity to present our findings and comments to the Committee and pledge our whole-hearted support and cooperation in any way we may be helpful.

SOUTH TODAY

A Digest of Southern Affairs

ATLANTA, GA. VOL. 2, NO. 5 DECEMBER, 1970

Crisis Of Education

A Special Issue

A Long Way Yet In Southern Schools

Page 3

25¢

North or South:

Who Will Be First To Show the Way?

PASADENA AND some other cities are showing that full integration, with massive use of buses, can work well. In other places integration is having more trouble. But there are encouraging signs that many non-Southern school administrators are effectively doing the job that their Southern counterparts often say cannot be done. For this four-page SOUTH TODAY special report, education writer Mike Bowler toured the nation to see what is happening. Pages 5-8. A New York Times survey shows integration going well in some typical smaller cities, North and South. Page 10.

Coleman Silberman Clark

3 Experts

THREE EXPERTS on matters related to school desegregation and quality education—Kenneth Clark, Charles Silberman and James Coleman—talk about the failures and the possibilities. The nation could provide the world a great example by 1976, Dr. Clark says. Page 4.

A Teacher

IN OCTOBER Pat Conroy was dismissed as the teacher in a one-room school on Daufuskie Island, S.C. (See SOUTH TODAY, November issue.) Now he is facing tough consequences, and the future of a little school where children were truly learning is in doubt. By Betsy Fancher. Page 9.

Conroy

Academies:

MANY WHITE parents would rather give their children inferior educations than send them to integrated schools. Georgia's academy enrolments have grown. The schools often receive illegal public assistance. By Junie Brown. Page 12.

Index: South Today, Volume I

Following is an index of Volume I, South Today, listing articles which appeared during the first year of publication, July, 1969, through June, 1970. The index is available upon request in a 17-page, stapled format, eight and a half by 11 inches. South Today also is indexed by the Public Affairs Information Service. Back issues may be ordered from the Southern Regional Council for 25 cents each.

AGRICULTURE
See also: COOPS
"A Cry From the Delta." Robert Coles and Harry Huge from the NEW REPUBLIC. v. 1, n. 1, pp. 5-6 (July 1969) A description of the tragic human conditions in rural Mississippi with a discussion of agricultural politics involved.
"U.S.D.A.: It Remains Government's Worst Rights Offender." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 5, p. 5 (Nov. 1969) Agriculture programs discriminate against blacks.

AGRICULTURE—MIGRANTS
"Migrants: What Makes Them Tick?" Robert Coles from THE MIGRANT FARMER: A PSYCHIATRIC STUDY. v. 1, n. 3, p. 7 (Sept. 1969)
"Peonage in Florida." Robert Coles and Harry Huge from the NEW REPUBLIC. v. 1, n. 3, p. 6 (Sept. 1969) A study of Florida migrants.

APPALACHIA
"Change in the Mountains." Colman McCarthy from the WASHINGTON POST. v. 1, n. 3, p. 3 (Sept. 1969) Community action program, FOCIS, brings change.
" 'The Lord Can Take Us to the Moon in the Next Life.' " Colman McCarthy from the WASHINGTON POST. v. 1, n. 3, p. 3 (Sept. 1969) A mountaineer comments on modern priorities.

ARMED FORCES
"Black Vets: A Place Now In America's Mainstream?" Barbara Thomas and Peggy Roberson from the BIRMINGHAM NEWS. v. 1, n. 6, p. 3 (Dec. 1969)

BIBLIOGRAPHY
"Report on Reports." v. 1, n. 2, p. 2 (Aug. 1969) An index of relevant magazine articles.

BLACK CAPITALISM
See: ECONOMICS—NEGRO BUSINESS

BLACK POLITICAL PARTICIPATION
See: POLITICS—NEGRO

BUSINESS—SOCIAL ASPECTS
"Banker: One in Atlanta Goes to the Slums" from BUSINESS WEEK. v. 1, n. 2, p. 5 (Aug. 1969) C&S Bank's community development program.
"Black Executive: He Makes His Own Way." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 2, p. 4 (Aug. 1969) Black holds executive position with tobacco company.
"Business: Is It Now Moving?" Alan Otten from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 2, p. 4 (Aug. 1969)
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 8, p. 2 (March 1970) Cities Urban Coalition's CONSUMER CREDIT AND THE LOW INCOME CONSUMER.
"Why: A Corporate Leader States the Case." Roger Lewis from DATELINE, v. 1, n. 2, p. 5 (Aug. 1969)

BUSING
"The Busing Myth: Seg Academies Bus More Children Further." Leonard Levine and Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 10, p. 7 (May 1970)

CIVIL RIGHTS
See also: RACE AND RACE RELATIONS; VOTING RIGHTS ACT
"By Way of: Somerville." John Lewis. v. 1, n. 4, p. 2 (Oct. 1969) A review of civil rights activities in this small Tennessee town.
" 'The Past Is Now;' Tragedy, Loneliness Are South's Theme." James McBride Dabbs from CIVIL RIGHTS IN RECENT SOUTHERN FICTION. v. 1, n. 6, pp. 1, 5 (Dec. 1969)
"Seeing the Movement." Nat Hentoff from HARPER'S. v. 1, n. 8, p. 7 (March 1970)
"U.S.D.A.: It Remains Government's Worst Rights Offender." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 5, p. 4 (Nov. 1969) Agriculture programs discriminate against blacks.

CITIES and TOWNS
See: URBAN AFFAIRS

COLLEGES and UNIVERSITIES
See: EDUCATION—HIGHER

COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION
"Change in the Mountains." Colman McCarthy from the WASHINGTON POST. v. 1, n. 3, p. 3 (Sept. 1969) Community action program, FOCIS, brings change.
"Report on Reports." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 11, p. 2 (June 1970) Rent strikes and other Activities of the National Tenants Organization in the South.

COOPS
"Co-ops: 'No Man Is Free Until He Makes His Living.' " Hank Leifermann from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 5, p. 5 (Nov. 1969)
"By Way of: Gee's Bend." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 3, pp. 2, 7 (Sept. 1969) A wedding in the Freedom Quilting Bee's new factory.
"Quilting Bee." Carolynne Scott from the BIRMINGHAM NEWS. v. 1, n. 1, p. 6 (July 1969)

DEMONSTRATIONS
See also: VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION
"Our Children Are Spat On." Pat Watters. v. 1, n. 1, pp. 1, 7 (July 1969) Black parents sit-in at the Justice Department; air their complaints about school desegregation.

DEMONSTRATIONS—CAMPUS
" 'No Person Is Safe.' " Statement by the Southern Regional Council following events at Orangeburg in 1968. v. 1, n. 11, p. 8 (June 1970)
"Orangeburg: A Tragedy Of Police Panic and Official Defensiveness." v. 1, n. 1, p. 8 (July 1969)
"Orangeburg to Kent State." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 11, p. 8 (June 1970) Similarities of the tragedies at South Carolina State and Kent State.

DISASTER RELIEF
"Disaster Relief: A Federal Failure." Jim Wood. v. 1, n. 6, p. 7 (Dec. 1969) A summary of the SRC-AFSC report, IN THE WAKE OF HURRICANE CAMILLE—AN ANALYSIS OF THE FEDERAL RESPONSE.
"Just Normal Greed." Calvin Trillin from THE NEW YORKER. v. 1, n. 6, pp. 6-7 (Dec. 1969) Report on relief efforts following Hurricane Camille on the Mississippi Coast.

ECOLOGY
"Jobs, Sea and Air." Bayard Webster from the NEW YORK TIMES. v. 1, n. 8, p. 3 (March 1969) Opposition to the location of a BASF chemical plant on the South Carolina coast.
"A New Plant Meets A New Age." Betsy Fancher. v. 1, n. 11, special section, pp. 1-4 (June 1970) Pros and cons of locating BASF chemical plant on the South Carolina coast.
"A Theology for the Age of Ecology." William K. McElvaney from THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. v. 1, n. 11, p. 4 (June 1970)

ECONOMICS
See also: LABOR, EMPLOYMENT, POVERTY
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 8, p. 2 (March 1970) Cites Urban Coalition's CONSUMER CREDIT AND THE LOW INCOME CONSUMER.
"Sales: Small-Town Stores Blame Private Schools for Pinch." Neil Maxwell from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 11, p. 5 (June 1970)
"South's Taxes Hit Poor Hardest." Bob Anderson. v. 1, n. 5, p. 7 (Nov. 1969) A summary of THE TAX STRUCTURE OF THE SOUTHERN STATES: AN ANALYSIS, by Eva Galambos for SRC.
"Taxes: Lower Revenue Attributed to 'Seg Academies' Cost." From the MEMPHIS COMMERICAL-APPEAL. v. 1, n. 11, p. 5 (June 1970)
"Who Makes the Money?" Arnold Cantor from the AFL-CIO FEDERATIONIST. v. 1, n. 5, p. 6 (Nov. 1969) Poorest 20 per cent get only 5 per cent of the nation's wealth.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT
See also: RURAL DEVELOPMENT
"A New Plant Meets A New Age." Betsy Fancher. v. 1, n. 11, special section, pp. 1-4 (June 1970) Pros and cons of locating BASF chemical plant on the South Carolina coast.
"Jobs, Sea and Air." Bayard Webster. from the NEW YORK TIMES. v. 1 n. 8, p. 3 (March 1970) Opposition to the location of a BASF chemical plant on the South Carolina coast.
"The Standards Change." Emory Via. v. 1, n. 11, special section, p. 1 (June 1970) New standards for economic development in the South being suggested.

ECONOMICS—NEGRO BUSINESS
"Black Capitalism; a Strategy That Will Fail." Andrew Brimmer from THE ECONOMIC POTENTIAL OF BLACK CAPITALISM, American Economic Assn., Dec. 1969. v. 1, n. 8, p. 6 (March 1970)
" 'A Piece of the Action' " Reese Cleghorn. v. 1, n. 5, pp. 1, 8 (Nov. 1969) Roanoke, Alabama, Chamber of Commerce honors black entreprenuer, J. A. Terry.

EDUCATION
". . . And in Mississippi." Curtis Wilkie from MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 4, p. 5 (Oct. 1969) Testing in the Mississippi schools.
"By Way of: Selma." Francis Walter, from the Selma Interreligious Project NEWSLETTER. v. 1, n. 8, p. 2 (March 1970)
"I. Q. and Race." Christopher Jencks from the NEW REPUBLIC. v. 1, n. 4, p. 3 (Oct. 1969)
"I. Q. and Race: 'He Failed to Prove Any Genetic Causes.' " Philip Whitten and Jerome Kagan from PSYCHOLOGY TODAY. v. 1, n. 4, p. 5 (Oct. 1969)
"I Q. and Race: Innate Differences Denied by Others" from the U. S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT. v. 1, n. 4, p. 5 (Oct. 1969)
"I. Q. and Race: Jensen Renews a Conflict" from the U. S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT. v. 1, n. 4, p. 3 (Oct. 1969)
"I. Q. and Race: Jensen Swaps Words With Some Critics." Lee Edson from the NEW YORK TIMES magazine. v. 1, n. 4, p. 4 (Oct. 1969)
"Scopes: This Is, Now, 1970." Ed Williams from MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 10, pp. 1, 8 (May 1970) It's still against the law to teach evolution in Mississippi's public schools.

EDUCATION—DESEGREGATION
"Atlanta: Schools Order Reveals a Crisis of Leadership." William Winn. v. 1, n. 7, pp. 4-5 (Feb. 1970)
" 'Beautiful Bogalusa', Full School Integration is Smoothly Taken in Stride." Bruce Galphin, from the WASHINGTON POST. v. 1, n. 7, p. 8 (Feb. 1970)
"Desegregation: Where Do We go From Here?" Alexander M. Bickel from the NEW REPUBLIC. v. 1, n. 9, p. 8 (April 1970)
"Federal Retreat; Nixon Policies Allowing Resistance and Evasion." Neil Maxwell, from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 4, p. 8 (Oct. 1969)
"Our Children Are Spat On." Pat Watters. v. 1, n. 1, pp. 1, 7 (July 1969) Black parents sit-in at the Justice Department; air their complaints about school desegregation.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 3, p. 2 (Sept. 1969) Cites HEW study of attitudes towards school desegregation.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 4, p. 2 (Oct. 1969) Cites FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT OF SCHOOL DESEGREGATION, issued by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 4, p. 2 (Oct. 1969) Cites warnings by the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, the NEW YORK TIMES and the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights of a federal retreat in school desegregation.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 5, p. 2 (Nov. 1969) Cites Morton Inger's monograph, POLITICS AND REALITY IN AN AMERICAN CITY, an analysis of the causes of the 1960 New Orleans school desegregation crisis.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 6, p. 2 (Dec. 1969) Cites STUDENT INVOLVEMENT: A BRIDGE TO TOTAL EDUCATION, issued by North Carolina's Dept. of Public Instruction.
"Report on Reports." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 10, p. 2 (May 1970) Cites NEA report, BEYOND DESEGREGATION: THE PROBLEM OF POWER.
"School Integration: What Worked in Recent Weeks." William Winn. v. 1, n. 8, pp. 4-5 (March 1970)
"Schools: Bickel's 'New Paternalism' Masks a National Retreat." Charles Morgan Jr. v. 1, n. 9, p. 9 (April 1970)
"Sports Integration: Football as Radicalism. . ." Roy Blount Jr. v. 1, n. 9, pp. 1, 10-12 (April 1970)

EDUCATION—HEAD START
"Mississippi Replay: Head Start Was Hit Again But Blacks, Struck Back." Betsy Fancher. v. 1, n. 9, pp. 3-6 (April 1970) Gov. Williams' veto of funds reversed by HEW Secretary Finch.
"The People Have Faith." Robert E. Anderson Jr. v. 1, n. 9, p. 3 (April 1970) Importance of Head Start to poor Mississippians.

EDUCATION—HIGHER
"The Antidote is Bunkley." From the MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 2, p. 3 (August 1969) Conservative law professor appointed dean of law school.
"And On Black Campuses." Robert Terrell from NEW SOUTH. v. 1, n. 1, p. 4 (July 1969) Campus climate at Atlanta University.
"Ole Miss Law: Another Dean, Another Way." Ken Vinson from MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 2, p. 3 (August 1969) Liberalism repressed at the law school.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 3, p. 2 (Sept. 1969) Cites Southern Education Foundation study, STATE UNIVERSITIES AND BLACK AMERICANS, AN INQUIRY INTO DESEGREGATION AND EQUITY FOR NEGROES IN 100 PUBLIC UNIVERSITIES.
"Southern Campuses in Crisis." Phil Gailey from the ATLANTA CONSTITUTION. v. 1, n. 1, p. 4 (July 1969) Attitudes of black students on majority-white campuses.
"Students: They Could Help in Rural Areas." Don McKee from the CHATTANOOGA TIMES. v. 1, n. 3, p. 5 (Sept. 1969) Describes proposed Georgia Student Rural Project.

EDUCATION—LUNCH PROGRAMS
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 7, p. 2 (Feb. 1970) Cites the Children's Foundation's report, WHY CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS FAIL and a study of lunch programs in Kentucky by Charles Clark for IMPACT!

EDUCATION—PRIVATE SCHOOLS
"The Busing Myth: Seg Academies Bus More Children and Further." Leonard Levine and Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 10, p. 7 (May 1970)
"Follow-up." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 9, p. 2 (April 1970) Questions churches should ask before establishing a private school.
"Sales: Small-Town Stores Blame Private Schools for Pinch." Neil Maxwell from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 11, p. 5 (June 1970)
" 'Segregation Academies' Flourish in South." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 4, pp. 1, 6-7 (Oct. 1969)
"Taxes: Lower Revenue Attributed to 'Seg Academies' Cost." From the MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL-APPEAL. v. 1, n. 11, p. 5 (June 1970)

EDUCATION—SOUTH
"Report on Reports." v. 1, n. 2, p. 2 (August 1969) A report on public support of education released by the National Committee for the Support of the Public Schools.

EDUCATION—TEXTBOOKS AND MINORITY HISTORY
" 'The Good Old Days.' Alabama Textbooks Praise Slavery and the Ku Klux Klan." Kenneth Reich from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 10, p. 3 (May 1970)
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 8, p. 2 (March 1970) Cites A REPORT ON THE TREATMENT OF MINORITIES IN AMERICAN HISORY TEXTBOOKS by the Michigan Department of Education.

To Page 11

SOUTH TODAY A Digest of Southern Affairs

SOUTH TODAY is published by the Leadership Project of the Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta, Ga. 30303. The Southern Regional Council, founded in 1944, is a research and information agency devoted to the attainment of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South. President: Raymond M. Wheeler, Charlotte, N.C.; Chairman of Executive Committee: Vivian Henderson, Atlanta, Ga. Vice Presidents: Josephine Wilkins, Athens, Ga.; Frank Smith, Knoxville, Tenn.; Charles G. Gomillion, Tuskegee, Ala.; Lucius H. Pitts, Birmingham, Ala. Executive Director: Paul Anthony. Director of the Leadership Project: Reese Cleghorn.

Reese Cleghorn
Editor

Kitty Terjen and Betsy Fancher
Associate Editors

Some of the articles used in SOUTH TODAY have been edited for length. We welcome manuscripts and clippings. Proposals and contributions from students will receive special attention.

By Way Of: Galloway

When Charles E. Silberman, an editor of Fortune magazine, told the Senate Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity that most American schools were grim, joyless, oppressive, intellectually sterile and aesthetically barren, he shocked some educators and encouraged the worst suspicions of many American parents.

The allegation would seem to be confirmed by the nation's high dropout rate—50 per cent in some Southern states. And it underscores the centrality, in the school segregation-integration struggle, of quality education itself: what schools do to children.

Silberman's studies have demonstrated that public schools can be organized "to facilitate joy in learning and intellectual and aesthetic expression . . . such models are now in existence and can be followed."

Among the good models is the new Galloway School in Atlanta, one private school which has grown out of a community need for excellence rather than a desire to escape the thorny problems of integration. School officials recruited ghetto children through scholarships; transportation from the inner city is provided by volunteers.

Every morning car loads of black children arrive from squalid, lyrically-named ghettos such as Summerhill to join fellow students from the posh suburbs of northside Atlanta. The classrooms are open; children move freely from one area to another, concentrating at will on arithmetic, English, social studies and science. The teachers, usually two to a class, act as sensitive guides for each new learning experience. The classes are ungraded. "We accept the children where they are and go from there," says Principal Elliott Galloway.

A visitor may find students at one table reading manuals on five different levels. He may encounter a group making anti-pollution devices or engaging in an experimental encounter led by members of the Human Development Institute. The atmosphere is not one of chaos but of absorption and involvement. This is not a "progressive school" nor a "permissive" one. It is simply a school that seems to prove Silberman's thesis—that a school can be humane and still educate well; that it can offer joy, growth and fulfillment without weakening the three R's; that it can be at once child-centered and subject-centered.

There is still a low ratio of blacks—25 in a student body of 500. But this is the school's second year of operation and scholarship funds are scarce.

Neither the Galloway School nor other innovative schools springing up around the country can or should replace public schools. (Galloway is not cheap; its sponsors do not delude themselves into thinking, as do the sponsors of almost all the segregation academies, that good private education can be provided at low expense.) But their effective teaching of students with a wide range of I.Q.s, income and socio-economic backgrounds could well serve as a model for far-sighted educators and herald a new and brighter era for public education.

—Betsy Fancher

The South:

Goal Still Distant, But Many Schools Go Well

By PAUL GASTON

FIRST DAY—Students at Wade Hampton High School, Greenville, S.C., get acquainted.

When classes began this fall at John F. Kennedy High School in Richmond, black students outnumbered whites 10 to one. Under the new desegregation plan, black enrolment was meant to be 71 per cent, but white absenteeism wrecked that calculation. Gregory Thomas, heading a welcoming committee of black students, remarked to a reporter: "Everybody is expecting the other guy to start trouble today." He was determined it would be otherwise. "The majority of blacks here want this to work," he insisted. "They want it badly." Turning to a group of the new white students, he said: "We want to make you feel at home here. This is now your school, too."

Among the new white students at Kennedy High was Virginia Holton, 13-year-old daughter of Gov. Linwood Holton Jr. The governor had the option of sending his daughter to any school of his choice, but the executive mansion is in the Kennedy attendance zone, and Holton made his decision partly to dramatize the duty of white people to act lawfully and constructively to make desegregation work.

In other parts of the South the new school year saw many black students like Gregory Thomas—and many white students, as well—committed to the lawful, orderly and often creative implementation of desegregation plans. Many school boards, superintendents, principals, and teachers also responded positively, sometimes imaginatively. In many places community leaders, black and white, worked to rally support for the embattled public schools, allay fears, dispel rumors, and, in their own ways, overcome the racist heritage so long nurtured by the dual school system.

In Durham, N.C., a civic group called Women In Action to Prevent Violence and Its Causes, worked feverishly through the summer to prepare the community to accept a new desegregation plan that involved pairing and the busing of about 2,000 students. After the first three weeks of school, Julius Chambers, the black attorney who managed the desegregation suit against the city, praised the successful implementation of the new plan.

In Athens, Ga., the school board drew up an assignment plan, geared to the use of extensive free transportation, that resulted in a white-black student ratio throughout the school system of approximately 67-33. For 50 years, Supt. Charles P. McDaniel observed, school buses had been used to maintain segregation. "Now we're busing to eliminate segregation," he remarked. According to McDaniel, the new plan had stabilized the community—"There's no place for anyone to run now"—and he was hopeful that it would not be struck down by the U. S. Supreme Court.

A New York Times national survey reported in mid-October that the experiences in three Southern cities—New Albany, Miss., Greenville, S. C., and Chapel Hill, N. C.—showed gains in both the educational achievement and the social attitudes of the students. On-the-spot investigations, government reports and press stories indicate that the stresses of accommodation are being met in many newly integrated schools where community leaders have taken a firm stand in support of desegregation.

In some localities the ominous transfer of whites from the public schools to the private "segregation academies" has been either slowed or reversed. In Indianola, Miss., for example, all 991 white public school students dropped out in January to avoid newly-ordered desegregation. This fall, some 200 of them returned to the public schools. Many factors were responsible for their return, but the determination of influential white leaders in the community was of critical importance.

These were encouraging signs in a year in which school desegregation touched more young people and more teachers than ever before. A comprehensive look at the region, however, suggests that they are not signs of a dominant pattern. On the contrary, despite the administration's boasts, in many districts the dual school system has not been dismantled, and the goal of genuine school integration remains a distant one.

Resistance Continues

From all across the region during the first third of the school year came authoritative reports of the continuing intransigence of white segregationists. While Gov. Holton sent his daughter to a predominantly black school, George Wallace urged already-defiant parents in Mobile to place their children in schools of their choice, ignoring court-ordered assignments. In Georgia, Gov. Lester Maddox, campaigning for neighborhood schools and what he called freedom of choice, urged a similar flaunting of the law. John Bell Williams, governor of Mississippi, not only counseled resistance but dramatized his objection to desegregation orders by placing his children in private school.

Local governing authorities, school officials, and aroused citizens groups emulated their political leaders. Seizing upon the neighborhood school as the symbol of their educational philosophy, and arguing vigorously against the use of free transportation as a legitimate instrument for ending segregation, they have used a variety of techniques to prevent enforcement of the law.

In Mobile, for example, over a thousand children turned up at schools to which they were not assigned, climaxing a summer-long campaign of resistance. William B. Crane, chairman of the Board of School Commissioners, gave them moral encouragement by describing the court-ordered plan as "asinine," adding: "It's theirs and they can enforce it." The board subsequently granted upwards of a thousand transfers.

Mobile's lawlessness received national coverage in September, but similar situations in other parts of the region have largely been ignored. In some districts parents falsified their addresses to receive desired assignments. One Florida school board, for example, put nine agents to work to track down parents said by the superintendent to be "lying and cheating to circumvent the court order." In other areas, such as Hartsville, S. C., and Birmingham, school officials appeared to raise no objection to illegal transfers. U. W. Clemon, a Legal Defense Fund attorney in Birmingham, has claimed that "10,000 white students in Jefferson County alone are openly attending classes in schools where they were not assigned in violation of the court's desegregation order."

In-School Evasions

Defiance of assignment orders, whether open or covert, though fairly common, has been used less frequently this year as a tactic of resistance than a wide variety of in-school discrimination measures that have flourished in all of the states.

One favorite method of keeping a wedge between the races has been the widespread use—or misuse—of ability tracking. Situations like that in Franklinton, La., where 150 Negroes are assigned to all-black classes and another 150 to classes with only a few whites, have been reported by civil rights groups as well as by HEW. Most investigators are persuaded that ability grouping has soared in popularity this year not for educational but for racial reasons.

Less frequently observed, but apparently not uncommon, has been the practice of segregating by sex within schools—a form of assignment regarded by most blacks as an extreme racial insult.

Of the various forms of in-school discrimination, more numerous this year than ever before, the most common have been the exclusion of black students from school activities and organizations, the selection of all-white homecoming courts, and the use of symbols and songs ("Rebel" and "Dixie") reminiscent of a racist tradition.

Negroes have also been offended by the extent to which the desegregation process has put the burden of change, both physically and spiritually, on black students, and exacted a high price from black principals. Both HEW and the courts have approved plans that require more black than white children to be bused, that close formerly all-black schools and transfer the Negroes to formerly all-white schools (often physically inferior to the black ones), and in other ways erase the black traditions and symbols—sources of identity and pride—offering as a substitute only the traditions and symbols of the whites.

Federal Inaction

Last June, both Jerris Leonard of the Justice Department and J. Stanley Pottinger of HEW, the two top federal officials most directly involved in compliance enforcement, promised swift action in the fall should in-school discrimination practices appear. By the first of October Pottinger had acknowledged extensive classroom segregation and other problems more complex than he had anticipated back in June, but no action was forthcoming in the first months of the school year. The consequence was widespread black protests, scores of violent confrontations and hundreds of arrests. A few examples can only suggest their range and nature.

In a predominantly white high school in Iredell County, N. C., 120 black students were suspended and 22 were arrested in the wake of a protest against the selection of an all-white homecoming court and the white student opposition to a plan that would assure the election of black class officers. In neighboring Rowan County, whites protested when the principal of one of the high schools banned "Dixie;" the school's advisory council reversed the ruling and the whites held a "victory" celebration. Discords like these have become commonplace throughout the region.

Less common, but more ominous, have been the several violent confrontations. In Earle, Ark., a black student march led to 29 arrests and touched off a general protest in the black community. More marches led to beatings, shootings, more arrests, and a continuing boycott by black students. In Bogalusa, La., 600 students released pent-up racial tension in a two-hour fight after a football game. School was subsequently closed while blacks picketed with signs reading "Integration on the Outside, Segregation on the Inside." In two Louisiana parishes, Lafourche and Terrebonne, outbreaks of violence led to the declaration by the governor of a state of emergency. In Henderson, N. C., a school-board attempt to resegregate 92 black students led to mass protests, confrontations met by tear gas, the presence of the national guard, and the arrest of over 140 blacks. In Tallahatchie County, Miss., 125 protesting black students were arrested and taken to the maximum security camp at Parchman Penitentiary.

Leadership Counted

These acts of noncompliance and repression are clearly a major part of the Southern school scene in the fall of 1970. However, as the examples of Durham, Athens, Indianola, and a large number of other communities attest, the experience of desegregation need not be fatally flawed. In those schools where whites and blacks have created successful integration, one common, crucial factor has been intelligent community leadership. In districts where desegregation has been a failure—where true integration has never had a chance—community leadership has ranged from good-intentioned mindlessness to outrageous intransigence. Two conclusions are inescapable: (1) integration of Southern schools is not simply a desirable goal, but a viable one as well; (2) the speed with which that goal is reached depends heavily on how the crisis of leadership is resolved in Southern communities.

Two factors of major importance will heavily influence the way in which that crisis is resolved. The first is the judgement of the Supreme Court, which presently has under consideration cases that turn on the issue of free transportation and the extent to which it may be required to eliminate racially identifiable schools. The second is the role of the President, whose power over the entire civil rights enforcement procedure is decisive.

Increasingly, the logic of the desegregation process has highlighted the urgency of eliminating all segregated schools. This can be done only by an intelligent expansion of the use of free transportation. Consequently, Mr. Nixon and Southern integrationists are on a collision course. His present position, stated most recently in a political speech in Asheville, is that "any child is better off going to that school closest to his home." That position must be altered if the region is to free itself of the kinds of failures it has experienced in 1970.

Dr. Paul Gaston, now research director of the Southern Regional Council, until recently was director of graduate studies in history at the University of Virginia. He is author of THE NEW SOUTH CREED, recently published by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., which has just won the 1970 Lillian Smith Award for excellence among books about the South.

James S. Coleman

Charles E. Silberman

Kenneth B. Clark

The Failure: Three Experts Discuss It, And What Could Be Done

The recent hearings before Sen. Walter Mondale's Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity provide not only a vivid picture of the damage of segregation to American youngsters of every race but also a recognition of the urgent necessity for improving schools as a whole.

Here are excerpts from the testimony of three principal witnesses before the committee.

Charles E. Silberman, Board of Editors, Fortune magazine, who was director of the Carnegie Study on the Education of Educators:

Schools Failing

" . . . The public schools are failing dismally in what has always been regarded as one of their primary tasks. What has distinguished public education in the United States from education elsewhere, in fact, has been precisely the expectation that the public schools would create a sense of unity and national purpose in a society that otherwise might be racked by ethnic, religious and racial conflict . . . Never have we needed the schools to play this role more than now; never has their failure to do so been more ominous for American democracy. If the United States is to fulfill its promise of becoming a truly just and humane society, the schools will have to do an incomparably better job than they are now doing of educating youngsters from minority and lower-class homes—Negro Americans, Puerto Rican Americans, Mexican Americans, American Indians and poor whites in particular—and of educating all children in general.

". . . The defects and failures of the schools which educate Negro and other minority youngsters are, in good measure, simply an exaggerated version of what is wrong with schools everywhere. 'The most deadly of all possible sins,' Erik Erikson suggests, 'is the mutilation of a child's spirit.' It is not possible to spend any prolonged period visiting public school classrooms as I have done without being appalled by the mutilation visible everywhere, in the most prosperous suburbs as well as the most poverty stricken urban and rural slums; mutilation of spontaneity, of joy in learning, of pleasure in creating, of a sense of self . . . Because adults take the schools so much for granted, they fail to appreciate what grim, joyless places most American schools are, how oppressive and petty are the rules by which they are governed, how intellectually sterile and esthetically barren the atmosphere, what an appalling lack of civility obtains on the part of teachers and principals, what contempt they unconsciously display for children as children.

Alternatives

" . . . And it need not be! What my studies have demonstrated, beyond any doubt, is that public schools can be organized to facilitate joy in learning and intellectual and esthetic expression and to develop character—in the rural and urban slums no less than in the prosperous suburbs. This is no utopian hope; there are models now in existence that can be followed . . . . In short, the public school system can be reformed. What makes change possible, moreover, is that what is mostly wrong with the schools is not due to venality, or indifference, or stupidity, but to mindlessness . . . . If they (the teachers) make a botch of it, and an uncomfortably large number do, it is because it simply never occurs to more than a handful of them to ask why they are doing what they are doing —to think seriously or deeply about the purpose or consequences of education.

" . . . How teachers teach, and how they act, may be more important than what they teach . . . . Segregated schools teach a lesson about the worth and humanity of black children, and of white children as well—that is far more powerful and far more lasting than all the civic classes, salutes to the flag and recitals of the Pledge of Allegiance put together . . . Racial segregation is at least as damaging to white children as it is to black children . . . . What makes integration crucial to this nation's future . . . is not so much what it does to raise academic achievement as what it contributes to the creation of a humane, decent and united society. That is what the public school's major purpose must be. That . . . is what this committee's major purpose must be.

". . . Children who are entering the public schools next year will still be in the labor force in year 2003. Given the kinds of changes that are occurring . . . this committee must, without in any way diminishing the importance of equal educational opportunity, place that problem in the context of the schools as a whole.

". . . Schools teach values, not simply facts. Education has once been defined as what is left over after you have forgotten everything you have been taught. I think we all, in a sense, know this; that what we are learning is how to learn a set of attitudes toward learning, toward other people . . . The value of integration . . . is greastest in terms of the kinds of values that an integrated school teaches and the kind of values equally important, the negative values that maintain in segregated schools . . . . I think the main damage is that white children pick up quite unconsciously a sense of superiority, of their own superiority, which they carry with them all the days of their years unless they then have another experience.

Black Identity

"It is not only black students who need to know the history of the black man in this country. White students need to know it also . . . I have a great deal of skepticism as to the political system that has been advocated (black separatist school systems) because I think it is politically naive . . . it is a return to a system that failed in the past and I think the chances of ghetto schools' getting equal resources are greatly reduced if you have this kind of separatism . . . . it is possible to very much involve the community in the operation of the school without setting up a separate school system."

Dr. James S. Coleman, professor of social relations, Johns Hopkins University, who was head of the commission that produced the celebrated Coleman Report, a survey conducted for the U. S. Office of Education measuring the equality of educational opportunity throughout the country:

Class Lines

". . . Children are subject to inequality of opportunity by virtue of the very economic and racial homogeneity of the schools they attend. A working-class child in a working-class school or a Negro child in a Negro school is deprived of the most effective educational resources contained in the schools: those brought by other children as a result of their home environment. . . . Thus, if schools are racially homogeneous or economically homogeneous, the disadvantages a working-class or Negro child or Puerto Rican child, or a Mexican American child experiences in his home environment are multiplied by the disadvantages he experiences in his school environment.

" . . . The effects of changes in predominantly black schools, through compensatory programs, and the results have been disappointing.

"The addition of enormous resources (amounting in some cases to a doubling of per-pupil expenditures) in ghetto schools has not brought about equality education or equality in educational opportunity. Thus, although the results of our survey do not say that it is impossible to provide equality of opportunity in all-black schools, the results of other research do not show promising methods for doing so.

" . . . The longer period of time that a child attends an integrated school, if he comes from a disadvantaged home background, the closer his achievement comes to the achievement of children from advantaged home backgrounds.

What Is a School?

" . . . It is quite clear that equality of educational opportunity in the future will require some action which divorces education from residences, for the increasing freedom in residence that has occurred with affluence and technological change has created increasing social homogeneity in education—in effect, turning the public school system in some densely settled parts of the United States with small school districts . . . into schools that are in effect private schools, stratified by race and economic level.

" . . . I believe a total revision of the conception of the school is necessary if it is to fulfill the goals of education—if it is to release a child from the constraints imposed by his background.

"I would suggest examining some schools which provide for children and youth a greater measure of autonomy and responsibility, less an imposed and rigid program, than the ordinary school. (Some) may be developing a new pattern in education in which there is a genuine solidarity among the students, and between the students and their teachers—a solidarity that intensifies the effects of the school, and makes possible both stable school integration and strong, effective education.

" . . . In Berkeley, Calif., . . .(schools) were no longer defined as basically black schools to which white children were being bused, or white schools to which black students were being bused. The grade spans were changed, the whole ball game was started with wholly new patterns . . . . In another plan in Oklahoma City, again schools are not defined in the usual way. There will be, in fact, more busing at the senior high school level than there was before, but I think parents will not be unhappy, because . . . a child is being bused to a mathematics center, or to an English center, or whatever . . .

"We are in our infancy in the United States in determining what kinds of patterns of pluralistic education are going to be possible in the future. I think that we are going to, in the next five years, develop enough such innovations and experimentations that we will find ways—and some ways that are already beginning to be evident—in which stable racial integration can exist, even in the largest, even in the most densely-settled areas of the United States."

Dr. Kenneth Clark, professor of psychology, College of the City of New York, and director of the Metropolitan Applied Research Center:

Busing

" . . . While the argument about busing has been used as a reason for not bringing about desired changes in the racial configuration of our schools, the mere fact is that there is more busing going on in public education in the United States to maintain racially isolated schools than there is to eliminate racially isolated schools . . . No one has raised the argument of busing as a horrible thing, when the function of that transportation was to maintain segregated schools.

" . . . In many rural areas, the buses are as much a part of the educational process

To Page 10

North or South: Who Will Show The Way To School Integration?

By MIKE BOWLER

Segregation in the Pasadena, Calif., school district begins about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. That's when the fleet of 87 buses arrives at the schools to begin hauling 15,000 children from desegregated classrooms to segregated neighborhoods. There are 595 routes and 2,380 bus stops. By 3:30, when the secondary schools start letting out, the City of Roses seems to have more yellow buses on its streets than automobiles.

It is a complicated procedure which, by late October, seven weeks after the 29,000-student district desegregated its schools under court order, most schools had down to a science. Willard Primary School, for example, loaded 600 first, second and third graders in 10 minutes—with only two adults supervising.

A complicated procedure as well as one that is strangely uncomfortable to watch. White children and black who have learned and played together for six hours, oblivious to skin color, wave goodbye as they board their separate buses. Then half the vehicles head west, toward the Rose Bowl, toward Pasadena's black belt. And the other half go east, into the white neighborhoods.

The afternoon busing in Pasadena symbolizes both the racial polarization of our society and the obligation borne by the public schools to do something about it. Pasadena represents perhaps the most extensive integration effort to date in the country. Every school is involved, and every student will be bused for at least part of his school career. The Pasadena Plan, as it is called, is based of a number of forerunners, chief among them a cross-town busing plan up the coast in Berkeley, Calif.

The Pasadena Plan is attractive for the things it does not do:

- - It does not combine schools selectively.
- - It does not close black schools to appease white parents.
- - It does not place the burden of desegregation on blacks.
- - It does not avoid the hard fact that busing is the only way to desegregate large-city systems.
- - And it is not in the South.

Not in the South. But millions have read that the government only "picks on" the South. And many who have read that have rubbed their hands in glee upon hearing about the Pasadena order or the HEW ultimatum in Ferndale, Mich. They also have read with satisfaction the message from the Georgia attorney general, Arthur K. Bolton, to the U. S. Supreme Court: "The situation becomes even more completely intolerable, as well as divisive nationally, when it is realized that it is only those children, teachers and parents who happen to live in Georgia and the other Southern states who are forced to comply with racial quota and balance requirements."

Pasadena, of course, proves that Bolton's statement simply is not true, but one cannot ignore the causes of some of the South's basic paranoia on school desegregation. Most ammunition has been aimed at the South (because, of course, it had statutory discrimination for generations). No doubt, as Sen. Abraham Ribicoff observed, the North is guilty of "monumental hypocrisy" in the matter.

But the arguments of Bolton and of Southern politicians and school officials do not go far enough. They do not concede that some Northern desegregation plans are among the most imaginative, thoroughgoing and proven in the nation, particularly when they are founded (as Pasadena's seems to be) on the proposition that desegregation is less a legal necessity than a moral imperative.

It is a common saying now, in North as well as South, that, ironically, the South may show the North how to make integration work. But turn that around. What if the North, unscarred by 16 years of battle with the federal government and the courts, takes the lead and shows the South how integration, that step into Camelot beyond desegregation, can be achieved? Despite vast stretches of Northern segregation and dozens of districts where nothing is working, there are indications that in some districts this is exactly what is happening.

Many of the problems of South and non-South, of course, are identical, the main one being the flight of whites to the suburbs and a secondary one being the pitched battle over "neighborhood schools."

In Pasadena, a group of whites attempted to recall the three school board members who had voted against appealing the district's desegregation order and who had supported going beyond the general mandates of the order. The recall attempt failed, thanks to a 60 per cent turnout of black voters supporting the challenged trustees. The Los Angeles Times noted that all 21 white east-side precincts voted for recall, while all black precincts and two white ones were against it. The vote, in mid-October, proved that blacks do not oppose desegregation, even when it involves massive busing. But more important, it gave the Pasadena Plan a chance to prove itself. It was perhaps a unique referendum on busing and full integration, and the public said yes. Another historic milestone? It almost escaped notice outside Pasadena.

The Pasadena Plan

The Pasadena Plan organizes the district into primary schools for first, second and third graders; elementary schools for fourth, fifth and sixth graders; and junior and senior high schools. About half the students walk to their neighborhood schools for part of their education and are transportated as a neighborhood to another school for the balance. Thus, students from the same neighborhood are able to stay together during most of their school years and whites, in theory, are less likely to make panic moves to the suburbs.

Some comments about the plan:

"We tried compensatory education for eight years," said Supt. Ralph W. Hornbeck, "and to be honest, we didn't get the results we wanted. We've only been here (in the Pasadena Plan) two months. We're not expecting miracles overnight, but we think we're on the right track."

A familiar refrain came from Marvin Mills, white parent. "We moved here a year ago hoping to be close to the school," he said. "My daughter enjoyed it last year. This year she isn't enjoying school. Last year, she walked to school in five minutes. This year it takes her 20 minutes on a $10,000 bus driven by a $200-a-week bus driver. My house value has decreased 10 per cent. So if I sound bitter it's because I am."

Five years ago, said Mrs. LuVerne LaMotte, one of the school board members who survived the recall, she agreed with Mills. "But on the basis of a lot of reading and thinking, I've changed my mind. I'm convinced that the (resegregation) process would not be reversed if we kept going the way we were going."

Hornbeck said it would take at least a year to judge whether the brakes are being put on resegregation and perhaps several years to measure the educational benefits of desegregation.

Most of the signs after two months of the Pasadena Plan were hopeful. For one thing, the busing had exploded several myths, including the one that children become nervous wrecks because of having to get up at dawn and return after sunset. The average ride of about 20 minutes over four miles seemed to be enjoyed, at least by the elementary children. (Pasadena had bused some high school students since 1965.)

One bus winds its way from Altadena Elementary School through the narrow canyons of the San Gabriel foothills to Sierra Madre, a white enclave that, in the aftermath of the recall vote, is threatening to secede from the Pasadena district.

"I'd rather be back in my neighborhood," said Lynn Sutcliffe, a bubblegum-chewing sixth grader, "but you get more friends at Altadena, and that'll be good for junior high."

Back at Altadena, officials said discipline

Mike Bowler, until recently education editor of THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, is now with THE BALTIMORE SUN. In preparing this report for SOUTH TODAY, he spent a month talking to school officials, students, parents and others in non-Southern cities. He has had extensive experience covering school desegregation matters in the South and is a former public school teacher.

was one of the secrets of running a desegregated school. In fact, Principal Wally Ridout showed up for an interview carrying a paddle with the look of recent use about it.

"I was a principal in a ghetto school before black was beautiful," said Ridout, who is white and whose own children are bused. Ridout has instituted an "opportunity center" where students frustrated for any reason can go to unwind, talk to a couple of understanding teachers, tell it all to a tape recorder or just sit quietly.

The school's full-time counselor, Mrs. Linda Gough, who is black, said she checks out every report of student strife. "If I hear anything about how somebody's 'gonna get' somebody else," she said, "I get right to the bottom of it. There's been a decrease in that kind of stuff, though, in the last couple of weeks. I can't tell you what desegregation is doing for education, but I can tell you there's been an upturn in attitude—in behavior—since September. There's a difference in the way the black kids walk and talk, in their attitudes toward themselves. And I think the white kids from Sierra Madre were genuinely afraid. Now there's a lot of courtesy and friendship. I think the Sierra Madre parents are shocked."

At nearby Lincoln Elementary School, which is about 50 per cent black, a white mathematics teacher and her black "aide," a former PTA president, were trying to figure out why the school is much calmer in 1970, despite the fact that it is a ghetto school to which some of Pasadena's most privileged whites are bused. "I think," said the black woman, "it has something to do with the way we were treated before. The whites gave us everything. The way it is now, we have to prove ourselves."

One of Pasadena's biggest problems is racial tension in the high school. It shares this problem with many metropolitan high schools in the North and a few in the South. Riots are so commonplace in the Los Angeles area that they are no longer front-page news. During one week in October, two high schools just east of Pasadena, Monrovia and Duarte, erupted and were closed. Pasadena officials tensed and did not allow visitors at Pasadena High School.

A Michigan Failure

Halfway across the country, in Ferndale, Mich., easing the high school racial tension seems an almost insurmountable task. The district's only high school was closed last April after a serious riot. In October of this year, officials eliminated lunch hours so that groups of whites and blacks would not congregate and begin to fight. The school board hired three security guards to join the three already on duty. Doors have been removed from lavatories as much to prevent students from gathering as to discourage drug taking.

White students interviewed at random expressed open hatred for blacks, who make up only 10 per cent of the school enrolment. "I think force is the only way," said one. "I mean I don't like to resort to force. But still, I'm not gonna walk away when I see the white kids getting messed up."

Whites in the high school feel that administrators, particularly Principal John D. McGregor, favor the blacks, always meting out harsher discipline to whites. "But we feel the same way," said one of the black student leaders, Mike Henderson, 17. "After all, McGregor's got to do what the community and the board tells him to, and you know what race runs this community."

McGregor, for his part, dismisses much

'We're not expecting miracles, but we're . . . on the right track'

THE PASADENA PLAN has exploded several myths, including the one that children become nervous wrecks because of busing.

of the racial tension at Ferndale High. "I needed the security guards like I need a hole in the head," he said. But the conservative element in Ferndale, which has a strong voice on the school board, demands tight security at the school. Among McGregor's visitors are camera-bearing parents bent on "getting proof" that McGregor and his assistants cannot control the school.

Amid this tragedy of errors, HEW has made of Ferndale a national spectacle, but not because black and white students at Ferndale High cannot coexist. Rather, what bothers HEW—which has threatened to cut off federal funds—is that the district maintains one all-black school less than half a mile from an all-white school. The schools were built in 1925 and 1926, and as far as anyone remembers it was a de jure act all the way.

The Ferndale school board, which has spent $28,471.46 on litigation in the case, is appealing the HEW examiner's decision. Meanwhile, there is plenty of talk around town about what should be done, but the board has no definite plan. One idea is to submit several to a public referendum, a unique approach even to the South. Parents are talking about the HEW "tyrants," and John J. Houghton, the soft-spoken superintendent, is getting plenty of mail from the South.

Houghton described as a "strange paradox" the fact that the lion's share of the endangered federal aid goes to compensatory programs at all-black Grant School. "And now they come along and say compensatory education doesn't work and we have to do something else. In fact, there has been very little improvement in educational achievement at Grant, despite the money we've poured in, despite the fact that it has the smallest class size in the district. But I don't know what the answer is. Do we have to do harder what we're doing? Or rearrange the whole district?"

Ferndale's first and only Negro school board member, an appointee, sides with those who would leave Grant as a black school. "I am sorry to say I do not agree with your theory that to have a good educational system we must have mixing of blacks and whites," William H. Morgan wrote to HEW. "It seems unfair to discount all of the efforts of our community for better education or racial understanding or to blame our school board for the ills dating back to 1925."

It may be less paradoxical than it seems that HEW fiddles in Ferndale while the desegregated high school burns. For who knows what attitudes the city's teen-agers would have brought to the the junior and senior highs if they had attended integrated elementary schools?

Or is John McGregor closer to the truth? "We have a miniature society here," he says. "Racial tension is so intense across the nation that it is unavoidable at Ferndale High."

A study released during the fall by Syracuse University confirmed McGregor's observations. It found violence in the nation's high schools directly related to racial mixing and noted that disruptions were less likely at all-black and all-white facilities. Turmoil will continue, the study predicted, "short of a total moral conversion" of American society.

Change in Baltimore

Charles Brown, principal of Pimlico Junior High School, remembers that Baltimore always had a split personality on race. "There was a gradual and selective type of mixing before it actually came about," he said. "We never did have segregated buses. There were some restaurants where blacks and whites could eat together and some where they couldn't. Mixed couples were not harassed, although it was illegal. Their kids went to black schools."

Baltimore was the first city with a dual school system to desegregate after the Supreme Court's Brown decision in 1954. At the time, the system was less than one-third black. A year later, Brown became the first black principal to have whites working under him. "They came to me," he recalled, "and said they would like to do it. We accomplished it unostentatiously. The papers came later and wanted to do a story. We asked them not to, and they agreed."

By 1965, the nation's eighth largest school system was more than half black; this fall the figure was about 70 per cent. More students (about 73 per cent of the total enrolment) were attending segregated schools than ever before, and much of the city's north side was "in transition"—re-

An Official:

Dr. Allen Smith, who died this year after many years as associate state superintendent of schools in Georgia, always had a reputation for frankness and disregard for political considerations.

He was outspoken, for instance, in calling attention to the damage that could be done to the public schools by the establishment of hastily-conceived, second-rate private schools in many places in the South.

The following comments from Dr. Smith, in an interview with Sam Hopkins of the Atlanta Constitution just before his retirement, have a "can do" ring that contrasts mightily with the words often heard these days from public officials at the outset of integration:

"The good thing about desegregation is that it is going to force us to reorganize our method of instruction, to do things in a different way that we should have been doing long before now.

"We're in a lock-step system now that will change. Teachers will become more specialized. Children will be able to move along at their own individual rate of speed. Even students in elementary schools will have different teachers for courses. Teachers will move from school to school. There will be teacher aides. I can segregating.

Baltimore is, in short, Everycity—New York, Boston, Detroit, Kansas City, all those cities cited by Southern politicians, and, yes, it is Atlanta, New Orleans and Houston, too.

Baltimore County (which does not include the city) also is a prototype. It is the typical predominantly white suburban area ringing a city turning black. The U. S. Civil Rights Commission charged that the federal government has spent billions of dollars helping build a largely-white suburbia around Baltimore without guaranteeing equal rights for black citizens. The commission chairman, the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, noted that Baltimore County is 97 per cent white, that it has virtually no public housing and that the black population has actually declined slightly. (One county resident, Spiro T. Agnew, has moved to Washington, D. C.)

Without any pressure whatever from Washington, Baltimore school officials have approached segregation from several directions. There are six "model" elementary schools which receive an abundance of educational resources; under construction is a $10.5 million dream school that an assistant superintendent said would "integrate by merit of its educational program;" and "open enrolment" at the secondary level allows a student to go to school where he wants and has desegregated a few all-white schools. No whites, however, are going the other direction. (Open enrolment, of course, is freedom of choice; and wherever it does not succeed in undoing a dual school system established by public policy, it is unconstitutional.)

Pimlico Junior High, in northwest Baltimore just west of Pimlico Race Track, is on the fringe of the city's resegregation area and trying desperately to hold its own. The school is about 70 per cent black and desperately overcrowded, so much so that lunch shifts start at 10 a.m.

Principal Brown explained that the open enrolment plan has no size limitation; that is, if 2,000 children show up at a school with a capacity of 1,000, the principal has to find room for them somehow. The usual method is an extended day or double shifts.

"We'll never save the school (from going all black)," he said, "unless we get some relief in class size and total enrolment."

Despite Pimlico's crowded condition—and its reputation as a tough school—sound education goes on within its walls. Brown sees to that, as does a dedicated faculty which finds Pimlico one of Baltimore's more attractive schools; and as do Pimlico parents, who are principally a collection of upwardly mobile blacks and Jews.

"There's a lot more fraternizing at the top end of the economic level," Brown said. "We've even had a couple of little black and white romances. Not the kind of thing you see in high school, but it's new for Baltimore. If you could just get them to relieve our enrolment," he repeated, "it would help a lot."

Words With A 'Can-Do' Ring

NEA (Joe Di Dio)

envision that someone like a physics teacher will serve five or six schools in isolated areas and maybe even travel by helicopter.

"It's just a matter of time when we'll get over the trauma of desegregation and then we'll do a much better job of educating the students... I'd love to be around in the year 2000 to see what's going on."

'Pasadena was most encouraging stop on five-week tour...'

California Progress

Riverside, Calif., has become something of a prototype as a desegregated school system. For one thing, its plan has been in effect since 1965, so that there has been enough time to draw some conclusions. For another, the Riverside branch of the University of California has had the district under a microscope from the beginning. And so we have attitudinal studies, longitudinal studies and a growing library of literature on the Riverside Plan.

George Lantz, the assistant superintendent, has 10 volumes of newspaper clippings, studies and other odds and ends that he shows to a steady stream of visitors. What the data show, according to Lantz, is that desegregation has had little appreciable effect on the educational achievement of Anglo students, most browns and blacks have demonstrated "normal" improvement and "exceptional" minority students have "sailed right to the top. The lid is off for them."

The Riverside Plan really started the day before school opened in 1965, when one of the schools that had served Negroes and Mexican-Americans burned down. The next day, the minority groups asked that the schools be desegregated.

The plan arrived at in Riverside in 1965 had a distinct similarity to plans in the South, circa 1969. Riverside closed its segregated minority schools and bused those children to majority-white schools so that none enroled more than the district's minority percentage, about 18 per cent. "We felt it would be better if everyone experienced an integrated education," said Lantz. "That is still our premise. . . . We feel we are on the right track."

Two of Riverside's schools, Longfellow and Emerson, have crept well beyond 18 per cent. "We want to see what we can do with them," Lantz said, explaining that innovative compensatory programs are under way at both facilities.

Pasadena's average ride is 20 minutes.

Leon Shockley, Emerson's principal, is an outspoken man who enjoys obvious respect from his staff. He is a bit more cynical about the "experimental" status of Emerson.

"Let's face it," he said, "they're not really sure what to do about the influx of blacks. This school is the cutting edge of what's going on in society. As the minority percentage has gotten closer and closer to 50 per cent, the anxiety has increased on all levels. I start getting calls from white parents who want their kids transferred. And the teachers start to get tense about what's happening in their classrooms. The minority kids are usually way behind, and they drag down the classes.

"I'm absolutely convinced that integration is necessary for the survival of our city and our society, but this school could tip over easily, particularly if they go through with the apartment complex across the street . . . . It'll become a black ghetto."

Riverside sits on the edge of the California desert not far from Palm Springs. The citrus industry is no longer the dominant force it once was, but orange trees grow on three sides of Emerson School. Across the street, sure enough, caterpillar tractors are clearing away dead trees.

Mrs. Esther Andrews, who grew up in Harlem, taught at one of the schools closed in the Riverside Plan. She now teaches at Emerson. Does integration make that much difference? "It makes all the difference in the world as far as verbal skills are concerned. Black kids used to come to school and not be able to verbalize such things as 'fan' and 'lawn sprinkler.' The kids with more verbal skills, mostly white, are a tremendous help."

Mrs. Beatrice Shewman, a white teacher who also taught at one of the closed schools, agreed that integration had had a positive effect on black children, but she was not sure about Mexican-Americans. "You can push a bright Negro kid along, but you can't a Chicano." she said. "I don't know exactly why."

Mrs. Peggy Wrinkle is a white "aide" at the school who works long hours with little pay. She moved to Riverside from Wyandotte, Mich., "where everything is segregated. I'm very happy here, and so are my children."

Principal Shockley spoke contemptuously of the real estate blockbusters at work in the white neighborhood served by Riverside. "These are the most cynical exploiters in our society," he said. "Fie on them."

The most encouraging aspect of the Riverside Plan is that school authorities are detecting some movement of black and Chicano families into neighborhoods closer to the schools to which their children are bused. Apparently, the movement has not been accompanied by a flight of whites.

"It is natural," said Lantz, "for parents to want to live closer to their children's schools. This is a slow process. We're only beginning to detect it. It may mean nothing, but. . ."

But, the development may be a sign that desegregation in Riverside is becoming integration. And it may be a happy sign for the rest of the nation.

Chicanos and Anglos

The Corona-Norco, Calif., school district is not far from Riverside, but its racial characteristics are different. Corona's enrolment of 15,500 is about 25 per cent Mexican-American, and it has few blacks. The district began to realize in 1966 that two of its elementary schools were getting out of balance. One was almost entirely brown (Mexican-American), the other 60 to 65 per cent brown. A biracial committee attacked the problem.

What Corona-Norco eventually did was close one school as a regular facility, busing its Chicano children to other schools, and desegregate the other school by means of two-way busing. Assistant Supt. Austin Mason said between 500 and 600 students are involved in the racial busing. "Most of the Anglos went along with it," he said.

Chicano parents interviewed in the area of Lincoln School, the once predominantly Chicano school now 38 per cent brown, said they knew why: the Anglos are being bused to a Mentally Gifted Minor (MGM) program that keeps them in virtually all-white classes. "As long as you keep them convinced they're getting special treatment over there, you'll be all right," said one.

Lincoln's principal is Ray Mejia, an articulate Mexican-American. "There's a big difference between desegregation and integration," he said. "We've got mingling of bodies to the extent that we've closed one school and desegregated another. But integration? We've hardly started."

If Southern educators seriously intent on integration think they've got problems, they should fly out to Los Angeles, rent a car and talk to Mejia. He has Spanish-speaking immigrants who cannot speak English, Mexican-Americans who speak only English, bilingual Chicanos and Anglos, and Anglos who can't speak Spanish. Besides that, there is a teacher recruitment headache unequaled anywhere in the United States south of Eskimo country.

Mejia said schools are just beginning to adopt the proper approach to teaching Chicanos."It used to be that we had to remake the kid into a WASP before we could properly teach him," he said. "The youngster would sit in class and nod his head occasionally with a smile. The teacher thought she was getting through, but nothing was happening. Now we teach the kid academic subjects in his native language. . . . It isn't necessary to remake a kid into an English-speaking child before we can educate him. Can you imagine doing the opposite with an Anglo?"

Mejia spoke with enthusiasm of new federally-funded bilingual programs under way at Lincoln "which will draw from the beautiful things that both (Anglo and Chicano) cultures have to contribute. I think we're getting somewhere. Let's just hope the whole world doesn't blow up first."

The Superintendents

Three superintendents:

--Dana P. Whitmer, 57, superintendent in Pontiac, Mich.; spent his whole career in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan; Pontiac superintendent since 1954, the year of the Brown decision.

--Robert (Bud) Spillane, 36, superintendent in New Rochelle, N. Y.; one of the youngest school heads in the nation, now in his second superintendency.

--John Letson, 59, superintendent in Atlanta; native of Alabama; once wrote a column in his college newspaper under the pseudonym "Conscientious Cletis."

Pontiac's Uncertainty

Whitmer's office is in a new, hexagonal building just off Wide Track Drive, a reminder of the mainstay of Pontiac's economy. In late autumn, that economy was completely stymied by a crippling auto workers' strike. The school district, meanwhile, had made national headlines with three days of racial violence at Pontiac Central High School and the shootings of four white students.

The strike and the violence were not unrelated, Whitmer said. "You'd be surprised at the restlessness and disorientation caused by a break in normal procedures." Whitmer said the fact that Pontiac is under court order to desegregate (it is appealing) had almost nothing to do with the violence, and he added that he had seen more "mass racial tension inside the schools" in other years, despite the shootings and beatings.

Pontiac's order, delivered by a black judge who noted that the city has tolerated and encouraged years of segregation, is not unlike Pasadena's. In fact, the two cities are of comparable size. The Michigan city, to balance each school to 30 per cent black, 5 per cent Spanish-American and 65 per cent white, would have to bus half of its 24,000 students across town at an estimated cost of $1,430,000 yearly.

Whitmer is not happy about the prospects for the same reason John Letson has nightmares about busing in Atlanta. Pontiac's professional and management people already have fled to the suburbs. "We would like to find a way to integrate," said Whitmer, "without scaring the whites out of the city, because then you create insoluble problems. Once they are gone, you can't get them back."

Pontiac is another of those districts over which Southern segregationists are rubbing their hands in glee. But Whitmer said he did not think his district was being made an example. "What I do resent, though," he said, "is the fact that the courts treat different parts of the country differently. The issue of whether the Constitution requires racial mixing should be decided by the courts or by legislative action. . . . There should be nationwide guidelines."

As an "alternative to just racial mixing," Pontiac is proceeding with the construction of a $5 million "Human Resources Center" in the heart of its decaying commercial center. The center is conceived as a complete "child city" serving 2,300 children from nearby segregated elementary schools. The open-space structure will be used from dawn to midnight as a school, community education center, health care center and nursery. A glass-covered "room street" links neighborhoods, the center and Pontiac's commercial downtown area. "The center wasn't even mentioned in the court order," said Whitmer, somewhat ruefully.

NEA (Joe Di Dio)

The gray-haired Pontiac superintendent sees integration in terms of economic resources. "The best arrangement is an integrated society. I have to say that. It would be ideal if we could snap our fingers and find it. But the immediate problem is the fact that the price you pay for racial mixing is going to limit the quality features in the education program. We're simply not going to have the dollars for these programs if we have to spend the money for buses. . . I can't quarrel with the value of integration. But if it means larger classes, less materials, I don't know."

New Rochelle's Example

New Rochelle's Spillane is a rare bird, a dyed-in-the-wool integrationist, who probably wouldn't last long in the South. One wonders what a decade or two of fighting the federal courts and, more recently, HEW, would do to Spillane's refreshing views. In the South, superintendents often seem to be motivated mainly by prideful resistance to federal pressures, adopting a kind of set of mind that seems to have little to do with the immediate challenges.

"Our schools range from 5 to 50 per cent black, so you can see they're not desegregated," he said. That is a remarkable statement, North or South. At its court hearings last winter, the Atlanta school board classified as "desegregated" those schools with one black or one white enrolled; the judge and the press took the bait.

Eventually, said Spillane, "I don't see how we can help but bus whites as well as blacks. Otherwise, we'll continue to have two different systems."

New Rochelle, a middle-class to upper-middle-class suburb of New York City which includes a slice of exclusive Scarsdale to the north, was one of the first North districts to desegregate under court order. For several years it has been busing blacks out from the central city, about 350 a day. Whites have not seemed to mind, according to Spillane. In fact, having blacks enrolled in white schools (as a minority, mind you) has become something of a status symbol.

Spillane just took the job, moving to New Rochelle from Roosevelt, N. Y., a city which resegregated almost entirely in one decade.

"The whole integration problem is sensitizing everyone in the community to the necessity of it," he said. "It has to be done for the survival of our city. . . The people who need convincing are at the far left and at the far right. In fact, I'm not so sure the far right is the stumbling block. Did you ever notice that it's the white liberals who are the first to move out when a black family moves in? I call these people the don't-move-next-door-to-me liberals."

Spillane hasn't heard the time of day from HEW ("As far as I'm concerned, the federal government doesn't exist in the area of civil rights enforcement.") And he is bitter about distribution of Title I funds to rich school districts in New York and elsewhere.

"Don't tell me to desegregate, fellow, when you can't give the money to poor areas where it belongs," he said. Southern school men don't enjoy the luxury of such statements.

Spillane notes that New Rochelle now is about 20 per cent black. It was 12 per cent in 1960, so a limited, one-way busing plan has not led to ruin. The superintendent says his first major task will be to "try to get a commitment to desegregation. I expect an initial outcry. But after they get through calling me a stupid-son-of-a-bitch superintendent, then we can get on to other things like integration."

Atlanta: No Way?

John Letson is in another ball park. Ten years ago, when Atlanta's racial statistics were reversed and when Letson arrived from Chattanooga, perhaps an adroit desegregation plan would have set an example for the nation. Letson and a string of uninspired school boards have been wringing their hands for so long now, however, that an air of negativism and lugubriousness hangs over the city's schools. Meanwhile, black enrolment increased 4.1 per cent this fall to 68.3 per cent, and 56 of some 150 schools are more than 90 per cent segregated.

"There is no way we can keep whites in Atlanta and desegregate the schools," Letson said. He may be right. Atlanta may have reached the point at which, as Fourth Circuit Court Judge J. Braxton Craven described Harlem, "the only way to desegregate is by helicopter."

The major irony of the Atlanta case is that the courts and federal civil rights enforcers may as well have stayed away from the beginning. For despite 12 years of litigation, 300 legal moves, who knows how many thousands of dollars in court costs, hundreds of headlines and a million headaches, Atlanta has no more desegregation than Baltimore, which has never experienced anything like the same pressure.

'We Can't'

That is tragedy enough, but more tragic is the cynical attitude that pervades the school offices in Atlanta and, very often, elsewhere in the South. "We can't" replaces "We must."

Pasadena was the most encouraging stop on a five-week tour that could not have been comprehensive if it had taken five years. The failure of the recall attempt may be one of the most significant developments in recent desegregation history. It put the lie to the segregationist claim that blacks have not accepted desegregation any more than whites have. Not only did blacks rally to support three white trustees who had voted for integration and against appealing a desegregation order; they also helped reject recall in 17 of Pasadena's 29 racially mixed precincts.

"Where the precincts had experience with desegregation they voted to keep the board. It's as simple as that," said Rick Cole, a white high school senior who said he "wouldn't trade for the world" the experience of going from a "hard-core segregation" elementary school in Pasadena to a desegregated junior high.

Cole and some of his friends had gone to the trial which led to U. S. District Judge Manuel L. Real's judgement that the city was guilty of deliberate racial discrimination. Among other things, they heard Mrs. Doris Foster, a Negro teacher, testify that she had gone to the district's personnel office to keep an appointment and was told by the secretary, "They're taking maids' applications downstairs." "I felt like I'd been hit in the stomach," said Mrs. Foster.

"We were shocked to find out this kind of stuff was going on right here in Pasadena," said Cole. "The blacks were really getting screwed."

The failure of the recall attempt also will give the Pasadena Plan some breathing room. It needs time to grow, like a plant. And there just may be enough people of good will around Pasadena to make a go of it. "I can't make any promises," said Al Lowe, the board president, who ran best in the recall vote. "But we can't run away from the problem."

Who Will Lead?

Desegregation pressure seems to have had traumatic effects upon Southern school administrators. The places which were most out of kilter with the U. S. Constitution, and which therefore have had the most pressure to change, often seem to have developed a whole rationale of school administration built upon evasions, negativism and bureaucratic self-fulfillment of dire prophecies.

Southern segregationists are right about one thing. There is just as much racism in the North as in the South. It may be a different kind of racism, based more on the fear of economic competition than of miscegenation. But it manifests itself in the same ways, including school segregation.

One does notice, however, a difference in attitude toward desegregation between the North and the South. The long resistance fight that school officials in the South have waged, first mainly against the courts and since 1965 mainly against HEW, seems to have sapped moral conviction. It is not that the Southern superintendent has no basis for his gripes or his agony. The courts have been inconsistent. Districts have been ordered to do this and that while, at the same time, the some of the "gut" questions of desegregation (What is a unitary school district?) have never been answered. National policy changes at least every four years; school personnel do not turn over that fast.

So the Southern superintendent may be forgiven for forgetting occasionally that separate schools are inherently unequal and that this is what all the battle is about. This may be what Thomas D. Sheldon, the Baltimore superintendent, was talking about when he observed that despite his problems, "the toughest job is being a superintendent in the South."

Perhaps the master irony ultimately will be not that the South will show the nation how to integrate the schools, but that the North, just as much saddled with racism but without as much experience in fighting over it, will show the South. If so, it may be because its school officials by and large are less traumatized and more open to solutions.

Children in Daufuskie's school have learned to be excited about . . . learning.

A Teacher:

Daufuskie's Conroy Paying the Penalty

By BETSY FANCHER

Conroy

(The story of Pat Conroy's dismissal as the public school teacher on Daufuskie Island, S. C., was told in the November issue of SOUTH TODAY. This report deals with the immediate aftermath.)

Beaufort, S. C.

Looking across the bay at the ancient spires and mansions of Beaufort, the visitor is reminded of an antebellum village. The town's tortured and venerable history is concentrated at the Point, a colony of iron-filigreed and columned homes with tall verandas that provide a view of the barrier islands, among them Daufuskie, where some 125 black Americans wait out their lives in one-room shanties sustained by welfare checks and the hope, persistent and improbable as heaven, that somehow their children will be delivered into a better world.

Twenty-five-year-old Pat Conroy, who until September taught at the one room school house on Daufuskie, is one of the few residents of the Point who has ever visited the island. The gentlemen of the Point, men of exquisite courtesy and taste, are wrapped up in their professions, their homes with their rare antiques and leather-bound books, their patterned gardens of azaleas and oleanders, the conviviality and bounty of their tables (fine Madeiras, gumbos and sauces, and lemon-scented finger bowls), their clubs, and the education of sons trained in a South Carolina militaristic tradition that dates back to the Revolution and still has impact on American foreign policy. In short, their sons are Citadel men.

The gentlemen of the Point are not unaware that their world is changing. In their drawing rooms they have heatedly discussed the national uproar over Beaufort County's hunger statistics; the spectre of worms on Hilton Head; the "revolutionary goings on" at Penn Community Center; the charges of Donald Gatch, doctor to the Bluffton blacks; and the growing militancy of the Negroes (a decent cook is hard to come by). But such inflammatory issues could be blamed on the Yankee press or on the spectre of Communist infiltration. It was not until Pat Conroy was fired from his teaching post on Daufuskie that the sweet, mannerly somnambulism of the Point was irrevocably shattered. Conroy was a personable young man, open and brash, and they had tolerated his eccentricities—his defense of a small hippie group in a melee at predominantly-white Beaufort High School, where he had been offered the assistant principal's post, and his ill-considered decision to teach the children of Daufuskie. For all his peculiar notions, he had always gone through channels. He was a citizen of the Point, and above all, he was a Citadel man.

Pat Conroy started his second year on Daufuskie in September after a troubled summer. The school board, overlooking the miracle he had worked in raising the grade levels of the "illiterate," had challenged his transportation costs to the island. The little boat he navigated, often through hazardous waters, was expensive to maintain, they said. But, reluctantly, the board reinstated Conroy.

On Sept. 21, he took a week's leave from the classroom to serve as a consultant to the Desegregation Center of the University of South Carolina and turned over his lesson plans to the Vista Volunteer he had enlisted as a substitute teacher. It proved to be a memorable week. The black and white teachers cut through the boundaries of race, the sociologists' theories about integration and segregation, and the labyrinthian educational bureaucracy and addressed themselves to the needs of America's children, an innovation in itself so threatening that the group was harassed by the local night riders.

When Conroy returned he was fired for "failure to obey instructions, insubordination, gross neglect of duty and conduct unbecoming a professional educator." That was Tuesday, Sept. 29. On Wednesday, the sorrowing mothers of Daufuskie, the mothers who had penned a labored and eloquent statement to the school board in his behalf, voted to boycott the little one-room school.

That Friday the truant officer arrived on the island. He visited every parent in the little cinder-block, moss-shrouded shanties of Daufuskie. The parents said he threatened them with a fine and 30 days in jail if the children stayed out of school. On Monday, six terrified students of the school's 34 pupils went back to school.

When Conroy explained to them that the compulsory school law had never been enforced in South Carolina, the children resumed the boycott. The following day, Walter Trammell, superintendent of Beaufort County schools, made his first visit to Daufuskie. He was accompanied by the truant officer and the deputy superintendent. The threat of jail was buttressed now with the full weight of Beaufort County authority. Undaunted, the impassioned mothers of Daufuskie made pleas for their children.

Conroy had thrown away the belt. ("You only teach blacks by beating them," he had been told.) He had expanded the dimensions of their narrow, sea-washed world by teaching them geography, had introduced them to the majesty of language and music, had lifted their eyes to the heavens and the miracle of space exploration. He had in short, taken a group of ragged youngsters, dismissed as hopelessly retarded, and made them a match for the scholars, Peace Corpsmen, artists and musicians he had brought to the island to be with them.

Superintendent Trammell was unrelenting. The boycott was resumed until Conroy himself called it off, his fighting Irish spirit broken by the report that one mother had been told her welfare check would be cut off if her children did not return to school. Two days later his lawyer, George Trask of Beaufort, received a phone call from the chairman of the Board of Education saying that if Conroy returned to Daufuskie he would be arrested for contributing to the delinquency of minors. Two well-qualified teachers applied for Conroy's job but it was awarded instead to the island's postmistress—a white woman with an eighth-grade education.

Conroy immediately filed suit against the school board to be reinstated. Penniless, with a third child on the way, he applied for work. When he went to be interviewed by the Office of Economic Opportunity, he was greeted by one of its more powerful board members, who also serves as deputy superintendent of schools. No one in Beaufort would hire him—he was even turned down by a chicken farmer for whom he hoped to deliver eggs.

At the Point, his mannerly and gracious neighbors circulated a petition to force him to move. Among his other sins, he had taken in two black teen-agers from Daufuskie who, having graduated from the island's tiny elementary school, wanted to attend Beaufort's Robert Smalls School, a black school adjoining a dump which the school board refers to as a "land fill." In the drawing rooms, the rumors flowed with the Madeira. Conroy was said to be a revolutionary and an insurrectionist. Hadn't he spent a week at that "Commie" seminar at the University of South Carolina? And what about his relationships with his students—the dusky young girls of Daufuskie? And wasn't he highly emotional? Even a Citadel man had been known to go off his rocker.

Preliminary hearings for Conroy's case were to be held Nov. 30. But even before that, the young teacher received notice from his draft board that, since he was unemployed, his status had been changed to 1-A. That placed him seventh in line for the draft.

Today, committed and believing still, retaining yet his faith in justice, he will tell you about teaching, about the wrenching heroism of the black children who integrated Beaufort High School, about the heightened sensitivity and awareness they brought to the whites, about the innate intelligence of Daufuskie's "retarded children."

"Teaching. . . there is no profession like it. . . the relationship of people to people. The kids are telling us everyday what they need, what they want, if we would only listen," says the Citadel man, the man who now lives somewhere between Daufuskie and the Point.

The Gains:

Smaller Cities Integrate And Find That It Works

By JACK ROSENTHAL
In The New York Times

At a time of sharp national debate over how much school desegregation is enough, a number of smaller cities have tried complete integration and found that it works.

Complete school integration—where pupil ratios closely parallel the racial composition of the community—is too new and the places where it has been tried so far are too few to yield concrete conclusions. But school officials of eight smaller cities, in the North and South, report the following initial gains in educational achievement and in social attitudes:

-- Black children have often gained, sometimes dramatically, in achievement. A Riverside, Calif., school official says that "integration has taken the lid off the achievement levels of the minorities." In New Albany, Miss., black children gained 1.4 grades in the first year of full integration.

-- Fears that white children's performance would suffer under integration appear baseless. In city after city, school officials say with certainty that white children are performing at least as well after integration as before. In New Albany, they gained 1.1 grades in the first year.

-- After initial tension, race relations appear to have steadily improved in schools. In some cases, such rapport has spread to the larger community. In Berkeley, Calif., officials believe that complete integration explains a cessation of white flight from the city.

These conclusions were drawn from a survey of eight cities that have integrated their schools through racial balance. If a school system is 30 per cent black, for example, each school has approximately 30 per cent black children under the racial balance concept.

A key and controversial element of the racial balance format is the elimination of schools that, even after substantial desegregation, remain all-black or predominantly black.

The issues of racial balance and all-black schools lie at the heart of the public debate over desegregation, a debate reinforced. . . in the Supreme Court in cases involving Charlotte, N. C.; Mobile, Ala., and Athens, Ga.

The eight cities surveyed were New Albany; Harrisburg, Pa.; Rochester, N. Y.; Chapel Hill, N. C.; Berkeley and Riverside, Calif.; Evanston, Ill., and Greenville, S. C.

The experience of these cities would seem to hold little value for major urban centers, with large populations, great distances to be overcome by extensive school busing, and large numbers—sometimes a majority—of nonwhite children.

But the smaller cities—they average about 150,000 population, are more compact in size and have a minority enrolment of roughly 30 per cent—are somewhat typical of many communities around the country.

Their experience supports the findings of the Coleman Report, a massive federal report made in 1966 named for James S. Coleman, Johns Hopkins University professor who was its chief author. The report found that integration into majority white schools was the single most important school factor in improving the educational performance of black children.

In almost every case, school officials in the eight smaller cities described integration in similar terms.

Selling Education

"I don't think you can sell intergation," said Ray Berry, superintendent of schools in Riverside. "I do not think you can convince people that the schools have a major obligation to integrate. But you can sell total education, to see that every child gets a full education. If integration is needed to bring that off, then integration is acceptable."

In Evanston, a detailed performance study is to be completed next summer. "I'm certain," said Joseph Hill, the acting superintendent in the Chicago suburb, "that there will be no decrease in achievement levels of white youngsters. I'm sure there will be an increase in achievement of blacks."

In Chapel Hill, Superintendent of Schools Wilmer F. Cody said: "The systemwide average achievement of white students in the basic skills has remained high and unchanged and the average achievement of black students has increased."

Minority-group children in Riverside used to fall two grade levels below whites by the end of the sixth grade, said Superintendent Berry. "Now that isn't true," he said. "You still have a larger group of minority children at the bottom of the class, but they have a chance to get to the top.

"Integration has been the trigger to education more than anything else we could have done. It has aided all education for all children. It has caused us to break the mold, to get away from the rigidity of our old educational system."

It is a long way from Riverside (population 140,000) to New Albany (population about 8,000) but officials in the Mississippi city apply a parallel attitude.

Before Court Acted

New Albany, in northeast Mississippi, completely desegregated its four schools in 1969, despite bitter opposition, well in advance of court requirements. Each school, like the population, is now about 30 per cent black.

The emphasis was on education, not integration, with "an individual instruction program, a nongrade approach and team teaching," recalls Bryant Smith, who was then superintendent of schools.

White parents went along, grudgingly at first. Now, of 2,000 students, only two have transferred to a private, segregated academy.

In Berkeley, where achievement studies are not yet available, teachers and administrators said that performance gains were encouraging. Whites make up a bare majority in the system, which has 41 per cent black students and 9 per cent Mexican-American and Oriental students.

While nearly half of the city's 8,000 grade school pupils are bused, there has been no disorder. Other cities have had some, but, typically, less than before integration.

In Harrisburg, there have been scattered racial fights, but none of the gang disorders experienced last year at black junior high schools. In Riverside, officials said that there were still incidents, but that "the discipline rate is actually down."

More Difficult Now

Integration has not been achieved without political cost, as was illustrated. . . in Pasadena, Calif., where three pro-integration school board members narrowly survived a recall effort.

Superintendent Hill of Evanston said that the city's move to integration, begun four years ago, would be "definitely more difficult now, with more black separatism and more demands for sharing power."

But in most instances, while such problems are troubling, they are not discouraging, the school official said.

"We'd never go back," said Dr. Mabel C. Purl, Riverside's educational research director. "The whole community is glad that integration happened."

Copyright 1970 by The New York Times Company. Reprinted by permission.

EXPERTS . . .

From Page 4

as are the schools themselves. I would like to see how it is possible to restrict busing to increase racial heterogeneity of our schools without at the same time to restrict busing in terms of the normal schools that are segregated.

Black Separatism

" . . . My interpretation of the apparent rise in black separatism is that this is directly a consequence of the frustration post-Brown (the 1954 Supreme Court decision on school segregation). The promise of Brown unfulfilled intensifies the frustrations of the minorities, and black separatism, black nationalism, is a symptom of that increased frustration.

"It is also, I think, a symptom of the kind of problems which racial rejection, racial cruelty, imposes upon the victims. . . . Black separatism tells us how deeply damaging racism has been, and continues to be. Its main effect, as I see it, is now it is coming in black form, when racism, equally intolerable, equally cruel, equally irrational, when it came in white form, was not clearly seen by whites.

" . . . It seems to me that benign racism, like benign neglect, is as detrimental as militant racism in terms of the effect of perpetuating inequities. I don't see how government policy, I don't see how the U. S. Supreme Court could have handed down the decision on the detrimental effect of racial segregation and say, 'Well, this is legally and constitutionally correct in terms of white segregation, but we will be a little more sentimental if it comes under the guise of black segregation or black separatism.' This would be a demonstration that we are not taking seriously the fundamental social, educational and psychological issues, which to me should prevail here."

Damage to Whites

"The argument for the desegregation of our public schools must now be presented in terms of the damage which racially segregated schools inflict upon privileged white children . . . . There is strong evidence to suggest that racial segregation . . . is flagrantly and insidiously detrimental to privileged middle-class and working-class white children . . . These young people have explicitly stated the basis for their rejection of authority; namely, their view of authority as morally hypocritical, insensitive, . . . socially disturbing and unstablizing.

"One of the most disconcerting things for me is the extent to which these young privileged white people seek to escape the moral conflict and quandary which racial segregation practices impose upon them by not only rejecting authority and values, but at times even rejecting reason, itself, and the whole rational process.

"These, I suggest, are their defenses to escape the personal guilt. These are their attempts to avoid the sense of moral and ethical emptiness which a racist society imposes upon sensitive individuals. These are their attempts to avoid being accessories to racial segregation and cruelty which racially segregated institutions involuntarily impose upon them, refusing to permit them the choice of more ethical and more personal substance.

"These are their attempts to avoid being personally the beneficiaries of cruelties imposed upon others. These are their ways of trying to avoid the stark and intolerable qualities of moral schizophrenia and moral emptiness of a society which preaches democracy but practices cruelty imposed upon these individuals.

" . . . Among the majority of American youths, who are damaged by racial segregation and prejudice and institutional forms of racism, one gets not only the acceptance of the hypocrisy, but also the acceptance of a philosophy which repudiates morality and ethics as being irrelevant generally.

" . . . A disturbingly increasing number of youngsters who have rejected these more practical forms of accommodation to the ethical and moral schizophrenia of American society in racism are attempting to cope with the personal, the individual ethical problems by rebelling totally against parents, leaders, governmental and educational leaders, the controllers of the institutions which they interpret as imposing upon them in the first place the moral and ethical conflict and ego confusion of guilt and environment.

"They are rejecting all the values, the ethics, the verbal morality, which are perceived as being fundamentally and inevitably contaminated by the hypocritical establishment, to use their words.

Hypocrisy and Rebellion

"Some very specific recent symptoms of this ethical malaise . . . which have infected our youth almost if not totally to an epidemic stage are . . . the 'hippie' movement . . . (and) the drug cult . . . These youngsters, in attacking their parents, in attacking educational authority, in attacking governmental authority beyond and without regard to reason, are in a sense telling us that they perceive these individuals as ones who imposed upon them the basic ethical conflict in the first place, and are reacting negatively, destructively, toward the agents of their moral schizophrenia.

" . . . Segregated schools and cruelty in American ghettos are the institutionalized and inescapable morality of American racism, and as such are deadening and destroying the ethical and personal effectiveness of American white children, and doing it so much more insidiously than they are destroying the personal and human effectiveness of American black children.

" . . . I think the United States has a wonderful opportunity to take its racial homogeneity, its ethnic homogeneity, and turn it into a social, economic, educational, and, if you will, international asset.

"We can also save our children . . . from destructive forms of seeking escape from the ethical schizophrenia which I talked about, but we would give them a valuable educational lesson in poise, effectiveness and security in dealing with people who are superficially different in our world, whose outstanding characteristic is that it consists of people who are different. Few other nations have this kind of asset . . .

Goal for 1976

"We could make American schools laboratories by which American youngsters look upon differences as assets and things with which human beings must come to terms. We could prepare our children to live constructively and productively with the peoples of this world . . . . I think we should set this as a national target . . . as a goal of the bicentennial celebration of the founding of this nation . . . By 1976 we could . . . be the beneficiaries of a serious war against racism, poverty, and slums . . . We could, after 200 years, take the ethical words of Jefferson and translate them into the type of serious action which would free sensitive young Americans from the need to rebel randomly, irrationally, and self-destructively."

From Page 2

Index: South Today, Volume I

EMPLOYMENT
See also: LABOR
"Black Executive: He Makes His Own Way." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 2, p. 4 (August 1969) Black holds executive position with tobacco company.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 5, p. 2 (Oct. 1969) Cites a report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, FOR ALL THE PEOPLE . . . BY ALL THE PEOPLE: A REPORT ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown, v. 1, n. 6, p. 2 (Dec. 1969) Cites Labor Dept. statistics on Atlanta's unemployment and an article by Sylvia Porter on national unemployment.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 9, p. 2 (April 1970) Cites U. S. Dept. of Labor report, the CHICAGO PLAN: AN AGREEMENT FOR THE IMPLEMENTATION OF EMPLOYMENT OF MINORITIES IN THE CHICAGO BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY.

GOVERNMENT
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 5, p. 2 (Oct. 1969). Cites a report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights, FOR ALL THE PEOPLE . . . BY ALL THE PEOPLE: A REPORT ON EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT.

HEAD START
See EDUCATION—HEAD START

HOUSING
"By Way of: Timberlake." Reese Cleghorn. v. 1, n. 10, p. 2 (May 1970) TVA's proposed "new town."
"Report on Reports." v. 1, n. 2, p. 2 (August 1969) U. S. Department of Agriculture report on housing in rural South Carolina.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 5, p. 2 (Nov. 1969) Cites the Potomac Institute's publication, HOUSING GUIDE TO EQUAL OPPORTUNITY.
"Report on Reports." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 11, p. 2 (June 1970) Rent strikes and other activities of the National Tenants Organization in the South.

HUNGER
See also: POVERTY, MEDICAL CARE
"Paternalism Dies in the Delta." Neil Maxwell from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 8, p. 8 (March 1970) Review of Anthony Dunbar's THE WILL TO SURVIVE, published by SRC.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 7, p. 2 (Feb. 1970) Cites the Children's Foundation's report, WHY CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS FAIL and a study of lunch programs in Kentucky by Charles Clark for IMPACT!

JUDICIARY
"Orangeburg, A Tragedy of Police Panic and Official Defensiveness." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 1, p. 8 (July 1969)

KU KLUX KLAN
"My Friend Calvin." Charles Weltner from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 5, p. 3 (Nov. 1969) A Congressman and a Klansman become friends.

LABOR
See also: ECONOMICS, EMPLOYMENT
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown, v. 1, n. 9, p. 2 (April 1970) Cites U. S. Dept. of Labor report, THE CHICAGO PLAN: AN AGREEMENT FOR THE IMPLEMENTATION OF EMPLOYMENT OF MINORITIES IN THE CHICAGO BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY.

LABOR—UNIONS AND UNION ORGANIZING
"Southern Cities on Strike; Public Employe Unions Spreading; City Halls Often are Unprepared." Roger M. Williams. v. 1, n. 11, p. 1, 6-7 (June 1970)

LEADERSHIP
"Atlanta: Schools Order Reveals a Crisis of Leadership." William Winn. v. 1, n. 7, pp. 4-5 (Feb. 1970)
"School Integration: What Worked in Recent Weeks." William Winn. v. 1, n. 8, pp. 4-5 (March 1970)

LAW
"The Antidote is Bunkley." From the MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 2, p. 3 (August 1969) Conservative law professor appointed dean of law school.
"Ole Miss Law: Another Dean, Another Way." Ken Vinson from Mississippi FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 2, p. 3 (August 1969) Liberalism repressed at the law school.

LAW ENFORCEMENT—POLICE BRUTALITY
"Orangeburg: A Tragedy of Police Panic and Official Defensiveness." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 1, p. 8 (July 1969)

LAW ENFORCEMENT—RIOT CONTROL AND REPORTS
See also: VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION
"'No Person Is Safe.'" Statement by the Southern Regional Council following events at Orangeburg in 1968. v. 1, n. 11, p. 8 (June 1970)
"Orangeburg to Kent State." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 11, p. 8 (June 1970) Similarities of the tragedies at South Carolina State and Kent State.

MEDIA AND ENTERTAINMENT
See also: MUSIC
"Country Fiddles; Nashville and Its Singers Have Gone Uptown . . . Big." Paul Hemphill from the ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION MAGAZINE. v. 1, n. 7, p. 3 (Feb. 1970)
"The Movies: The 1970s Intensify Hollywood's Struggle of Profits vs Reality." James M. Wall. v. 1, n. 10, pp. 4-5 (May 1970)
"A Shoeshine from DeFord Baily." Paul Hemphill from BRIGHT LIGHTS AND COUNTRY MUSIC. v. 1, n. 9, p. 12 (April 1970)
"Turn Ye Radio On" Reese Cleghorn from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 1, p. 3 (July 1979) Conservative evangelists on the radio.

MEDICAL CARE
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 9, p. 2 (April 1970) Cites American Public Health Assn.'s report, HEALTH CRISIS IN AMERICA.

MIGRANTS
See AGRICULTURE—MIGRANTS

MIGRATION
"Farmers: 'The Genesis of a Chicago Riot May Be Traced to a Cotton Field.'" Paul Good from CYCLE TO NOWHERE. v. 1, n. 4, p. 5 (Nov. 1969)

MUSIC
"Country Fiddles; Nashville and Its Singers Have Gone Uptown . . . Big." Paul Hemphill from the ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION MAGAZINE. v. 1, n. 7, p. 3 (Feb. 1970)
"Johnny Cash: He Celebrates a Better South." Pat Watters. v. 1, n. 3, pp. 1, 7 (Sept. 1969)
"A Shoeshine from DeFord Baily." Paul Hemphill from BRIGHT LIGHTS AND COUNTRY MUSIC. v. 1, n. 9, p. 12 (April 1970)

NONVIOLENCE
"Report on Reports." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 11, p. 2 (June 1970) Nonviolence on increase.

POLICE BRUTALITY
See LAW ENFORCEMENT-POLICE BRUTALITY

POLITICS
See also: GOVERNMENT
"Agnew's Forays Suggest (Southern) Strategy." Reese Cleghorn from the BALTIMORE SUN. v. 1, n. 7, p. 6 (Feb. 1970)
"Black Votes: 1965 (Voting Rights) Act Facing Test." Marvin Wall. v. 1, n. 2, p. 6 (August 1969)
"A Cry From the Delta." Robert Coles and Harry Huge from the NEW REPUBLIC. v. 1, n. 1, pp. 5-6 (July 1969) A description of the tragic human conditions in rural Mississippi with a discussion of agricultural politics involved.
"Federal Retreat: Nixon Policies Allowing Resistance and Evasion." Neil Maxwell from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 4, p. 8 (Oct. 1969)
"Mississippi Replay: Head Start Was Hit Again But Blacks Struck Back." Betsy Fancher. v. 1, n. 9, pp. 3-6 (April 1970) Gov. Williams veto of funds reversed by HEW Secretary Finch.
"The People Have Faith." Robert E. Anderson, Jr. v. 1, n. 9, p. 3 (April 1970) Importance of Head Start to poor Mississippians.
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 5, p. 2 (Nov. 1969) Cites Morton Inger's monograph, POLITICS AND REALITY IN AN AMERICAN CITY, an analysis of the causes of the 1960 New Orleans school desegregation crisis.
"Scopes: This Is, Now, 1970." Ed Williams from MISSISSIPPI FREELANCE. v. 1, n. 10, pp. 1, 8 (May 1970) It's still against the law to teach evolution in Mississippi's public schools.

POLITICS—NEGRO
"Black Votes: 1965 (Voting Rights) Act Facing Test." Marvin Wall. v. 1, n. 2, p. 6 (August 1969)
"Letter from Tuskegee." Roger Williams. v. 1, n. 10, p. 6 (May 1970) Black political power in a small Alabama town.
"The Past Is Now?" Francis Walter from the Selma Inter-religious NEWSLETTER. v. 1, n. 6, p. 4 (Dec. 1969) Black political power in Green County, Alabama.

POVERTY
See also: APPALACHIA, HUNGER
"Paternalism Dies in the Delta." Neil Maxwell from the WALL STREET JOURNAL. v. 1, n. 8, p. 8 (March 1970) Review of Anthony Dunbar's THE WILL TO SURVIVE, published by SRC.
"Who Makes the Money?" Arnold Cantor from the AFL-CIO FEDERATIONIST. v. 1, n. 5, p. 6 (Nov. 1969) Poorest 20 per cent get only 5 per cent of the nation's wealth.

POVERTY—RURAL
"A Cry From the Delta." Robert Coles and Harry Huge from the NEW REPUBLIC. v. 1, n. 1 pp. 5-6 (July 1969) A description of the tragic human conditions in rural Mississippi with a discussion of agricultural politics involved.
"Farmer: 'The Genesis of a Chicago Riot May Be Traced to a Cotton Field.'" Paul Good from CYCLE TO NOWHERE. v. 1, n. 5, p. 4 (Nov. 1969)
"Report on Reports." v. 1, n. 2, p. 2 (August 1969) U. S. Department of Agriculture report on housing in rural South Carolina.
"Some Facts About Rural Poverty." From the report by the National Commission on Rural Poverty. v. 1, n. 5, p. 5 (Nov. 1969)
"Students: They Could Help in Rural Areas." Don McKee from the CHATTANOOGA TIMES. v. 1, n. 3, p. 5 (Sept. 1969) Describes proposed Georgia Student Rural Project.

POLLUTION
See ECOLOGY

PRIVATE SCHOOLS
See EDUCATION—PRIVATE SCHOOLS

RACE AND RACE RELATIONS
"Black Vets: A Place Now in America's Mainstream?" Barbara Thomas and Peggy Roberson from the BIRMINGHAM NEWS. v. 1, n. 6, p. 3 (Dec. 1969)
"'Church Must Free Us All.'" Oscar Carr, Jr. from a speech before the General Convention of the Episcopal Church. v. 1, n. 8, pp. 1, 3 (March 1970) His words are a revelation of one white Southerner's response to change.
"Ivan Allen: Status of Blacks is No. 1 Challenge." Raleigh Bryans and Margaret Shannon from the ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION MAGAZINE. v. 1, n. 3, p. 8 (Sept. 1969) Former Atlanta mayor says race is the biggest problem facing cities.
"Memphis: Advisors Say Growth Tied to Race Relations." James Chisum from the MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL—APPEAL. v. 1, n. 2, p. 8 (August 1969)
"The Movies: The 1970s Intensify Hollywood's Struggle of Profits vs. Reality." James M. Wall. v. 1, n. 10, pp. 4-5 (May 1970)
"Report on Reports." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 10, p. 2 (May 1970) Cites U. S. Commission on Civil Rights' report, RACISM IN AMERICA AND HOW TO COMBAT IT.

RADICAL RIGHT
See also: KKK
"Turn Ye Radio On" Reese Cleghorn from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 1, p. 3 (July 1969) Conservative evangelists on the radio.

RELIGION
"'Church Must Free Us All.'" Oscar Carr Jr. from a speech before the General Convention of the Episcopal Church. v. 1, n. 8, pp. 1, 3 (March 1970) His words are a revelation of one white Southerner's response to change.
"Follow-up." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 9, p. 2 (April 1970) Questions churches should ask before establishing a private school.
"A Theology for the Age of Ecology." William K. McElvaney from THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. v. 1, n. 11, p. 4 (June 1970)
"Turn Ye Radio On". Reese Cleghorn from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 1, p. 3 (July 1969) Conservative evangelists on the radio.
"White Church, Black Church." Pat Watters from the SOUTH AND THE NATION, v. 1, n. 6, p. 8 (Dec. 1969)

RURAL DEVELOPMENT
"By Way Of: Waugh." Arthur Campbell. v. 1, n. 6, p. 2 (Dec. 1969) An urban planner finds his home town part of the urban solution—if.

SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAMS
See EDUCATION—LUNCH PROGRAMS

SCHOOLS
See EDUCATION

SEGREGATION ACADEMIES
See EDUCATION—PRIVATE SCHOOLS

SOUTH
"Bye, Bye Bush Leagues." Paul Hemphill from SPORT MAGAZINE. v. 1, n. 10, p. 3 (May 1970)
"'Church Must Free Us All.'" Oscar Carr Jr., from a speech before the General Convention of the Episcopal Church. v. 1, n. 8, pp. 1, 3 (March 1970). His words are a revelation of one white Southerner's response to change.
"Cock Fight!" Pat Watters from THE SOUTH AND THE NATION. v. 1, n. 7, p. 6 (Feb. 1970)
"Fare Thee Well, Southern Belle." Lydel Sims from the MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL—APPEAL. v. 1, n. 9, p. 7 (April 1970)
"History Afloat: Can the 'Delta Queen' Be Saved?" Roy Reed from THE NEW YORK TIMES. v. 1, n. 11, p. 3 (June 1970)
"Johnny Cash: He Celebrates a Better South." Pat Watters. v. 1, n. 3, pp. 1, 7 (Sept. 1969)
"My Friend Calvin." Charles Weltner from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 5, p. 3 (Nov. 1969) A Congressman and a Klansman become friends.
"The Past Is Now?" Frances Walter from the Selma Inter-religious NEWSLETTER. v. 1, n. 6, p. 4 (Dec. 1969) Black political power in Green Cty., Alabama.
"'The Past is Now:' Tragedy, Loneliness are South's Theme." James McBride Dabbs from CIVIL RIGHTS IN RECENT SOUTHERN FICTION. v. 1, n. 6, pp. 1, 5 (Dec. 1969)
"Seeing the South." Pat Watters from THE SOUTH AND THE NATION. v. 1, n. 8, p. 7 (March 1970)
"A Shoeshine from DeFord Baily." Paul Hemphill from BRIGHT LIGHTS AND COUNTRY MUSIC. v. 1, n. 9, p. 12 (April 1970)
"Southern Consciousness." Reese Cleghorn from ATLANTA magazine. v. 1, n. 2, pp. 1, 7 (August 1969)
"The Squire of Rip Raps." Jack Bass from the CHARLOTTE OBSERVER. v. 1, n. 6, p. 4 (Dec. 1969) An interview with James McBride Dabbs.
"Sports Integration: Football as Radicalism. . ." Roy Blount Jr. v. 1, n. 9, pp. 1, 10-12 (April 1970)
"By Way Of: Selma." Francis Walter from the Selma Inter-religious Project NEWSLETTER. v. 1, n. 8, p. 2 (March 1970)

SPORTS—SOUTH
"Bye, Bye Bush Leagues." Paul Hemphill from SPORT MAGAZINE. v. 1, n. 10, p. 3 (May 1970)
"Cock Fight!" Pat Watters from THE SOUTH AND THE NATION. v. 1, n. 7, p. 6 (Feb. 1970)
"Sports Integration: Football as Radicalism. . ." Roy Blount Jr. v. 1, n. 9, pp. 1, 10-12 (April 1970)

TEXTBOOKS
See EDUCATION—TEXTBOOKS AND MINORITY HISTORY

UNIONS
See LABOR—UNIONS AND UNION ORGANIZING

URBAN AFFAIRS
"By Way Of: Timberlake." Reese Cleghorn. v. 1, n. 10, p. 2 (May 1970) TVA's proposed "new town."
"Ivan Allen: Status of Blacks is No. 1 Challenge." Raleigh Bryans and Margaret Shannon from the ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION MAGAZINE. v. 1, n. 3, p. 8 (Sept. 1969) Former Atlanta mayor says race is the biggest problem facing cities.
"Memphis: Advisors Say Growth Tied to Race Relations." James Chisum from the MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL—APPEAL. v. 1, n. 2, p. 8 (August 1969)
"Southern Cities on Strike; Public Employe Unions Spreading; City Halls Often Are Unprepared." Roger M. Williams. v. 1, n. 11, pp. 1, 6-7 (June 1970)

VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION
"The Guns of Texas: South Leads in Killings." Gary Cartwright from the TEXAS OBSERVER. v. 1, n. 7, pp. 1, 7 (Feb. 1970) Failure to pass effective gun-control legislation in Texas.
"Orangeburg to Kent State." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 11, p. 8 (June 1970) Similarities of the tragedies at South Carolina State and Kent State.
"Orangeburg: A Tragedy of Police Panic and Official Defensiveness." Jack Nelson from the LOS ANGELES TIMES. v. 1, n. 1, p. 8 (July 1969)

VOTER REGISTRATION
"Black Votes: 1965 (Voting Rights) Act Facing Test." Marvin Wall. v. 1, n. 2, p. 6 (August 1969)
"Telling It Like It Was." from CLIMBING JACOB'S LADDER. v. 1, n. 2, p. 7 (August 1969) Activists describe their experiences in registering blacks.

VOTING RIGHTS ACT
"Black Votes: 1965 (Voting Rights) Act Facing Test." Marvin Wall. v. 1, n. 2, p. 6 (August 1969)

WELFARE
"The South and Welfare." Warren Prichard. v. 1, n. 3, pp. 4-5 (Sept. 1969)
"Welfare: What Kind of Priorities for America?" David Broder from the WASHINGTON POST. v. 1, n. 1, p. 5 (Sept. 1969)

WOMEN'S LIBERATION—SOUTH
"Fare Thee Well, Southern Belle." Lydel Sims from the MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL—APPEAL. v. 1, n. 9, p. 7 (April 1970)

YOUTH
"Report on Reports." Claire Brown. v. 1, n. 3, p. 2 (Sept. 1969) Cites article from the SATURDAY REVIEW on the "Youth Revolution."
"Report on Reports." Kitty Griffith. v. 1, n. 11, p. 2 (June 1970) Cites HEW publication, "Teenagers Discuss the Generation Gap."

REPORT ON REPORTS

By KITTY TERJEN

Land-grant colleges began with Justin Smith Morrill, a Whig member of Congress. He sponsored legislation, eventually signed into law by President Lincoln, which provided for "the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be . . . to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts . . . in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life."

This legislation, the First Morrill Act, was a major factor in democratizing higher education in America; prior to this time, education was for the elite and rich. It came at a time when 59 per cent of the population was engaged in agriculture and 90 per cent of the blacks were in slavery.

In 1890 the Second Morrill Act was passed, and it authorized the establishment of separate land-grant colleges for Negroes. Sixteen of the Negro land-grant colleges established under the 1890 law remain today and all of these are in the South and border states.

The Second Morrill Act contained a separate-but-equal clause, but of course that meant that while the schools were very separate they were also very unequal.

The U. S. Civil Rights Commission has made a survey of the distribution of both federal and state aid to predominantly white and Negro land-grant colleges. Although the separate-but-equal provisions of the Second Morrill Act were supposedly overridden by Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, this survey found that black colleges are still discriminated against in terms of a fair share of such funds:

--"When totaled, federal and state aid to the predominantly white land-grant institutions runs approximately $650 million a year. Aid to the predominantly Negro land-grant colleges in the same states is only slightly more than $70 million. Thus, although the predominantly white land-grant colleges enrol only about 5½ times as many students, combined federal-state aid equals more than nine times as much. Federal aid is 11 times as much and state aid is more than 8½ times as much.

--"Looked at another way, total federal-state aid equals almost $2,300 per student in the predominantly white land-grant institution but less than $1,365 in the predominantly Negro ones—less than 60 per cent the per capita aid to students in the white institutions."

You guessed it. The black-land-grant college is in deep financial trouble. It would take $125 million for these schools just to catch up, and that is apparently a conservative estimate. Despite these handicaps, these colleges, which enrol 20 per cent of the black students in college today, have made and will continue to make valuable contributions to higher education in this country. Now exposed, this inequity must be corrected.

Written by Bill Payne, the article is entitled "Forgotton But Not Gone: The Negro Land-Grant Colleges." This report appeared in the spring issue of the Civil Rights Digest. Copies may be obtained for 35 cents from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. 20402.

Academies:

Many Parents Would Give Children Bad Educations

By JUNIE BROWN
In The Atlanta Journal

There are a good many white parents in Georgia who would rather inflict an inferior education on their children than have them go to school with black classmates.

Thus, while there is a new look of prosperity to the private school movement in the state this fall, Georgia still has its share of inadequate private schools.

In Lamar County 31 children are attending classes in an old motel. There are three teachers for grades one through six.

At Talmadge Institute in Irwinton, three teachers hold classes for 15 students in grades 1-12. The school is in a dilapidated former public school building.

Bathroom fixtures are broken off the wall, the floors are creaky and the plaster cracked. Only two classrooms are heated.

The headmaster at Talmadge quit shortly after school opened because of a disagreement with the board of trustees. A teacher at the school claims the school is in serious financial difficulty.

Most of the new private schools—segregation academies—are operating on shoestring budgets, charging tuitions of $250 - $700 per child, as compared to the $1,000 and up most established private schools charge.

To make up the difference, the new schools hold cake sales, barbecues and carnivals, to raise money.

Most have retired teachers on the faculty.

"I'll buy their experience," said Walker Cook, headmaster of Piedmont Academy in Monticello, a new school which has two retirees teaching.

Some schools have non-certificated college graduates teaching. At Bartow Academy, in Bartow, a non-certified chemistry major is teaching chemistry. Headmaster Franklin Hyers says she is highly qualified to do the job, however.

And many of the schools are going the religious rather than the academic route. Ministers are serving as headmasters. Worship services take up a portion of every day's activities and religious pictures cover the walls.

These schools, typically, have strict dress rules and codes on length of hair.

Buhl Cummings, owner of an Athens Christian book store and a radio minister, and his wife have opened one such school, Athens Christian School.

Athens Christian offers courses in Bible, opens every morning with worship assembly and prayer, closes each day with prayer and is making plans to carry its first graduating seniors to the Holy Land as a senior class trip.

"We don't teach evolution as a fact," Cummings said, "We teach it as a theory. We're combatting the humanism, materialism and evolution that is being pumped into children by the public schools."

"We're here to combat some of the things that are going on in the schools—terrible things. I feel we can have the Christian message and a quality education at the same time," Cummings said.

At Thomasville Christian School in Thomasville, the waiting room reading material is largely evangelistic—newspapers with editorials and columns by Dr. Bob Jones Jr. and Carl McIntyre.

The dress code at Thomasville Christian bans shorts, pedal pushers, pants suits, slacks and miniskirts for girls. For boys, "enough of the hair is to be cut at the time that a haircut is given so that the hair style does not resemble a hippie," the school policy states.

William "Bill" Bodenhamer, the former state school board member, candidate for governor and part-time preacher, who is now principal of Ravenwood Academy at Meigs, Ga., said he fills the job because "I received a call from God."

Bodenhamer came to Ravenwood from Shellman where he was headmaster at Randolph Southern, another all-white private school.

Ravenwood, while not a specifically "Christian" school, offers Bible courses, and daily devotionals as part of the curriculum. Bodenhamer is an ordained Baptist minister.

The headmaster at Randolph Southern in Shellman (Randolph County) refused to answer any questions asked by a reporter. He insisted that they be submitted in writing to the board of trustees. Several weeks later, Bill Starling, chairman of the board, said the board had not even discussed the questions because "no good purpose would be served" by answering them.

Gary Linbaugh, headmaster of Burke Academy in Waynesboro, attended high school in New York State and holds an unspecified degree in divinity from the Practical Bible Training School.

"There are just too many Baptist preachers running private schools," said Franklin Hyers, headmaster at Bartow Academy.

Would they admit blacks?

Many of the schools give lip service to an open-door policy and are even advertising open-door admissions for the purpose of receiving tax exemptions.

A typical academy headmaster in Southwest Georgia admits, off the record, that his board is split on the question of admission of blacks. Some would accept an occasional black who could pay the tuition and had good academic records, but several trustees said they will never approve the admission of any blacks.

The standard answer to the question of whether or not the academy will admit blacks is, "we'll admit all qualified students."

"We have no policy covering race, color or creed written in the bylaws," said Bodenhamer of Ravenwood. However, he adds, "no Negro has applied."

Rev. and Mrs. James Smith, who operate the Thomasville Christian School in Thomasville, say their school will not admit blacks.

"But we don't make a big issue of it," said Mrs. Smith. "We have nothing against colored people."

Mrs. Smith said Thomasville Christian will not apply for federal tax exempt status because "we don't want anything to do with the federal government."

The admission of a black "would have to be decided by the trustees," said G. M. Charles Jr., headmaster at Gatewood School Inc., in Eatonton. Charles said Gatewood was formed because "the parents were concerned with the lack of local control in education."

"We are applying for tax exempt status and are running an ad in the local paper," said Clinton Grant, headmaster at Briarwood School serving Warren and McDuffie counties.

"We have run an ad that we have an open door policy," Grant said. "We do have that. We're not just mouthing. We admitted anyone who applied this year." Grant added that no blacks applied.

"I'm not interested in anybody's color but I'm damn interested in education," said James Raines, mayor of Dawson and chairman of the board of Terrell Academy there. He said he would approve "qualified" black teachers at the school.

"People are talking out of both sides of their mouths about this thing," said Walker Cook, headmaster of Piedmont Academy.

Ed Bailey, headmaster at Smithville Academy in Lee County, is the former Sumter County school superintendent.

"To have remained in office under the conditions of the blanket court order would have forced me to do things I believe are bad for education. As superintendent I would have been obligated to keep my children in public schools," he said.

Asked if Burke Academy in Waynesboro would admit blacks, board chairman Dr. Dennis Taylor, a local pharmacist, answered, "No comment. . . It hasn't come up. I can't comment on something that hasn't happened."

There is one comfort for public education in all of this.

Unless there is a new court decision this year ordering wholesale busing, desegregation has done its worst. The tallies are in and only 50,000 to 55,000 Georgia children out of about 1.1 million have deserted the public schools.

The private school movement is at its peak now and, while many of the new schools are here to stay, there should be a gradual return to the public schools noticeably by the first of the year if there is no violence and upheaval.

Mrs. Junie Brown is education editor of THE ATLANTA JOURNAL.

Receiving Illegal Public Aid

Many private school supporters consider their outfits to be really public schools and eligible for a share of the public bounty. Almost the first action of the newly incorporated boards of these schools is to look for public assistance in some form.

In many cases, public school board members have been willing to share their bounty in some degree with private schools. Many new private schools are housed in what were formerly public school buildings built with taxpayers' dollars. In most cases, individuals or groups of citizens purchased the old schools and turned them over to the segregation academies.

In Walton County, the private all-white George Walton Academy purchased an older school from the public school system, then exchanged that school in a lease agreement for two newer buildings. The contract calls for the academy to pay "$3 and other considerations."

Many private school pupils these days are picked up each day by the same buses which last year took them to public schools; many even sit in the same desks they used at the public school and use the same textbooks.

To complicate matters, many local school boards have members who send their children to the private school and whose loyalties lie with the private schools.

In Randolph, Terrell, Washington and Hancock counties, to name a few, local board members are sending their children to private schools.

"They are just serving on the public boards of education in order to see that taxes aren't raised," said an official of the State Department of Education.

"I seriously doubt if we could pass a bond issue now, and we need one," said Washington County School Supt. Buddy Outz.

In Warren County, the school board has just voted to allow the Briarwood School in nearby McDuffie County to use its Deering School gymnasium, provided Briarwood becomes tax-exempt.—Junie Brown

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303
(Address Correction Requested)

ATLANTA GA.

Bulk Rate
U. S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 1085

LABOR STUDIES CENTER INC.

AFL CIO

Wash Trip - 4/29

April 1, 1971

APR 15 1971

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

This year at the institute on Effective Union Action in Civil Rights at the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center, we are planning a session on the problems of "school integration and quality education."

Will you participate in a panel discussion on this subject Tuesday, April 27, from 1:30 to 2:50 p.m.? We are inviting Emanuel Muravchik of the Jewish Labor Committee, and James Harris of the Catholic Conference on Civil Rights, to be the other panel members.

The AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center will, of course, pay the expenses involved in your trip to Washington for this session.

Attending the week-long institute will be about 25 union officers and specialists who have responsibilities in carrying out their union's policy in the field of civil rights.

Sincerely yours,

Jackie Brophy

Jacqueline Brophy
Staff Associate

JB/sw
cc: Don Slaiman

Emory
april 29 as per telephone conversation

Fred

AFL-CIO
LABOR STUDIES CENTER
BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Chairman
George Meany
President
AFL-CIO

Secretary-Treasurer
Lane Kirkland
Secretary-Treasurer
AFL-CIO

Assistant Secretary
Walter G. Davis
Director of Education
AFL-CIO

Executive Director
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

I. W. Abel, President
United Steelworkers of America

Joseph A. Beirne, President
Communications Workers of America

Wilbur J. Cohen, Dean
School of Education
University of Michigan

John R. Coleman, President
Haverford College

Paul Douglas

Paul Hall, President
Seafarers International Union

Paul Jennings, President
International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers

Theodore Kheel, Attorney-at-Law
Battle, Fowler, Stokes and Kheel

Frederick O'Neal, President
Actors' Equity Association

Bayard Rustin, Executive Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Peter T. Schoemann, President
United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry

Miles Stanley, President
West Virginia Labor Federation

Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., President
New York City Central Labor Council

Hunter P. Wharton, President
International Union of Operating Engineers

Willard Wirtz
Attorney-at-Law

1500 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NORTHWEST • WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

Washington Trip — 4/29

LABOR STUDIES CENTER INC.

AFL CIO

APR 4 1971

April 12, 1971 APR 14 1971

Mr. Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

We are very pleased that you will be able to participate in a panel discussion on "School Integration and Quality Education" during the Institute on Effective Union Action in Civil Rights at the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center.

The session will run from 1:30 to 2:50 p.m. on Thursday, April 29 (not Tuesday as noted in my April 1 letter). We are inviting Emanuel Muravchik of the Jewish Labor Committee, and James Harris of the Catholic Conference on Interracial Justice to be the other panel members.

The AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center will, of course, pay the expenses involved in your trip to Washington for this session.

Attending the week-long institute will be about 25 union officers and specialists who have responsibilities in carrying out there unions' policies in the field of civil rights.

Sincerely,

Jackie

Jacqueline Brophy
Staff Associate

JB/sw
cc: Don Slaiman

AFL-CIO
LABOR STUDIES CENTER
BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Chairman
George Meany
President
AFL-CIO

Secretary-Treasurer
Lane Kirkland
Secretary-Treasurer
AFL-CIO

Assistant Secretary
Walter G. Davis
Director of Education
AFL-CIO

Executive Director
Fred K. Hoehler, Jr.
AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center

I. W. Abel, President
United Steelworkers of America

Joseph A. Beirne, President
Communications Workers of America

Wilbur J. Cohen, Dean
School of Education
University of Michigan

John R. Coleman, President
Haverford College

Paul Douglas

Paul Hall, President
Seafarers International Union

Paul Jennings, President
International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers

Theodore Kheel, Attorney-at-Law
Battle, Fowler, Stokes and Kheel

Frederick O'Neal, President
Actors' Equity Association

Bayard Rustin, Executive Director
A. Philip Randolph Institute

Peter T. Schoemann, President
United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry

Miles Stanley, President
West Virginia Labor Federation

Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., President
New York City Central Labor Council

Hunter P. Wharton, President
International Union of Operating Engineers

Willard Wirtz
Attorney-at-Law

1500 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE NORTHWEST • WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005

Wash Trip

Finding Targets vs. Solutions

"Idealism" vs personal advance

Tough decisions re performance vs.

U. S. News & World Report, ~~XXXX~~
April 19, 1971

Wash Trip 4/29

"WHITE ACADEMIES" IN THE SOUTH —BOOMING DESPITE OBSTACLES

Nothing so far has stopped the growth of private, segregated education in the South. This trend has public-school officials disturbed.

—Jaybo Photos

Gulliver Academy is one of a cluster of private schools in the Miami, Fla., area, where 32 new ones opened in the past year. Gulliver's classes are all-white.

ATLANTA

Private schools, overcoming many handicaps, are growing in number and size all over the South.

Neither money problems nor pressures from civil-rights groups seem to have deterred the switch to private education at elementary and high-school levels.

Large numbers of white children are still being withdrawn from integrated public-school systems, and taxpayer support of these systems is declining.

There are no over-all official figures, but latest estimates indicate that more than 700,000 students are now attending nonpublic elementary and secondary schools in the 11 Southern States. This is nearly 6 per cent of the area's school-age population.

Private-school enrollment is figured to be up 15 to 20 per cent over last year, with most of the increase in the "white academies."

Reports from seven States—Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina—illustrate the trend:

From an estimated 1,600 private schools with about 428,000 pupils in 1969-70, these States have moved to approximately 1,800 schools enrolling 535,000 pupils.

Shoestring financing. To a large extent, this growth is being financed from the pockets of parents opposed to racially mixed classrooms. Most of these people do not have a lot of money to spend, and some of the new private academies are admittedly shoestring operations.

Southern legislatures have tried to help private institutions, but the courts have blocked State financial aid in almost any form, holding it to be unconstitutional.

The Internal Revenue Service has added to the worries of private schools by threatening to cut off their tax exemptions if they refuse to admit black pupils. The tax-exempt status of 23 private schools in Mississippi already has been revoked.

Revocation means that persons who give money to the schools will not be allowed to write off these amounts on their tax returns as charitable contributions and that profits of the schools, if any, will be taxable.

Other Southern schools may lose their tax-exempt status before long. The Federal Government is now examining admission policies of private schools all over the country for evidence of racial discrimination.

Pressure to integrate is also coming from the Mid-South Association of Independent Schools. Last month it voted to require its members to admit all qualified students regardless of race, color or national origin—with compliance no later than spring of 1972. The Association has about 50 member schools, all of which, it said, have indicated that they will go along with the new ruling.

Help on the way? Some help may be forthcoming for private schools in the South if the Supreme Court rules in favor of public aid for private education, including church-related schools. Several cases involving this issue are pending.

With a go-ahead from the Supreme Court, State legislatures might act quickly to help Catholic school systems and all other private institutions that are integrated.

It is doubtful, however, that any

(continued on next page)

"WHITE ACADEMIES"

[continued from preceding page]

public aid could be extended legally to segregated academies.

As things stand now, most of the academies say they are not looking for government money.

"Private schools don't want quasi-public status," said William J. Simmons, director of the Citizens Councils of America, which operates five schools in the Jackson, Miss., area. "We don't want public aid. All we want is to be left alone."

Mr. Simmons said Council schools, which have 5,500 students paying tuition of $45 a month, are segregated. "No Negroes have applied for admission, and we wouldn't admit them if they did," he said.

Ralph Martin, principal of Southwest Academy in Jackson, said he did not expect any help from Supreme Court decisions. He added:

"If we received public aid we would be obligated to the Government, and the less obligation you have to the Government the better position you are in to provide the kind of education you want."

Southwest Academy is one of the schools that lost its tax-exempt status last autumn. "It hasn't affected our operations in any way," Mr. Martin said.

In Miami, Fla., this comment came from Mrs. Marian Krutulis, owner of Gulliver Academy and until recently president of the Florida Council of Independent Schools:

"I think public aid would help many private schools. There's a saturation point in tuition, and many private schools are beginning to reach the point where it's almost impossible to charge enough tuition to handle the operation. Several here in Florida have had to close down.

"But I doubt very seriously," she added, "if we would accept public aid. It would depend on what strings were attached."

Gulliver Academy has 775 pupils—a sizable increase this term. Enrollment is all-white although the school has an open-admissions policy.

Widespread segregation. Of the 700,000 private-school students in the 11 Southern States, between 450,000 and 500,000 are believed to be attending segregated schools. This is the estimate of the Southern Regional Council, a private research organization based in Atlanta.

Private-school growth has been swift in Mississippi, where, in January, 1970, the secretary of state's office listed 110 institutions chartered by the State. One year later the figure was 197—and this does not include all the new private schools, since they are not required to apply for charters.

—Scruggs Photo

Many private schools, like Southwest Academy in Jackson, Miss., don't want public aid. Because it bars Negroes, Southwest has lost its tax-exempt status.

Enrollment in Mississippi's chartered schools over the last year has risen from 46,981 to 62,676.

South Carolina is also having a boom in private education. Although he had no exact figures, the president of the South Carolina Independent School Association, T. E. Wannamaker, reported that private-school enrollment had about doubled this term. A State official estimates enrollment at 35,000 in some 139 schools.

Mr. Wannamaker said private classes are filling up quickly—"and we find a new school every time we turn a corner."

In and around Orangeburg, S. C., five new private schools have been organized within the last year. Wade Hampton Academy, one of the older schools in the Orangeburg area, added 125 students to its total enrollment this term.

Private schools "all cry that they are going broke," Mr. Wannamaker said, "but I know of none. Several are operating on planned deficits."

According to "The Miami Herald," 32 new private schools have sprung up in Dade County, Fla., during the past year and have attracted an enrollment of about 6,500. Dade County includes Miami, Hialeah and Coral Gables.

Reductions in public-school attendance are reported to have cut by about $831,000 the amount of State funds allocated for Dade County schools.

In Hickory, N. C., a town of about 20,000, the North State Academy was organized in 1968 by a group of parents. It now has a 30-acre campus, a new building and 103 students—including two blacks—in grades 7 through 12.

Although tuition is relatively high—about $1,000 a year—Headmaster Thomas Keeley said the school survives "with great difficulty."

Official concern. Public-school officials are worried about the drift to private education.

O. P. Richardson, who is associate State superintendent of schools in Alabama, told "U. S. News & World Report" that enrollment in the public schools of his State dropped by about 20,000 this term.

A State official in Georgia estimated that 14,000 pupils were lost this year to private schools.

In Georgia's rural Terrell County, full-scale integration began this term—and so did a brand-new private school, Terrell Academy. The academy has 27 teachers and 550 pupils—all white.

"We're on a very good financial footing," reported Headmaster William T. Owen. "We're not looking for any help."

Terrell County school authorities were not so cheerful. "We've lost about 800 students this term," said one. "Our public enrollment is now 2,500, and it is 92 to 93 per cent black. We've had to close three schools due to smaller enrollment."

Looking ahead. People in the South, facing the economic facts of life, are certain the boom in private schools won't last forever.

"The average person can't afford private school," said a businessman in Jackson, Miss. "After he pays tuition, he still has to shell out taxes for the public schools. It really has put a drain on the economy here."

Among many Southerners, however, there appears to be a determination to support private, segregated education just as long as they can. [END]

Copy for BW & PC
return this to Wash Trip folder

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS

ROY WILKINS, Chairman
ARNOLD ARONSON, Secretary
JOSEPH L. RAUH, JR., Counsel
BAYARD RUSTIN, Executive Committee Chairman
CLARENCE M. MITCHELL, Legislative Chairman
JAMES HAMILTON, Compliance & Enforcement Chairman
MARVIN CAPLAN, Director Washington Office
J. FRANCIS POHLHAUS, Special Consultant
YVONNE PRICE, Executive Assistant

2027 Mass. Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 phone 667-1780 • New York address: 55 West 42nd St., New York 10036, phone 564-3450

MEMO: No. 6-71
April 21, 1971

TO: Participating Organizations

FROM: Arnold Aronson, Secretary

TWO URGENT MATTERS: SCHOOL AID AND EQUAL EMPLOYMENT

There are two important, urgent matters before Congress that require the immediate attention of all constituent organizations of the Leadership Conference: S. 1557, the proposed Emergency School Aid and Quality Integrated Education Act of 1971 and H. R. 1746, the bill to strengthen the Equal Employment Opportunity Act.

School Aid

As you will recall, President Nixon last year proposed a $1.5 billion program to assist school districts in desegregation. The bill embodying this program, after substantial revisions, passed the House of Representatives. In the Senate the bill died in the crush of legislation in the closing days of the session.

On the Senate side, Senator Mondale (D., Minn.) had proposed an alternate bill that placed emphasis on the development of quality integrated schools. Those who supported the Mondale bill cooperated in blocking the Nixon proposal because they felt a better bill could be passed in the 92nd Congress.

In the 91st Congress, the Leadership Conference did not take a position on either the Administration or the Mondale bill. However, on March 23, 1971, the Executive Committee of the Leadership Conference adopted a resolution commending the President for raising and supporting the concept of financial assistance for school desegregation, and supporting in principle the Mondale bill, which had been reintroduced in this Congress.

The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, with bipartisan support, reported out a bill that combined features of both the Administration and Mondale bills. A short analysis of the Committee bill is enclosed. This bill is now on the floor of the Senate.

Crippling Amendments Expected

S. 1557 keeps enough of the Mondale bill's provisions to be within the scope of the Executive Committee's resolution. It is worthy of our support. However, as often happens with a bill of this kind, attempts will be made to weaken it.

PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS

ACTORS EQUITY
AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH
ALPHA KAPPA ALPHA SORORITY, INC.
ALPHA PHI ALPHA FRATERNITY, INC.
AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA
AMALGAMATED MEAT CUTTERS & BUTCHER WORKMEN
AMERICAN BAPTIST CONVENTION — DIVISION OF SOCIAL CONCERN
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION
AMERICAN ETHICAL UNION
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR — CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE COUNTY & MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF TEACHERS
AMERICAN GI FORUM
AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
AMERICAN JEWISH CONGRESS
AMERICAN NEWSPAPER GUILD
AMERICAN VETERANS COMMITTEE
AMERICANS FOR DEMOCRATIC ACTION
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
A. PHILIP RANDOLPH INSTITUTE
B'NAI B'RITH WOMEN
BROTHERHOOD OF SLEEPING CAR PORTERS
CHRISTIAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
CHURCH OF THE BRETHREN - BRETHREN SERVICE COMMISSION CHURCH WOMEN UNITED CITIZENS LOBBY FOR FREEDOM & FAIR PLAY
COMMITTEE FOR COMMUNITY AFFAIRS
CONGRESS OF RACIAL EQUALITY
DELTA SIGMA THETA SORORITY
EPISCOPAL CHURCH—DIVISION OF CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP
FRANCISCAN SOCIAL ACTION TEAM
FRIENDS COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL LEGISLATION
FRONTIERS INTERNATIONAL
HADASSAH
HOTEL AND RESTAURANT EMPLOYEES AND BARTENDERS INTERNATIONAL UNION
IMPROVED BENEVOLENT & PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS OF THE WORLD
INDUSTRIAL UNION DEPARTMENT — AFL-CIO
INTERNATIONAL LADIES GARMENT WORKERS' UNION OF AMERICA
INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL RADIO & MACHINE WORKERS
IOTA PHI LAMBDA SORORITY, INC.
JAPANESE AMERICAN CITIZENS LEAGUE
JEWISH LABOR COMMITTEE
JEWISH WAR VETERANS
KAPPA ALPHA PSI FRATERNITY
LEAGUE FOR INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY
LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES
LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA — BOARD OF SOCIAL MINISTRY
LUTHERAN HUMAN RELATIONS ASSOCIATION
MEDICAL COMMITTEE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS
NATIONAL AFRO-AMERICAN LABOR COUNCIL
NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF POSTAL & FEDERAL EMPLOYEES
NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF POSTAL & FEDERAL EMPLOYEES — NATIONAL WOMEN'S AUXILIARY
NATIONAL ASSEMBLY FOR SOCIAL POLICY & DEVELOPMENT, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGE WOMEN
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLORED WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MARKET DEVELOPERS
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF NEGRO BUSINESS & PROFESSIONAL WOMEN'S CLUBS, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REAL ESTATE BROKERS, INC.
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SOCIAL WORKERS
NATIONAL BAPTIST CONVENTION, U. S. A.
NATIONAL BAR ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL BEAUTY CULTURISTS' LEAGUE, INC.
NATIONAL CATHOLIC CONFERENCE FOR INTERRACIAL JUSTICE
NATIONAL CATHOLIC SOCIAL ACTION CONFERENCE
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC MEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC WOMEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES—DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL JUSTICE
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF NEGRO WOMEN
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF PUERTO RICAN VOLUNTEERS, INC.
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS, INC.
NATIONAL DENTAL ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL FARMERS UNION
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF SETTLEMENTS & NEIGHBORHOOD CENTERS
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF TEMPLE SISTERHOODS
NATIONAL JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL
NATIONAL JEWISH WELFARE BOARD
NATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION
NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR MEXICAN-AMERICAN SERVICES
NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN
NATIONAL RURAL HOUSING COALITION
NATIONAL SHARECROPPERS FUND
NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
OIL, CHEMICAL & ATOMIC WORKERS INTERNATIONAL UNION
OMEGA PSI PHI FRATERNITY, INC.
PHI BETA SIGMA FRATERNITY, INC.
PHI DELTA KAPPA SORORITY
PIONEER WOMEN, AMERICAN AFFAIRS
POALE ZION
PRESBYTERIAN INTERRACIAL COUNCIL
RETAIL CLERKS INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION
RETAIL, WHOLESALE & DEPARTMENT STORE UNION
SCHOLARSHIP, EDUCATION & DEFENSE FUND FOR RACIAL EQUALITY, INC.
SOUTHERN BEAUTY CONGRESS, INC.
SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE
TEXTILE WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA
TRANSPORT WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA
UNION OF AMERICAN HEBREW CONGREGATIONS
UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST ASSOCIATION
UNITARIAN UNIVERSALIST WOMEN'S FEDERATION
UNITED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS OF AMERICA
UNITED CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY
UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST — COMMITTEE FOR RACIAL JUSTICE NOW
UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST — COUNCIL FOR CHRISTIAN SOCIAL ACTION UNITED FARM WORKERS ORGANIZING COMMITTEE
UNITED HEBREW TRADES
UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH — COMMISSION ON RELIGION & RACE
UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH — OFFICE OF CHURCH & SOCIETY
UNITED RUBBER WORKERS
U. S. CATHOLIC CONFERENCE — DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT
UNITED STATES NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION
UNITED STATES YOUTH COUNCIL
UNITED STEELWORKERS OF AMERICA
UNITED SYNAGOGUE OF AMERICA
WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE & FREEDOM
WORKERS DEFENSE LEAGUE
WORKMEN'S CIRCLE
YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, NATIONAL BOARD
YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF THE USA, NATIONAL BOARD
ZETA PHI BETA SORORITY

Senator Stennis (D., Miss.) has already announced he will try to add to the bill the "Stennis amendments" of the last Congress. Under the guise of requiring that desegregation policies "be applied uniformly in all regions of the United States," these provisions would block desegregation anywhere.

Senator Ervin (D., N.C.) plans to introduce a series of amendments that can also be expected to hinder enforcement. We also anticipate an amendment to strike the valuable section of the bill that would allocate funds for reimbursing attorneys' fees to those who bring successful school desegregation suits.

We oppose all these amendments.

What You Can Do

We ask each organization to contact all the Senators it can and urge them to support S. 1557 without crippling amendments.

TO STRENGTHEN THE EEOC

H. R. 1746 (Hawkins, D., Calif.) would amend and strengthen Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by giving the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission authority to enforce its findings by issuing cease and desist orders, by extending coverage to state and local governmental employment and to all private employers of eight or more workers and by transferring to the EEOC the equal employment functions of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, the Department of Justice and the Civil Service Commission. The Leadership Conference supports this bill and has testified in support of it.

What Needs To Be Done

The bill has been reported out of the subcommittee without substantial change. It will soon be considered by the full House Committee on Education and Labor. Please wire or write members of the Committee urging them to report the bill out without amendment. The members of the Committee are:

Democrats	Republicans
Carl D. Perkins (D Ky.), Chairman
Edith Green (Ore.)	Albert H. Quie (Minn.)
Frank Thompson Jr. (N.J.)	John M. Ashbrook (Ohio)
John H. Dent (Pa.)	Alphonzo Bell (Calif.)
Roman C. Pucinski (Ill.)	Ogden R. Reid (N.Y.)
Dominick V. Daniels (N.J.)	John N. Erlenborn (Ill.)
John Brademas (Ind.)	John Dellenback (Ore.)
James G. O'Hara (Mich.)	Marvin L. Esch (Mich.)
Augustus F. Hawkins (Calif.)	Edwin D. Eshleman (Pa.)
William D. Ford (Mich.)	William A. Steiger (Wis.)
Patsy T. Mink (Hawaii)	Earl F. Landgrebe (Ind.)
James H. Scheuer (N.Y.)	Orval Hansen (Idaho)
Lloyd Meeds (Wash.)	Earl B. Ruth (N.C.)
Phillip Burton (Calif.)	Edwin B. Forsythe (N.J.)
Joseph M. Gaydos (Pa.)	Victor V. Veysey (Calif.)
William (Bill) Clay (Mo.)	Jack F. Kemp (N.Y.)
Shirley Chisholm (N.Y.)	Peter A. Peyser (N.Y.)
Mario Biaggi (N.Y.)
Ella T. Grasso (Conn.)
Louise Day Hicks (Mass.)
Romano L. Mazzoli (Ky.)
Herman Badillo (N.Y.)

SUMMARY OF

EMERGENCY SCHOOL AID AND QUALITY INTEGRATED EDUCATION ACT OF 1971

(S. 1557)

1. Authorization

$500 million for the period ending June 30, 1972 and $1 billion for Fiscal Year 1973.

2. Allocation of Funds ($1,500,000,000)

	% of Total Funds	Approximate Amount
Funds apportioned to States for programs to establish and maintain quality integrated schools, aid to desegregation and eliminate reduce and prevent minority group isolation	68%	1,020,000,000
Metropolitan area programs for cooperative integrated schools, education parks and planning for the elimination of minority group isolation	15%	225,000,000
Commissioner's discretionary fund	9%	135,000,000
Children's educational television	3%	45,000,000
Bi-lingual-bi-cultural programs	3%	45,000,000
Attorneys' fees in successful litigation to bring about compliance with Federal education law	1%	15,000,000
Evaluation of programs	1%	15,000,000

3. State Apportionment

Funds are apportioned among the states on the basis of the number of minority group children enrolled in each state's public schools, except that no state will receive less than $100,000.

4. School District Eligibility

To be eligible, a local education agency must adopt a comprehensive districtwide plan for the elimination of minority group isolation to the maximum extent possible in all its schools. It must also establish or maintain at least one stable, quality, integrated school which contains a substantial proportion of children from educationally advantaged backgrounds, which is substantially representative of the minority group and non-minority group student population of the school district, and which has an integrated faculty.

5. Financial Assistance to School Districts

If a school district has met these conditions for eligiblity it may then receive funds to implement plans for a variety of programs designed to end minority group isolation.

Financial assistance must include funding for the establishment or maintainance of one or more stable, quality integrated schools at a sufficient level as to hold promise of making those schools successful.

A school district may also receive funds to implement court-ordered and Title VI desegregatian plans; and to implement voluntary plans for the elimination of minority group isolation in all schools; for the elimination or reduction of minority group isolation in one or more schools; or to prevent minority group isolation from occurring in schools containing between 20% and 60% minority group children.

6. Authorized Activities:

Funds would be provided for the following activities in integrated schools:

(1) New curricula and instructional methods to support a program of integrated instruction, including instruction in language and cultural heritage of minority groups;

(2) Remedial services;

(3) Guidance and counseling services designed to promote mutual understanding between minority group and non-minority group parents, students, and teachers;

(4) Administrative and auxiliary services;

(5) Community activities including public information efforts;

(6) Recruiting, hiring and training teacher aides with preference given to parents;

(7) In-service teacher training;

(8) Planning, evaluation and dissemination of information;

(9) Minor alteration and remodeling limited to 10% of a grant.

7. Programs in Minority Group Isolation

Of the funds allocated to each State, 22% (15% of the funds under the entire Act) are reserved for promising pilot programs in racially or ethnically isolated schools. Districts are eligible for these funds only if they contain over 50% minority students, or 15,000 minority group students.

8. Community Groups

15% of the funds allocated to each state (10% of the total funds under the bill) are reserved for funding private non-profit groups for programs and projects to promote equality of educational opportunity through: encouraging the participation of parents, students and teachers in the design and implementation of educational planning; providing services which will enable parents to become effective participants in the education process; conducting school-related activities to reinforce student growth and achievement; or improving communications among the school, minority and non-minority parents, students and teachers.

9. Special Programs and Projects

(a) Attorneys' Fees
One percent of the funds authorized are reserved to reimburse attorneys' fees and costs not otherwise reimbursed in successful lawsuits pertaining to elementary and secondary education under this Act, Title VI, the 14th Amendment and Title I of ESEA.

(b) Children's Television

Three percent of the funds authorized are earmarked for integrated children's television programs. The bill authorizes grants to not more than ten private non-profit organizations. It provides that programs must be made available for transmission free of charge and shall not be transmitted under commercial sponsorship. The bill requires that members of minority groups be employed in responsible positions, that grantees utilize modern television techniques and adopt effective procedures for evaluation.

(c) Bilingual-Bicultural Programs

Three percent of the funds are reserved for a program to meet the special educational needs of children from environments in which a dominant language is other than English who, because of language and cultural barriers, do not receive equality of educational opportunity.

The bill provides grants to local educational agencies eligible under the Act or to private nonprofit groups in cooperation with such local educational agencies, for the development and implementation of curricula which address the needs of these children to develop skills in English and in the other language spoken in the home, and to meet the needs of all children to understand the history and cultural background of language minorities.

Committees composed of parents, teachers, school officials and interested persons (at least half the members must be parents and at least half must be members of the minority group or groups served) are to participate in program design and implementation.

(d) Metropolitan Area Programs

Fifteen percent of the authorized funds are reserved for metropolitan area projects including:

(1) the construction of two integrated education parks;

(2) grants to metropolitan area school districts for the joint development of plans to eliminate minority group isolation in all schools in the area; and

(3) funds for suburban school districts with low concentrations of minority group students to establish, through cooperation with urban school districts, integrated schools with student bodies of which a substantial proportion are children from educationally advantaged backgrounds and which contain a proportion of minority group students equal to one-half the proportion of minority group students in the standard metropolitan statistical area.

(e) The Commissioner's Discretionary Fund
Ten percent of the funds appropriated are reserved for the Commissioner to allocate as he sees fit among the various activities authorized in the Act.

(f) Evaluation
One percent of the funds appropriated are reserved for evaluation.

10. Safeguards

The bill prohibits funding districts which, after enactment (or, in the case of ESAP - funded districts, after enactment of the Emergency School Assistance Appropriation (August 18, 1970) have engaged in the following practices:

(a) Aid to segregated private academies;

(b) Disproportionate demotion or dismissal of minority group teachers in conjunction with desegregation or the establishment of an integrated school:

(c) Separation of minority group and nonminority group children within classes for a substantial portion of the school day in conjunction with desegregation or the establishment of an integrated school;

(d) Limiting participation of minority group children in extra-curricular activities, or limiting extra-curricular activities in order to avoid participation of minority group children, or other discrimination among children on the basis of race, color or national origin.

Waiver

Districts may receive a waiver for violations. However, districts which committed violations while funded under the $75 million ESAP program must submit applications of special merit. The Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the House Committee on Education and Labor must be given notice of intention to grant waiver. No waiver may be granted until 30 days after receipt of the notice by the appropriate Chairmen.

11. Community Participation

(a) All documents pertinent to the application must be made open to the public by HEW and the school district.

(b) Applications must be developed through a process of open hearings, and with the participation of a committee composed of parents, teachers and students of which at least half the members are parents and at least half the members are from minority groups.

(c) Applications would require approval by the committee, but absent approval, committee objections would be appended to the application and the Commissioner of Education would decide.

12. Priorities

The bill requires that first priority be given to school district applications which place the largest numbers and proportions of minority group students in integrated schools, and that second priority be given to applications which decrease and prevent minority group isolation to the greatest extent.

13. National Advisory Council

The bill would establish a National Advisory Council on Equality of Educational Opportunity consisting of 15 members at least half of whom must be members of minority groups, which must report to the Congress on the operation of the program by December 1, 1973.

Wash Trip

FINAL NOTICE

LOCAL 189 MEETS ON APRIL 28

1:00 - 5:00 P.M.

MANGER - HAMILTON HOTEL
14th & K STREETS N. W.
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20005
(202) 347-2580

APR 26 1971

TOPIC: LABOR-UNIVERSITY ALLIANCE - About 3:00 P.M.

SPEAKER: DAVID IFSHIN, PRESIDENT
NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION

PLUS - OTHER INVITED LABOR AND UNIVERSITY GUESTS

ALSO: NORMAL BUSINESS MEETING

- NOMINATION OF OFFICERS
- JOB SECURITY DISCUSSION
- INDOCHINA RESOLUTION
- NOMINATION OF CONVENTION DELEGATES

* *

NOTE: The ULEA program begins with a reception (cash bar) at 6:00 P.M. on Wednesday evening and continues until 12:30 P.M. on Friday, April 30. The $15.00 registration fee includes Wednesday dinner and Thursday lunch.

Work Cmp 4/29

CHANGING EDUCATION

PUBLISHED BIMONTHLY AS A SUPPLEMENT TO THE AMERICAN TEACHER

ASSESSING THE ALTERNATIVES: CE's contributors look at this year's educational panaceas, including behavioral objectivism and its spinoffs—vouchers, performance contracts, and the Clark reading plan. Also, the Nixon administration's educational-finance alternatives are dissected in a background paper prepared by John Sessions and the AFL-CIO education department.

KENNETH CLARK'S READING PLAN: WHAT DO YOU WANT, GOOD GRAMMAR, OR GOOD TASTE?/Martin Engel/CE-2

THE TEACHER AS TRAVEL AGENT/John Holt/CE-4

MARRIAGE AMERICAN STYLE/Milton Schwebel/CE-6

TALE OF A PERFORMANCE CONTRACT (A FIRST-HAND REPORT FROM GARY)/Minnie Perrin Berson/CE-8

PERFORMANCE CONTRACTS, TESTS, AND MEASUREMENT/E. Gary Joselyn/CE-10

WHAT'S WRONG WITH VOUCHERS?/Albert Shanker/CE-12

THE EDUCATIONAL-FINANCE ALTERNATIVES OF THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION/AFL-CIO Education Department/CE-13

BOOKS AND FILMS/two new films on urban-school problems; and reviews of new books/CE-15

ASSESSING THE ALTERNATIVES

KENNETH CLARK'S READING PLAN: WHAT DO YOU WANT, GOOD GRAMMAR, OR GOOD TASTE?

By MARTIN ENGEL

The issue you hear so much about nowadays is reading. How can reading skills be taught? How can reading ability be measured? Do tests really indicate what a child knows or can do? Is reading the real issue in the schools? More and more educators are asking such questions seriously.

For many of the recent reformers in education, reading is a symptom, not a cause. They see it as the consequence of having a curious, challenged mind. They see it as the consequence of having learned that learning is pleasurable. They see it as the consequence of a rich, conversational, warm, personal learning environment in which children speak to each other freely and frequently, are read to with enthusiasm, and are not criticized or corrected constantly for mistakes. George Dennison, in "The Lives Of Children," states the whole issue of reading in these terms:

> Jose's reading problem is Jose. Or to put it another way, there is no such thing as a reading problem. Jose hates books, schools, teachers, and among a hundred other insufficiencies—all of a piece—he cannot read. Is this a reading problem?
>
> A reading problem, in short, is not a fact of life, but fact of school administration. It does not describe Jose, but describes the action performed by the school, i.e., the action of ignoring everything about Jose except his response to printed letters.

A new and controversial figure in education circles, Dr. Kenneth Clark won endorsement last fall for a major school-system redesign in Washington, D.C., in which reading and math skills are the only thing that really matters.

He states that not only does ". . . success in math and oral and written communication depend upon (reading). . ." but subsequent academic achievement or excellence cannot be attained if the child ". . . is permitted to be deficient in the reading skills of word recognition and reading comprehension (p. 26, Clark Report)." Clark's research organization, Metropolitan Applied Research Center, Inc. (MARC) was retained by the Washington, D.C., school board to develop a design for improving the failing academic record in reading and math of the nearly all-black school system. His proposal was submitted to the school board July 2 and approved July 6.

Clark attributes exclusive central causality to reading and math. He points to programs ". . . (which) have failed to bring about any measurable sustained improvement in the educational achievement of lower-status children in the basic academic skills of reading and mathematics, without which further learning is impossible (boldface added)." Such a strict interpretation of learning identifies Clark's allegiance to behavioral psychology. Perhaps the most dramatic contrast between his definition of learning and that of the humanistic school reformers may be noted in Paul Goodman's observation that: "Up to age 12 there is no point to formal subjects or a prearranged curriculum. With guidance, whatever a child experiences is educational (boldface added)."

Behavioral psychologists like Clark believe that certain human behaviors, such as reading, should be isolated, objectively measured and manipulated—that is, improved. They see learning as training, conditioning, molding and shaping, adding skills and knowledge piece by piece, like an assembly-line.

A rejection of the academic bias that argues for reading as central and dominant to the learning process is by no means new. Critics have for some time pointed out that learning is continual discovery within the total experience of every living moment and that the schools, with their stress upon the "head" subjects and skills, the abstractions of reading and symbol manipulation, must stop pretending to have a monopoly upon learning. In 1902, Jane Addams of Hull House said:

> We are impatient with the schools which lay all stress on reading and writing, suspecting them to rest upon the assumption that the ordinary experience of life is worth little, and that all knowledge and interest must be brought to the children through the medium of books. Such an assumption fails to give the child any clue to the life about him, or in any power to usefully or intelligently connect himself with it.

The most fundamental issue at the heart of the Clark design concerns the impact of behavioral psychology upon education. What are the limitations of scientific method in education? What services are the schools obliged to offer, and how? Is a youngster's education analogous to boot camp or industrial manufacturing? What are the implicit values in constructing programs, systems, sequences, curricula, evaluative procedures, etc., on the basis of the numerical abstractions of test scores? Where, in all this, is the living, breathing, individual child?

Perhaps the best clue to Clark's orientation may be derived from a random survey of the imagery of his language drawn from the first few pages of his report:

> . . . critical determinants of academic retardation . . . mobilization of the necessary resources to raise the efficiency . . . a normal distribution curve of achievement . . . rate of learning . . . can be positively or negatively manipulated . . . systematic research findings . . . systematic and specifically defined sequentially developed curricula . . . methods of evaluation and accountability in determining the pace of change and efficiency in seeking objectives . . . self-implementing . . . demonstrate, through frequent and periodic and objective evalution . . . specific research into effective programs . . . that effectiveness must be defined and ensured . . . the specific components . . . complex systems function . . . to modify, mobilize, and reorganize all of the components of that system . . . empirical evidence . . . control rate of learning . . . by a modification . . . permitted to be deficient . . . geared to increasing competence . . . etc.

This is the language of operant conditioning, of behavior modification, of mind manipulation. It is the language of behavioral psychology as well as of educational management, administration, and indusdustry. Mechanistic and manipulative, the proponents of behavioral and applied psychology have dominated the education field for some time. It is necessary for us to remind ourselves of the conceptual base of this position. The leading behaviorist, B. F. Skinner, has said: "A scientific conception of human behavior dictates one practice, a philosophy of personal freedom another . . . (B. F. Skinner, "Science and Human Behavior," 1953)." Elsewhere in the same book, Skinner strikes at the very heart of behavioral science: "The hypothesis that man is not free is essential to the application of scientific method to the study of human behavior."

The other side of the educational coin is represented by the movement toward "free" schools, the British integrated-day, open-classroom, experiential learning as grounded in the theories of Pestalozzi and Froebel, John Dewey, the play-learning of Montessori and Piaget, and the radical-school-reform movement of Paul Goodman, John Holt, George Dennison, and a host of others. They focus primarily upon the process of learning and growth. This "school" of education believes that objective data about what individuals or groups can be taught or have learned cannot be obtained with any degree of certitude or meaningful validity; that the statistics of student performance, including the I.Q. and the "standardized" reading tests are subject to far too many variables, such as the expectations of the testers and the anxieties of test taking itself.

Clark, on the other hand, supports the notion of pre-structuring and imposing a high degree of control upon the educational process. He calls for: ". . . the pattern of essential ingredients of an effective educational program — systematic and specifically defined sequentially developed curricula . . . (p. 17)." For Clark, the curriculum is defined ". . . as the substance or content of what a child is expected to learn (p. 25, boldface added)." Note that it excludes what he does or wants to learn. The word curriculum (originally the circular Roman racetrack) has come to mean only the adult-intentioned path prescribed for the learner. Clark believes that learning takes place only if and when that learning is arranged through outside intervention and control. He says: ". . . normal children tend to learn . . . what they are expected to

Martin Engel is project officer for the National Demonstration Center in Early Childhood Education of the U.S. Office of Education. His children attend public schools in the District of Columbia.

The alternative reading proposal by behavioral psychologist Kenneth Clark hit Washington, D.C., schools like a bombshell last fall. Adopted by the school board without consultation of teachers or parents, the controversial plan was fought by the union, opposed by many parent groups, and questioned by new superintendent Hugh Scott. Its purpose was to set a "reading mobilization" year in D.C. schools, eventually tying teacher pay to student scores on standardized tests. Clark has now resigned as a paid consultant to the D.C. school board. The future of the plan in Washington is in doubt.

Are schools "analogous to boot camp?" "What are the implicit values in constructing programs . . . on the basis of . . . test scores? Where, in all this, is the living, breathing, individual child?"

learn . . . taught to learn . . . it is possible to control the rate of learning . . . upward or downward, by a modification . . . of the curriculum (p. 25, boldface added)." Clark's intellectual heritage becomes evident when setting the words of the early behaviorist John B. Watson alongside of his:

> . . . give me the baby and my world to bring it up in and I'll make it crawl and walk; I'll make it climb and use its hands in constructing buildings of stone or wood; I'll make it a thief, a gunman, or a dope fiend. The possibility of shaping in any direction is almost endless.

Unlike Clark, the open-classroom exponents contend that reading is not the basic learning skill, but rather that thinking and feeling are. Thinking develops through the willing, even enthusiastic, immersion in participatory experience and involves not only the eyes and mind, but the whole body. Reading, they suggest, while a highly desirable and essential skill, is relevant and readily attainable only to the degree that: 1) there is a self-determined need and desire for reading, and 2) that there is a perceptual and conceptual base for dealing with the symbols—the words and thoughts of written language. Clark, in his report, states: "In early childhood programs, the focus must be on cognitive skills (p. 27)." In the dismembering analysis of scientific educationism, cognition is set apart and above the more vague and "messy" areas of human feeling. Dr. Alexander Lowen, a psychiatrist very concerned with the human potential movement, articulates the humanistic attitude about learning, though not to the exclusion of knowledge or skills acquisition:

> . . . Of the two ingredients in behavior, feeling is more important than knowledge. But our whole educational system is geared to knowledge and the denial of feeling. My argument is that an ego dissociated from the body is weak and vulnerable, and knowledge divorced from feeling is empty and meaningless. An education that is to be effective in preparing a child for life must take into account his emotional as well as his mental development. It must concern itself with his body as well as his mind, with feelings as much as with knowledge. The school should recognize that spontaneity and pleasure are as important as productivity and achievement.

Another of the basic beliefs of the behavioral psychologists and educators is the law of causality. For each stimulus there is an appropriate response. Thus, teaching is the stimulus, learning is the response. Behaviorism includes a deep faith in the belief that learning is the direct consequence of teaching.

The advocates of the "free" schools believe that learning and growth are organic, whole, complex, and interactive. They cannot be achieved in a compartmentalized way, subject by subject, skill by skill. These advocates believe that learning is best achieved through trial and error, through probing, imitating, exploring, and experimenting. Students learn by testing for themselves the correspondence between the world they perceive and conceive and the language for communicating it. They believe that learning does not depend upon teaching and certainly does not depend upon prepackaged curriculum programs that are structured and imposed upon whole groups of youngsters. Rather, they feel, learning is the result of personal interaction with peers, adults, and the experiential world.

Clark argues that teaching is essential for all but those children of exceptional and superior intelligence. He puts it this way: "While it is possible for children of exceptional and superior intelligence to take the initiative in determining their own rapid rate of academic learning, the average child requires skilled, compassionate, and stimulating teaching in order to reach or approach and fulfill his maximum academic potential (p. 16, boldface added)." Elsewhere, he states: "A normal child will learn if he is properly stimulated and taught (p. 15, boldface added)." The metaphor frequently used to describe this belief is that children are empty vessels which teachers must fill, or clay that they must mold.

One of the most important distinctions in the two conceptions of education is the attitude toward the Puritan work-ethic and the notion of "delayed gratification." Clark would contend that while learning may be arduous and requires the discomfort of constant discipline and control, the rewards for learning are attainable at the end of the academic rainbow. Clark affirms this utilitarian and practical dimension of learning frequently. He states that the basic academic skills, by which he means only reading, oral and written communication (in proper, not ghetto English), and mathematics, are ". . . necessary for a constructive, competitive, and contributory role in the economy and the society as a whole (p. 26)." Clark's program derives its justification in large part from his perception of his milieu. He speaks frequently of ". . . a highly developed scientific and technologically dominated society . . . a demanding technological society . . . complex industrialized society . . ." And again: "This persistent educational default [of functional illiterates] has become a major dilemma for industry and at all levels of government (p. 2)." The role of the schools is purely vocational training because academic skills are the requisite for economic survival. The mechanistic educational philosophy of behaviorism is ideally suited for rendering the school system a microcosm of Clark's technocratic and competitive world. For him, the value of learning is one of acquiring skills in order to join and perpetuate the labor force of our Brave New World.

The advocates of humanistic learning endorse the learning process in and for itself. Mary Brown and Norman Precious, two teachers in the British open schools, say:

> A final thought to keep in mind is that we are not educating children only for their future. Education is in and for the present. Each day is an alive and exciting day in its own right, not just a preparation for some future called adulthood and earning a living, and so each child's day needs to be made a whole, and the whole of that day used.

That learning is not its own reward is made quite explicit by Clark. He strongly favors competition as a device for increasing student performance. Furthermore, he states: "A system that would tie academic success to concrete rewards such as certificates, medals, plaques, and books should be developed, dramatically and attractively publicized, and instituted throughout the public schools as soon as possible (p. 62)." With both competition and external rewards, the economic and industrial world and its values are made manifest, as is the concept that Ends justify Means. It also means that there can be no success, no academic achievement unless it is recognized by someone else. The lesson is clear. Children will learn to perform for the judgment, measurement, and reward of others, rather than themselves.

Clark sees competition as an important external stimulus in the raising of achievement levels in reading and math skills. He states, in his report: "In the elementary and middle grades, a well-planned system of collective competition, of competition for class prizes in reading, spelling, and quality of class newspapers may well be a most important component for raising the quality of modern public-school education (p. 63)."

Clark believes in the proverbial whip and the carrot. The carrot is the reward for performing well. It is dangled in front of the student in order to motivate him to learn. However, in that process the learning he does is devalued. He sees it only as a commodity which is convertible into what adults identify as the desirable goods, the medals, plaques, etc. The whip is the competition, the coercive pressure which pits student against student on publicly posted test scores. In behaviorism, the terms for such stimuli are "positive and negative reinforcement." In "The Conspiracy against Childhood," Eda J. LeShan describes the impact of competition and pressure upon young children:

> It appears that in all our efforts to provide "advantages" we have actually produced the busiest, most competitive, highly pressured, and over-organized generation of youngsters in our history—and possibly the unhappiest. We seem hell-bent on eliminating much of childhood.

To state the difference summarily, the behaviorists endorse the objectivity of the group while the humanistic educators believe in the subjectivity of the individual. The behaviorists would subscribe to the notion: "The whole is no more than the sum of the parts," while the humanists would say that ". . . the whole is greater than the sum of the parts." The behaviorists, like Dr. Clark, believe in products, like test data or measurable success. The humanists believe in each moment of the process. They would say that the process is the product, that learning is a life-long process with no determinate goals or objectives for everyone beyond satisfaction, happiness, self-realization, dignity, and human worth. The Swiss psychologist Jean Piaget also identifies educational goals, but in a direction 180 degrees away from Clark: "The goal of education is not to increase the amount of knowledge but to create possibilities for a child to invent and discover, to create men who are capable of doing new things." In other words, the old commercial that advertised travel by "getting there is half the fun" is now to be understood as being the whole trip. As Gertrude Stein once said: "And when you get there, there is no there, there."

Even to arrive at those desirable outcomes which Clark identifies in his report calls for a methodology quite contrary to the ones he endorses. Associate Commissioner Don Davies of the USOE writes:

> Unless school personnel themselves understand that learning should be enjoyable instead of frustrating, the educational climate is not likely to change . . . It means taking the competition, the fear, and the pain out of our learning . . . The final test should not be something you write for two hours in a room, but how you behave, think, feel, and perform . . . The climate and environment of our educational institutions is, in general, bleak and inhibiting when it should be free and stimulating.

There is a hidden agenda among those who endorse, support, and concur with behavioral psychology, systematic education, and, in Washington, D.C., with the Clark design. This hidden agenda has nothing to do with the rhetoric of raising the performance levels of the underachievers. The real reason for the preference, among professional educators and parents, of an orderly, well-structured, highly controlled educational program was beautifully expressed by Dr. James L. Hymes of the University of Maryland at a conference of the Play Schools Assn.:

> We really like children best only when they stop being children and become like us—adults. We don't like the noise youngsters make . . . We can't put up with their energy and we can't stand their messiness . . . what they want to know is often not at all what we want to teach them . . . Adults can't be bothered with what is childhood's best way of learning—through first-hand experience and through their own personal exploration. We seem more and more determined to get children who will sit, who will be quiet, who will produce . . . conform . . . give up childhood and become little adults.

There is little doubt that poverty and deprivation are unsatisfactory human conditions, that they exist far too plentifully, and that education is the key to the middle-class world of economic security. Yet, if education is to be the key to nothing other than economic security, it is the key to nothing. Consider the larger costs . . . and in total terms. What is the price of academic achievement? What are the rewards? Do the Ends ever justify the Means, as the behaviorists and Kenneth Clark intimate? Are there not other Means, which themselves are self-justifying and self-fulfilling, more moral and more humane—above all, more humane? Grant Beglarian, in the Music Educator's Journal, has written a most salient description of the schools, our values and aspirations for our children, and the real issue upon which Dr. Clark's design rests:

> Childhood is not a purgatory or a basic-training camp for the future hell or heaven of adulthood. Childhood has its own special beautiful qualities, which, unfortunately, are erased systematically beginning with the first hour of the first day of kindergarten. The possibility for creativity, for imagination, wonderment is methodically drilled out of the child by false regards for obedience, measurable answers, and standard responses to standard stimuli. And then the day comes when we congratulate ourselves for our educational efficiency and excellence by citing statistics that 96.2 percent of our high-school graduates enter colleges, as if entering college is a reward for 12 or 13 precious years robbed from our children's lives.

"The mechanistic educational philosophy of behaviorism" makes schools "a microcosm of Clark's technocratic and competitive world." Learning becomes "acquiring skills in order to join and perpetuate the labor force of our Brave New World."

By JOHN HOLT

Digested from an address to the 1971 convention of the Washington State Federation of Teachers

In one of my books, I tell of my first meeting with Silly Putty. I guess you remember this material, although you don't see much of it around anymore. I took a lump of it, squeezed it in my hands, flattened it out, stretched it, and pulled it apart. Then I threw it against the floor. My mental model told me that since it felt "squishy" in my hands, it would splatter on the floor; only it didn't. And for about a tenth of a second, the whole universe rocked around—until I did what all of us do when we adjust to a new and unexpected experience. There are two ways to deal with a new experience: one is to change your mental model so that the new experience fits in; the other is to deny the experience. Many people take the second course because it's easier.

I use this illustration to show how our mental model is set up for what surprises us. Someone who constantly is being unpleasantly surprised by events has a bad model. It's like someone being given a road map to get to a friend's house, but the map doesn't correspond to the roads and he's constantly getting lost.

What I am going to try to illuminate for you is the fact that we experience our lives according to our mental models. Every time I have a new experience, my model grows outward to include a little piece of life that wasn't in it before, and I take away with me my recollection of this growth. And so it seems to me that learning can best be understood as a growth, an expansion outward of the world of the mental model of the learner. When we are tiny children, there is very little in our world—a few people, a few places, our own house, and a tiny trace of experience. Outside, even

John Holt is a leading critic of the educational system, and author of "Why Children Learn," "Why Children Fail," and other books. He has been a staunch defender of teacher unions.

THE TEACHER AS 'TRAVEL AGENT'

the world that we have just heard about is very small. To a very young child, the world that it has heard about but not experienced is even very much smaller than the world any of us has experienced. As the child grows, both of these worlds expand—the world of experience and the world of which he knows something; the world of possibilities, you might call it.

Learning is not something that someone can "do" to another. It is, and must be, active—a positive act on the part of the learner. If you deny yourself new experiences, you will not grow. If you reject new experiences (like the bouncing Silly Putty), because they are new or uncomfortable, or don't fit your past mental model, you will not grow. So learning must be something that the learner decides to do, and does.

What follows from this is that learning always takes place with some risk. It means going out into a piece of territory where we haven't been before, and exploring. It's trying the unknown. Therefore, it always carries with it the possibility that this new experience, this new venture, may not work out as we hoped. We may not be able to cope with it; we may do badly; there is always this sense of risk or exposure. Therefore, to the extent that somebody is unwilling to take risks, to expose himself, to take the chance that something new may work out badly for him; to that extent, he's not going to be able to learn.

From here, something else follows very closely, and that is that our capacity to learn depends enormously on how we feel about this world of our experience, of our mental model, and ourselves. I have a certain notion of myself, as each of you has a notion about yourself. How we feel about the world and ourselves in it determines whether we are willing to expose ourselves to new experiences, to open ourselves to them, to embrace them—or whether we will defend and protect ourselves against them.

And so all the distinctions that we constantly hear made between what is sometimes called cognitive learning and affective learning (which I, being old-fashioned, prefer to call thinking and feeling) are distinctions in language only. Semantically, you can describe some sort of difference between the way you think about something and the way you feel about it; but, in fact, in experience, there is no distinction. They're one and the same.

Now, if the world has come to seem to you—as it does to me—a fascinating, peculiar, and interesting kind of place—even with the terrible things going on in it, to the extent that you feel capable of dealing with it and getting something out of experience in it, you will learn. But to the extent that you think of the world as essentially dangerous, threatening, unpredictable, a treacherous place, or if you think of yourself as stupid, incompetent, unable to cope, then you are going to defend yourself against new experience. You are not going to reach out to it, but you will reject it, and you will not be able to learn.

WHAT CAN A TEACHER DO?

Now to the world of the teacher. If it is the case that I cannot give someone else an experience, or make him grow, then what is it that a teacher can do to help others expand, grow, and learn? If our proper work is not to be a straw boss, cop, or judge, then what is it? The best answer that I've heard was coined, independently, by a couple of friends who say that the teacher is best understood as a travel agent, a metaphor that compares learning with taking a trip, or exploring, or doing something that you haven't done before.

Of course, you don't necessarily have to have a travel agent in order to travel, just as a lot of learning takes place that teachers don't make happen. But a travel agent can help, as can a teacher. When you go to a travel agent, though, he doesn't say, "You want to take a trip? Here's where you're going: one, two, three, four, five, six." The first thing he does is try to find out something about you—who I am, what I am, what kind of trip I want to take, what I'm looking for—scenery, native customs, cities, art galleries, night life, etc. He finds out what I'm after. Then he draws on his greater understanding of what is available out there. He pulls open a file drawer and he begins to take out lots of colored photos, folders, brochures, and shows them to me. Suppose he shows me a picture of the Alps. By doing so, he's not giving me a trip to the mountains, but he is bringing something into the world that I know about or, perhaps, didn't know about, and is illuminating it for me. He's making this world seem accessible to me. He is convincing me that if I want this experience, I can have it. He lays out various possibilities for trips and travels, and he makes them seem as interesting as he can, and as available. So, pretty soon, I find a trip that I want to take. Well, then he helps me with various details and arrangements, and off I go on my trip. He doesn't come with me; he doesn't have to take the trip. And when I come back, he doesn't give me a little test to make sure that I went where I said I was going, or that I saw what I said I was going to see. But he does care a lot that I shall have enjoyed the trip and that the advice he gave me shall have been good advice. Because, if I enjoyed the trip, and if I liked the things that he said I was going to like, then I'll want to take more trips. I'll very likely go back to him and say, "Hey, that last trip was marvelous. Suggest another . . ."

As teachers, we must be concerned with our students' interests; we must show faith in them and concern for their views of the world. We must have strength to illuminate for them new kinds of experiences, new trips which they may want to take. This interchange, of course, is not something that just happens in classrooms between persons called teachers and other persons called students. This is a universal part of human life; this is why we are all teachers and all learners. A successful teacher is one who helps someone want to reach out and gain experiences.

THE CONCEPT OF LEARNING

Another very important concept is that the learning of a child is interconnected; it's all in one piece. I think it was Whitehead who said that it is a terrible mistake to separate the skills of an activity from the activity itself. And this gives us a clue to the most complicated, subtle, abstract task that we ever mastered—learning to talk. It is an extraordinary feat to master, from scratch, the sounds that people around us are making, to discover that they convey meaning and that we should find out what they mean, and to learn how to make those incredibly complicated series of sounds. Just try to speak Japanese, for example, or even to imitate a friend's voice accurately. You can't do it. Yet, as infants, we all did it; we mastered this task. But we did not learn to speak by learning the skills of speech and then using the

A true teacher is one who can bridge the gap between cognitive and affective.

MARRIAGE AMERICAN STYLE

(Or Industry plus Education, with government the matchmaker; or How to hamstring the people's schools)

By MILTON SCHWEBEL

Excerpts from an address to a 1971 AFT-QuEST "Truth-&-Soul-in-Teaching" conference

The schools started getting more than a trickle of federal help in the early '60s. Less than 10 years have passed, and now an SOS has gone out to private industry to run the schools with performance contracts.

This administration has great faith in private industry. For example, A&P, on Jan. 5, reported that the Food and Drug Administration has turned to a research institute sponsored by grocery manufacturers to do a study to help the government decide what labeling regulations would best disclose the nutritional soundness of processed foods. As one critic noted, "This is a classic example of going to the fox to ask what the chickens are doing."

Yes, the government is the matchmaker, and it offers industry as the bridegroom. But then, look at the record of this groom: see how he has maintained the purity of our water, the safety of our mines, how he has used every conceivable device to discourage the organization of unions, pitting minorities against each other to break strikes, and so on. Industry is so successful in maintaining full employment, we are told—while running our resources into the ground—so now maybe it is about to do the same with our schools.

This is the bridegroom, private profit by name. Personally, he's okay. There is nothing inherently malicious about anyone in particular, just that the position of being in business for profit necessarily (ipso facto) leads one to make profit preeminent.

A LOOK OF INNOCENCE

Performance contracting is seductive. American industry has been remarkable in its accomplishments when the chips were down. Many of us remember the way industry and the American people rose to support such a surge as D-Day. The chips were down because the American people, unions, businessmen, almost everyone, supported the war effort. American know-how on the executive level makes for efficiency and concrete goal-achievement. In this respect, in connection with skill achievement, the industrial-educational efforts will probably show gains. This will be discussed later.

We should be aware of the great reshuffling of talent that is going on, and will go on to a greater extent as industry acquires its teachers. Where will the good ones come from? The public schools, most likely.

Then, there is the problem of competition versus cooperation. We shudder at the crassness of some of the external motivation used—the green stamps and pennies and the like. There is an emphasis on teacher outdoing teacher, student outdoing student.

The innocent look is that American know-how, in Horatio Alger fashion, will enter the fray and slay the dragon. After all, the robber barons built great industry, so why can't their descendants build great schools? It takes only the use of the computer, the installation of the teaching machine, and—but no, pardon that error, that was a decade ago. Now we have computer-assisted-instruction—the CAI—and the voucher plan. It all seems so democratic, so open to parental choice. All the parents of Harlem can send their children to Little Red School House, to Walden and Fieldston, to Horace Mann. But these schools are full-up now. Well, then, dozens more will have to be created, and the question is, who will establish them? Where will the teachers come from? Who will be admitted? Chances are, the answer to the last is, primarily middle-class children. Then, too, of course, the parochial schools will enjoy renewed life. Probably everyone will benefit, except the vast majority of the children, the schools, and the teachers—particularly the children, schools, and teachers in the urban centers.

The look of innocence is there, skills to speak. We learned to speak by speaking. We started the minute we were born with a cry. Then we expressed ourselves in gestures, showing our real feelings to real people, and getting real responses. We did not practice, we did not pretend, we did not drill, we didn't get ready now to do something later. We did it. Our speech was intimately, and inextricably, connected with all of our life, and we were helped to learn to speak by the fact that we were living surrounded by people whose speech is a part of their lives.

We make a terrible, terrible mistake in school when we start thinking that reading or mathematics or other subjects are isolated "skills" that we need to learn to do now so that later on we can do something else with them. We take learning away from life. This fragmentation of learning, of dividing learning up into little bits which haven't got anything to do with each other or anything else, which you only do for certain kinds of rewards, is exactly what we have had too much of in schools. We've divided human experience into academic disciplines and subjects and courses and assignments. So, we've already had too much of it, but this fragmenting process is going to be a thousand times worse if these behavioral-objective people get into the saddle, because they want to cut the wholeness of acute human experience down into these little, 10-minute or so, fragments.

The behavioral-objectivists are saying, in some of the places I've been, that anytime you do something in a class you should have some precisely stated and measurable objective that you can check up on—maybe even within the next hour—to make sure it's been done.

But this is inefficient, even though efficiency is the concept used to sell behavioral objectivism. Here is why: you are destroying the four-dimensional wholeness of experience and reality, the mental model, by turning it into one-dimensional words. Consider, for example, a street map of a city. One sheet of paper. What information is included on that map or available from it? Well, we can find out every possible way to get from any place in the city to any other place. But suppose we were to write down in behavioral-objective style, the Bereiter-Englemann-Skinner style, all the ways by which we could get from any point in the city to any other point. How long would it take? It would take us forever. It would take what the mathematicians call a transfinite number to describe the room needed to carry all this information around. So you see that, instead of memorizing all this information, we use maps which resemble the structure of the city and which are much more compressed and effective ways of carrying information than trying to separate it it into a lot of little discrete bits. It's why this Skinnerian notion of learning is so cumbersome and wasteful.

I suppose we could, theoretically, teach a child bit-by-bit, precisely stated, linear, one-step-at-a-time, objectives. I suppose we could teach a child as much as, let us say, he learns in the first three years of his life, but it would take us 700 years, at least. But this is the mechanistic model which, in the interests of measurement and evaluation and a neurotic quest for certainty, the behaviorists are trying to force on us.

Now, if we don't like this way of going at things, we are going to have to struggle for the right to be "travel agents" in our own classrooms, for the right to assist the learning of each child in whatever way we can, with our very imperfect knowledge, in whatever way seems best to us. I don't think we can begin to call ourselves professionals as long as we are in the position that others can tell us what textbook to use or even that we have to use a textbook, or how much time we have to spend on this subject or that or the other seven. Or even that we have to give a child a certain kind of a test, even if we happen to think that testing that child at that point might be very harmful to him. To get professional control of our own work, it will take a real struggle for self-determination.

Milton Schwebel is dean of the graduate school of education of Rutgers the State University, New Brunswick, N.J.

Performance contracting is the most-talked-about "educational alternative" of the year. With 150 contracts now in force, the USOE is talking about spending $1 million to aid more such projects this year.

but beneath that facade is just another of a long series of measures, as old as our nation, that frustrate the one and only agency for the formal education of the general population. We are consistently rational, if subtle, in the ways the development of public education is blocked.

How barren and sterile our schools? Ditto our society.

How constricted and authoritative our schools? Our society is, too.

How conservative and noncommittal the teaching profession, at least until the late '50s? Can we say this didn't reflect what society demanded?

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

One can get the real image of these new incursions upon public education only by seeing them in historical context, as only one in a long, long series of acts of omission and commission to prevent the growth of and weaken the schools (at the same time healthy forces were at work to strengthen them).

There will be other attempts to frustrate us. This is nothing new. In the 1820s, the formation of an organization "for the promotion of industry and of national education," WASP workers of the time, was fought bitterly as an attempt of the people in America to get good education for their children. It was fought as such measures have always been fought, as a measure which would not keep the poor in their place.

In 1877, the Committee of Ten, headed by President Eliot of Harvard, was very clear that secondary education was not to be free, not to be for all. "A high-school education would tend to make the poor unfit for their condition and discontented with their duties," a committee statement said. We hear the same thing now for higher education.

In the mid-'20s, Carl Brigham, a Princeton professor, wrote a book on the Army Alpha and Beta scores during World War I, and how the immigrants lowered the scores. He listed those immigrants who were lowering our national standards, and the list is of almost every European nation other than England, Holland, and France.

The concept of IQ served a similar purpose to the earlier barriers, denial of better teachers, a lower quality of education, poorer facilities, etc.

Most of the groups made it. Some took longer than others, but for reasons that are social, cultural, economic, not genetic or mystical.

THE BIND WE'RE IN

The reasons some groups never had a chance, is because others were getting theirs by standing on the shoulders of these. For example, blacks found every conceivable obstacle in their paths. In New Haven, in the middle of the last century, a woman teaching blacks had her schoolhouse burned down, and she was convicted of a criminal act. Black clergymen wrote the judge praising him for punishing such impudence.

Today, blacks are saying what I'd say if I were black: "I'm not waiting around anymore." And even if it takes a couple of generations to make the full leap, the action now has got to be fast and comprehensive. so it doesn't take more than that.

And the same time the blacks are saying that, some whites are making it even more difficult for them. It looks as if the performance contracts and the voucher plan were intended to serve two diametrically opposed needs: to try to satisfy the clamor of one category of groups by proposing a panacea for good education, and at the same time to enable another group to escape to other schools.

Now, to solve the problem, you've got to know exactly what the problem is. I don't think the question is whether or not performance contracting is good, or even how to oppose it (that is a tactical question), rather, that the problem is the old American one, as American as apple pie and violence, namely, how to help deprived groups get what they're demanding and what they're going to get in the long run.

WHAT DO WE DO ABOUT IT?

Certainly we don't solve our problems by beating our breasts, mea culpa.

Or by putting first and foremost technical equipment in the schools.

What we must put first and foremost is an unshakable alliance with those whose children are in our schools. Oh, we can fight performance contracting and voucher systems and all the rest, but if all we do is fight other people's ideas, misguided though they might be, to change an intolerable situation, if that's all we do, we are unconsciously, in mood, unprofessional. And if those qualities are of no consequence, there's another reason for action: as long as we in public education do not act with vigor and intelligence, and do not bring about change, we'll be only open to attack and threat.

Educational accountability is about as new as sex, or at least about as new as education in any form. The first universities in Europe had their origins when students sought out and hired lecturers. At Bologna, for example, the masters were told what to lecture on, for how long, and so on, and they were paid only if they delivered what was contracted for. That's accountability. That was also student control.

The boards of education and the parents in our suburban areas expect the schools to deliver. A sizable proportion of students had better be admissible to college, and not a small proportion to the better colleges. That doesn't happen by chance, and the principal, guidance counselors, and teachers know it.

I said before that public education's strength depends upon an alliance between those who must have better education and us, the educators. It was an alliance like that between the workers and educational leaders such as Horace Mann that overcame the resistance of the rich in Massachusetts to full education in the 1840s. Such an alliance now is possible only as strong teacher organizations recognize that, certainly on the long haul, their destiny is tied to that of these groups of people. The way to win is by setting goals for achievement that are clear and concrete, and by being accountable for their achievement. Let the organization give evidence of their success: the AFT's More Effective School program is an excellent example.

I said earlier that the industrial enterprises will probably show some gains, because the objectives they have contracted for relate to skills. We in teacher education, with the best of intentions, have at times filled the heads of teachers with fuzzy, ambiguous, and sometimes contradictory notions about the intelligence and ability of children, and about how to teach them. The so-called educational engineers are laying claim to a most basic and elemental method of doing a job: if your goal is to teach a child the concept of addition, teach him, step by step, and don't give up until you find out how to help him climb each step. Let nothing stand in the way of reaching your objective. (That's very much the way, incidentally, that things happen in two countries that don't follow our style of education:

"The way to win is by setting goals for achievement that are clear and concrete, and by being accountable for their achievement . . . the AFT's More Effective Schools program is an excellent example."

Israel and the Soviet Union. Instead of testing kids to find out how "bright" or "dumb" they are, they use tests to help guide them over the steps of learning.)

Children need to master the 3 Rs. Their parents need to see them master the 3 Rs. We in education desperately need to see them master the 3 Rs. Private industry has no panacea. But if it can profit by the use of efficiency methods, it will do it, and I expect that it will buy up talented teachers and strict and efficient supervisors who will see to it that the children acquire the skills, so that they can show some successes.

But what industry can do, we can do better. We can, like industry, set clear and concrete objectives. But we can do more than industry. We can, and must, help children acquire those great human values of concern for self and others and for human dignity—values that are associated with the greatest traditions of the union movement.

The OEO issued a statement on performance contracts which states, among other things, "In effect, the techniques promise that for the first time, education will be able to promise 'equality of results.' " They claim that ways can be found to bring poor children up to the level of achievement of their nonpoor classmates. Is it to be believed that in 1970 a sane adult still believes in the panacea approach—one technique that will do it? In the meantime, while this experiment goes on, years are lost and we continue to foster the deception that there is an easy way out. We won't have to change housing, our cities, unemployment, and so on, to solve the problems of the schools. But the irony is that while money goes into this performance-contract venture, early-childhood-education programs and other educational budgets are suffering severe cuts.

The only good response to these threats is a positive one. Teachers must join forces with their allies, and their allies, as in the past, are the parents and the communities. There will be no substitute for that kind of alliance.

TALE OF A PERFORMANCE CONTRACT

(A first-hand report from Gary)

By MINNIE PERRIN BERSON

During the past year, performance contracting in education has proliferated all around the U.S. I decided recently to go to Gary, Ind., for a first-hand observation of performance-contract process.

GARY AND BRL

On Sept. 29, 1970, Gordon L. McAndrew, superintendent of schools, called a press conference[1] to announce a four-year $2.4-million performance contract with Behavioral Research Laboratories (BRL) of Palo Alto, Calif., for the purpose of converting the Banneker Elementary School into a nongraded curriculum center. The contract stipulates that BRL will receive an annual $800 for each of the 900-plus pupils at Banneker, with a refund to the school district for any child not achieving at or above national norms at the end of three years, as determined by an independent evaluator.[2]

Since Gary is just a three-hour trip from my home, I phoned the Banneker Curriculum Center to arrange for a visit, asking a seasoned school administrator to accompany me.[3] We were advised to come during the period from Dec. 16-18 to join an already scheduled tour.

Typical schoolmasters, we arrived early enough for an opportunity to chat with teachers and see the school open its business day. We were promptly advised, however, that the tour would not start for another hour and were ushered to a coffeemaker in the multipurpose room, to mark time.

When the rest of the visiting group arrived, we were all led into the office of Donald Kendrick, BRL's resident manager. Since Clarence L. Banford, Banneker's past principal and present "learning director," was not present, we directed all questions to Kendrick. The dialogue follows:[4]

DIALOGUE WITH THE RESIDENT MANAGER

Q: We would like to know something of the inservice training you did with the staff to prepare them for this program.

A: Retraining a staff is difficult in concepts and methodology. We say, throw away everything you've done, because it's not going to be useful any longer. You are no longer the dictator in the classroom. The child learns by himself, so you get out of that problem. The system teaches.

Q: How is the center administered?

A: My staff (BRL employees) and I administer the school. We're going to establish, in this center, a program improving learning. All the students will read and do math well.

Q: How?

A: By using BRL/Sullivan and AAAS Allyn and Bacon materials. Materials make things happen.

Q: That's it?

A: The teachers come in a couple of weeks before school starts, and we train them.

Q: Do you have any ongoing workshops?

A: Only on demand.

Q: Who trains the staff?

A: The representatives of the book companies whose books we use.

Q: What about central-office supervisors and other staff?

A: They really haven't been doing this job well. What has been established over the years hasn't worked. So we do it differently.

Q: What about human relations?

A: Competence is the most important thing.

Q: Mr. K, what is your background?

A: Oh, I was afraid you'd ask me. Lockheed Missiles. I'm a systems analyst. I view things analytically. Keep out emotions. The idea is, let's fix this, and the children will come out different. When people have needs, the relationship disrupts. If you want more money, it interferes.

Q: But we hear that the teachers have threatened to strike and the aides who are community parents, are ready to walk out at Banneker.

A: You're always going to have tensions. Industry says, we want a job done. This is the difference. You don't have to love the guy next to you on the assembly line to make the product. He puts in the nuts, you put in the bolts, and the product comes out. Teachers can hate me and still get children to learn.

Q: But how about the little love relationships between teacher and child that motivate the child? You are saying that you really don't need teachers to motivate children to learn. Now you have one teacher and one aide to about 40 children. With your philosophy you probably could justify one teacher for every 120, or one classroom manager for every three rooms.

A: You are right. It proves that you don't have to give a $20,000 salary a year if children can learn without a teacher. Everyone has to be a member of the team. The difference between curriculum managers (master teachers) and learning supervisors (paraprofessionals) is that managers can evaluate exceptions.

Q: Tell us how you allocate that $800 per child. What is the cost analysis?

A: Well, we can't tell you yet.

Q: Who is in charge of the education of the school?

A: Mr. Banford, the learning director.

Q: What do you do?

A: Train the staff, hire, maintain records, handle custodial services, food, community relations, learning materials, things like that.

Q: You hold the purse strings, then, and that means you also control the instruction, since you determine what materials are to be used and who does the teacher-training.

A: We have $800 per child to manage the job.

Q: There is a textbook law in Indiana. How do you get around that, if you use only your own and related materials?

A: Well, we go through the other textbooks, and if a page fits our purpose, we duplicate it and work it into our program.

What happens when a private business and a former Lockheed systems analyst take over a public school in Gary, Indiana?

Minnie Perrin Berson is director of early-childhood education at Illinois State University. Her report on her visit to Banneker School is taken from "Texarkana and Gary: A Tale of Two Performance Contracts," and reprinted, with permission, from Childhood Education Magazine, March, 1[illegible]

". . . individualized instruction at Banneker appears to be another brand of regimented, lock-step progression conducted largely with inexpensive BRL materials . . . it can hardly be considered a comprehensive 'system' of education."

Q: What about psychological services?

A: The school psychologist was here and he tells us that the kids who used to have problems are now problems no longer. They are absorbed in the program. They are motivated to learn. He is really pleased.

Q: Do your central office supervisors visit?

A: Oh, yes!

Q: Do you consult them?

A: We manage the school.

Q: How about community involvement?

A: I hold workshops before the report cards to explain the report cards. The children receive achievement profiles instead of letter grades. We are just starting an afternoon program for parents.

Q: What tests do you use?

A: Metropolitan Achievement, California Achievement.

Q: How do you use paraprofessionals?

A: We call them learning supervisors. The teacher teaches the concept and they assist with reinforcement activities.

Q: Tell us about your orientation.

A: When you change a system, the people involved don't know what's going to happen. The planning is reduced at the initial phases. The managers make decisions on what we need.

Q: What if a child has been out for a long time? How do you place him?

A: The concept of individualization remains the same. We have no group instruction. A child is tested every 24 pages and he must score at 80 percent on BRL materials.

Q: What do you do with transfer students?

A: We skill-test them and place them.

Q: What is the size of classes?

A: We have 25 to 40 children in a class.

Q: What makes BRL so sure they are going to succeed?

A: Because we work at it. You've got to have faith in people, get them excited.

Q: To whom are you accountable?

A: To George Stern, the president of BRL.

THE CLASSROOM TOUR

After this 45-minute discussion with Kendrick, we toured classrooms until lunch time. In the course of the morning, we made three classroom visits. From what we observed, children in this "nongraded learning center" appeared to be placed by age.

Classroom No. 1: Around 40 six-year-olds were divided into three equal groups. The curriculum manager conducted a chart lesson using words-in-color material, with children reciting rote-choir style. A second group sat together at a long table for seatwork, each child using the identical ditto sheet which required him to trace a full page of the letter i. The third group, also at a long table, quietly worked at lotto-type matching exercises, under the direction of the paraprofessional.

Classroom No. 2: A woman came to the door and told us that she was the substitute and that the learning supervisor was in charge. After a short observation of a struggle for control between the paraprofessional and the baffled children, we decided to move on, in the best interests of all parties concerned.

Classroom No. 3: Fives and sixes occupied what had recently been a kindergarten classroom. All the children sat on a rug, listening to a record. The curriculum manager manned the record player and the supervisor sat in the back of the room, arms folded over chest. Children were invited individually or in pairs to "do something" to a few bars of music.

Frank Thompson, the Illinois principal who accompanied me, describes briefly his observation of a physical-education class, art work, and mathematics with older elementary children:

Physical education involved about 50 or 60 children with a single male instructor. The only activity was running relays, and it did not necessitate much instruction from the adult.

Math: Fifth-and sixth-grade children (from appearance and age) were doing number work with a tachistoscope-type machine. Children were asked to keep track of the flashing numerals during a specific time interval. Catching on to the cadence of the machine and the numerical sequence, the children came up with the desired answers on their answer sheets by playing the game according to the clicks. They played it so well that they could do other things and get the right answer without even concentrating.

Creative Arts: When we inquired about the creative arts, two examples were displayed. We were led to a bulletin board filled with colored-in-the-line Santas. When one of the visitors asked, "Is this creative?" we were shown an aquarium filled with little pieces of construction paper to paste over ready-made drawings for a mosaic effect.

While the classrooms are all called curriculum learning centers, we noticed that the rooms had retained the original door plates identifying them by grades. When we asked Kendrick about these remnants of the recent past, he told us they were being retained for human-relations purposes.

My colleague and I agreed that individualized instruction at Banneker appears to be another brand of regimented, lockstep progression conducted largely with inexpensive BRL materials. This may even be an efficient way for teaching specific symbolic skills. But it can hardly be considered a comprehensive "system" of education.

Observed Thompson: "The morale of the school is low. The air is tense. The teachers are tense. The public-relations people are tense. If good learning can go on in this type of atmosphere, then we people in education have been doing an injustice to children with our concern for emotional climate in the learning environment."

THE GARY POST-TRIBUNE REPORTS

Eager for a cumulative report of the three-month operation at Banneker, we stopped at the offices of the Gary Post-Tribune and followed the almost daily reports of the local newspaper.

The reports indicate that the Banneker program has been in trouble from the start. Each passing day compounds these troubles with the Gary Teachers' Union (GTU), the Indiana Dept. of Public Instruction, the school's parents, and paraprofessionals.

GTU claims that, in turning Banneker over to a private contractor, the board violated its contract with the union. A number of the Banneker teachers have been declared "surplus" and transferred out of the school. Remaining teachers understand that they can be forced to resign on a 15-day notice. Salaries at Banneker have violated the local salary agreements, with some teachers possibly earning as much as $5,000 more than other teachers in Gary with similar qualifications. Classes that used to include less than 30 children now have risen to sizes as high as 40.[5]

The Indiana State Dept. of Public Instruction questions the legality of the performance contract, lack of compliance with the state's textbook laws, the placement of children, and the innovative claims of the program. A task force is preparing a report at Banneker for the Indiana General Commission on Education.[6]

Banneker parents and citywide PTA officials were invited to a meeting (Oct. 22) for the purpose of receiving BRL program information.[7] Instead, the citywide PTA president publicly stated the morning after that a former school-board member, presently on the payroll of BRL, had brought them together for the purpose of passing a previously prepared resolution as a testimonial for the Banneker program, BRL, and the school administration.

COMMENT

Is it really fair to expect Gary's schools to be a flourishing oasis in the midst of the many unresolved urban problems that surround them? More pointedly, can outside education-mechanics bring in magical learning solutions by converting a school into a skill-shop?

In the Gary case, the California concessionaire actually makes local decisions. For instance, when the superintendent of schools agreed to the union's request to add needed certified teachers at Banneker, and offered to add them as visiting teachers and pay them out of a separate budget, the BRL president rejected this offer because it would "dilute" his approach.[8] He also told a local reporter that further alterations in his design would cause him to withdraw from Gary and that this pullout would hurt the school district more than it would his firm.

Accountablility is hardly achieved by simple test measures in which Leon Lessinger so firmly believes. When children are continually given exercise sheets that resemble achievement-test items, they can play the testing game with great savvy. So doing does not assure that they have mastered critical skills of reading comprehension and interpretation that differentiate mechanical mastery from fundamental learning growth.

For the latter, more is involved than taking over a school, bypassing teachers, hiring aides for one-sixth of the salary and giving them fancy titles for checking the piecework in the child-learning factory. Some Banneker aides have complained they are being paid less than originally promised and are doing teacher work without teacher pay. They, too, threaten a strike.

Educational accountability worthy of its name requires that teachers, administration, and community be accountable to each other with honesty, compassion, and determination. As Ernie Hernandez observes, "All Stern has to face is his board of directors—while the school board is responsible to the people of Gary."[9]

[1] The press releases, "Nation's First Contracted School Opens in Gary" and the "Fact Sheet," may both be obtained from Donald Kendrick, Center Manager, Banneker Elementary School, Gary, Ind.

[2] The independent evaluation is being conducted by the Center for Urban Redevelopment and Education, whose president is Bernard E. Donovan, former superintendent of schools, New York City.

[3] I was accompanied on this visit by Frank Thompson, past state president of the Illinois Elementary School Principals Association and principal of Emerson Elementary School, Bloomington, Ill.

[4] From notes taken in shorthand and later verified by another member of the visiting group.

[5] "Gary Teachers' Union Files Grievance in Banneker Case," Gary Post-Tribune, Oct. 21, 1970; "McAndrew Tables Teacher Union's Grievance," Gary Post-Tribune, Oct. 23, 1970; and Ernie Hernandez, "McAndrew, Union Meet on Grievance," Gary Post-Tribune, Oct. 29, 1970.

[6] "Schools Still Await Money OK," Gary Post-Tribune, Oct. 19, 1970, and Ernie Hernandez, "Good, Bad Seen in State Banneker Visit," Gary Post-Tribune, Oct. 21, 1970.

[7] Tom Knightly, "Prospects of Meeting Teacher Payroll 'Nil,'" Gary Post-Tribune, Dec. 16, 1970; "McAndrew Asks U.S. for Banneker Funds," Gary Post-Tribune, Oct. 23, 1970; Ernie Hernandez, "Schools Pay Hope Dims," Gary Post-Tribune, Dec. 14, 1970.

[8] Ernie Hernandez, "McAndrew To Nix Banneker Plaints," Gary Post-Tribune, Dec. 16, 1970.

[9] Ibid.

PERFORMANCE CONTRACTS, TESTS, AND MEASUREMENT

By E. GARY JOSELYN

Digested from an address to a 1971 AFT-QuEST "Truth-&-Soul-in-Teaching" conference

Measurement, the area I know most about, also happens to be the area, I believe, of performance contracting's most serious flaws and abuses. In fact, they are a built-in component.

When there is an audit of the "performance" of a contractor (or, a teacher), what kind of test should be used—a very specific test or a general one? This is the very heart of the problem, because they are two ends of a continuum.

Developing tests to measure exactly what the curriculum teaches, carried to the extreme, would probably have the curriculum defined as a pool of test items. Such a pool might be fair to the contractor, but not to a school trying to provide a good, rounded education. But, on the other hand, how can a contractor do his work unless he knows what is being measured, and this must necessarily be very specific, narrowly defined items.

Taking the other end of the continuum to the extreme, testing generally what the curriculum teaches, the school board would hire the contractor to teach "reading" or "mathematics," without further specification of curriculum content. The test could then be any reading or math test the evaluators might choose to administer, or the school could just make a subjective judgment of whether or not to pay the contractor.

These two extremes are absurd, but they do represent the logical ends of the continuum. In every contract, the contractor and school system will eventually have to settle upon a position somewhere between the extremes. And there will be both positive and negative payoffs as we move from one extreme to the other.

As I said, the first situation, where the curriculum is defined by specific test items, is the easiest and "fairest" to the contractor. His task is clearly defined, the goals are obvious, and, at the end, it will be quite clear to everyone whether or not the contract has been fulfilled.

However, most schools are not likely to settle for this approach. They will argue that "there is more to reading than can be defined by a pool of test items." Schools may also feel that this model contains too much temptation for the contractor to concentrate on tests and take shortcuts.

At the other end, where the curriculum content has not been specified at all, and the school could use any measures it chooses to determine outcomes, the conditions are not very fair to the contractor. How can he proceed with the teaching task if he does not know in advance what the school will judge to be important? The contractor must know, beforehand, what the ground rules are and will want them spelled out in as much detail as possible.

Related to this difficulty of where on the continuum the testing aspects of a performance contract will fall is the problem of what the measurement payoff is to be based upon. Some contracts are based upon a guarantee to bring student achievement scores up to a specified level. For example, the Educational Development Laboratories' contract with the San Diego school system, according to the June, 1970, Phi Delta Kappan, guarantees "that students will achieve 25 percent closer to the city norm during the first year, 50 percent closer during the second, and at the same level during the third."

One wonders, of course, what would be happening to the city norm during those three years.

Behavioral Research Laboratories has promised to bring the reading level of each child in the Banneker School in Gary up one year in everything, and Leon Lessinger, in the December Phi Delta Kappan, said it was the right of every child to read at his grade level. If he can convince every parent of this, we will have some pressures on the

For students, two more right answers on a test can mean an instant raising of their "grade level" by one year; for performance contractors, it can mean a fatter wallet.

E. Gary Joselyn is school-testing consultant for the Minnesota Statewide Testing Programs at the University of Minnesota. He is also a member of the Robbinsdale (Minn.) board of education.

". . . the contractor would get paid if, for example, he could raise the student's raw score from 7 to 9 on a 32-item test. And . . . this item pool will always be available to the contractor."

schools unlike anything we have seen so far.

What is average? If all students reach it, of course, it is no longer the average. This is a simple statistical fact which seems to be ignored. The same thing is true about grade-equivalent scores. The whole problem of individual differences is being shoved aside in the prospectuses. Simple logic tells us that some students are already above grade level, while others are so far below they may never reach it no matter what the "treatment." Other students are only a tiny bit below. What does the contractor get paid for all of these types of students?

If, on the other hand, we base our payoff on gain scores, we run into the tremendous technical problems associated with the measurement of gain. I am not an expert in these statistical considerations, but the way I read the literature, the general agreement among those who are seems to be that gain scores are generally useless, if not impossible to get.

Carl Bereiter, in the Chester Harris book (1963) on the problems of measuring change, states that it is only with regard to problems in measuring change that he has ever heard colleagues admit to having abandoned major research objectives solely because the statistical problems seemed to be insurmountable. More recently, Lee J. Cronbach and Lita M. Furby (1970) concluded that we should not attempt to measure change in most instances.

What about teaching to the test? Information published on the Texarkana project shows that we should be concerned with this. It seems pretty clear that students were taught at least some of the specific items that were included in the final test. The amount of true contamination is not clear, and estimates range from Dorsett's 6.5 percent to the independent evaluator's 100 percent.

Teaching the content areas which the test measures, of course, is not bad; in fact, it we have agreed upon certain desired outcomes for the program and have designed a test to measure those outcomes, we want the instruction to teach for the test. But by "teaching to the test," I refer to teaching students answers to specific items which later appear in the final test. Teaching a student answers to items which sample a particular outcome hardly tells us whether or not the student knows anything about the desired outcomes at all.

As long as the entire payoff is based upon the scores on a test, contractors will certainly teach for the test. We are telling them to do just that when we tell them that their reward, if any, will be based upon a test score.

As for using standardized tests as the criterion instruments for performance contracts, it is my opinion that this is a terribly inappropriate use for such instruments, and a use for which they were not intended.

Our present standardized tests are designed to maximize the discrimination between individuals. The difference between students in their knowledge of arithmetic, for example, may be very small in relation to the knowledge gained by all students during the course of instruction. Yet, standardized tests attempt to magnify those small differences. Items which almost everyone misses or gets right are eliminated in the test-development process, since they show only how the students are similar, not different. The best items are considered to be those with a 50-percent difficulty level. Thus, the very items which have the most potential for measuring change or status are the ones which are eliminated.

The grade-equivalent score is used as the measure of gain in many contracts. That is, the contractor contracts to raise students' scores by one or more grade levels. What could be more beautiful? Here we have a group of students who are tested to be three grade-levels behind, and along comes a contractor who will guarantee to raise their achievement one or two grade levels or else you don't pay him. Free enterprise has finally arrived in education. We have free enterprise, but do we have education? Let's look a little closer at what our entrepreneur has contracted to do.

On the arithmetic-computation test of the Scholastic Achievement Test (SAT), Advanced Battery (junior-high-school level), a student answering 6 of 41 of the items correctly gets a grade-equivalent (GE) score of 4.2; if he answers 9 items correctly, 3 more, his GE score is 5.1, just short of a year's "growth."

On the arithmetic-problems test of the Iowa Test of Basic Skills (ITBS) for grade 7 (a 32-item test), a student grows approximately one year in GE for every 2½ additional items answered correctly from a grade level of 4.1 (5 items right is a chance score) right up through a GE of 8.0 (15 items right).

So, if the payoff is based on a guarantee of raising the student's grade-level one year and this particular standardized test, the ITBS, is used as the criterion, the contractor would get paid if, for example, he could raise the student's raw score from 7 to 9 on a 32-item test. And, let me remind you, that this item pool will always be available to the contractor.

I don't think standardized tests will work as a criteria for performance contracts, although they may appear to for some administrators and school boards, and I expect the contractors will like them.

We must pay more attention to the measurement aspects of performance contracting than apparently has been the case thus far. Most performance contracts have assumed a reliability and precision of measurement which may not exist.

In addition, as a profession, we're going to have to pay attention to the current public emphasis on accountability, of which the performance-contracting phenomenon is a part. We are going to have to find out in what ways teachers can and do make a difference in children's lives. The public has a right to know, and should. To the extent to which we're not able to talk to our public, we're going to have more and more of these bad examples thrust upon us against our will, to the detriment of teachers and students.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH VOUCHERS?

By ALBERT SHANKER

Digested from an address to a 1971 AFT-QuEST "Truth-&-Soul-in-Teaching" conference

The concepts of vouchers and performance contracts are basically part of a political strategy which is concerned with money and power in our society. To appreciate the dangers of this strategy, we need to view it from the standpoint of the coalition of forces which has managed to bring about some improvements for those at the bottom of society—rights which they did not have before, some money, some goods, and some minor redistribution of wealth. These improvements occurred in two ways: one, through the power of workers in their unions; and, two, through legislation providing help, social security, better education, and public services. Through these two ways, we have created a more egalitarian society.

The alliance which helped bring about these changes includes liberals, intellectuals, labor unions, civil-rights groups, and others. In spite of some conflicts of interests, they have stood together and have been able to bring about these changes.

But now we find the formation of a new coalition. We see it in the field of education in those forces which favor vouchers and performance contracts, and we see it emerging in other fields, as well. Who supports it? Well, you have Southern segregationists eager to circumvent the Supreme Court antisegregation ruling (and the way to circumvent it is to get away from the notion of public schools and into funding of private schools). At the same time, you also have separatist black-power groups in this coalition. These groups are interested in building their own school systems to teach their own ideologies and views. Then, parochial-school interests—which have for years tried to get educational funds by somehow working their way into a church-state concept, but not succeeding—are involved. They find that by forming an alliance with Southern segregationists, separatist blacks, and others, they are getting closer than ever before to get public funding of parochial schools. Who else? Middle-class whites who are anxious to provide a subsidy for the private schools that their kids go to, find the concept of vouchers extremely attractive.

More important than any of these groups in the coalition are the wealthy taxpayers who have always resented supporting the public schools and who are interested in keeping taxes down. They ally themselves with these groups because with vouchers and performance contracts will come a reduced commitment to public funding of education.

Albert Shanker is a former classroom teacher in New York City who is now president of the United Federation of Teachers, AFT Local 2, and a national vice-president of the AFT.

THE TWO MODELS OF VOUCHERS

The idea of vouchers originated with Milton Friedman, a classic, conservative economist and advisor to Barry Goldwater, who, some years ago, wrote that vouchers would enable teachers and the public to eliminate the monopolistic aspects of public education. Education, he argued, really ought to be considered a consumer product, as supermarket goods are, and each child ought to have his own "G.I. Bill of Rights" with funds to let him go out and buy the product that he wants.

Now, all the way over at the other end, we have David Cohen and Christopher Jencks, and a whole group of New Left critics in education, plus Paul Goodman, and others at Harvard University and elsewhere. They don't talk in terms of classical economic theories, but rather in terms of an anarchistic, left-wing philosophy of giving individuals choices so they can break up a bureaucracy. Jencks has developed the voucher program for the Office of Economic Opportunity; he talks of a number of different voucher "models."

Friedman's model essentially is that each child gets a voucher equivalent in value to the money now spent on him in his public-school system. He spends that voucher wherever he wishes — public schools, private schools, parochial schools, anyplace. There is no regulation. And, because of this, it becomes a subsidy for the rich. The poor child will have only as much as he has now, while the wealthy parent who already pays private-school tuition will have an additional $800 or $900 or $1,000 that he will be getting from the public schools. In other words, the rich get what they are now spending, plus what they are not now getting. It is really a subsidy for those who are not attending the public schools.

Friedman's unregulated model, of course, also means that schools could be set up on a racial or religious basis. And, essentially, the new private schools would be profit-oriented: they would be designed for those children easier to teach. Chances are rather good that new schools would not be set up for the children who have the greatest needs and the greatest learning problems. The public schools would become a dumping ground for the rejects of the private institutions.

Jencks apparently agrees with some of these criticisms. He says, in effect, "Well, we can't do that." If we take Friedman's model, he concedes, we'd end up with segregation, subsidization of the rich, and discrimination against the poor. So Jencks has developed a model which is like a Rube Goldberg invention: children will not get the same amounts of money—poorer kids will get more—and wealthy schools will be encouraged to take poor children because they need the greater number of dollars being carried by the poor. Also, schools will have to accept a certain number of children by lottery or some similar system. In other words, there will be a number of mechanisms built into it to assure adequate funding to the poorer child; there will be integration; and, Jencks maintains, "We will avoid all the pitfalls which the unregulated model has."

Now, there is only one problem with Jencks' notion. The model which he sets up is a very sophisticated one, it is true, but we don't know right now whether it will work or not. And that is one of the problems with the whole experiment of vouchers. Experiments ought to be reversible: if the experiment fails, you ought to have something to go back to. But this is an experiment in the same sense as dropping an egg to see if it will break; when it's broken, there's not much you can do about it.

The voucher experiment is irreversible because once you give people the money, once the other schools are set up to compete with public schools, and the public-school buildings sold to private-school interests, you can't, five years from now, say, "Gee, I guess we made a mistake. Let's pull the money back; let's buy the buildings back; let's rehire the personnel; let's start all over again." So we don't have an experiment; we have something which is bound to lead to an irreversible conclusion. This is not just something you're trying to see if it works. This is something which, once you're on the road, you have to stay, because there's no return.

The other problem with Jencks' proposal is that there is no state legislature in the country that is going to adopt a bill which gives parents money to send their children to school and which then mandates that the schools be integrated and that much more money be provided for black and Spanish-speaking children than for the white middle class. His proposal is a political impossibility. We aren't even getting integration laws passed in our state legislatures today. We are getting antibusing laws. At the present, and at the level where laws are passed, the tide is going in the opposite direction. So, what Jencks, Goodman, and the liberal-left critics of the schools propose is a model which might work, but which is a politically impossible accomplishment. Jencks may make his notion of vouchers a popular one among liberals, but once it gets through the legislatures, it will have become very much like the Goldwater-Friedman model.

The school-voucher notion is supported by a strange group of bedfellows; is an "irreversible" experiment; and is politically naive.

THE EDUCATIONAL-FINANCE ALTERNATIVES OF THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION

Excerpted from a background paper
by the AFL-CIO DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

In his 1972 budget message, President Nixon has set forth the next steps in his educational strategy. They constitute nothing less than the complete dismantling of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, the federally impacted-aid program, the education-for-the-handicapped programs, and the school-lunch program.

Already, in his 1970 message on education reform, the President charged that the federal government has not had a cohesive educational policy, that "federal education programs are largely fragmented and disjointed." At that time, he promised to "recommend to the Congress plans for consolidation of grants into packages that are truly useful to states and localities receiving them."

In the 1972 budget, the Administration proposes "to draw together this wide array of overlapping and contradictory authorizations into a new special revenue-sharing program for education."

Nixon proposes to fund this educational block-grant program at $3 billion for its first year. This amount for the total funding package is actually less than the present authorization just for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

The specifics of this revenue-sharing proposal will become clearer, presumably, when new legislation is introduced which will, according to Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Elliot Richardson, merge the various education acts into two new ones, an "Educational Assistance Act," to consolidate all federal-funding operations for public schools, and an "Educational Renewal Act," to cover all research, experimental, and reform programs.

It is unlikely that the Administration proposal to put existing programs of categorical aid into block grants will be received with favor by Congress, and there is good reason for this. Categorical aid consists of federal grants to state and local authorities for specific purposes spelled out by Congress in the legislation. Funds for the school-lunch program, for example, can be used only for a school-lunch program and nothing else. Under the Nixon proposals, a local school board would be able to transfer the funds which it has been receiving for the school-lunch program to its textbook funds.

Categorical-aid programs did not happen simply by accident. They came about as a part of a creative solution to specific problems.

One of the most critical of the problems which gave rise to categorical aid was the century-old impasse over federal aid to education. There was for years a general recognition in Congress and among the champions of education that federal aid to the schools was necessary. The problem became more intense in the years following World War II, with the enormous increase in school-age population. Between 1940 and 1970, school enrollment has jumped from 28 million pupils to over 52 million pupils. This mushrooming growth placed unmanageable strains on local school authorities, particularly in areas where there were meager sources for additional state and local tax revenue.

There ensued a long series of efforts in Congress to enact programs of general aid to education. But each time, the legislation floundered over the question of what to do about the nonpublic schools. There were those who argued that federal aid to parochial schools would constitute government subsidization of religion in violation of the Constitution. Others were equally determined that they would oppose any program of federal aid which did not include aid to nonpublic schools within its scope.

By shifting the emphasis from general aid to education to one of categorical aid for specific programs, Congress was at last able to break through the impasse. The National Defense Education Act of 1958, passed during the Eisenhower administration, was one of the first applications of the principle of categorical aid. It established financial assistance to both public and nonpublic schools to upgrade their teaching in mathematics, foreign languages, and science, and later in a wider range of "secular" subjects. This approach was successful in satisfying both the public and nonpublic school adherents.

Building on this experience, Congress shaped the Elementary and Secondary Education Act with the strong support of organized labor. By using the categorical approach, Congress was able to achieve an intricate balance between what had historically been rival interests.

There is a second important reason why categorical programs have come about. Congress has reacted to certain specific educational needs for the very reason that, important though they are, they have in the past been largely neglected by state and local authorities. It is the assumption of the Administration's block-grant proposal that state and local authorities are better able to establish priorities for spending available funds according to need than is the federal government.

There is abundant evidence that this is not always true. State and local authorities inevitably make decisions in terms of the various social and political pressures around them, and these pressures are not necessarily consonant with the needs. A conspicuous example of this is the deplorable state of affairs which existed with regard to vocational education in most school systems prior to the enactment of the Vocational Education Act of 1963. It is an unmistakable conclusion that the parents of college-bound students carried more political weight with school authorities than did the parents of vocational students. In writing the Vocational Act, Congress was thereby in a sense helping to correct this political imbalance.

In drafting Title I of the ESEA, Congress reacted to the mounting evidence that, in most school systems, there was no meaningful equality of educational opportunity for schools serving poor children.

An illustration of a well-working program which could be seriously imperiled by the Administration's block-grant proposal is the school-lunch program. The funds for this program are among those which the Administration would put into the block grants, permitting school authorities to use the funds elsewhere.

The relationship between learning and good nutrition has been firmly established. The 1970 amendments to the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act make it possible for every poor child to receive free school lunches. Even so, there are still 18,000 schools serving 10 million children in which school authorities have failed to participate in the lunch program. The school-lunch program is specifically designed to meet needs of disadvantaged children. There is already abundant evidence that in many school districts the funds for this program, if placed into block grants, would be diverted to other purposes which are more politically popular.

Finally, there is a third reason that categorical-aid programs have been established, and that is that the national interest in a specific educational problem may transcend local interests. The National Defense Education Act, for example, was adopted in considerable part because it was more important to the nation to have an increased number of scientists and technicians than it was to individual school districts. As a nation, we have a concern which is greater than that of localities that there be more doctors and nurses. Categorical-aid programs have been one of the ways in which this national interest has been expressed and supported.

It is undoubtedly true that among existing categorical-aid programs there is some overlapping and even duplication of effort. The AFL-CIO would welcome efforts to examine these programs with the aim of bringing about useful consolidation. But to do away with the categorical programs altogether and put the money into block grants to the states would be a step backward rather than a step forward. It would channel the funds where the political pressures are greatest rather than where the need is greatest. It would reopen the church-state controversy in a way that could only be harmful to the cause of American education. And it could destroy the progress which we have made up to now.

$7,500 AFT Group Life Insurance Guaranteed!

YOUR GUARANTEE

All AFT Members under age 60 who are actively working (and have been working full-time for the past 90 days) are GUARANTEED the issuance of the life-insurance policy described in this brochure . . . regardless of past health history or present physical condition!

NO HEALTH QUESTIONS...NO PHYSICAL EXAM...

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

What about tricky, fine-print clauses?

There are none . . . because your AFT Executive Council insisted that this insurance cover death from any and all causes. Even private-plane accidents, civil disturbances—any cause, any place in the world . . . even the customary two-year contestable clause is waived. Suicide is covered after the first year.

What if the company cancels my policy?

It can't . . . except in the usual ways . . . if you fail to pay your premium . . . if you drop your membership . . . if you retire . . . or if coverage for all AFT Members is terminated. The premium-free term insurance can be cancelled only if you drop your AFT Membership or all coverage is terminated.

What are my conversion rights?

You may exchange your AFT Life Insurance Policy when you retire or leave the teaching profession for the same amount of life insurance on any policy (other than term) written by the Insurance Company. Conversion rights guaranteed!

What if I become disabled?

You will pay no premiums during any period of total disability that lasts over 9 months prior to your 60th birthday.

When does my insurance become effective?

On the Anniversary date of all AFT Group Life Insurance Policies . . . May 1, 1971 if your premium is paid and you are actively working on that date. All AFT Members under age 60, not insured under the AFT Life Insurance Program, are guaranteed $7,500 Life Insurance if they apply now.

What happens when I reach age 65?

You have two choices:

1—If you retire, you can exercise your conversion rights (see above).

2—If you continue teaching, you may continue your life insurance in the amount of $3,750.00.

If at age 65 you retire, and if you have been insured for 10 continuous years, you also receive $1,000.00 of premium-free term life insurance.

YOUR LOW SEMI-ANNUAL COST

Member's Age (Nearest Birthday)	$7,500.00 Life Insurance
Under 30	$ 5.85
30-34	8.85
35-39	11.80
40-44	14.50
45-49	16.00
50-54	29.10
55-59	43.35
60-64*	65.20
65-69*	46.30

NOTE: Your life insurance "age" is determined by nearest birthday rather than your attained age. For example: If you are 39 years and six months old, you are considered to be age 40. Premiums apply at age of entry and upon renewal dates of insurance. At age 65, the insurance decreases to $3,750.00 but is renewable to age 70.

*Renewal only

HOW TO ENROLL

1. Simply complete this short Enrollment Certificate.
2. Attach your check payable to Albert H. Wohlers & Co. for the low semi-annual premium.
3. Mail your check and the Enrollment Certificate to our Insurance Administrator:

   Albert H. Wohlers & Co., Administrator
   AFT GROUP INSURANCE PLANS
   720 Garden Street
   Park Ridge, Illinois 60068

$1,000 PREMIUM-FREE TERM LIFE INSURANCE!

All AFT Members insured under this plan (Policy G-179) will be eligible for $1,000.00 of premium-free term life insurance upon retirement or age 65—whichever occurs later. The only requirement is that you have been insured continuously for 10 years and you maintain AFT Membership.

AFT

Enrollment Application To:

ALL AMERICAN LIFE & CASUALTY CO.
720 Garden St., Park Ridge, Ill. 60068

I wish to enroll in the American Federation of Teachers Group Life Insurance Plan.

What is your full name? .....
(please print)

Mailing Address .....

City ..... State ..... ZIP .....

Date of Birth ..... AFT Local No. .....

Beneficiary .....

Have you been actively working full-time for the past 90 days? ☐ YES ☐ NO

I understand that the insurance applied for shall become effective on the date specified by the Company, and only if I am working full time as indicated above. I represent that the above statements are correct.

Signature ..... Date .....

INSURANCE IS GUARANTEED . . . IF YOU ACT TODAY

BOOKS&FILMS

Scene from film reviewed below.

EXAMINING URBAN SCHOOLS

Reviews of two films, "With Mixed Emotions" and "Anatomy of a Big-City High School," produced by WFIL-TV, Philadelphia, Pa.

Reviewed by JACK STEINBERG

Nine months of taking and editing over 56,000 feet of film culminated in one of the very few perceptive and objective television probes of a large urban high school.

Station WFIL-TV, the Philadelphia affiliate of the American Broadcasting Company, sent a five-man team into Philadelphia's Overbrook High School. The team produced two one-hour television films; the first hour, Part I, is entitled "With Mixed Emotions," and Part II is entitled "Anatomy of a Big City High School."

Martin Spinelli, director of the project, pointed out that the team entered the school with no preconceived ideas or script. They had little or no restrictions. Filming was done without light and as inconspicuously as possible. After the initial filming, students and teachers ignored the cameras.

The films, though they deal specifically with Overbrook High, present problems that are national in scope. Overbrook is over 80 percent black, with an enrollment approaching 5,000 students. The problems, opinions, and attempts at solutions probed in candid interviews and actual class sessions have direct implications for all of public education.

Spinelli, in directing Part I, weaves his way through the central themes of racial unrest, violence, and the meaning of Black Power and black identity as the inhabitants at Overbrook see them.

We see integration in sporting events and the prom. We hear opinions on dating and hair styles. In the dramatic commencement sequence, we hear an articulate black girl speak of "joblessness" and racism.

Some of the emotional highlights of the films are actual class sessions. In one, as part of an experimental lesson, a young black explains the frustrating oppressiveness of gangs. There is a disturbingly fatalistic air to his explanation.

A classroom discussion involving black and white students brings out emotional feelings that verge on confrontation. Just what will violence accomplish? How do young blacks consider Martin Luther King Jr.? Are there any solutions to the problems raised?

Another memorable portion of the film is an interview which is really a monologue by a young black girl. She states very clearly what it means to be black today and what it must mean in the future.

There is very little narration, and Part I has practically none. True problems are articulated by the students, teachers, and administrators at the school. Almost every conceivable opinion and emotion is displayed.

Part II moves beyond the racial problems. It deals with the overcrowded conditions and the resulting feelings of anonymity. It probes the role of the teacher, the role of the school.

The problems are great, but we do get a feeling that something is happening. We see teachers approaching the problems sanely. We see them experimenting. They are aware.

Rex Polier, a critic for the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, in his review on the films, said, "One thing the reports demonstrate—clearly—is the importance of qualified teachers who relish their challenge." He pointed out that there were many impressive teachers at Overbrook. He cited Ted Kirsch, building representative at the time and currently a staff representative for the Philadelphia Federation of Teachers. I use Polier's opinions in this area in order to avoid any charge that as a teacher-reviewer I am biased. He went on to state, "The reports give one an acute awareness of how vital a teacher in a predominantly black school is—not only for the future of his students, and all blacks, but also society."

Station WFIL-TV has put the reports on 16-mm. film. They have been used in teacher-education classes at Temple University and the University of Pennsylvania. Teachers at Overbrook High have used the films for staff-development purposes.

The themes developed in the films make them invaluable in the study of urban education today. Faculties, and particularly new teachers, should have an opportunity to view and discuss them. Anyone interested in obtaining the films should write to Station WFIL-TV, City Line Ave. and Monument Rd., Philadelphia, Pa. 19131.

MANY MODELS

"Ways of Teaching," by Ronald T. Hyman. New York: J. B. Lippincott Co., 1970, 290 pp.

Reviewed by ALBERT E. BENDER

Some men study a subject until it becomes so involved that only confusion can result. Authors of methods textbooks are, more often than not, guilty of this. Ronald T. Hyman has studied teaching methods until the ideas became simplified, and he passes this clarity on to his readers in this book. The language is understandable, the presentation develops logically and fairly, the analysis is clear, and the examples are complete.

It is important that teachers learn how to use various teaching methods properly. It is equally important that educators have a balanced understanding of the various methods and do not believe in a one-tone approach.

The author presents the discussion method, divided into Socratic and discovery; recitation and lecture; and role-playing, with sociodrama and simulation games. He examines each method in detail without favoring any. There are explanations, clarifications, complete examples, variations of the example, and justification of the method. The references at the end of each chapter are a good source for further reading for particular problems. The major parts of the text, listed as discussion, recitation and lecture, and role-playing, have introductory chapters which justify the method, and variations of the specific method.

The first chapter of the text presents some background material, such as attitudes regarding methods, ideas common to various methods, and consideration of criteria for selection. The final two chapters deal with questioning, and observation and evaluation. Questioning is divided into many types and styles of questions, clarifying and justifying each of these under proper condition. Again, the author does not promote one type of question, but shows the proper use of each. Observation, treated in some detail, is presented as an important tool, while evaluation is clearly distinguished from this and is presented as a problem.

This text is a must for student teachers and students of teaching. It is especially recommended for those who are cursed with single teaching-model mentalities. The reader is left with appreciation for good teaching and respect for all methods of learning.

EMPHASIZING PEOPLE

"Our Nation's Heritage," a series of record albums distributed by Standard Oil and Chevron Oil.

Reviewed by MARSHALL AXELROD

"But where are the people?" We know history too often leaves them out. A major oil company has just begun a new series of historical dramatizations that is surprising, coming from the company that produced the bombastic and "safe" Standard School Broadcasts.

The series emphasizes people—some famous, most not. It tries to recreate what it was like to live at the given time; what people ate, what they worried about, what they wanted.

Twenty record albums are planned for the series. The first four albums have just been sent, free of charge, to elementary and junior-high schools throughout the West, Southwest, Rocky Mountain states, Hawaii, and Alaska. If your school has not received a set, and is in this area, contact the oil company.

ANALYZING THE TEACHER

"What's Happened to Teacher?" by Myron Brenton. New York: Coward-McCann, 280 pp.

Reviewed by DAN SCANNELL

This is a well-written analysis of the historical and sociological development of one of America's largest minority groups, her teachers.

Brenton ("The American Male," "The Privacy Invaders") exhibits a personal style that is rare in this type of book. He is not as comprehensive as a Silberman or as fashionably pessimistic as a Holt, but rather is critical, concerned, and sympathetic as he traces the journey of the teacher over 200 years of second-class citizenship. "Walk a mile in my shoes," is what he's trying to say, and if you go along, you will better understand the person who runs the school system and how he is run by The System.

Among other things, the book examines the history, financial situation, new-found militancy and professional status of today's educator. It is divided into three major parts: Personal and Professional, Indignities and Responses, and Relationships. While all three are interesting, the first part captivates with a few well-researched pages depicting the average teacher of today (he is 36, has taught for eight years, and usually drives a Chevrolet). He paints a sad picture of a person who is overworked, underpaid, and regarded with low esteem in the community.

The book is not without shortcomings: it is often vague, much too general in parts and often wants for stands on specific issues. These aside, it is fascinating reading and is interesting and accurate enough to interest professional and non-professional alike.

Jack Steinberg is a teacher in the Philadelphia public schools. Marshall Axelrod teaches in San Francisco. Albert E. Bender is a professor of education at St. Louis University. Dan Scannell teaches in Pennsylvania.

Doctoritis

Over 20,000 Americans are now dying each year of a virulent new malady called "Doctoritis." It is caused by the inability to get hold of a doctor when you need one.

Item: A study by the United States Senate indicates that America should have 600,000 doctors. We have fewer than half that many.

Item: Because more and more doctors now refuse to make house calls, or to work at night and on weekends, hospital emergency rooms are being overrun with non-emergency cases. "We've simply become a substitute for the family doctor," says the head of emergency service at New York's Roosevelt Hospital.

Item: In some communities, a doctor is not available at any time. The Wall Street Journal reports that patients in some localities must plead with up to half a dozen doctors before they can find one willing to treat them, while the governor of Texas states that 15 counties in the western part of Texas have no doctor at all.

Item: A study by the Brookings Institution indicates that by 1975, due to the pressures of Medicare, Medicaid, and the population explosion, Americans will require one billion doctor visits. There simply will not be enough medical manpower to meet this need.

In short, American medicine, once the pride of our nation and freely available to everyone, is swiftly degenerating into a semi-rationed, hurried, depersonalized form of production-line service because of a severe shortage of doctors. What's more, the situation will only get worse. Survey after survey indicates that a reversal of the current trend cannot occur for at least another decade. As a study by the Carnegie Commission on Medical Education recently concluded, America is confronted by a "massive crisis."

The average intelligent, responsible citizen has but one recourse: To provide himself with instantaneously available, authoritative medical advice that will enable him to minimize his dependency upon doctors. To make this possible, the editors of Moneysworth, the galvanic new consumer-affairs newsletter, are pleased to announce publication—and free dissemination—of The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor, by Paul Kuhne, M.D.

The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor is more than just a reference book listing symptoms and treatments for common ailments (although it contains over 100,000 words of such information and advice). It is a comprehensive, easily understood description of the workings of the human body and mind. It covers anatomy, physiology, medicine, and psychiatry. What's more, its style and wit make it a pleasure to read. It's as though you were chatting informally with an authority who had all the time in the world—and the genuine desire—to answer your most trivial medical questions.

It is not possible within the scope of this advertisement to give you a detailed description of the contents of The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor. Its range is too vast. Suffice it to say that probably never in your lifetime will you encounter an illness that is not covered by this book.

Perhaps you can get an inkling of the book's contents from this list of 100 of the 1500 topics it covers:

Abortion, Acne, Air Sickness, Alcoholism, Allergy, Analgesics, Anemia, Angina Pectoris, Antacids, Antidotes, Arthritis, Ascorbic Acid, Asthma, Athlete's Foot, Backaches, Baldness, Bed Wetting, Bites and Stings, Blackheads, Blood Pressure, Blood Sugar, Breastfeeding, Burns, Caffeine, Calories, Cancer, Castration Complex, Children's Diseases, Cholesterol, Choosing a Family Doctor, Chronic Tiredness, Colds, Constipation, Contraception, Corns, Dandruff, Dental Decay, Deodorants, Diabetes, Diarrhea, Dieting, Drug Addiction, Electrocardiogram, First Aid, Flatulence, Food Values, Foot Complaints, Frigidity, Frostbite, Fungus Infection, Gall Bladder, Gastric Ulcer, German Measles, Geriatrics, Gonorrhea, Gout, Hay Fever, Headache, Health Foods, Heart Disease, Hemorrhoids, Hives, Home Medicine Chest, Homosexuality, Hormones, Impotence, Insomnia, Iron Deficiency, Kidney Infections, Laxatives, Malnutrition, Marijuana Poisoning, Masturbation, Measles, Menopause, Menstruation, Mental Disorders, Migraine, Mumps, Nosebleeds, Pneumonia, Pregnancy, Premature Ejaculation, Prostatitis, Psychotherapy, Sexual Intercourse, Skin Diseases, Sore Throat, Stomach Upsets, Stroke, Sunburn, Syphilis, Toilet Training, Tonsillitis, Toothache, Vaginal Discharge, Vitamin Deficiency, Weight and Height Averages, Wheat Germ, Whooping Cough.

In sum, The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor is perhaps the most comprehensive medical book ever written for the layman.

The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor is 448 pages long. It is profusely illustrated and indexed for quick reference. Its text is set in Times Roman, one of the most legible and beautiful of typefaces. Its cover is designed by Herb Lubalin, the world's foremost graphic designer.

Copies of this invaluable reference work are not being offered for sale; they are being given away—ABSOLUTELY FREE—as a gift to all new subscribers to Moneysworth!

In case you've never seen Moneysworth, let us explain that it is (as New York critic Robert Reisner has stated) "By far, America's most trustworthy and useful consumer-affairs publication." It rates products as to best buys (as among cars, cameras, hi-fi's and the like); it offers tips on how to save money (they will astound you with their ingenuity); and it counsels you on the management of your personal finances (telling not only how to get maximum return on your savings and investments, but also how to protect them against the ravages of inflation). Moneysworth commenced publication just a few months ago but already has become the most widely read newsletter in the world (its circulation exceeds 300,000 and its readership is estimated to be one million).

Typical of features in Moneysworth are:

Earn 10½% to 12½% on Your Savings Account
Air Travel at 50% Off
Pinto Vs. Vega Vs. Gremlin
Home Burglar-Alarm Systems
How to Fight a Traffic Ticket
Buying Art without Getting Framed
Freeze-Dried Coffees Rated (and Berated)
Hiring a Lawyer to Avoid the Draft
How to Hold onto Your Auto Insurance
"No-Loads": Your Best Buy in Mutual Funds
The Most Dangerous Car of All
Muzak in Your Home—Free
Inaccurate Billing by the Phone Company
The Dangers of Dieting
How to Buy A New Car for $125 Above Dealer's Cost
The Growing Popularity of Personal Bankruptcy
How to Open a Secret Swiss Bank Account
How to Cope with Computerized Dunning Letters
The Case for No-Fault Insurance
Earn Interest on Your Checking Account
Water Beds are Making a Big Splash
Cut-Rate Stock Brokerage
Do You Know Your Credit Rating?
Drug Combinations that Can Kill You
The Wisdom of Sending Your Child to College Abroad
How Dishonest Is Your Stockbroker?
Save Up to $1,420 on a Foreign Car
"How We Live on Less than $75 a Month"

In short, Moneysworth is a hip, reliable financial mentor. It is your own personal consumer crusader, trusted stockbroker, and chancellor of the exchequer—all in one.

The editors of Moneysworth are a team of hard-nosed, experienced journalists with considerable expertise in the fields of consumer affairs and quality periodical publishing. The editor-in-chief is Ralph Ginzburg, creator of the flamboyant magazines Fact, Eros, and Avant-Garde. Mr. Ginzburg was the first editor to provide Ralph Nader with a medium through which to express himself on the subject of automobile safety. Moneysworth's executive editor is Warren Boroson, a former editor of Medical Economics and contributor to many highly respected publications (like The New York Times Magazine). The articles editor of Moneysworth is Dorothy Bates, a former staff member of Scientific American. Assisting the editors of Moneysworth are correspondents, consultants, and researchers throughout the United States. Together, they create America's first—and only—consumer-affairs publication with charisma.

Subscriptions to Moneysworth cost $10 a year. In conjunction with this special Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor offer, however, you may order a Special Nine-Month Introductory Subscription for ONLY $4.95! This is virtually HALF PRICE!! And you get The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor ABSOLUTELY FREE!!!

Moreover, we are so confident that The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor will prove indispensable to you that we are about to make what is probably the most generous money-back offer in publishing history: We will absolutely and unconditionally guarantee that The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor will save you, in medical bills, at least ten times the cost of your Moneysworth subscription—namely, $49.50—or you may return the book and get your money back IN FULL. Meanwhile, you will have enjoyed a subscription to Moneysworth ABSOLUTELY FREE! What could be more foolproof?

To enter your subscription, simply fill out the coupon below and mail it with $4.95 to: Moneysworth, 110 West 40th Street, New York, New York 10018.

We urge you to act at once. You'll be making a sound investment in your well-being—both fiscal and physical.

MONEYSWORTH
110 WEST 40TH ST. NEW YORK, N.Y. 10018

MONEYSWORTH
110 W. 40TH ST., NEW YORK, N.Y. 10018

I enclose $4.95 for a nine-month subscription to the galvanic new consumer-affairs newsletter Moneysworth, published fortnightly. I understand that, as a Special Introductory Bonus, I will receive ABSOLUTELY FREE a copy of the 448-page Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor. Moreover, if The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor fails to save me at least $49.50 in medical bills, I may return the book and get my money back IN FULL (and, meanwhile, I will have enjoyed a subscription to Moneysworth ABSOLUTELY FREE).

IMPORTANT NOTE: The Moneysworth Home Medical Advisor is bound in soft covers. If you plan to use it extensively, we recommend that you order it in special hard-cover, deluxe edition (bound in leather grain, for greater durability). To do so, simply check this box ☐ and enclose $6.95 instead of $4.95. You still get a subscription to Moneysworth and money-back guarantee.

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE ZIP

© MONEYSWORTH 1971. T.M. "MONEYSWORTH" REG. PEND. U.S. PATENT OFFICE. "THE MONEYSWORTH HOME MEDICAL ADVISOR" ALSO PUBLISHED AS "MEDICINE FOR THE LAYMAN."

HAT-1

THE SOUTH AND HER CHILDREN:

School Desegregation 1970-1971

THE SOUTH AND HER CHILDREN:

School Desegregation 1970-1971

Southern Regional Council Inc.
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

March, 1971

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Introduction 3

The Region in Perspective—Paul M. Gaston 5

Charlotte, North Carolina: "A Little Child Shall Lead Them"—Pat Watters 21

Mobile, Alabama: The Essence of Survival —Robert E. Anderson, Jr. 38

Beaufort, South Carolina: The New Breed and the Old—Betsy Fancher 50

Athens, Georgia: Where Busing Works— Horace N. Barker, Jr. 56

White Flight: The Segregation Academy Movement— Kitty Terjen 69

Black Students Speak: "They're Looking to us as Examples" 80

INTRODUCTION

For a number of years the Southern Regional Council has issued periodic reports on school desegregation. These reports have, properly, analyzed federal governmental policy, court decisions, local administrative responses and the statistical results of those actions.

In the summer of 1970, as we planned this year's report, we sensed that the 1970-71 school year would be the most crucial one since 1954. More importantly, we agreed that now was the time to determine what was happening to education, to the children.

As a measure of our priorities, we assigned six staff members to the study. Each is identified in the report. The work was coordinated by our Research Department; the full report was edited by Robert E. Anderson, Jr. A number of other persons on the staff and outside the agency assisted with the research or read portions of the manuscript. We are grateful to them all for sharing with us the sense of the crucial importance of public education in the region at this time.

The report begins with a general appraisal of school desegregation in the region and concludes with a discussion by four black high school students who explain in concrete, specific terms what their first year of desegregated schooling has meant to them. In between are four community studies and an assessment of the continuing segregation academy movement. The four communities each reflect a different facet of the larger story. Three of the cities—Athens, Charlotte, and Mobile—were before the Supreme Court in October, 1970, and it seemed wise to report in detail on the crucial issues arising from their experience.

The report reveals, I believe, that those who say that segregation problems are solved direct attention away from the very real ones that remain, and support away from those trying to solve them. Those who, on the other hand, say all is lost have much the same effect, and encourage further retreat of the federal government and opinion leaders from the national commitment to equal education.

Emerging from this report is one highly significant point. Six sensitive and competent individuals went their own ways, essentially, to produce sections of the total. Some surveyed better situations, some the worst. Each independently concluded that the important and hopeful factor was that the students were there and involved in determining their own destiny.

This is, of course, an unfinished report. And, tragically, it probably cannot be finished for a number of years. Just as we have lost so much precious time and done so much human damage by stupidity, viciousness, and ignorance, so we seem destined to do more. Yet, we must educate our young. We must have faith in them. Perhaps, now, at least we have begun to do both.

Paul Anthony
Executive Director

THE REGION IN PERSPECTIVE

By Paul M. Gaston

I: The Numbers Game

The 1970 school year has been widely celebrated as a watershed in the long struggle for the desegregation of southern schools: sixteen years after the Supreme Court declared segregation to be unconstitutional white and black children of the region seemed finally to be going to school together.

Early in the fall, HEW Secretary Elliot Richardson announced that all but 76 of the South's some 2,700 schools districts—97% of the total—were desegregated, and that 90.5% of the region's white and black students were attending schools in desegregated districts.[1] President Nixon boasted of the achievement, and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, one of his most articulate counselors, fairly glowed with optimism. In a New York Times guest column, Moynihan reported that black children attending schools in desegregated districts had soared from 4.3% in 1967 and 6.1% in 1968 to 90% in 1970. It was with good reason, he believed, that the Southern Regional Council, in 1968, had issued a critical report entitled Lawlessness and Disorder: Fourteen Years of Failure in Southern School Desegregation.[2] Two years later it was a different world. When he took leave of federal service to return to Harvard, Moynihan appeared to be saying that no such report would ever be required again, for "that great symbol of racial segregation, the dual school system in the South, virtually intact two years ago, has quietly and finally been dismantled."[3]

To most southern veterans of the school desegregation struggle, the Administration appeared to be playing a deceptive game of numbers. To report desegregation progress in terms of districts said to be in compliance resulted in high figures but said nothing about the desegregation of schools. It obscured the fact that the pattern of segregation within so-called desegregated districts was widespread, and reinforced the fear that

[1] HEW News, October 22, 1970. This news release understated the number of public school students in the South by more than a million. (In this report, as in HEW figures, "South" means the eleven states of the old Confederacy.)

[2] New York Times, September 22, 1970. Moynihan pointedly endorsed SRC's 1968 report, which was critical of the enforcement policies of the Johnson Administration, but was silent about its 1969 report—The Federal Retreat in School Desegregation—which was critical of the Nixon Administration.

[3] New York Times, December 23, 1970.

the Administration's retreat from school desegregation, begun in 1969, was in 1970 going to be frozen into a policy that would condone extensive segregation as a permanent condition in the region.

Not until mid-January—months after the original data had made their impact—did HEW release figures concerning the actual extent of school desegregation. According to these preliminary estimates, which may not be accurate but are the only comprehensive ones available, 38.1% of southern black students are enrolled in schools with a predominantly white student body; 20.4% attend predominantly black schools ranging from 50% to 79.9% black; 23.1% attend desegregated schools in which the enrollment is 80% or more black; and 18.4% attend all-black schools.[4]

These figures do in fact reflect a significant increase in school desegregation. It would be fair to say that, for the first time, school desegregation in one degree or another is the rule rather than the exception for the children of the South. This is a far cry, however, from the final dismantling of the dual system; and the mere numbers which the Administration celebrates scarcely justify Secretary Richardson's boast that they "show clearly and dramatically that unprecedented progress has been made in school desegregation since 1968."[5] Senator Walter F. Mondale, chairman of the Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity, put the matter more accurately. "We have begun to tear down the outward manifestations of legal segregation," he wrote in December, "but we have not achieved real desegregation or quality education on the basis of a mutual respect."[6]

II: Federal Policy and National Commitment

The destruction of the "outward manifestations of legal segregation," while accelerated this year, has proceeded unevenly and largely within restrictive bounds set by the Administration. Most of the momentum for the move, moreover, came from the Supreme Court's Alexander decision (October, 1969)—a decision opposed by the Administration. In that case, the Court set aside its own "deliberate speed" doctrine, replacing it with a mandate to desegregate forthwith. The Administration, already deep in its policy of enforcement slowdown, was faced in 1970 with the task of finding a viable means of complying with the Court's decisions without abandoning its cautious and restricted approach.

In March the President announced his policy. On the one hand, he would have the government prosecute deliberate and official acts of segre-

---

[4] HEW News, January 14, 1971. Comparative percentages of the extent of desegregation for 1970 (estimated) and 1968 are as follows:

	1970	1968
Blacks as a percentage of school population	27.2%	26.6%
Blacks in majority white schools	38.1	18.4
Blacks in schools 50%-79.9% black	20.4	2.8
Blacks in schools 80%-99.9% black	23.1	10.8
Blacks in all-black schools	18.4	68.0

[5] HEW News, January 14, 1971.

[6] Walter F. Mondale, "Think of These Children," New Republic, December 26, 1970, p. 15.

gation. On the other, while recognizing the legitimacy of busing as a means of implementing various assignment plans, he would support the neighborhood school as essential to public education and he would oppose the transportation of students beyond what he called normal geographic school zones to achieve the disestablishment of the dual system.

Officials of HEW and the Justice Department operated within this framework during the summer, exerting pressure on districts still not in compliance, and multidistrict suits were brought in Mississippi and Texas. Meanwhile, Charlotte, North Carolina, and Athens, Georgia, each in different ways, implemented plans that were at odds with the Nixon doctrine. In both places the old dual system was in fact disestablished: through a combination of zoning and pairing, and with the extensive use of free transportation, unitary systems were established in which there were no white schools, no black schools, just schools. Both plans were taken on appeal to the Supreme Court. In Mobile, a plan which was closer to the Nixon ideal—and one which retained segregated schools—was likewise appealed to the Court. All three cases were argued in late October and the Court's decision was expected to resolve at least some of the argument over the extent to which segregated schools are permissible in "unitary" districts.

While the Court studied the cases before it, the Administration continued its attempt to persuade the American public not only that desegregation was operating smoothly and largely without violence, but that the major objectives of the Brown decision were on the verge of being realized in the South. Whether white Americans would agree that what Mr. Moynihan once called "benign neglect" should now be prescribed for the racial and school problems of the South, they appeared increasingly receptive to the government's arguments. Obsessed with inflation, unemployment, pollution of the air and water, drug abuse, a baffling and irreverent youth culture—not to mention crime in the streets, revolt on the campus, pornography at the movies, and the war in Vietnam—most white Americans in 1970 seemed eager to believe that school desegregation in the South was one thing that could be written off their list of concerns.

According to a Harris poll conducted at the end of the year, Americans did not consider school desegregation to be among the "top problems" with which Congress should be concerned—despite the fact that the Mondale Committee had by then compiled an impressive amount of evidence underscoring the need for Congressional action. Education ranked eighth in the list of priorities (behind student unrest) and racial problems fell in tenth place.[7] The President reflected this national complacency when he ignored desegregation in his assessment of the state of the union.

Shifting national concerns have combined with other developments to blunt the drive for genuine integration. For one thing, the long-standing alliance between civil rights forces and the federal government, weakened in the last years of the Johnson Administration and shattered in the first year of the Nixon Administration, has shown no signs of coming to life again. As one veteran civil rights leader remarked at a strategy meeting in the fall, "you used to be able to telephone Washington; at least somebody would listen sympathetically. Now, there's nobody to talk to." Within the government, to make matters worse, officials charged with civil rights enforcement resigned to protest the lack of leadership and commitment from the President, and many of their replacements lack both the experience and the will to pursue desegregation effectively.[8]

[7] Harris Survey, Washington Post, January 4, 1971.

Added to the diminished influence of civil rights leaders and the resignation of their friends from HEW and the Justice Department is the crystallization of another development that threatens to give intellectual and moral respectability to the dissipation of the desegregation effort. For sometime now—especially since racial problems have rent the North as well as the South—white Northern liberals, once sympathetic to school desegregation, have begun to have second thoughts. In student radical circles, where the crusade for integration was once a passionate concern, the issue has been shelved along with other passé delusions of the liberal establishment. Reinforcing the will to retreat of both groups, many outspoken blacks (primarily Northern) now add to their devastating critique of white-dominated desegregation the cry for black control of community schools as the only realistic alternative to the white man's sham pretensions to equal treatment. Continued failure in the South could scarcely help but strengthen the hand of those whose doubt and disillusionment is already high.

III: The "Unitary" System

It was in this atmosphere of administrative caution and national uncertainty that the new era of the unitary school system spread across the South in 1970. In Green v. New Kent County, Virginia (1968), the Supreme Court defined a unitary school system as one "without a 'white' school and a 'Negro' school, but just schools." It is this kind of system that allegedly exists in 97% of the southern school districts.

Granted the vagueness of the definition of a unitary system, one could hardly imagine an interpretation that would accommodate the kinds of situations that abound in the region. Not only do segregated schools exist on a wide scale within many "unitary" districts, but even within desegregated schools methods both ingenious and disingenuous have been used to separate blacks from whites and to place both psychological and physical burdens on black students. Classroom segregation, for example, was discovered in 273 of 467 districts monitored in September for one major study of compliance in the region.[9] The separation was sometimes arranged without apology or justification, but more frquently as the consequence of a greatly expanded "ability tracking" system, a method of assignment that has been widely perverted to perpetuate segregation.

[8] In an attempt to deny the significance of the resignations, then Assistant Attorney General William Ruckelhaus told an audience at Mount Holyoke College that the resignations of nineteen civil rights division lawyers between January and June could be regarded as "normal attrition." Washington Post, October 21, 1970.

[9] American Friends Service Committee; Delta Ministry of the National Council of Churches; Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law; Lawyers Constitutional Defense Committee; NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.; and Washington Research Project, The Status of School Desegregation in the South, 1970, p. 31.

The purpose of the Brown decision was to prohibit the unconstitutional practice of school segregation and to eliminate the kinds of discrimination that did irreparable harm to Negro students. Under the unitary system presently in operation, desegregation has all to frequently substituted new forms to perpetuate old injustices.

For example, unitary systems have frequently been created by closing down (or downgrading) formerly all-black schools and shifting the black students to the "white" schools. In the process, the blacks are the ones who take the longest bus rides, and when they get to school they find that "unitary" means preservation of the white school, with its traditions and symbols (and often its old school officers), and obliteration of the distinctive features of the black school. Discrimination in school activities further impresses on blacks the attitude that they are pawns in a white man's game.

Compounding the hurt, black students find that the authority figures who once gave them pride and a sense of security—generally their principals, but also many of their teachers and coaches—have been dismissed or demoted, and they face in their new schools a white authority structure rendered even more insidious by the proliferation of "assistant" principals who once were persons of commanding authority. As one black group put it, "Many students merely find themselves in a new world with no Black anchors to hang onto, as they try to adjust. They are faced with new standards, new teachers, new rules, new curriculums."[10] In those cases in which whites are transferred to formerly all-black schools, fumigation teams have sometimes preceded them, acting out an ancient white prejudice, now referred to cynically as "deniggerizing" the old school. These indignities, and others that will be discussed subsequently, proceed from a combination of mindlessness, sometimes well-intentioned, and deeply embedded racism, often only vaguely sensed.

If the federal government anticipated praise for facilitating this kind of "unitary system," and if it felt that its "unprecedented progress" would prevent the appearance of harsh judgments of its performance, it must have been sorely disappointed, for this has been a banner year for critical evaluations.

In a searing report published in December, the Washington Research Project and five associated groups concluded that, overall, "the progress of desegregation is in imminent danger of failure if new and stronger policies are not implemented at the federal level."[11] The Washington Post called the report "cheerless" and observed that "one can hardly escape astonishment at the meannesses and cruelties revealed by the study."[12] The Administration's Emergency School Assistance Program, hastily devised to underwrite programs aimed at making desegregation effective,

---

[10]The Educational Resources Center, Racism and the Desegregating Process: A Mississippi Study (December, 1970), p. 21.
[11]Status of School Desegregation, p. 1.
[12]Washington Post, December 26, 1970.

was faulted by the same group. HEW was accused, among other things, of "acquiescence in fraud perpetrated by local school officials."[13]

Two additional studies—one by the National Education Association and one by the Race Relations Information Center—revealed in detail the shocking plight of black teachers and principals. The NEA, focusing on Mississippi and Louisiana, reported "massive displacement of black educators" and quoted with approval the judgment of Rims Barber of the Delta Ministry that

> Black teachers are being emasculated and stripped of their standing before their own communities. Teachers with years of experience are being assigned as teacher aides or assistants to white teachers. New job categories are being created; black Mississippians will explain to you that "Co-principal is short for colored principal."[14]

The RRIC special report surveyed the entire region, concluding that "the apparent effect of desegregation on black teachers across the South this year has been more negative than positive." Rather than helping to expand the professional opportunities of black teachers, school desegregation is contracting them. Hundreds of black teachers "have been demoted, dismissed outright, denied new contracts or pressured into resigning, and the teachers hired to replace them include fewer and fewer blacks."[15]

IV: Resistance and Oppression

Writing last summer, Paul Rilling, the former southeastern regional civil rights director of HEW, said that "in the last analysis, the results in 1970-71 will depend on the posture of the federal government." Like his superior, Leon Panetta, Mr. Rilling had resigned to protest the weakening of the federal will to enforce desegregation. Further progress was dependent on the federal government, Rilling declared, because "sweeping changes will not come voluntarily in the South in 1970, any more than in other years."[16]

There have been (as will be seen later in this report) many remarkable changes, some instituted voluntarily. Of more than symbolic significance, for example, one thinks of Yolanda King, whose father once struggled to explain to her why he could not take her to Fun Town in Atlanta, now president of the junior class at the predominantly white Henry Grady High School; or, of Virginia Holton, whose father, the Governor of Virginia, could have sent her elsewhere, attending overwhelmingly black John F. Kennedy High School, and becoming a cheerleader.

---

[13] The Emergency School Assistance Program: An Evaluation, p. 61. According to another critic, "the $75 million in emergency school funds . . . was intended to be used and was used mostly as a straight payoff for their minimal compliance with the law. President Nixon's personal order was to 'get that money out there' and it was gotten 'out there,' as often as not in flagrant disregard of the nominal requirement that school districts receiving it abandon or correct any and all forms of racial discrimination in the schools." John Osborne, "Call it Desegregation," New Republic, January 30, 1971, p. 5.

[14] National Education Association, Report of Task Force III—School Desegregation: Louisiana and Mississippi (November, 1970), p. 5.

[15] Robert W. Hooker, Displacement of Black Teachers in the Eleven Southern States (Nashville: Race Relations Information Center, December, 1970), p. 1.

[16] South Today, July-August, 1970, p. 6.

But the unfortunate truth is that, given ample opportunity by federal enforcement policies, too many southern school leaders not only failed to institute "sweeping changes" but showed instead that they were still able both to frustrate the intent of federal law and damage the welfare of the children in their charge.

The frustration of court orders and HEW-approved plans was widespread. Governor Holton tried to set a good example by sending his daughter to a predominantly black school, but other leaders were defiant. George Wallace advised Mobilians to defy the law by placing their children in schools of their choice; Lester Maddox told Georgians to exercise "freedom-of-choice," whatever the courts might have ordered; and John Bell Williams, Governor of Mississippi, both counseled resistance and dramatized his personal opposition to desegregation by putting his children in private school.

The examples set by these and other unreconstructed leaders were taken to heart by thousands of private citizens and hundreds of public officials; and they found numerous ways of preventing enforcement of the law. In Mobile, for example, more than a thousand children turned up at schools to which they were not assigned. William B. Crane, chairman of the Board of School Commissioners, gave them moral encouragement by describing the court-ordered plan as "asinine." It was made by federal officials, he remarked, "and they can enforce it."[17]

Elsewhere, in less well-publicized incidents, white parents adopted all sorts of strategies to keep their children out of the newly desegregated schools. In some districts parents falsified their addresses to get their children preferred assignments. For example, a Florida school board put nine agents to work to track down parents said by the superintendent to be "lying and cheating to circumvent the court order."[18] In other areas, such as Hartsville, South Carolina, and Birmingham, Alabama, school officials appeared to raise no objection to illegal transfers. U. W. Clemon, a Legal Defense Fund attorney in Birmingham, claimed that "10,000 white students in Jefferson County alone are openly attending classes in schools where they were not assigned in violation of the court's desegregation order."[19]

Added to these evasions of the law and the insidious forms of classroom segregation discussed earlier, the 1970-71 school year has been characterized by a disturbing increase of numerous forms of in-school discrimination. Almost no form of discrimination that one can imagine has been left untried. The most common have been the exclusion of black students from school organizations, the selection of all-white homecoming courts, and the use of symbols and songs ("Rebel" and "Dixie") reminiscent of a racist tradition.

Tensions produced by in-school discrimination have caused most of the confrontations and violence accompanying the expansion of desegrega-

[17]New York Times, September 10, 1970; Washington Post, September 10, 1970.
[18]Miami Herald, September 18, 1970.
[19]New York Times, September 14, 1970; Los Angeles Times, October 8, 1970.

tion. The "Dixie" issue, which has wracked schools in all parts of the region, is an instructive example.

At Butler High School, in Huntsville, Alabama, black students (who numbered 302 of the total enrollment of 2,581) objected to the playing of "Dixie" at football games, the use of "Rebels" as the team name, and the display of the Confederate battle flag as the school flag. At a pre-game pep rally in the fall, black students walked out when "Dixie" was played and the Confederate flag waved; some returned later and tore down the flag. In the days that followed, black students—joined by high school and college students from the area—staged a march, 113 black Butler High students were suspended, students engaged police in a fight, mace was used to suppress the protestors, eight black students were arrested, and at one point a planeload of riot equipment was flown in from Chicago to be available to the police.

During the controversy the school superintendent agreed to consider the banning of "Dixie" as well as the display of the Confederate flag. White parents resented the move, insisted that no consideration be given the request of the black students, and in the midst of one mass meeting they all joined in a chorus of "Dixie." When the next football game was played few black student spectators showed up, and several black team members stayed away. The band held back until the fourth quarter when it responded to shouts of "we want Dixie," playing the tune while Confederate banners waved.[20]

"Victory celebrations" of this sort say much about the problems of racial adjustment in the desegregated schools, and failure to see them for what they are accounts for much of the anguish that schools, and their students, have experienced. In South Carolina, for example, the Columbia superintendent noted that the band leaders themselves had decided not to use Dixie. "Of course, to me," he said in an interview, "Dixie is a very beautiful tune. . . . But there is other beautiful music that can be substituted for it. We feel that inconsequential things like that should be avoided if there is any danger of causing conflict."[21]

The belief that quarrels over such issues as "Dixie" are essentially "inconsequential" is apparently held by many white schoolmen, not to mention those farther removed from the scene. Dr. Cyril B. Busbee, State Superintendent of Education in South Carolina, illustrated this attitude in a recent speech before the state's high school principals. Dwelling largely on disciplinary complications brought about by the change to a unitary system, he said that a "school with inadequate discipline cannot conduct a productive program," and then deplored "unwarranted and unnecessary bickering over issues that were essentially trivial . . . such matters as school colors and mascots."[22]

In what used to be ordinary times, when student bodies were more-or-less homogeneous, agitation over such matters as school songs and colors

[20]Birmingham News, October 10, 13, 14, 15, 17, 1970.
[21]Columbia (S. C.), The State, August 30, 1970.
[22]Columbia (S. C.) The State, January 9, 1971.

no doubt could be regarded as "inconsequential" and "trivial." The point, of course, is that these are not ordinary times and student bodies are not homogeneous. To most black students, the strains of "Dixie" are laden with contempt for their dignity. Whites who insist on retaining the song are seen as insensitive and naive, at best; implacable enemies, at worst.

V: Violence and Intimidation

Much of the violence that has taken place this fall stems from the wounds to black sensitivity inflicted by schoolmen either unable or unwilling to come to terms with the racism in their institutions. Consider, for example, the case of Earle, Arkansas.

Earle is a small farming community of 3,000, some twenty miles from Memphis, in the Mississippi Delta. Approximately 60% of the population is black. The mayor, alderman, police chief, and school board members are all white. Earle's schools were desegregated at the beginning of the fall term. According to a special report prepared by the Arkansas Council on Human Relations:

> The mascot of the black school was dropped in favor of the mascot symbol of the white school. The principals of the formerly all black schools became assistant principals of the elementary school and the combined junior-senior high school. The black basketball coach became an assistant coach, although he was the senior coach in the district, and was deprived of his duties of teaching science. White cheerleaders had already been chosen by the students at Earle High, and no effort was made to add any blacks to their number.

Over the summer black leaders who anticipated many of these conditions asked for changes. When school opened, their worst fears were confirmed. In the elementary school:

> No white children were in a class in which they were in a minority; testimony indicated that in the whole system, with the exception of a remedial reading class, no black teachers taught any white children; all of the new teachers hired since last May have been white; rolls were called on a segregated basis—whites first, then blacks; classes were largely segregated except for some elective courses.

According to the report, School Superintendent Sam Bratten explained in Federal Court that ability testing accounted for classroom segregation, but then admitted "that exceptions were made to assign white students to all-white classes whether or not their ability scores justified it." He then explained that "in his judgment and that of the School Board, 'the parents would prefer the present arrangement.' A further question revealed that he was referring to white parents."

The black students in Earle protested against these conditions. Some three hundred walked out of class and began a march to the superintendent's office, where they intended to register their complaints in person. They never reached the office. They were told to disperse by the county sheriff; they obeyed his order. That night some thirty of the marchers, some as young as thirteen, were arrested for violating an anti-picketing ordinance passed during the summer. Arrested on a Monday night, they were taken to the county jail, twenty miles distant in Marion, where they were held until Thursday when they were tried and convicted.

The abuse of the black students of Earle, and the swift crushing of their protest, exacerbated more general community racial tensions and sparked an adult march that resulted in beatings and more arrests. Federal court hearings led to an order for slight modifications of in-school discrimination practices, but many of the black students never returned to school. According to a count in November, some 390 of them were attending the newly organized "Soul Institute," an all-black "private academy," reported to be "beset by lack of funds, teachers, and materials."[23]

The confrontation at Earle is part of a story that has chapters in all parts of the South. A few examples can only suggest the kinds of abuse, violence, and intimidation that have been visited upon black students—the price they have paid for the "unitary" school districts in too many parts of the region.

—Black students in Coffeeville, Mississippi, began a boycott of their school when term opened. Nearly 1,100 students stayed out protesting a court-approved plan of segregation-by-sex. Student picketers were arrested, but District Judge William Keady subsequently ordered that the segregation-by-sex plan he had earlier approved be abandoned at the end of the semester. "It is now clear," he wrote, that "there is a strong unmistakable feeling in the black community in Coffeeville that this court put a stamp on a plan which calls for racial discrimination."[24]

—In East Tallahatchie, Mississippi, 125 black students were arrested on charges of trespassing and disturbing the peace. Protesting against the elimination of some school activities, a busing system that placed a greater burden on them than on white students, and against other actions of the school board, they were incarcerated in the maximum security camp at Parchman penitentiary because the county jail could not accommodate them.[25]

—In Bogalusa, Louisiana, 600 students released pent-up racial tension in a two-hour fight after a football game. School was subsequently closed while blacks picketed with signs reading "Integration on the Outside, Segregation on the Inside." [26]

—In Jacksonville, Florida, forty black students picketed in protest against being transferred from an accredited all-black school, which was closed, to the unaccredited Robert E. Lee High School. Some objected to attending a school named after a "white racist." The superintendent informed them that their former school was being closed under court order.[27]

—A demonstration of black students at South Iredell High School, in

---

[23]Arkansas Council on Human Relations, Earle Report, November 24, 1970.

[24]Jackson Daily News, September 30, October 11, 1970. Several hundred black students remained out of school throughout the first semester.

[25]Greenville (Miss.) Delta Democrat-Times, October 21, 22, 1970; Jackson Daily News, October 22, 1970.

[26]New Orleans Times-Picayune, September 15, 18, 1970; New York Times, September 15, 1970.

[27]Miami Herald, September 9, 1970.

North Carolina, protesting the absence of black students from the 15-girl homecoming court, led to 120 suspensions ("School Suspends Rebellious Blacks"), 22 arrests, and cancellation of the homecoming festivities.[28] In the neighboring county, at South Rowan High School, the decision of school authorities to ban "Dixie" as the fight song for the "Rebels" led to a walkout and protest by white students, supported by their parents. No whites were arrested and the ban on "Dixie" was lifted, at least for the time being.[29]

The repression and violence that have spread with school desegregation this year—of which these few examples are barely suggestive—are symptomatic of a malaise of frightening potential. As one SRC school desegregation field worker observed in late February, "the handwriting is on the wall." Student patience with administrative blundering and rigidity is wearing increasingly thin, and there has been no diminution of racial confrontations. Indeed, each week brings news of situations that should stand as warnings of the dangers that lie ahead.

At this critical juncture, responsible authorities must be awakened to the need for imaginative and constructive leadership. Unless there is a swift and substantial redirection of school policies, the frustrations and bitterness that have been building up throughout the year will almost surely erupt in the spring. Elections for next year's class officers, tensions caused by school proms, a more crowded social schedule, the warm weather, and the realization that a year is passing without fundamental problems being resolved—all of these are likely to result in protests and a round of repressive measures unmatched by what has happened already.

VI: Change and Hope

Studies of school desegregation have recorded and lamented the meanness and intransigence of the South and have faulted federal policy ever since the Brown decision, almost seventeen years ago. Events in the present year require continuation of that unhappy tradition; and the growing national feeling that the battle is no longer of much importance adds to its urgency. On the other hand, the changes that have taken place in the schools—some of them quite extraordinary—must be acknowledged, and the issues and challenges that lie ahead defined.

At one level, the kind of change that the South is witnessing can be measured by the grudging adjustment of whites who now accept desegregation as an inevitable fact of life. In Perry County, Mississippi, for example, a white construction worker was waiting nervously for his daughter at the end of her first day in the newly desegregated school. "If anything happens to my girl," he remarked, "if she's insulted by a nigra, I'll come over here and knock hell out of Adcox." Mr. Adcox, the principal, was pleased by the news: "That's great; that's progress," he observed. "Last year, the same man said he would shoot me if we desegregated the [28]Raleigh News & Observer, September 29, 30, 1970; Charlotte Observer, September 29, 30; October 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 1970.

[29]Raleigh News and Observer, September 24, 25, 26; October 23, 1970; Charlotte Observer, September 24, 25, 26, 28, 29; October 1, 7, 1970.

school."[30]

Acceptance of the inevitable is variously manifested. It may appear in the pomposity of the bitter newspaper editor who scores HEW bureaucrats and rails at the extending tentacles of what he calls the "federal octopus," but takes a kind of perverse pride in boasting that the "success with which schools are being desegregated . . . is due to the determination of most Southerners, black and white, to comply with the law—regardless of how distasteful or unwise they might regard it."[31] Sometimes it is reflected in the way youngsters influence their parents, as in the case of the white high school student who told his parents he preferred the formerly all-black Booker T. Washington High School to the segregated academy they wanted him to attend. "We don't have any bad feelings about it," the mother confessed. "We're all resigned to it now."[32] And in other instances it will be revealed by the decision of a small town mayor, such as Lamar Munroe of Quincy, Florida, to spurn the white flight movement and send his daughter to the newly desegregated junior high school where blacks outnumber whites four-to-one.[33]

In some communities the ominous transfer of whites to the segregation academies has either slowed down or been reversed. In Port Allen, Louisiana, for example, a boycott begun last year cut white enrollment from 2,300 to 400. In September the number was up to 1,100, and the private schools in the area had dropped from seven to two. Similar results have been reported for nearby Evangeline and St. Landry parishes.[34]

In Indianola, Mississippi, desegregation in January 1970 emptied the public schools of their 991 white students. In September, some 200 of them returned, responding to the urgings of many white community leaders as well as to the financial pinch of private education. Pleading for support of those who would join the 2,500 blacks, a young coed from the town wrote that for the returning whites "going to public school here in Indianola requires a particular kind of bravery: the courage to live a life contrary to the established life style of their peer group."[35]

It is true that the segregation academy movement has expanded this year, with enrollment in private segregated schools up from 400,000 last spring to somewhere between 450,000 and 500,000 this year. Slightly more than 5% of the region's white students attend private segregated schools. Apart from the pernicious anti-democratic spirit encouraged by it, the movement is dangerous primarily because it threatens to create virtually all-black public school systems—poorly supported by public funds—in isolated and easily forgotten areas. Prince Edward County, Virginia, where the academy movement began, has never recovered from the white flight, and the danger lies in the multiplication, entrenchment, and acceptance of more Prince Edwards.

On the other hand, instances of white return to the public schools, such

---

[30]Washington Post, August 25, 1970.
[31]Columbia (S. C.) The State, August 29, 1970.
[32]Columbia (S. C.) The State, September 1, 1970.
[33]Atlanta Journal and Constitution, October 18, 1970.
[34]Washington Post, December 26, 1970.
[35]Greenville (Miss.) Delta Democrat-Times, September 6, 1970.

as those cited above, add force to the argument that the movement will not be a pervasive one, even in majority black areas. Perhaps more important, these examples fit into the larger pattern of the growing acceptance of desegregation as the norm for southern education generally. According to a recent Harris poll, Southerners are almost evenly divided on the question of whether the Supreme Court's Alexander decision, requiring desegregation without further delay, should be approved.[36]

At still another level, the change in the South can be seen in the slow and uneven remaking of southern power structures, and in the increased importance of the black vote and of black elected officials, including school board members. Seen in regional perspective, black influence on school boards is slight, but there already are examples of the differences that representation can make. In Wabbaseka, Arkansas, for example, black students launched a school boycott in the fall, protesting—among other things—the downgrading and dismissal of black personnel. Negotiations were at a standstill. The shift in power on the school board from white to black in December made it possible to deal directly with the issues.[37]

Grudging acceptance by the white majority and increasing black political power have helped to stiffen the will and enlarge the influence of hundreds of citizens groups working, with varying degrees of understanding, to make desegregation the agent of positive change. In Durham, North Carolina, a civic group called Women In Action To Prevent Violence And Its Causes worked feverishly through the summer to prepare the community to accept a new desegregation plan. After the first three weeks of school, the Legal Defense Fund attorney who had guided the suit against the city praised the successful implementation of the plan.[38] Civic groups like the one in Durham have been a part of school desegregation history since the days of "massive resistance" in the late 'fifties. In 1970, however, they appeared to have greater opportunities than ever before.

Likewise, the potential for good will that has always existed in the South has had a greater freedom to become a reality: as the fact of desegregation becomes more firmly established, the fetters that bound otherwise friendly and decent people have been loosened. Far too few have been emancipated from their fears and suspicions, but there are those who have responded positively and who stand as examples of what must happen in the region. More black and white parents than ever before—in PTA meetings, at athletic events, and in other school and community activities—exchange views frankly, come to know each other as people rather than as stereotypes, and forge a bond out of their common concern for the welfare and education of their children.

---

[36]According to the poll, 42% approve; 43% disapprove; and 15% are unsure. Washington Post, December 29, 1970. According to a Gallup poll taken last spring, only one white parent in six offered objection to sending his child to a school in which Negroes are enrolled; six out of ten objected in 1963. On the other hand, 69% objected to sending their children to schools where Negroes are in the majority, a decline from 86% who objected in 1963. New York Times, May 3, 1970.

[37]Little Rock Arkansas Gazette, December 17, 1970.

[38]Raleigh News & Observer, September 20, 1970.

VII: The Students and the Future

In some ways the most important development in school desegregation this year is the significant role students are assuming, and for that reason widespread awareness of the contributions they are capable of making in the future is badly needed. Until very recently, school desegregation was largely a matter for adults—adults who fought court battles, waged political contests, and quarreled over school assignment plans. For the most part, students responded, working out their own private adjustments to new situations. Now, however, there is a difference. Not only are most students in desegregated schools—a fact which in itself alters the situation—but the very newness of the experience permits them to bring a freshness to their situations that sets them apart from adults. This change has occurred, moreover, at a time when youth all over the country are increasingly aware of themselves as a force in their own right, capable of making their own decisions. The fortuitous coincidence of these two developments may yet turn out to be the most hopeful aspect of future school desegregation history.

To give encouragement and provide resources for constructive student activities, the Southern Regional Council's School Desegregation Project, launched early in the fall, began to work with college students in the region, promoting discussions between them and high school students. Pilot projects in Mississippi and Georgia along with numerous conferences of high school students have convincingly demonstrated the sharp awareness of young people, and have underscored their sense that adults have too frequently failed to understand the real meaning and the real challenge of desegregation.

It is, of course, a commonplace to say that the younger generation may solve the problems that have defeated their elders; and younger generations have a long history of turning out to be quite as blind and bigoted as their predecessors. Mindful of this caveat, though, it is nonetheless difficult to suppress optimism over some of the insights youth are bringing to the desegregation issue and to delay any longer stressing the urgent need for significant programs to support their efforts. It hardly needs to be added that imaginative and socially conscious students are in the minority, any more than it is necessary to labor the point that instances of true integration are too few. The point, of course, is that one learns from examples of wisdom and humanity (perhaps more than from recitations of mindlessness and maliciousness); and that in such examples one can see the way the future must and may be shaped.

When classes began last fall at John F. Kennedy High School in Richmond, Virginia, the enrollment was 90% black. Gregory Thomas, heading a welcoming committee of black students, turned to one of the nervous new white students. "We want to make you feel at home here," he said. "This is your school, too."[39] At another school in Richmond a youngster remarked that "the majority of whites that attend seem to accept the fact that the integrated system will educate us in more than one way."[40]

[39]New York Times, September 1, 1970.

Both of these students were part of a pattern understood by a black principal in Charlotte who told an SRC reporter that "children are coming up in a brand new world." In Beaufort, South Carolina, an SRC reporter concluded that "despite the struggles, bitterness and concern of an older generation, integration has produced a new breed of student who is fighting for a flexible and innovative school system. . . ." A white high school student in Columbia, South Carolina, in a report for the School Desegregation Project, writes that black and white parents alike filled their children with apprehension during the summer before desegregation. "These attitudes of the older generation created a negative situation before the students even met," he observes, but even so he discovered that 54% of the white students and 64% of the black students in his school favored the change to complete desegregation.

In his recent study of the crisis in American education, Charles Silberman writes that schools fail to serve the real needs of students "less because of maliciousness than because of mindlessness." Like Procrustes, "stretching his guests or cutting off their limbs to make them fit the standard-sized bed his inn provided," he writes, "educators and scholars, frequently with the best of intentions, have operated on the assumption that children should be cut out or stretched or otherwise 'adjusted' to fit the schools, rather than adjusting the schools to fit the children. And most of us have tended to accept this without question."[41]

More than anything else, students today appear to be challenging the Procrustean habit of mind that determines the character of their schools. Black students who demonstrate against "Dixie" refuse to be squeezed into the bed of rebel patriotism; white students who upbraid their parents for imposing on them the racial shibboleths of another generation have outgrown the confining dimensions of the bed of white supremacy. Black and white students alike, in increasing numbers, are seeing the wisdom in the remark of a black student who told an SRC reporter in Athens that "Things won't get better until blacks and whites get to know each other as friends. That's what it takes."

Short of open and warm interracial friendship—which for most students is still something for the future—the region needs imaginative programs that will promote greater communication and mutual respect. It also desperately needs to remove the sources of tension that produce violence and repression. These objectives can only be realized by rejecting the rigidity of the Procrustean mold; by recognizing that new situations demand new solutions. Among several examples, the story of Southern Nash Senior High School, in Stanhope, North Carolina, can serve as an instructive case study.

In the midst of what many once called "Klan Country," Southern Nash was desegregated in 1969 with a white-black ratio of 60-40. Most of the students came from poor families, and few were without racial prejudices of one sort or another. With poor leadership, a nasty situation could easily have developed. It didn't. The principal appointed two teachers—one black, one white—to serve as co-sponsors of the Student Cooperative Association, the student council. Sensitive and imaginative men, they saw immediately the need to scrap the old system. "Total integration had given Southern Nash a completely new situation," one of them has written, "so we felt the need to devise a wholly new student council." Although they later confessed to several anxious moments, the faculty sponsors put most of the responsibility of creating, and then running, the new student government on the students themselves.

---

[40]Richmond News Leader, September 1, 1970.
[41]Charles E. Silberman, Crisis in the Classroom: The Remaking of American Education (New York: Random House, 1970), p. 81.

At the outset the students saw that the principle of "majority rule"—however admirable it might be in theory—would work disaster in the early stages of desegregation. They got unanimous support for the principle of equality of representation and succeeded in creating a system that earned the pride and support of the students. Crises over such issues as the election of homecoming courts, the choice of cheerleaders, and the election of student delegates to a state conference were resolved smoothly, with final votes on critical questions of principle often unanimous.

In time the test came for majority voting. The occasion was the election of five delegates to a state conference. The choice was to be made by the student assembly. Louis Low, the white faculty co-sponsor, describes what happened:

> The assembly, which consisted of 23 whites and 17 blacks, did not want to establish any racial quotas for choosing its five delegates to the convention. I wondered if the whites would finally vote down the blacks!
>
> Looking over to Pulley [Herbert Pulley, the black co-sponsor of the student association], I saw that he shared my concern. Pulley . . . suggested to me that we remain silent and let the assembly proceed. The bridge must inevitably be crossed when the students would vote without any racial quotas and choose simply on the basis of merit.
>
> We crossed our fingers while the assembly voted. The ballots were counted—three whites and two blacks were elected. Pulley and I breathed a sigh of relief.

Looking back on the experiences of the first year, Low confessed that "we did not achieve perfect racial harmony. . . . But, on the other hand, we did attain an acceptance of integration and a willingness to work together for common interests." Most of the credit, he felt, was due the students.

The foundations laid in that first year were built on in the 1970-71 session. The appraisal half way through the year was an encouraging one: "We still have a long way to go at Southern Nash, but I think we have clearly demonstrated that in the proper environment with proper spirit, integration—'Southern style'—will certainly work."[42] [42]Louis Gregory Low, "Integration 'Southern Style,'" Raleigh News & Observer, January 3, 1971.

---

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA:

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM"

By Pat Watters

I: See the bus.

Charlotte, North Carolina, allowed itself in 1970 to become a symbol and perhaps a scapegoat in the national hysteria over "busing" as a means of achieving school desegregation. With a federal court order for immediate, extensive cross-city busing extant in Charlotte, the President of the United States himself lambasted busing to achieve "racial balance." Robert Finch, then-Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, specifically denounced the Charlotte court order and one in Los Angeles, calling them "totally unrealistic." The Charlotte-Mecklenburg Board of Education had fought busing through the courts, and had acceded to the court order reluctantly. State and local politicians heaped abuse on busing; spurious actions were taken in the legislature and state courts to block busing; 68 members of the Congress, not all from the South, involved themselves as "friends of the court" against busing; the United States Department of Justice questioned the Charlotte busing order in friend-of-the-court briefs that defended the "familiar and traditional" concept of neighborhood schools; thousands of white Charlotte citizens attended rallies, wrote letters and signed petitions against "forced busing"; some picketed the home of the author of the court order, District Judge James B. McMillan; others telephoned him anonymously threatening to kill him.

There seemed little doubt that the furor and hysteria over busing contributed to—if not directly caused—the emotional climate which produced in February, 1971, the burning of the offices of the law firm which had pushed the school and other desegregation cases. Authorities said the fire was deliberately set (it was early morning, on February 4) at the former residence housing the law firm—a block from Charlotte's main business district. Julius Chambers, head of the law firm, said he assumed the fire was in reaction to "unpopular cases" of the law firm, integration cases. Fire in a similar pattern was set at his father's garage and service station in nearby Mt. Gilead, N. C., in August, 1970, when the busing furor was at a peak, and after it was rebuilt, set again in January, 1971. Here, as through the tragic history of southern racial struggle, was expression of the ultimate savagery and lawlessness that underlies the most subtle and sophisticated racism, the political exploitation of the race issue by prestigious leaders and average citizens' susceptibility to such manipulation.

The emotional climate created by adults had to be taken into account also in assessing a series of disorders that broke out among the young people in Charlotte high schools and junior high schools in late February. Evident, too, was the effect on such southern young people of having spent most of their school years in racial isolation or, at best, tokenly desegregated situations.

Resentment by black students at one high school over disciplinary action taken in an interracial incident spread tension to most schools, even elementary ones, and resulted in interracial fighting or confrontations at five other high schools and four junior high schools. Even there a minority of students was involved in actual fighting; seventy was cited as the highest number in any school.

Many students of both races tried to restore order, reduce tensions. Parents of both races quickly volunteered to patrol halls and otherwise calm things down. The students met together in the schools and some churches to discuss what had happened and what might be done.

Then spontaneously, first at one high school, subsequently at three others, the students engaged in what were called "love-in rallies"—simply coming together on their own to talk together, sing, cheer, and express mutual respect and friendship.

Whites tended to blame black students for the trouble. Blacks saw this as but one more indication of what was wrong in the first place, a failure to look at the real causes of grievance. The school administration responded to some of the specific grievances of black students. But what was wrong went deeper, involving attitudes and environmental tone.

Obviously the example of violence had long been set in the interracial context by whites in Charlotte. Those who deplored the violence of students needed to examine how such things as clamor against the court order encourages violence, and how failure to really implement the order jeopardizes the young of both races. They might not only become involved in more violence, but might feel themselves justified in what in the end can only be a ruinous process.

At the root of most of the problems in the schools was a schizophrenia of educational authority: a school board whose majority had opposed the court order, and a school administration which is regarded as having genuinely tried to implement it. This split had been evident from the beginning of the furor of white adults against busing.

Rallies, petitions, and, for a time, talk of a boycott against busing were coordinated by a "Concerned Parents Association" (CPA) which sprang up under the leadership of middle-class whites not previously prominent in civic affairs or politics. Its work was remarkably well-organized; in the spring, three of its standard-bearers were elected to six-year terms on the school board, giving it a six-to-three conservative majority. One of those elected reportedly had not voted since 1952. Leaders and members contended they were not against integration, were not racists—were merely against an inordinate amount of . . . busing.

All of the hullaballoo, continuing from February 5, 1970, when the court order was issued, until schools were opened in September, with the court order intact, and sporadically since then, was essentially over a part of the order which called for the busing of elementary school children in and out of the black section of Charlotte. (Unlike most southern cities where black people are segregated in scattered sections, Charlotte has segregated virtually all of its black citizens in one section, northwest of downtown—in what amounts to a small-city ghetto.) Integration of the more centralized high schools and junior high schools inside the city and all schools in the county was to be achieved largely through zoning, with some busing involved. It was the "pairing" of 34 elementary schools (27 others were to be desegregated by zoning) to integrate 15,301 white children with 7,077 black ones (22,378 pupils out of a total school enrollment of more than 82,000) that so upset so many people.

See the grown-up. Why is he so upset? Doesn't he look silly?

Before the busing court order, according to briefs in the case, the Charlotte-Mecklenburg system already bused 23,600 pupils on trips whose average was one hour and fourteen minutes one-way. In an interim report filed in the district court in November, 1970, the school board said 43,597 pupils were being bused, and cited round-trip time for four schools of more than one hour, the longest round-trip being two hours. The brief of Negro plaintiffs in the case, filed in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, pointed out that 54.9 per cent of North Carolina school children were riding buses daily in the 1969-1970 school year (highest amount of busing in any state). It cited previous cases in the state where school systems defended busing of Negro students to maintain segregation, one involving an 80-mile round-trip each day from Burnsville to Asheville, and another where some Negro students were bused 25 miles to a boarding school outside the county where they were required to remain all week, busing home on the weekends.

In this context, the local and national sentimentalizing of "neighborhood schools" settles into proper perspective—at best, a clutching to privilege not shared by all and not, as the Negroes' brief pointed out, a venerable tradition at all but rather a recent institution of the big cities, and, at worst, a code-phrase for maintaining the status quo of segregation.

The total of busing in Charlotte under the criticized court order was less than the state average. That which was most criticized, of elementary school children, involved ten pairs or groupings of the 34 elementary schools—with 10,303 white children going as ever to their neighborhood schools in grades one through four and 4,876 black children busing across town to join them—and 2,201 black children going to their neighborhood schools in grades five and six, with 4,998 white children busing in from the suburbs to join them. The plan for this and other regrouping of Charlotte school children beyond the program promulgated by the school board (and ruled inadequate by Judge McMillan) was drawn up by Dr. John A. Finger, Jr., of Rhode Island College. The effect, but not the purpose, of all the court-ordered desegregation in Charlotte was to obtain roughly an 80-20 ratio of white and black pupils in each school. The main purpose was to dismantle permanently Charlotte's segregated school system and to replace it with a desegregated system in accordance with Supreme Court rulings demanding unitary systems without black schools or white schools, just schools. Since rearrangements were necessary, a ratio analogous to the ratio of white and black population was possible—but integration as required by the Supreme Court rather than "racial balance" was the purpose of the plan and the court order.

Yet white Charlotte protested what leaders had led them to believe was an unnecessary disruption of "neighborhood schools" for the sake of achieving a "racial balance" beyond the compulsion of the law—all of it to be accomplished by the awful imposition on their children of "busing."

What of these children? They seemed, in Charlotte's generally excellent schoolhouses, remote, not really the subjects of such talk, remote even from the solemn statistics of the court case, and not somehow of the same nation as American adults and their chief official, so set against busing. At one of the fifth and sixth grade schools in the ghetto, a number of the white children talked of their daily bus rides to and fro. The complaints were of having to get up earlier, of inadequate heating, of breakdowns sometimes, of noise and of rowdiness sometimes.

"The only thing wrong is that long bus ride," said one boy. "But I'm getting used to it."

"The heater's in front," said another. "I'm in the back. We need some better buses."

"I don't like the bus," said a boy. "I get headaches and all. But I like this school. So I don't mind riding the bus."

A girl said, "The bus is pretty good. Two boys had a fight. One boy's head knocked the window out. But it's pretty good. You sit with whom you want." Another girl said some boys would tie a girl's hair to the seat rail without her knowing it.

A boy: "If you talk too loud, the bus driver puts you with a girl." Another: "We had assigned seats yesterday. The girls didn't like it—they like to sit with their boy friends." A girl: "Our bus driver is a matchmaker and a singer." Another: "The bus is one of the best parts of school. We can talk about things. We keep it down to a steady roar."

A boy: "The bus rides are fun. You get to meet people in other grades."

A Negro boy of the same school said: "We have to stay in school until after the buses leave. We didn't like it at first. But then we understood it was so that we wouldn't get hit by one of the buses leaving."

Was William Poe, chairman of the school board, talking about these children when he said in an interview that Charlotte was "enduring patiently" all the "inconvenience" of desegregation, hoping that the Supreme Court would get rid of "the worst features"? He said the worst was the long-distance busing of elementary school children. He said his own three children were on three different schedules; they couldn't have breakfast together. (One of three CPA school board members reportedly placed his two children in a private school.) Mr. Poe also said of the busing: "People are not going to put up with it permanently. It's not understandable to them. It's expensive, time consuming . . . It interferes with family life and church programs."

A long-time observer of Charlotte race relations said of such talk: "It wasn't the busing that was bothering most of them. They just didn't want to send their little white children into black schools, black neighborhoods."

Perhaps Mr. Poe was speaking of the children of the first four grades who boarded the big orange bus for their afternoon trip home to the ghetto from a high-income white suburban school, place of modern architecture, happy, pastel-painted halls and classrooms. They clamored on—noisy, full of energy at the end of the school day, a fine confusion in the finding of seats, changing of seats, getting settled. The driver got aboard, a matron of the neighborhood, who said she undertook the job because her own two children were being bused and she felt people should do all they could to make it all right for the children. The motor started and the bus began to pull away, and the children waved out the window to white friends starting their walk home. There was talk, laughter—much laughter, some shouting, some getting up even while the bus was moving to swap seats. (Money is not available for monitors; the driver said she has not yet mastered the skill of watching the children and the road at the same time.) A studious looking boy dropped his fine cardboard clock with movable hands on the floor. Another boy got up to pick it up and return it to him before anyone could step on it.

A white girl who rides the bus got off, stopped in front of the bus until an approaching car stopped for her, then walked safely to her yard. She turned, grinning, and waved goodbye. (The driver said the black children at first always made room near the door for the few whites who ride the bus. But soon this politeness disappeared, and frequently jostling over seats occurred. She told also of how at first one of the Negro boys always escorted the girl who got off first across the street because she had some difficulty seeing with her bifocals. Once he kept her from moving in front of a car. Her mother called to thank him for saving her life. The girl has since, said the driver, become "women's lib" and gets herself independently across the street.)

The talking, occasional shouting, the laughter keeps up—a din. A boy has a trick box—cardboard optical illusion toy. Boys and girls in relays come back to see him work it, patiently doing it over and over. A boy and girl have a mock fight—somehow gentle. Laurie who is in the third grade and Terry Ann who is in the second sit side-by-side, quiet and ladylike. Laurie has a pony tail, Terry Ann a tight braid and two pony tails. Terry Ann says she didn't ride the bus last year. She liked the school she went to last year better than the one she goes to now. Why? "Because you could stop and buy ice cream on the way home."

At the first stop, five children get off—and as people in the rear yell for the driver to wait, another comes bustling up the aisle to get off, too. At the second stop, the driver sternly admonishes everyone for all the noise—and two boys for fighting as the bus was moving.

Terry Ann points to her church out the window, and tells about how such a big crowd came Sunday night. A boy points to his dog who is kept in a neighbor's yard because it has a fence. Terry Ann tells about her two cats—Kitty and Blue Eyes. The bus is quickly unloading at intervals, stops on nearly every corner. The driver, it turns out, has extended the official stops to accommodate special situations, so that this child won't have to walk so far, that one won't have to cross a street. She knows each of the 58 children of her bus by name, takes care that none gets left behind, worries in a motherly way over their problems. She is not of that small band of southern whites who have involved themselves in race relations. She speaks of her passengers as "Negras."

Terry Ann and Laurie get off at the last stop. Now it is quiet on the bus. The trip—among the longest of the elementary school ones—has taken thirty-five minutes.

II: Some further notes on busing.

The Charlotte school system is not using enough buses for the amount of pupil transportation it has been doing. Consequently, the same bus is used to carry black pupils to their paired schools and white ones to theirs. One school starts at 7:30 (the previously all-white one) and the other at 8:30, with staggered closing hours of 2:30 and 3:30. (Schools were open only an hour and a half for one day the first week.) Black children, who do the most of the busing, have to catch buses the earliest. Tacitly, the arrangement reflects official fear that white parents would not have stood for an arrangement the other way around or fairly balanced, that they might have carried out rather than talked about a boycott. In 1969-70, the system used 278 buses. In 1970-71, it used 500. Some are old ones obtained from the state. Not all are in good repair. The county commission controls appropriations for such equipment. Partly in anticipation of a final order from the Supreme Court regarding the busing, the commission has been doling out the extra money a month at a time. In January, the school board voted against using available federal funds to afford not merely the inadequate transportation currently in use, but an adequate supply of buses and personnel. Much of the criticism of busing has centered on the exorbitant extra cost. Judge McMillan pointed out in court orders and an interview that additional cost for transporting children adequately to implement desegregation would be less than one per cent of the multi-million dollar school budget.

Miss Bernice McMurray, principal of Rama Road Elementary School, one of the paired formerly all-white schools in a high-income white suburb, said the biggest problem has been transportation and the money to pay for it. "You never know if they're going to be on time." When a driver calls in sick, the principal must find a substitute. If this, or the not infrequent breakdowns, causes a delay "two busloads of children wait in the cold." Worried parents have to be reassured, phone call after phone call, when the buses are late in the afternoon. "If we didn't have so much trouble getting the children here and back, this would be one of the best experiences ever for all the children," she said.

Dr. William Self, superintendent of schools, was in charge of the hurriedly-organized transportation system whose handicapped accommodation of the court order has been an impressive achievement. Generally respected by integrationists and segregationists alike for competence and integrity, Dr. Self was asked in an interview whether he thought the desegregation could be kept going. "I don't know," he said slowly, shaking his head. "The most important question is whether a large amount of money will be committed that has not been committed so far." Most of this would be for transportation, he said.

III: The legal question.

In 1965, Charlotte and Mecklenburg County combined their school systems and adopted what amounted to a zoning and freedom-of-choice method of desegregation—which was given federal court approval. In September, 1968, Negro parents asked the federal district court to compel the school board to eliminate all discrimination in the school system as the Supreme Court had ruled that year school boards had an obligation to do. After extensive hearings, Judge McMillan ruled on April 9, 1969, that schools were unconstitutionally segregrated, that freedom-of-choice had not worked, that the black population of Charlotte was concentrated in one area because of discriminatory laws and government action rather than natural causes, that the school board had located and controlled the size and population of schools so as to maintain segregation, and that transportation by bus was a legitimate tool for desegregating schools. He ordered the school board to draw up plans to eliminate segregation of pupils and faculty.

A plan submitted by the school board in June was ruled inadequate in every respect. Another, calling for transportation of 4,245 black children, submitted in July, was accepted "only with great reluctance" by Judge McMillan as a temporary one-year arrangement, with the reservation that one-way busing would not thereafter be acceptable. He ordered that a new plan be submitted by November for 1970-71. In the meantime, the court found that only 1,315 instead of 4,245 children were bused in the fall of 1969. When the board filed a new plan altering attendance lines of only a few schools, Judge McMillan rejected it out of hand. He had previously held that the Supreme Court decision in Alexander v. Holmes County precluded further delay, and now, noting the board's acknowledged refusal to produce a plan which would comply with Supreme Court decisions, he appointed Dr. Finger to prepare a plan.

In February, 1970, the board presented its fourth plan, and Judge McMillan accepted parts of it for junior and senior high schools, adding parts of the Finger plan where required for full integration, and ordered implementation of the Finger plan for elementary schools. (Here, finally, after so many opportunities for the board to find anything better that would be in compliance, was the notorious busing plan.)

Judge McMillan, again citing the Supreme Court dictum to desegregate

now, litigate later, ordered the plan for elementary schools implemented by April, and the one for junior and senior high schools by May. The school board appealed and asked delay until September. Judge McMillan, however, ordered a delay until September himself after the Supreme Court indicated a new inclination to tolerate that. The delay came on the day after President Nixon's policy statement on schools which denounced busing.

Gov. Bob Scott (Democrat) had urged President Nixon to have the Justice Department intervene against Judge McMillan's order, and many Charlotte whites sent a form telegram to the President: "Faced with forced busing. Request intervention as per campaign promise." The Justice Department did so intervene, with Jerris Leonard, assistant attorney general in charge of civil rights, writing in a friend-of-the-court memorandum to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals that "courts might carefully consider whether, for the purpose of achieving a precise, system-wide racial balance, a plan would require a school board involved to make unreasonable increments in transportation expenditures, the number of students bused, distances traveled and the like." And: "Thus we think that the question facing this court is whether, in view of the District Court's supplemental findings, the circumstances of the case and the alternatives reasonably available, the court below (McMillan) invoked a remedy so extreme as to constitute an abuse of discretion." (It was the second time the Nixon Justice Department had sided against equal school opportunity; the first was when it sought delay of 30 Mississippi cases in August, 1969, at which point the Supreme Court issued its order to desegregate at once.) Abuse of discretion is a reason for overruling a district judge in such a case—but the harshness of tone in the Leonard memorandum almost makes one believe it was written out of pique.

(A friend-of-the-court brief to the Supreme Court by Solicitor General Erwin S. Griswold was more balanced. Though it seemed to argue for desegregation and against busing even though the latter might be the only way to achieve the former, it did grant a district judge his leeway in such a ruling as McMillan's—in this instance so long as he did not base the ruling on a belief the Constitution required a racial balance.)

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in May upheld the plan for junior and senior high schools and, in effect, rejected that for elementary ones—ordering a new plan based on HEW assistance. It declared itself favorably impressed with the Justice Department brief, and stated that not every school in a unitary system must be integrated, and urged a standard of "reasonableness" for attaining integration. The Supreme Court in June reinstated Judge McMillan's order for elementary schools but remanded the case to his court for further proceedings pending its own hearings in the Charlotte and other cases in October. Judge McMillan, when neither the board of education, the plaintiffs, nor he liked the plans developed by HEW for elementary schools, ordered the original Finger plan back in force for them—and so it was when schools opened in September.

The Charlotte case, through this history and in arguments when the Supreme Court held its historic October hearings, raised important questions which the court in its discretion could or could not have considered: (1) the whole question of busing and neighborhood schools—whether limitations are to be put on busing even if it is the only way to achieve a unitary school system; (2) whether desegregation of all all-black schools is indeed a necessary criterion for establishing a unitary system; (3) whether previous rulings requiring desegregation of all all-black schools in small-town systems apply to complex urban situations.

Beyond this, regardless of the Supreme Court's eventual ruling, the Charlotte case is one of several which seem to raise an ultimate question about school integration in America's democracy. A strong part of the original case was the evidence presented and ruling by Judge McMillan that government action was responsible for the location of black people in one isolated part of Charlotte. Involved in this were city zoning regulations, city planning, urban renewal, public housing locations, street and public highway locations—in effect, actions by all levels of government, state, local and national, as well as private discrimination. Judge McMillan ruled: "There is so much state action [state as defined as subject to the Fourteenth Amendment] embedded in and shaping these events that the resulting segregation is not innocent or 'de facto' and the resulting schools are not unitary or desegregated." If this might be said of Charlotte, North Carolina, of what city in the United States might it not? Were such evidence considered nationally, President Nixon's disingenious vow to fight "de jure" segregation might turn out to mean the opposite of what he seemed to intend. The Supreme Court might limit its ruling to the particulars of the Charlotte case and the discretion of Judge McMillan's particular rulings and actions. But if the original Supreme Court outlawing of school discrimination is ever to be followed to its logical end, if all of white America is ever to face its essential hypocrisy in the matter, America will have to deal with the broad question raised by Charlotte and its mini-ghetto and the government action that created it.

IV: Judge McMillan.

He was generally considered as one of the establishment lawyers before his appointment to the federal bench in 1968. He speaks freely and honestly in his rulings of his own emotional bias against busing before he faced the facts of Charlotte's deliberate segregation of schools, and the consequences. (How it came about and what it did to children were the two things that most struck him in the long process of hearings in the case, he said in one press interview.) The evidence of consequences was presented in terms of relative scores of black children and white on standard achievement tests. Sixth graders in all-black schools scored at about fourth grade level; children in integrated and all-white schools scored considerably higher.

"I lived here 24 years without knowing what was going on," he said in an interview. "I really didn't know."

He is 54, the son of a North Carolina farm family (he was bused 26 miles a day to his segregated high school), a graduate of the University of North Carolina and Harvard Law School, a Navy veteran, past president of the state bar association, a Democrat, a past leader in court reform. He has sandy hair, fair skin, a farmer's plain face with a stubborn mouth. His voice, enunciation is dry, ironic. He has carried a pistol for self-protection at heights of emotional reaction to his rulings. A colleague, representative of the level of sophistication from which professional criticism of him has come, said local lawyers thought he was just one of them—but then found out after he got on the bench that all along he "belonged to the American Civil Liberties Union and other left-wing activities like that." In a press interview when asked about his friendships with conservative colleagues, Judge McMillan said: "Just because I drink with a man is no sign I think like him."

Dick Phillips, dean of the University of North Carolina Law School, "defended" him (with a southern dry humor equal to his own) against some of the charges that have been made since the ruling:

> It's not fair to call him a liberal and not fair to say he picked it up at Harvard. He's enlightened in the sense of the most progressive people in the state. His character and ideas had been determined long before he went to Harvard. He came up during the Depression and was raised by a good mother. He went to church and he went to Chapel Hill.

Asked in an interview how it came to be he, of all the South's district court judges, who finally confronted face-on the compelling question of busing, he spoke of a penchant for consistency, an inability to retreat from the simple logic of the law of the case. In his final "busing order" for the 1970-71 school year, issued on August 3, 1970, he addressed himself to the idea of "reasonableness" (without mentioning its having been raised by the Circuit Court) and summed up more eloquently his grasp of the meaning of law for the South and America:

> Reasonable remedies should always be sought. Practical rather than burdensome methods are properly required. On facts reported above, the methods required by this order are reasonable. However, if a constitutional right is being denied, this court believes that it is the constitutional right that should prevail against the cry of unreasonableness . . . If, as this court and the Circuit Court have held, the rights of children are being denied, the cost and inconvenience of restoring those rights is no reason under the Constitution for continuing to deny them.

V: A further legal note.

The Charlotte case was prepared and fought by the legal firm of Chambers, Stein, Ferguson and Lanning, one of the growing number of integrated law firms in southern cities with a special interest in racial and social justice. The issues confronted, the alertness to relevant recent Supreme Court rulings, the ability to fit the law to the whole context of Charlotte's racial and social problems (a current suit seeks affirmative government action for open housing) by such law firms is part of a new chapter in the long southern history of struggle through the courts for racial justice—in which the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., as in Charlotte, continues to be a source of strength.

VI: Notes, political and otherwise.

Spokesmen who claimed the Concerned Parents Association was not essentially racist or segregationist were probably by their lights telling the truth—even though the organization likely did have the support of hard-line segregationists and such people as have practiced sporadic terrorism, telephone threats, home bombings, over the years of Charlotte's racial struggles. By all accounts, many of the "better" whites voted for the CPA candidates for the school board. Whether many now regret this or have come to a degree of acceptance of busing after seeing it work is a matter of conjecture; some think so, others not. Most observers agree the organization will remain effective in politics where integration is an issue, but will not otherwise amount to a cohesive force. But local and state politics suffered erosion from the furor over busing. Two-way re-enforcement was evident: the people influenced the leaders who in turn further inflamed the people. Governor Scott for a time seemed to take a hands-off position on busing, but as public sentiment grew hotter in Charlotte, he became an avid anti-busing spokesman. This is familiar enough in southern racial demagogic politics; what made it different this time in Charlotte and other parts of the South was that the highest official in the country seemed to be involved in the process.

The effect of Nixon southern-strategy politics on Charlotte was part of a general pattern: Just as the campaign-promised weakening of HEW seemed to offer surcease from compliance with school integration law, the courts became more demanding than HEW had ever been. The administration, caught in a dilemma, ended up pleasing no one. Its rhetoric displeased integrationists; its inability to stop overnight the direction of the courts displeased those against busing and/or integration. The brand of politicians directing the frustrated strategy must have been sorely tempted to try to put more than ordinary pressure on the judiciary.

Mr. Poe told why people like himself were so upset by the demands of the judiciary and why they were so disappointed over the administration's inability to do anything about the demands. In the telling, there is insight into how so much of the white populace of Charlotte, surely no worse than most white Southerners in racial attitudes, indeed reputed in the past to be a little better, could become so vociferous in what essentially amounted to a law-resistant position. Mr. Poe said he journeyed to Washington twice to see Mr. Leonard and once to see Mr. Griswold, and each time all he wanted to tell them was that Charlotte was not some rural, recalcitrant, racist place, but had tried all along to obey the integration law. It therefore deserved more time to work out its problems.

Perry Morgan, editor of the Charlotte News, whose anti-busing stand has been so strong that he has emerged as a sort of central figure in the situation, said much the same thing as Mr. Poe in an interview. He said if the court really wanted integration it would have given a city like Charlotte with a good past record of compliance time to evolve a long-range building program to put schools where they could be integrated without so much busing.

Meanwhile, Charlotte was waiting for the Supreme Court to rule on its case. The waiting has been a crucial part of what has happened so far. Many of the children, especially in the upper grades, have not identified themselves with the school they attend, have not become involved in activities or even studies deeply, feeling the arrangement to be temporary. Some observers said most white parents have accepted the busing so far only because they believe the Supreme Court will throw it out. Dire predictions are made on both sides of what might happen when the court rules. Blacks, in some views, would be disillusioned with the nation by an adverse ruling to the point of severe alienation, if not violence. Some whites, including Mr. Poe and Mr. Morgan, predict massive withdrawal of white support of public schools should the ruling uphold busing. Mr. Morgan spoke of a resulting "integration of the impoverished."

Both the boycott effort at the beginning of the year and an attempt to stir separatist sentiment in the black community failed. No more than 2,000 white children were withdrawn to segregationist private schools. One observer cited as the reason for this, North Carolina's tradition of plain people dependent on and believing in public education. The state has no aristocracy of graduates of select private schools, as some southern ones do. This meant, in his view, that whites would rant and rail if the present plan were upheld, but eventually would accept it. There are at least a few small hints so far in Charlotte that they might even come to like it.

It is easy, of course, to point out how many years since 1954 Charlotte has had to do whatever was necessary to comply with the law. But the truth is that in the faulty manner in which school (and other) integration law has been enforced, in the essential hypocrisy of America's past approach to the obligations of this law, including the hypocrisy of blinding itself to the "de jure" nature of most "de facto" segregation, Charlotte has been technically in compliance. The plaint of men like Mr. Poe and Mr. Morgan was basically the familiar one of Southerners over a decade of gradualism: I've been for all that's gone before, but now they've gone too far. In this context, the CPA claim that it is not segregationist and the less sophisticated versions of Mr. Poe's position vocalized by the CPA school board members are easier to understand and somehow less sinister.

The people caught in the anti-bus hysteria, many of them, seem in this view more mistaken than racist. Better local and state leadership might have at least given them a more accurate, realistic view of their position vis-a-vis the law. (The city's other paper, The Charlotte Observer, has generally supported the court order, but less vigorously after reported loss of circulation over the stand.) National leadership has since 1954 been more deeply at fault. Something is indeed wrong with a nation which could allow leaders in a place like Charlotte to convince themselves or kid themselves into thinking that, even as they continued the process of building a ghetto and a system of segregated schools, they were in compliance with law against segregation.

The setting fire to the Chambers firm's law offices might be expected to shock some white Charlotte leaders and people into seeing what at base all along they have stood for. But such terrorism in the past obviously did not provide immunity against the busing hysteria. In the spring of 1965, Mr. Chambers' automobile was dynamited in New Bern, N. C., while he was attending a civil rights rally. Three Ku Klux Klansmen were arrested, and given suspended sentences. On November 22, 1965 (the second anniversary of the assassination of President John Kennedy), bombs were exploded in the predawn hours at the homes of four black Charlotte leaders—Mr. Chambers, City Councilman Fred Alexander, his brother, Kelly Alexander, state president of the NAACP, and Dr. Reginald Hawkins, dentist and militant civil rights leader. Damage was considerable at all four homes; fortunately none of the occupants, including sleeping women and children, was injured. The case has never been solved.

On the surface, Charlotte does not seem the kind of place of raw racist hatred that would engender such terrorism. Whites in the past prided themselves on their peaceful acquiesence in token desegregation, made it a subject of Chamber of Commerce boosterism. Thoughtful black people, viewing the past and the recent furor over busing, say simply that racism is just more subtle, more sophisticated. The terrorism shows that the meaning of racism, raw or subtle, is the same, just as the effect—as on children in the previously segregated Charlotte schools—is the same.

VII: See the schools.

It is in the light of so much of Charlotte's adult response to school desegregation, and the failure of so much adult leadership, from the President on down, that the disturbances among the young people in the schools in February must be judged. It was possible shortly before they occurred to assess major problems within the schools and conclude that desegregation was succeeding, despite adults. Their occurrence suggests the importance of paying immediate attention to the problems within the schools and the deeper need to understand what these problems mean to the young people involved. In interviews with school officials, teachers, parents and young people, the following emerged as main problems during the six months leading up to the February disturbances:

Discriminatory attitudes, actions on the part of some officials and teachers, some children (this a minority balanced by another minority making every effort to help integration work); internal segregation in the schools, the very most of this resulting from grouping of children within classes on the basis of performance levels; some indications of suspensions and expulsions too heavily among blacks giving rise to the suspicion among some blacks that it is to cut down the amount of integration; roughhousing, interracial fighting (how much of it normal, how much racial is problematical); disruptions from bomb threats, busing delays and monitoring by parents, mostly white ones of the black-area schools; narcotics (again, with no ascertainable racial significance). One high school teacher said discouragedly that sometimes a day could be counted good or bad on the basis of whether there was a bomb threat, or whether police had come in looking for a student about some offense outside the school. The latter problem would seem an interracial class concern and a problem of the whole community made visible to the whole community by desegregation. A more serious concern was the same teacher's feeling that parents opposed to busing were watching every move of teachers, in effect repressing their freedom of expression and choice of materials.

Grievances articulated by black students during and after the disturbances reflect the same problems—calls for black administrative officials and counselers in schools where there are none, for more active human relations committees in the schools to foster communication between the races and between students and school officials. There had been resentment among black students that Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday was not properly observed. Students of both races who are bused resented club activities and the like being held after school because it is difficult for them to attend. Students who had changed schools felt a sense of loss of school traditions, spirit; this particularly affected black high schoolers because all high schools had become predominantly white.

Another issue, evident in January, suggests how the struggle to achieve desegregation has brought to light attitudes long abiding in public education which tend to attach more importance to things than to children, and which ignore the legitimate wishes of the children. This issue had nothing to do with race; indeed, a black student at one of the high schools where no trouble occurred said white and black students were united in a stand about it. The issue was lunch time—complaint of a lack of enough time to get through cafeteria lines and eat leisurely. In some instances, this had led to jostling for places in line.

Other issues suggested a deeper layer of problems. Black students felt that expulsions and police actions (some 15 or 20 cases) went too heavily against blacks in the aftermath of the disturbances. Julius Chambers said an investigation was underway to determine whether this should be raised in federal court. He was critical of a four-hour school board meeting, televised locally, at which principals told what had happened at each school. He said it seemed to be trying and convicting black students. One principal used the pronunciation, "Negra." A white, senstive to race relations, could view the same meeting and consider the performance of the prinicipals generally constructive. In this way, the struggle for integration continued as an educational process for black and white Southerners, showing them, among other things, wide gulfs in perception as a part of the legacy of segregation.

The most hopeful instance of such education were the rallies that occurred at the high schools. Dr. Laird Lewis, principal of Myers Park High School, described his own feelings watching two thousand young people joining hands in a circle, singing, some of them crying. "It was like the old-time religion. There were white and black, rich and poor, expressing mutual respect and love for one another." He said there was at least for the time less self-segregation in the cafeteria and student lounge, and less fear and distrust among students.

Dr. Self suggested at the four-hour school board meeting that additional staff be hired to comprise teams, one white and one black, of human-relations workers in each high school. Their job would be to build on student communication already established to develop future programs. (During previous months, the school administration had employed such things as a rumor-control center and closed-television instructions in human relations for principals and teachers.) Negro Alderman Fred Alexander had earlier proposed a new procedure for police in handling school disturbances. He said a white and black team of officers should make an initial investigation and be empowered to decide whether more officers were needed. (The intrusion of many police and many parents on the disturbance scenes had been as disruptive as the fighting, some observers said.)

Principal Lewis and Alderman Alexander both, in differing ways, directed themselves to the problems underlying the specific causes of student discontent. Dr. Lewis spoke of a general atmosphere of frustration and tension. "You can't change everything with just a quick move," he said, expressing confidence, though, that desegregation would work. He spoke of frustrations for both races, of adult distrust, unrest.

Mr. Alexander addressed himself to the split in the attitude of the school board majority and the school administration. Somebody, he said, had to tell the school board people were not going to put up with what it was doing. He said the attitude of the school board was against desegregation, against the federal court intervention, and on the side of "anybody else against desegregation." Thus principals and teachers not wanting to cooperate with desegregation did not feel they had to follow administration procedures. And those trying to make desegregation work are "scared of the school board," he said.

Beyond busing hysteria and schoolhouse fist-fights, the impressive thing about Charlotte is that things have worked as well as they have against so many impediments. Given anything like the support and the resources they deserve, the young people and those operating the schools do seem capable of moving beyond the mere physical placing of bodies in a unitary school system. The problems, both on the surface and at deeper levels, are not insurmountable. Given half a chance, Charlotte could achieve real integration, and that would mean real education.

VIII: See the children.

In ultimate terms of real education, the important thing to have seen in Charlotte was the resilience of the young people. The "love-in" rallies that followed the disturbances in February were a magnificent display of the will of a majority of them to work things out for themselves, to escape past patterns of destructiveness, to deal creatively with a situation made unnecessarily difficult by those past patterns. It was this in the Charlotte young people (and their counterparts across the South) that dedicated educators could encourage, and build upon. Surely parents saw the beauty of spirit flickering there; surely they would be proud of their children, and encourage the good in them.

The rallies were a dramatic, spontaneous expression of something that had been there all along, that adults, parents, teachers, school officials alike, needed to listen to and learn from. A black student at one of the high schools where a rally occurred, Calvin Miller, described how it felt afterward. "Things are a whole lot better. People are talking to each other now, mixing in together — everyone is really cooperating now, really talking to each other."

Here, student-created, was the basis for building within the schools customs and programs that would remove the barriers of racial concern from the main purpose of education. And here was the basis for the cooperative reconstruction of education—to listen to the students, consider their interests, utilize their creativity. Charlotte had the opportunity in its desegregated schools to accomplish such real reconstruction of education, so badly needed across the South and the nation. There were as many impediments, as many signs of failure present as ones of hope—but everywhere, given a chance, the potential of the young was evident.

In the white suburban school, a second grade is having a play period out in the pretty lobby. Happy music is coming from a record player, and different groups are doing different things, some jumping rope, some dancing, some playing catch, some using an indoor bowling set. The black teacher moves easily among the black and white youngsters, seeming to enjoy all their noise and exuberance. At the end, she organizes them for a group game. Part of the class forms a circle; each in the other part stands behind the child he wants as a partner. Race is obviously transcended. Some partnerships are black and white, some white and white, some black and black.

It is not so in an eighth grade algebra class. The students drift in before class, seat themselves randomly. Most whites are on one side of the room; the whites who are on the other are separated by a row of chairs from the five black students in the class.

At the Oak Lawn Elementary School, one of the fifth and sixth grade schools in the ghetto, it is felt that the teacher has a responsibility to guide children away from such grouping which grows as much out of cultural experience, familiarity, as race. This school is considered one of the most successful in taking advantage of the new educational opportunities in Charlotte. The philosophy of the black principal, Mrs. Gwendolyn D. Cunningham, pervades classrooms and hallways, is reflected in the openness of black and white faces of the children. The philosophy seems to be one of loving children and encouraging the best in them. She moves about the school, energetic, enthusiastic, calling out to children, seemingly knowing each by name, stopping to talk with any who wants to. A white boy approaches her, says he has decided not to seek a transfer to another teacher after all. He had complained the teacher picked on him. Mrs. Cunningham had suggested to him that he would take his real problem with him. What was that? Himself. He had thought it over and agreed, he said, and would try to work out that problem without changing teachers. Was the teacher black? Mrs. Cunningham chuckled—no, no.

Child after child said he liked the school because children were considered important and were allowed to work out their own problems. A white teacher, transferred into this new situation after being in the same white school for thirty years, said: "They're just children. Only two parents were at our Christmas party. I wish they could have all been there. They would have seen for themselves how well the children are getting along."

A black teacher, experienced more than most in integrated education, told of a thing that happened in one of her classes. A black pupil, large for his age, tending to be a bully, had showed from the beginning hostility to white children. She had talked with him, with his mother about it. His mother felt much the same way. But finally all three agreed that given the situation, the thing to do was to try to get along in it. When the boy was absent one day, white and black children came to the teacher about him. In the spirit of the school, it is not considered tattling to talk about another child's problem. The problem they came with was that the boy had been taking pencils and the like from everybody. They showed in his desk a plastic bag stuffed full of such contraband—a fantastic amount. She confronted him the next morning, gently, sympathetically. He finally admitted all were not his. What should he do? Give them back, he said. How would he do it? He would handle it. As is the custom in the class, if a child has something to say, the teacher announces it—and she did for him that morning. He got up and manfully, with no excuses, said he had things that weren't his. He said that pupils should come up in groups to claim what was theirs. The teacher said it was all done with dignity, that no child giggled or nudged another, and that not a few had tears in their eyes, as did she. When it was over, she asked how many understood now what an act of courage was. All said they did, that the boy had performed one. Did he feel better, she asked. He said he did. In a class discussion some time later, he said the reason he liked that school was because if you made a mistake, you could correct it, that people instead of hitting you for it, helped you correct it.

Many of the children there come from homes where opposition to busing was most strenuous. Slowly, some of these parents have come to share what most of the white children feel—that it is a better school. One father who had at the beginning of the year told his child's teacher he resented the situation bitterly finally came to a PTA meeting. He told the teacher he had been convinced by his child that he had been wrong. His reason might prevail in Charlotte, in schools becoming real schools across the South, might eventually in all of America: "It is," he said, "like in the Bible. A little child shall lead them."

MOBILE, ALABAMA:

THE ESSENCE OF SURVIVAL

By Robert E. Anderson, Jr.

In the spring when the azaleas and dogwoods bloom and you drive along Government Street beneath Spanish moss clinging from ancient oaks, it probably is harder for the visitor to think of Mobile, Alabama, in terms other than the cliche its Chamber of Commerce likes to paint—a burgeoning, industrial port city of the new South, mindful of the best in its past, but making progress on all fronts, including race relations. But in January this year, the wind from the Gulf driving a cold, steady rain, the smell of the city's paper mills rancid in the air, outer charms were under cover, realities easier to read. Focus on the question of public school desegregation in this the 17th year since the Brown decision, the eighth since the first Negro high school students began to attend classes with whites in Mobile's prestigious Murphy High School and what you find, sometimes stated boldly, sometimes implicitly, sometimes hidden in expressions of good intentions is an air of deep misgiving that Mobile is capable of dealing with the education crisis to which white leadership has brought the city.

In a small, neatly-furnished low-rent apartment in the city's black ghetto, a mother of five put into a single sentence the impression most thoughtful blacks have of the city's school desegregation policies: "They are trying to make us mad enough to pull our children out of the white schools." It was a statement reminiscent of the words of 17 year-old Tyrone Thomas who last year told the Southern Regional Council how his white principal called him "nigger", how the frustrations of in-school discrimination were leading many black youths toward separatist-oriented thinking, really against their deeper instincts, their sense of the need for integrated education.[1]

In another part of town, on the second floor of a weather-worn office building, a middle-aged black man leaned forward away from the cold at the window. "Desegregation, civil rights were things you didn't talk about to the white power structure in this town," he said. "Men like me. We are educated. We have lived all our lives here and we know how the Negro high school kids feel. We have seen and lived through things a lot worse than they have. The only difference in us and them is that we are older and educated. But we know what's in their hearts."

But whites do not know—or if they do are too frightened to get involved, too indifferent or too hostile to blacks to care what they think, or, knowing, feel that the enormity of the situation is beyond their capacities to affect change. Downtown in the newly-renovated offices of the Mobile County Department of Education, Dr. Harold Collins, superintendent of schools since September, 1970, seemed an exception as he outlined his plans for education in 1971 and his hopes for Mobile. He spoke of increased library services and in-service training for black and white teachers in the coming summer. "I'm very optimistic," he said.

[1] Voices From the South, by Betsy Fancher, Southern Regional Council, August, 1970.

There was no optimism, however, in the words of black civil rights leader David Jacobs who heads the American Friends Service Committee's Mobile Education Project. Jacobs is an unreasonable militant in the eyes of most Mobile whites. In person he is a gentle, tough-minded native of the city with far greater rapport among the average black parent than whites care to admit.

"It will take some kind of tragedy, like a hurricane, maybe, for people here to wake up, to grow, to understand."

Jacobs' strategy now is to work with black parents and students, assisting them in grass roots organizing to improve education. His pessimism with Mobile's white leadership is not self-induced, a conditioned black response that automatically equates all white actions with duplicity. It is a pessimism, rather, that is born of long and sad experience, from seeing meaningful integration time and again delayed, blocked, and from close involvement in desegregation efforts.

The Background of Delay

The Mobile school desegregation case is long and complex, having gone before the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals thirteen times since 1963. To trace the entire thread of the lengthy litigation would make a formidable tome. What was at issue between the plantiffs and the school board, however, prior to 1968, can be reduced essentially to the fact that the freedom-of-choice court-order plan under which the Mobile district operated between 1963 and 1968 had produced only minimal desegregation. As late as 1967, for example, only 638 Negroes attended schools with whites. Since March, 1968, however, when the Fifth Circuit ordered the city to adopt a plan of assigning students by zone rather than freedom-of-choice, the issue of neighborhood schools has emerged as a shibboleth for white parents opposed to various zoning arrangements drawn by a pouting, reluctant school board and a more aggressive team of HEW Title IV education experts brought into the case in 1968 on orders from the Fifth Circuit to District Judge Daniel Thomas.

In 1968 only a few weeks before schools were scheduled to open under a zoning plan that would have put 2,400 Negro students into previously white schools and 1,200 white students into formerly Negro schools, Judge Thomas, after an extensive hearing, determined that the zoning plan would pose too great administrative problems and granted the school board another year under freedom-of-choice. A militant white reaction against the plan had brought into being an organization known as STAND (Stand Together and Never Divide) which professed to oppose the plan solely because it violated the neighborhood school concept—but the virulence of its pronouncements, and the conservative background of its leaders, brought many blacks in Mobile to believe that the organization was, in truth, simply a more sophisticated version of the White Citizens Council, rallying now for freedom-of-choice as it had in the past rallied for pure segregation.

The district court's ruling in favor of free choice was appealed by the Negro plantiffs and in June, 1969, the judgment was overturned by the Fifth Circuit which noted that the District Court had failed to follow its zoning mandate of 1968. The appeals court directed that a new plan be devised and ordered the District Court to request the U. S. Office of Education to collaborate with the Mobile Board of School Commissioners in preparation of such a plan. Local school officials and the HEW team clashed over the federal agency's proposals which called for cross-town busing of 2,000 Negro students, and in district court Judge Thomas rejected the plan, again allowing for limited freedom-of-choice. Negro plantiffs in late August, 1969, again appealed to the Fifth Circuit. Further litigation, further appeals had by the fall of 1970 set this stage: a zoning plan under which the system was to operate called for some 10,000 students to attend schools which were not in their immediate neighborhoods; six all-white schools with enrollments of 7,000 students and six all-black schools with enrollments of 5,000 still existed. Theoretically some 60,000 students were to be in desegregated schools.

The Non-Bused and the Non-Conforming

Events since schools opened last fall, however, have convinced black parents that the school board has craftily, in full awareness of what it was about, set out to make integration unbearable. The case for such a conspiracy theory is persuasive. William Crane, chairman of the school board, has described the court order under which Mobile schools are operating as "asinine." At best the Board's approach, according to most knowledgeable civil rights observers in the city, has been one of washing its hands of any responsibility to see the court's mandate implemented. A source who fears repercussions if he is identified said that he had heard a high education official in the city declare that Mobile was going "to prove to the federal bureaucrats that integration won't work."

Although many students under the zoning plan now attend schools as much as two and a half miles from their homes, many have no means to do so other than walking. The school board says it will bus only those students who were eligible to be bused last year. The system presently owns 252 buses and claims that to give bus transportation to every child who needs it this school year it would have to add 100 more buses at an estimated cost of $1,000,000. That much money, school officials say, is not available. Critics note, however, that $2,000,000 was available for renovating the present education building the past year. They also point out that under federal Emergency School Fund regulations it would have been possible to have gotten some money for school buses, a fact that they suspect was deliberately ignored by school administrators.

Some of the difficulties of black teachers in the current school year were described in hearings before the Alabama Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission last October and also in unauthorized interviews with an SRC representative in January, 1971. (Unauthorized because teachers and principals in the Mobile County school system are forbidden these days to discuss school problems with outsiders, without permission.) Under the court order, faculty composition in each school had to be on the ratio of 60 per cent white; 40 per cent Negro, roughly paralleling the population proportions of Mobile County. This meant that large numbers of teachers of both races had to be transferred. Before school opened black principals who were to remain principals in the new school year (most in predominantly black schools) were told that they could retain 20% of their key faculty members under the new desegregation plan. As it turned out none were able to retain nearly so many and there is suspicion within the black community that the real reason the principals were asked to name their key personnel was "to finger the best people" so they could be transferred to predominantly white schools. Whether the charge is true or not, most of the county's more experienced teachers, white and black, now teach in predominantly white schools, a fact attested to by numerous teachers in testimony before the civil rights advisory committee. Moreover, the teachers said, they had almost no advance notice that they were to be transferred. Testimony was also given telling of the transfer and demotion of black principals and coaches. Numerous fights involving black and white youths have occurred in Mobile schools this year with the most frequent solution being the disciplining and even arrest of black students and subsequent suspension.

By far the most controversial decision of school authorities involves so-called "non-conforming students". These are white students who, under the court's zoning plan, were assigned to schools with more blacks than whites and which, for the most part, were located in black residential areas. These students have simply refused to go to the schools they were assigned and instead attend classes in schools with predominantly white enrollments.[2] Estimates of the number of such students vary. At the beginning of the school term when white parents accompanied their children to school—insisting on the right of freedom-of-choice (which Gov. George Wallace publicly assured them was theirs)[3]—the official number, according to Dr. Collins, was as high as 1,000, but he puts it around 15

[2]A memorandum on the subject from school board attorneys to school officials although advising them to discourage non-conformers and pointing out that the students could not be issued textbooks, allowed to participate in school activities, take tests or receive grades, also stated that the students "cannot knowingly be officially enrolled or registered at the improper school." The modifying word "knowingly" has been the key to the problem of enforcement. Civil rights leaders say school officials have been at pains not to be "knowingly" aware of illegal transfers.

[3]Speaking to a Labor Day crowd of 4,000 people in suburban Pritchard, Wallace said: "I recommend that you good people exercise your freedom-of-choice when you send your children to school Wednesday." New York Times, September 8, 1970. "If I were you on school day, I'd exercise my freedom-of-choice," Wallace said . . . The roar of the crowd turned to laughter when he added, "In the peaceful way you always do things." Charlotte Observer, September 9, 1970.

today. Black leaders think the number legally is vastly higher because they have discovered that many students now are falsifying their addresses, a few parents even transferring guardianships to grandparents or friends who live in zones where predominantly white schools are located. Dr. Collins' response to this charge is that he has no resources to check on the addresses of all the county's 70,000 students. "We are in the business of education," he says. Under a district court decision of last year non-conformers are not supposed to receive grades or be allowed to participate in school activities, a fact which Dr. Collins believes has discouraged non-conformers. Blacks protest that no disciplinary action was ever taken against any of the non-conformers, just as the state education department announced it would refuse to prosecute parents who kept their children out of school altogether at the beginning of the school year, in violation of the state's compulsory school attendance law. Official figures for enrollments prior to school opening last year do not coincide with unofficial figures given to SRC from a few selected high schools. Murphy High School, for instance, which was the scene of a widely publicized student fight in September was supposed to have had 1456 black students and 1114 white students. The figure today is roughly 400 whites and 1800 blacks. At Toulminville High School there were supposed to have been 247 whites, 401 blacks. There were 18 whites enrolled in January, 1971. Such figures are not comprehensive, of course, but the arithmetic from these two schools alone show nearly 1,000 white students not attending schools to which they were assigned at the beginning of the year. Figures from other schools doubtless would add to the number. What is happening to such students? Many are now apparently officially enrolled at predominantly white Davidson High School which was supposed to have had 2350 whites to 70 blacks. These figures meant that at the beginning of the year the school was 477 over capacity. In October, 1970, its enrollment was 980 over capacity. Dr. Collins' estimate of only 15 non-conformers now may technically be correct, but there are obviously many hundreds of other white students who have managed to become legally enrolled in schools of their choice. Dr. Collins did not say so, but it is generally accepted by Mobile blacks that the reasons the transfers have been accepted is to placate white parents.

"Education is Problem-Solving"

Altogether Mobile County's school enrollment is 4,000 less than it was last year. Some are drop-outs, some are students who are attending public schools in other counties, living with relatives or friends, some have defected to private schools. A total of three new private academies, are known to have been chartered during the past year. The First Independent Methodist Church was instrumental in their founding. Three years ago the church began its own private academy in the church building itself housing children from kindergarten through the tenth grade. It has approximately 200 students. Wesleyan Academy located in Citronelle, Alabama, 45 miles from Mobile city limits was begun in 1970 with an estimated enrollment of 300, handling grades one through eleven. The school provides busing for students at the rate of $1.00 per day. Another new private school—Chickasaw Academy—accommodates grades seven through 12. Officials estimate that the school has at least 25 students per class. None of the new academies is integrated.

Dr. Collins seems dedicated to the principle of public education. He does not believe private schools have a chance to educate more than a small fraction of students anywhere. He sees himself as an administrator with many problems, (most of which, as a matter of fact, he inherited) all of which he thinks can be solved with time and patience. "Education is problem solving," he says. This is the theme of some 100 speeches he has made before PTA and civic groups since taking over the administrative reins of Mobile County's public schools last year.[4] Though viewed without enthusiasm among more activist black leaders, he is regarded by some blacks as a sincere man trying to act fairly. He says that he wants to get on with the job of education, starting with people "where they are." He spoke with some pride of the fact that all of the city's schools now have full-time libraries, staffed full-time, but he spoke with great disappointment about the apparent fate of Mobile's application for funds under the federal government's Emergency School Aid program which to date has received no final action. In December, HEW officials wrote Dr. Collins that the proposal was being held up pending further information on such matters as student transfers and teacher discrimination. Dr. Collins called the application a "very fine proposal" which would be used for new instructional materials, the employment of 150 teacher aides, 80 per cent of whom would be assigned to the schools experiencing the most integration. The aides would have been used for "clerical and routine management duties, thereby releasing teachers for more student contact." In addition, it was proposed that they be used in liaison roles to parents and to the community at large. The proposal also called for orientation training for the aides and the teachers to which the aides would be assigned. Dr. Collins expressed resentment that the proposal was opposed by "highly militant groups" in Mobile which he felt were responsible for the funds being delayed. A spokesman for the American Friends Service Committee who has opposed the federal grant said the chief reason it has done so is because Mobile has not been in compliance with the court order on such obvious matters as student transfers. HEW, at this point, seems to agree.

There was at least one other proposal in the application which caused some concern among civil rights advocates—a request for funds to change plumbing facilities. Dr. Collins explained this on the ground that under the new zoning plan there would be younger, smaller students attending schools formerly attended by older, larger students and vice versa. Implicit in the proposal, however, was an old white southern phobia about bathroom facilities that had been used by Negroes, and whether intended or not the proposal was taken by some as a racial slur. Such a response illustrates a major difficulty of administering public education in Mobile. In the present climate proposals that might elsewhere be interpreted as educationally sound become sinister and suspect. To fire an incompetent black teacher solely on the basis of his incompetence would be difficult for Mobile school administrators to justify, precisely because other black teachers, not incompetent, have been discriminated against solely on the basis of race. To discipline a black youth bent on violence for the sake of violence might become a cause celebre because other black youths whose only crime is the color of their skin have been presumed guilty until proven innocent and treated accordingly. In brief, Mobile's raw racism has come home to haunt whatever attempts it might now want to make toward quality education for all and for simple justice. Sadly, the evidence indicates that the city does not want to make many such attempts.

[4]Dr. Collins' predecessor, Dr. Cranford Burns, who resigned prior to the opening of schools in 1970, was a source of discontent among civil rights leaders who saw him as an obstructionist in earlier desegregation efforts. His resignation, however, was unrelated to civil rights controversy.

Mobile's Credibility Gap

Throughout the year there have been frequent fights between white and black youths resulting in student suspensions and dismissals, mostly of blacks. Dr. Collins said he hoped to deal with the education of such students through a proposal that, subject to school board approval, would open a school that is now closed for use by students "with disciplinary problems." No diploma would be awarded and the students would be "encouraged to seek employment of their own liking," according to the memorandum outlining the program—which he willingly shared with an SRC representative in January. The program called for no more than 150 students to be in the school at one time, in classes of 15 each. Such a proposal, has obvious discriminatory potential. For who is to define students with "special disciplinary problems"? The mother of one black student likely to be so identified recently told of her son's experiences with the education department's disciplinary committee. Following an altercation between whites and blacks in one school, her son had been identified by a white girl as being involved. He denied it. The next day the mother kept the youth at home, but while she was away buying groceries, the police came and took her son away to jail. She could not raise bond. He stayed in jail two weeks. When his hearing came he was easily acquitted in an appearance before a county judge, when the witness said he was not involved. But he had to appear before the school board's disciplinary committee, which after questioning the youth at some length, concluded that he could not be re-admitted to school in the current term. His mother asked them why and they said it was because his grades were so low that he was not likely to graduate.

At Murphy High School it also seemed likely that numbers of black youths might be identified as having problems sufficient to warrant their being transferred to the disciplinary school. In a conversation with the white principal it was evident that the violence at the school last September which resulted in a threatened walk-out by white teachers and which brought city police patrolmen into the school for a period of two weeks will not be soon forgotten.

"It was caused by Negro kids coming in and trying to take over. They were insolent and are still insolent to the teachers," the principal stated.

He seemed a worried man, still, taking little joy in his work. Walking along a dimly-lighted corridor he discovered that an electric switch was out of repair. "They've torn it up," he said. There was no exchange of words between him and a group of black students standing near the entrance to the school's machine shops. The students stood quiet, sullen. "We don't have many promising shop students," he remarked later.

But all seemed orderly now, it was pointed out. It was lunch-time. Students stood outside. There were no fights. "No," he said, "not right now." One could not help but feel a certain sympathy for the man, untrained as he apparently was in dealing with blacks at any educational level, a career teacher, middle-aged, a former physical education instructor, handling such a job as he had in such a school as Murphy, in such a city as Mobile. And one could feel the same sympathy for the students for the same reasons.

The whole scene at Murphy put into perspective a major problem of integration that is not Mobile's alone. Under the court order, Mobile students, black and white, have been uprooted from schools and environments, familiar places, familiar teachers, friends. This in itself is traumatic to young people for whom group identity is all important. Under the most ideal circumstances such changes would produce tensions and frustrations and thus the credibility of school administrators would seem absolutely essential to any reasonable approach to relieving the situation. Such credibility is lacking in Mobile because of actions in the past and in the present school year to avoid school desegregation at any cost. It is also lacking because of the students' experience in a white-dominated society where blacks historically have been systematically discriminated against. It is this awareness, this past knowledge combined with the uprootings from old environments, the harsh realities of the new and the current of separatist thinking from some black leaders that have brought large numbers of Mobile Negro students to feel they would be better off in all-black schools. "How can you have integration," a black student asked a Southern Regional Council representative, "when the white man is on the top of the pole? He controls everything, he's the head of everything, and he owns the power structure and we're at the bottom of the pole. We aren't equal in the white man's eyesight."

A militant black organization in Mobile called STEP (Steps Toward Educational Progress) feels that black students would not only be better off in all-black schools but also in all-black school districts controlled by an all-black school board. In the present school crisis STEP and another black civil rights organization NOW (Neighborhood Organized Workers) have emerged as vocal spokesmen for Negro aspirations in the city. NOW, an affiliate of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, organized in 1965, has been active in a number of other civil rights issues, including protest demonstrations against the city's employment practices during the Junior Miss Pageant of 1969. STEP, of more recent vintage, has gained attention largely because of its proposal regarding separate school districts. Some controversy surrounds the origins of the group which was founded by Roy Innis, director of CORE. Innis reportedly conferred with federal officials prior to launching the organization in Mobile. The organization's decentralization proposal, articulated in a public speech last summer, drew the approval of white segregationists in Mobile and has appealed to many black students who feel that the proposal, whether practical or not, does speak to the real problem of education and integration of Mobile blacks, spotlighting as it does the present lack of power blacks have to affect decisions of the school board.

Yet integration has not been without educational benefits for black students though they have come indirectly and in ways that Mobile could not look to with pride. At schools formerly attended solely by Negroes but now having sizable white enrollments, the new school year brought better textbooks and new classroom equipment.

"A truck pulled up to my school one day," a black principal who now heads a school with a large percentage of whites recently said, "with aids and equipment I didn't even know were coming."

Observers of schools with low white enrollments say that no such windfall has come to the still-predominantly black schools. Improvement of facilities at a school with increased white enrollment was reported in one case soon after the election of a white PTA president. Beneficial to Negro students or not, incidents such as these increase black resentments, illustrating as they do the school board's apparent indifference to the education of black students.

The Stifling of White Leadership

The root causes of Mobile's education problems lie in the weakness of the city's white leadership. White moderates are mostly underground and have been so for many years. Prior to the initial desegregation of Mobile schools in 1963 an all-white organization known as ABLE (Alabamians Back Local Education), made up largely of middle-class housewives, came into being for the purpose of continued uninterrupted free public schools. By the nature of its goal the organization inevitably served as a counter force to Citizens Council agitation against the impending school integration and for this reason came under heavy criticism from many right-wing elements in the city, including the American Legion. Gov. George Wallace publicly denounced the group as having "total integration" as its design. Local state representatives called on the state legislature to investigate the group. Although the investigation never materialized and such criticism had little immediate effect on ABLE, white moderate leadership in the city was dampened by the extreme reaction to what was really a modest effort on the part of a few whites simply to keep the schools functioning and open. Many observers believe that the experience of ABLE is still felt among whites of good will who might now be in position to influence school board decisions, but fear repercussions.

With the exception of a statement by the Chamber of Commerce asking for good will in a time of crisis last year, and supporting public education business leadership in Mobile has not taken a visible role in recent developments. Yet one white leader who asked not to be identified by name or occupation talked of his behind-the-scenes efforts to involve powerful black and white leaders in trying to solve some of the problems between black and white students. He spoke of confidential telephone calls and gingerly-stated overtures—a strategy recalling that of cautious white moderates in other localities a decade or more ago. Mobile whites aren't ready for more, he said, and gravely warned that to reveal more details of his efforts would be to jeopardize all attempts at meaningful biracial cooperation in the city. What he seemed not to realize was that a large and growing segment of Mobile blacks are no longer interested in biracial cooperative efforts that have to be so clandestinely arranged. When this was pointed out to him, he shook his head. "It just can't be too late for such efforts," he said, "It just can't be."

There is some precedent in the city for businessmen's reluctance at being too openly identified with efforts at racial cooperation. A former Mobile businessman, for instance, recalls that after a Wall Street Journal article appeared several years ago telling of the city's attempts to bring about an accommodation with civil rights complaints, business leaders who were identified, and some who weren't, were hounded by segregationist groups to the extent that an economic boycott on the business of one such leader resulted in severe financial losses. "They were scared after that," he said, "too scared to do anything at all."

Contributing to the dearth of white leadership has been the consistently negative posture on civil rights matters followed by the city's two daily newspapers. Neither paper could bring themselves editorially to condemn the Birmingham church bombing of 1963. In 1964 they carried a series of stories on the then-pending civil rights bill which most observers think was designed to increase local opposition to the bill. The Citizens Council, in fact, distributed copies of the articles not only in Alabama but throughout the country. During the mid-1960s the papers carried a daily column by a John Birch Society lecturer and sometimes cited the extreme right-wing publication Human Events as if it were an objective, reliable news magazine. Comments from two editorials prior to the opening of schools in September, 1970, illustrate the papers' position today.

> —When Earl Warren vacated the chief justiceship, he left the Supreme Court with its work cut out for it in dealing with the confusion and contradiction produced for public education during his tenure.
>
> —When the 1970-71 school year begins, parents throughout the Mobile County school system should protect the communitywide tradition of having a citizenship fully and steadfastly mindful of the value of law and order.

Aside from the papers' editorial position, civil rights advocates say the papers emphasize and blow out of proportion all racial incidents in newly integrated schools in order to inflame white reaction as much as possible.

In other stories and editorials the newspapers have blamed low morale of teachers and students on the numerous federal court rulings which are made to seem high-handed and capricious. There is little editorial criticism, however, of Judge Daniel Thomas who, by any accounting, is most responsible for the delays in bringing about an end to dual schools in Mobile. To demonstrating white students in the fall of 1970 he was a figure worthy of hanging in effigy for his ruling—made only after earlier decisions in favor of freedom-of-choice had been overturned—taking them out of their neighborhood schools. To almost everyone else, however, it is obvious that he has yielded to pressure from white segregationists. His own sympathies, as a matter of fact, are no judicial secret. He has publicly stated before an unprecedented gathering of indignant white parents in his court last summer that he disagrees with desegregation laws. "For nine years," he said, "I have fought this thing and tried to slow it down." Such an admission made in a time of strife and turmoil by the arbiter of justice in a city increasingly polarized would seem to have served no purpose other than to absolve Judge Thomas from the ill-will of white Mobilians.

The Essence of Survival

The United States Supreme Court now has the Mobile case under consideration. Its ruling, hopefully, will clarify any remaining doubts as to the legal demands of school desegregation in that city. But it might not. The high court could return the case to Judge Thomas for futher hearings on the evidence, on matters of fact. The whole process of litigation could thus be stretched out for many more months. In the meanwhile, Mobile waits. Desegregation has come and no one is really satisfied with it. The violent encounters between black and white students—the most recent occurring on February 12, 1971, at Vigor High School in Pritchard—have greatly raised the anxieties of parents of both races.[5] In such incidents there is a dilemma for all committed to the principle of integrated education. And it may well be that in the handling of these matters the success or failure of integration depends. Solid efforts by white and black parents working together in some kind of human relations context would seem to be essential. Emotions stirred by Governor Wallace, the local news media and actions of the school board and the presiding judge, however, have so widened the gap of racial understanding in Mobile that efforts at racial reconciliation today seem almost Quixotic.

But despite the fights and the traumas, the negative expressions of white and black students toward the experience of integration, most Mobile

[5]The incident at Vigor High began as a fight between two teen-age girls, one black and one white. It quickly escalated. One hundred policemen were called to the scene. Mace was sprayed on students. Eleven blacks and five whites were arrested. A black girl was charged with assault and battery; the others with disorderly conduct. Classes were suspended indefinitely at the school.

students are not juvenile delinquents bent on trouble. They are young people in the formative stages of their lives; their present attitudes are not inflexible. The experience of integrated education has been harder for them by the willful acts of adults who never wanted integration to work in the first place. If there is hope for the future in Mobile it is that the students will somehow, still, make it work. It seems a slender hope for all it is, finally, is the simplest essence of survival after all else has been shattered through the years of delay, manipulation of people, of injustice and cowardice. In brief, it is the ability to adapt, to accept reality, to grow. It is a certainty, too, that the students can not do any worse at building a community than their parents. Given encouragement, given support, they may do far better.

BEAUFORT, SOUTH CAROLINA:

THE NEW BREED and the OLD

By Betsy Fancher

When Austa French, a member of that band of bright, liberated yankee school marms, Harvard graduates and Unitarian preachers who made up the Port Royal Experiment, arrived in Beaufort, S. C., in 1862, she wrote that, "there steals over you the feeling that you are passing under a great cloud of accumulated wrongs, in which you seem mysteriously implicated, the vague feeling that you yourself have done something awful, somewhere in the dim past. . . Slavery is written upon the shore, the trees, the sky, the air. . . The enormous black hawks, with their screams, seem to be its very spirit. No wonder they caw, caw, over this land—mean vultures, waiting for blood."

The "Gideonites", as they called themselves, had come to minister to the Port Royal slaves, abandoned by their masters after the Confederate Fort Walker was overrun in a massive Federal amphibious invasion. Their mission, according to the New York National Freedman's Relief Association, was to teach the Negroes (then labeled "contrabands") "civilization and Christianity . . . order, industry, economy and self-reliance; and to elevate them in the scale of humanity by inspiring them with self respect."

The Port Royal slaves were the first in the South to be freed, the first to be educated, and they produced one of the first legitimate war heroes, Robert Smalls, who captured a Confederate gun-boat after the firing on Fort Sumter, delivered many of the Port Royal slaves to federally-held Beaufort, rallied the Sea Island blacks to join the Union troops and went on to become a National Guard general and a politician who forged enlightened legislation in fields ranging from economics to education.

The End of Freedom-of-Choice

The specter of slavery still haunts Beaufort and the barrier islands. The education of blacks, launched with such high hopes by Yankee school marms like Laura Towne, whose little hay loft school has grown into the Penn Community Center, is still a burning issue. In the spring of 1970 a federal hearing examiner, acting on HEW complaints that freedom-of-choice had not resulted in substantial school desegregation, recommended that federal funds to Beaufort County be withheld. The school board, waiving its right of appeal, agreed to HEW recommendations for the school year 1970-71 which called for a 50-50 black-to-white faculty ratio and a geographic zoning plan for students.[1] But in January, 1971, an HEW investigative team reported that the district was not in compliance on faculty integration percentages, pointing out that blacks represented 79 per cent of the faculty at St. Helena Junior High; 70 per cent at St. Helena Elementary; 73 per cent at Michael E. Riley and 29 per cent at formerly all-white Beaufort Junior High. As a result of HEW's recommendation, Beaufort presently is in danger of losing between one and two million dollars in federal school aid. The chances, however, of funds actually being terminated are remote for HEW has seldom used this method of enforcement in the past year and a half.

Both blacks and whites, interviewed by the Southern Regional Council last summer, were apprehensive about what might happen when schools opened in the fall. Some were predicting an outbreak of violence or at least a school boycott by blacks, angered at the reduction of Robert Smalls High to the status of a junior high school, and the demotion of black principal Jacob Richardson. Black parents were also embittered at the renovation of the school to accommodate white students which they felt was proof positive of the school board's previous indifference to the education of blacks. Moreover, the school board introduced double sessions at previously all-white Beaufort High to accommodate the sudden influx of blacks many of whom had to be bused as much as fifty miles from the outlying islands past their old schools, schools whose songs, trophies, cheers and traditions were a part of their heritage. Other sources of discontent among blacks included earlier defeats of bond issues designed to finance a new high school at Beaufort and delays in submitting another such issue to the voters during the present school year. Many white parents, meanwhile, apparently have made other school arrangements for their children. White enrollment in Beaufort's public schools declined from 4,490 in 1969-70 to 4,210 in 1970-71. (Whites who have enrolled their children in segregated Beaufort Academy seem to belie the fear of busing heard from other quarters this year. Many of their children are transported as much as 100 miles a day to the unaccredited private academy some of whose faculty members do not meet South Carolina's teaching requirements.)

The Pat Conroy Incident

One single event in the current school year illustrates much about both the quality of education blacks have received in the past and the educational atmosphere in which Beaufort teachers and students must function today. This was the firing of Pat Conroy, a popular white teacher at Daufuskie's tiny two-room elementary school, who was discharged for alleged insubordination. Twenty-five year old Conroy started his second year on Daufuskie in September. The school board, overlooking the miracle his innovative teaching methods had worked in raising the grade levels of his black students, criticized his transportation costs to the island. The little boat he navigated, often through hazardous waters, was expensive to maintain, they said. On September 21, Conroy took a week's leave from the classroom to serve as a consultant to the Desegregation Center at the University of South Carolina turning over his lesson plans to a VISTA worker he had enlisted as a substitute teacher. He was fired on his return and the Beaufort County school board turned a deaf ear to the labored and eloquent petition by the mothers of Daufuskie, pleading for Conroy to be reinstated. He was, they said, the only good teacher their children had ever had. After Conroy's unsuccessful suit to be reinstated, Beaufort blacks were convinced that school officials, headed by Superintendent Walter Trammell, had no regard for the quality of education their children were receiving. Second-rate facilities and a second-rate education, long accepted in mute despair, suddenly became a heated issue to them.

[1]Beaufort presented a thorny problem. The charming historic town with its columned mansions, patterned gardens and Revolutionary arsenal is ringed by a half dozen islands, ranging from all-black Daufuskie to all-white Fripp Island. The school board's plan required extensive busing and combined children with backgrounds as diverse as the Gullah communities on St. Helena's Island to children who had come of age on Hilton Head Island, a planned community which boasts the largest concentration of "Who's Who" listees in the country.

In firing Conroy Dr. Trammell explained to the news media that as a young teacher he was an idealist and innovator much like the Daufuskie teacher.

Dr. Trammell took the school superintendent's post at Beaufort in 1968 after an impressive 30 years in public education. He gave up a promising career in the textile industry to go into public schools "to dedicate my life to helping the children of South Carolina."

Discussing education he disarms the interviewer with a shrewd, appraising glance over half-glasses and the inarguable logic of his doctrine of a "democratic education," a doctrine which some staffers will tell you is belied by "his iron fist." "The reason I took action with Mr. Conroy was that he was not in the school room teaching. It was that he ignored school policies, deliberately disregarded the written procedures."

The written procedures he spoke of he developed as an undergraduate student at Columbia and still keeps carefully bound in a manila envelope on his desk.

George Trask, the lawyer who represented Conroy in his unsuccessful suit to be rehired, says, "This is definitely the case of creative individual who has run afoul of the system and the system is not flexible enough to accommodate him."

"You Learn a Lot on the Bus"

A visitor to Robert Smalls Junior High School will find black and white students mingling on the playground, engaged in talk, tossing a ball, laughing together. Black students Brenda and Cynthia Holmes, Jo Ann Grinkley, Deborah Jones and Stanley Hayes, eager, open and confident, talk freely about integration. Their white colleagues? "Nice kids, most of them." Busing? "We ride with the white kids and talk a lot and some of the buses have radios and we listen to music. It's fun. You learn a lot on the bus." Incidents of violence? Sure, a few scuffles after football games, but these are old school rivalries. And the school itself—the temporary buildings and the reeking dump heap beside the play ground? "It does smell bad on damp days," grants one student, "but they're covering it over with sand and things are getting better." The conversation is cut short by two assistant principals who explain firmly and with obvious anxiety the tedious process terminating at the desk of school superintendent Walter Trammell by which visitors are allowed to speak to students in Beaufort's schools.

The impact of black students on formerly all-white Beaufort High can best be documented in the mimeographed pages of the Daily Planet, an unofficial newspaper published by a dedicated group of black and white students. The initial issue, published Wednesday, October 28, contained an interview with Sumner Pingree, chairman of the Republican party in Beaufort County; a plan for reorganization of student government which would put the "do-nothing" student council under an activist steering committee; and an interview with Pat Conroy. "Education seems like a type of prison for kids," Conroy says. "And until this changes, I think teachers have the right and duty to criticize the administration or even themselves." A black student editorializes on Conroy's dismissal and the "calcified backbone of our present school system." Quotes from Spiro T. Agnew are countered by quotes from Senator Edmund S. Muskie, one of the Planet's heroes.

The Planet has grown steadily bigger, better, braver and more controversial indicating a creative ferment of ideas and opinion at the school which one black student described last summer as "scarcely human." The Christmas issue featured a thoughtful study of high school women. "Compulsory attendance," charges the author, means that students are subjected to the system's way of training people in capitalism—a system based on competition, status consciousness, conformity and unquestioning obedience to authority. For women students there is added oppression—"not only are they unequal because they are students, but they soon learn to know their unequal place as women, both academically and socially." The poetry is uneven, but often moving—"Tears of a thousand orphans; Victims of Vietnam. . . . Despair of a mother, without food, shelter or hope . . . young people in rebellion, marijuana, hash, dope." There is an inside view of ROTC, a diatribe against alcohol, some remarkably literate book and music reviews, an article in defense of dissent, another condemning legalized abortion and a half dozen letters from readers, hotly protesting prejudice against both black and white. "The black man is not begging, sister; he is demanding his rights," says one, and another, "We're not going to bend over backwards for blacks just because their skin is black. I feel like they're just like anybody else, NOT SOMETHING SPECIAL." Among the memorable quotes, there is one from Tricia Nixon: "It is amazing what (Agnew) has done to help the (news) media—helping it to reform itself. You can't underestimate the power of fear."

The reader notices in the later editions of the paper little concern for integration as an issue. The problems that are still being hotly debated by Beaufort High parents—busing, double sessions, racial balance, HEW guidelines and the possibility of violence are seldom discussed in the Planet.

A Frozen System

There have been incidents, most of them unreported. A black student at Beaufort Junior High was arrested for using obscene language; a student at St. Helena's was arrested for carrying a concealed weapon and exonerated after he explained he'd just returned from a hunting trip. And there was a near riot after a rock festival at Robert Smalls which now has 1,200 students, 650 white, 550 Negro. But the most urgent concern of students, black and white, is quality education, also an intense preoccupation of their parents. At the heart of the matter is the definition of what education actually is. A Planet contributor, M. R. Kelly, puts it this way: "All the while, the elders are not realizing that if they would bend their sturdy old oak mentality in some sort of movement towards helping instead of hindering youth's progress, they would not be remembered badly. It all has to do with goals and objectivity. The youth wants to formulate change as their work. The elders wish a frozen system."

It is the inflexibility of this system which Beaufort youngsters are questioning with growing intensity. Meanwhile their parents are wrestling with other problems. Beaufort Academy (a private school) is expanding; a new and reportedly more farsighted and liberal head master has been hired and teacher requirements have been made more stringent. An off-duty policeman has been hired to stand guard over the Academy bus which is parked on one of Beaufort's picturesque streets, a bitter symbol of racism to Beaufort blacks. Mrs. Agnes Sherman, one of two Negro members of the school board, points out that the children are bused 50 to 100 miles to the school from resorts like Sea Pines and Fripp Island. "The Academy exists on a tight budget—it simply can not offer quality education," she says.

A recent meeting with Mrs. Sherman; John Gadsden, Director of Penn Community Center; Andrew Mariesett, field representative of the American Friends Service Committee; and lawyer Charles Washington revealed a growing disillusionment with integration. Under HEW it is administered "white style," they complained. "The ultimate decision is always made by the whites." They are skeptical of the proposed bond issue which would finance the new area schools, noting that there was already talk of a cut-back, of floating a smaller bond issue.

Washington says, not without bitterness: "The process of getting a unitary school system has destroyed black pride and identification. Our children are being forced to identify with white concepts." He cited the dress codes at Beaufort High as "just another weapon to control behavior."

John Gadsden claims that although schools are integrated, they still have white dominated administration. An example: Beaufort High, whose assistant principals are black and whose reigning principal is white.

Washington feels that integration is jeopardizing the sense of black identity established in the past ten years. "Black students have a gut feeling about this. The whites don't realize that most of Beaufort's history is black history." He feels that the whites, ranging from the freedom-of-choice advocates to the HEW administrators, have "gone about integration in the most cruel way. They've created a potential powder keg. As black identity and pride grows, violence could erupt in Beaufort schools. The system is too static. Inevitably it will crack and fall to pieces," says Mr. Washington.

He may be right. The atmosphere that pervades Beaufort today reminded one globe-trotting writer-photographer of the up-tight silence that pervades East Germany. The Planet reflects a growing discontent, but not with integration. While their parents continue to fight the battles of racism, integration and separatism, many young people, black and white, appear to have come to terms with integration. Says one poem in the Planet: "Love and peace, the teens new creed, is really true you see/there should be love and peace for people like you and me."

The students instead are questioning the whole system of education which Fortune editor Charles Silberman and others have criticized as joyless, oppressive to the questioning mind, destructive to spontaneity and "a sense of self." And with education, they are questioning every area of American life—the military, women's rights, politics, the arts, pollution, poverty, the competitive ideal. South Carolina already has a 50 per cent drop-out rate, many of them students who, having rejected the educational system, are dropping out of the mainstream of American life. In Beaufort, the rhetoric of violence, racism and separatism can be heard both in the drawing rooms of the affluent and the shanties of the poor. But these are the adults speaking. To many of their sons and daughters it is an antiquated and tedious refrain. For integration is producing a new breed of students ~~in Beaufort,~~ youngsters who are fighting for a flexible and innovative school system to meet the urgent challenges of a nation both torn by dissent and united by the powerful dynamics of an emerging and infinitely promising American ideal.

ATHENS, GEORGIA:

WHERE BUSING WORKS

By Horace N. Barker, Jr.

In October, 1970, when Clarke County, Georgia, was well into its second year of system-wide desegregation, lawyers for the school board appeared before the U. S. Supreme Court. Their mission was unique: to plead not for neighborhood schools, but to defend the school board's plan involving a generous amount of busing, against charges of "unconstitutionality" from a group of Athens parents and to plead for a reversal of a Georgia State Supreme Court decision which had supported the citizens' legal challenge.

Clarke County has completely desegregated its public schools in less than two years. The primary impetus for this sweeping transformation came from civil rights officials in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) who had threatened in the summer of 1969 to terminate over $300,000 in Federal funds if the county refused to comply with Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Like hundreds of other southern school districts, adoption of a freedom-of-choice plan was the only step towards desegregation which the county had taken since 1954. By September, 1968, this plan had placed only 10 per cent of the county's black students in schools having majority white student populations. Several all black schools remained.

In October, 1968, HEW advised the Clarke County Board of Education that much greater student and faculty desegregation would be necessary for the 1969-70 school year. After months of study and negotiations, the board submitted a "Neighborhood Plan" to HEW on May 1, 1969. This plan would have increased the number of black students in predominantly white schools, but still would have left four elementary schools, a junior high, and a high school with all-black or nearly all-black student bodies. HEW said this plan failed to meet the requirements of Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Greater desegregation was feasible, said HEW, and therefore, greater desegregation was required.

(This exceptionally strong stand by HEW, requiring desegregation of every school in the district, occurred in the early days of the Nixon Administration, six months before the resignations of Leon Panetta, former director of the Office for Civil Rights at HEW, and Paul Rilling, former director of HEW's regional Office for Civil Rights in Atlanta. Soon after these departures, HEW scrapped the administrative standards which Panetta and Rilling felt were required by Title VI and the Constitution. The agency then began to describe entire school systems as "desegregated" even though some schools within the districts continued to have the same predominantly white or black student enrollments as in the "old separate but equal" days.)

Realizing that loss of Federal monies was intolerable, the school board submitted another plan to HEW on July 30, 1969. A week later HEW gave its approval.

The plan which was implemented in September, 1969, established a 20 to 40 per cent black student population in 11 of the 13 elementary schools. In the other two schools the black population was about 50 per cent. The plan meant busing approximately 200 more students than had been bused in 1968-69. Desegregation of the white and black high schools was set for September, 1970.

According to Clarke County Superintendent of Schools, Charles P. McDaniel, neither he nor the school board was happy about the increased busing. "But there was no other way we could comply with the law," he said. "For a half century we have been busing black students past white schools and vice versa to maintain segregation. Now we're busing to eliminate segregation."

When the plan was challenged[1] and, at last, brought before the Supreme Court, school board attorney Eugene Epting says he rather enjoyed his appearance. "Most school boards are up there complaining that they've been forced to do too much. But we went up there asking the Court to overturn the Georgia court and let us continue what we had already done."[2]

However strong may have been the initial reluctance of the Athens' school board to adopt a plan which would actually desegregate every school in the system, school officials now want to keep the plan. Don Hight, principal of Clarke County's high school, said a return to a neighborhood plan would be ". . . a serious setback for students and parents. Our schools could adapt themselves to the old ways, but it wouldn't be nearly as good."

No Place to Run

Superintendent McDaniel feels that the current plan is essential to the operation of a thoroughly desegregated system. "If you want desegregated schools, a neighborhood school plan simply wouldn't work here in Clarke County. It would mean we would have all-black and all-white schools . . . It would mean that parents would be moving around to get their kids in a predominantly white zone." McDaniel said the present system has helped to stabilize the community. "There's no place for anyone to run now."

---

[1]The Athens suit raised two questions for the Supreme Court: (1) Whether the plan violated the constitutional rights (equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment) of students required to attend schools other than the school nearest their homes, and (2) Whether Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act prohibits a school district from operating a school attendance plan which involves the assignment of students to achieve a racial balance.

[2]Mr. Epting's personal feelings about desegregation are not necessarily represented by the plan he defended in Washington.

An Athens real estate agent affirms McDaniel's observation. "With a consolidated school system, it really doesn't make any difference which attendance zone people live in. They can be much less concerned about having to locate in the 'proper' zone."

McDaniel says the plan has helped to maintain the number of students in the public schools. He claims the county lost only about 100 students out of 11,500 to private schools in September, 1970, and less than 35 in September, 1969.[3] "With our plan there was no reason for parents to worry about sending their children to a 'bad' school. Now, everybody faces the same situation." He added, "The vast majority of the people have accepted what we had to do. All of them are not yet convinced it will work. We need some time to show them that it can and is working."

What would happen if the Supreme Court were to declare the plan unconstitutional? McDaniel said there would be some public pressure to revise the plan and go back to neighborhood schools. "An adverse decision would present unnecessary difficulties which we would rather avoid."

A black member of the school board, was less discreet: "We'll be in a hell of a fix if we lose it. Before you know it things would be just like they were before all this got started. It would be a bad situation. . . ."

The geography of Clarke County lends itself to a county-wide busing system. With only 125 square miles of rolling, woody, clay land it is the smallest of Georgia's 159 counties. Schools are situated in this area so that the longest one-way bus ride for any student under the present plan is five miles and normally requires a maximum of 35-40 minutes. The majority of students ride for about 25 minutes or less.

Over 51,000 of the county's 65,000 residents live in the "Classic City" of Athens[4], including 20,000 students at the University of Georgia. About 80 per cent of the county's total population and about 70 per cent of the elementary and high school age children are white. The county and city consolidated their school systems in 1956. Until January, 1968, the school board consisted of nine appointed members. At that time, the number was expanded to eleven, permitting the appointment of two black members.

Parents Response

Many, probably a majority, of the white adults who live in Clarke County still would prefer to send their children to neighborhood, segregated schools. The most frequently-voiced complaints of all parents concern irregular

[3]There are three private schools in Clarke County. St. Joseph's, a Catholic parochial school founded over 20 years ago, has an enrollment of 218 elementary students, including 12 blacks. The Athens Academy is a college preparatory school with 325 students, all white, enrolled in kindergarden through grade 12. The Academy opened in September, 1967. The third school is Athens Christian Academy. Opened in August, 1970, it enrolls 130 white students from six counties in grades one through eight. Having complied with the Nixon administration's politically soothing paper policy of simply declaring "non-discriminatory admission practices," the latter school was declared tax-exempt by the Internal Revenue Service in January, 1971.

[4]So named by its own residents because of the presence of many Greek Revival ante-bellum homes built on large, four-acre lots and because of the university's location on a high hill overlooking much of the city.

bus schedules, poorly-trained drivers, early morning departure times, lack of discipline within schools, and in some cases, overcrowded classrooms. But whatever may be the deficiencies in implementing the current plan, there have been no major disruptions or acts of violence to support segregationists' claims that, "It would never work."

Contributing to the success and support of desegregated education has been a sizable group of white parents, including members of the University faculty, who believe that the present educational system is best for their children and their community. Although sharing many of the complaints about imperfections in the current operation of the schools, this group of adults believes that the sacrifices made during this transitional period will be more than justified by the public benefits derived from providing every child with an equal educational opportunity through integrated education.

Typical are the comments of Howard Schretter, a school board member and 14-year resident of Athens with three children in the public schools: "Let's face it, the present generation of children are up against it, especially the most gifted children. Desegregation means that the teacher must spend more time with those that are behind in reading and other skills. . . . But I think it's more important to have a child learn something about human relations, to be exposed to a variety of people than to learn a little bit more than anybody else . . . . "

Schretter also said he wouldn't hesitate to send his children to private schools if they were subjected to bodily harm at public school. "If a kid's life is in danger, then integration is not worth it. But we're in no danger of reaching that point here. In fact, considering the mess we've made of things in the past, I'd have to say things are going pretty well now . . . "

One white, liberal middle-class parent said that, much to his chagrin, his son in the fourth grade had begun to develop a negative attitude toward his black classmates from the ghetto, describing them as "nuisances" and "troublemakers." The father hoped for a change in his son's attitude before the end of the school year.

Another white parent said that his son and his son's white friends in a junior high school thought their black classmates were "sort of exotic." "I've noticed a tendency for some of the kids to admire and sometimes imitate the black kids. My son is even picking up a ghetto dialect . . . . He seems to be getting along fine."

A parent with a son in one of the two consolidated sixth grade schools said his son's education has not been damaged. "The . . . school is very good this year. But that's because of the principal and because it has some of the best teachers. It has nothing to do with integration one way or another . . . . " He also said that his son catches the bus at 7:00 every morning—when the bus is on time. He has driven his son to school two or three times because the bus failed to arrive.

Sending their children to school with blacks has come hard to many white parents. A professor at the University described the reaction of some whites confronted with desegregation on a personal level for the first time when they took their first graders to school on opening day and met their child's new black teacher:

"Some of the parents were really shook-up. I remember that one mother in particular was terribly upset. She almost cried as she introduced herself and the child to the teacher . . . But she left her son in the room . . . didn't take him out. For people who've been taught all their life to be prejudiced, that took a lot of courage . . . .

"I know some people who use the word 'nigger' with all its derogatory overtones, but who've made a real effort to see that their children get along in the integrated schools. I suppose that gives some basis for being optimistic about the future . . . . The change in attitudes here over the last seven years has been incredible."

A special concern of black parents this year is an unusually large number of black students who have been suspended from school for one to three days. Many members of the black community see this as a disturbing indication of the considerable progress that needs to be made in interracial teacher-pupil relationships.

For example, one mother who has seen all of her ten children attend Clarke County schools said that many white teachers still fail to understand the language, feelings, and problems of young black children. She said it does most of the students ". . . . no good at all to send them home. That just encourages them to go ahead and drop out." She feels the school board is obligated to provide much more training for teachers in an ongoing intergroup relations program and to add well-qualified counselors to help students with personal as well as academic problems.

Several students and parents mentioned a need for an improved and expanded vocational training program. Superintendent McDaniel and other school officials indicated a willingness to invest more resources in this area as well as in areas of intergroup relations. But whether these kinds of problems will actually receive a higher priority in the future is an open question.

A group of about 78 parents, many from the comfortable neighborhood of University Heights initiated the court challenge to the desegregation plan. They charged the school board with unfair treatment since their neighborhood was the only area of the city from which white students were to be bused to a formerly black school. They also complained about the poor condition of the school.

The school board responded by improving many formerly black schools with paved driveways, fresh paint, new blackboards. The board also modified the school attendance plan so that students from areas other than University Heights were to be bused to the school in 1970-71. (All schools now have a 20 to 40 per cent black student population.)

With these changes University Heights parents withdrew their support of the court challenge to the '69-70 plan. But other Athens parents, whites and blacks, carried the case through the courts and succeeded in getting the Supreme Court of the State of Georgia to declare the plan unconstitutional. The school board appealed this decision to the U.S. Supreme Court which heard arguments in October, 1970.

One of the groups most inconvenienced by the present desegregation plan consists of the approximately 100 black children who live in Rock Springs Homes, a large public housing complex. Black parents from the area who were involved in the suit complained that children in grades one through five had to walk almost one and half miles to school, crossing heavily traveled streets. This is so because bus transportation is provided only for students who live more than a mile and a half from school. School officials concede that the restricted transportation is sometimes an imposition, but they point out that many white children are also required to walk the same distance as the black children from Rock Springs. To ease the safety concerns of parents, the school board has provided guards at the crossings but the matter remains one of concern to many black parents.

Merger and Dissension

The most serious disruption of education in Clarke County came last spring as school officials made plans for the September, 1970, merger of the all-black Burney-Harris High School (486 students) and the nearly all-white Athens High School (1529 students). As has been true in many other southern communities, some black and a few white high school students found it necessary to demonstrate their dissatisfaction with desegregation plans drawn up by school officials, most of whom were white. Marches, mass meetings, and other activities concerning the consolidation of the two schools occurred during April and May. Over 350 arrests were made. There was some minor vandalism and charges of police brutality, but no serious injuries were incurred.

During the demonstrations a predominantly black group of students presented a list of grievances to the school board. The grievances did not question the basic plan which made Burney-Harris serve all of the county's 10th grade students and Athens High serve 11th and 12th grade students. Rather, the demonstrating students were concerned with how the plan would be implemented.

The school board met with a student negotiating committee and formulated written, itemized responses to each issue raised by the students. Student leaders involved in the protest were satisfied with only one or two of the board's responses. Many of the board's answers were too general and evasive, according to the leaders.

The list of demands per se ceased to be an issue, however, after the board issued its written response and after the 1969-70 school year was completed. But some high school students feel that many of the issues are still not satisfactorily resolved. For example, the students wanted a black studies program implemented on a broad basis from elementary through secondary school. This year a black studies course, taught by a black teacher, is offered as a regular elective course at the high school. But some of the students in the course, while saying it was a "pretty good one," complained about a shortage of books. No special black studies programs have been included in the curriculum for elementary and junior high grades.

Another student concern last spring was the selection of colors for the new school. The problem appeared solved when one color was selected from Burney-Harris High and one from Athens High to form the new colors for "Clarke Central High." (This is the new name given to the secondary school system which includes the "Burney-Harris campus" and the "Athens campus.") However, the new football uniforms displayed the old Athens High color quite prominently but gave very little visibility to the old Burney-Harris color. (One Athens minister said this was typical of the "blundering, stupid, unnecessary mistakes of the white community which create bad feelings and makes our problem more difficult to solve.")

A third issue concerned the place of the Burney-Harris teaching and administrative staff in the new system. For example, the former principal at Burney-Harris High was made director of the Clarke County adult education program. (The principal at Clarke Central is white, while the assistant and building principals at the Athens and Burney-Harris campuses are evenly divided between whites and blacks.)

The most serious controversy in the merger of the two high school faculties involved football coaches. The black head coach at Burney-Harris was demoted to an assistant coach while the Athens head coach returned to his position. During the football season this situation produced considerable resentment of the part of the black football players who felt that the white coach was incapable of treating them fairly. Dissension among the black players could not be easily dismissed or overlooked by white school officials since several of the athletes not only were student leaders, but also the team's best players. (Two of them won football scholarships to the University of Georgia.)

One Monday, late last October, after the integrated Clarke Central team had lost its only game of the season, a group of black players refused to practice. They claimed that the head coach had unfairly blamed them for losing the game. The coaches and protesting students had a meeting, however, and the walkout ended the next day.

Some observers in Athens believe that the absence of more incidents like this during the season indicated a special effort on the part of coaches and players to establish mutual respect. But many of the black football players still strongly feel the need for a change in the attitude of the coaching staff.

One of them put it like this: "The head coach is wrong, he's wrong from his heart . . . . If there's anyway possible for him to straighten out, then things will work out, I believe. If they keep him, and he don't change, there won't be many black students playing ball . . . because they know what we went through. And besides, there may be trouble . . . ."

In contrast to the dissension which plagues the football team, other areas of the school's athletic program are much more satisfactory to all concerned. The basketball team is co-coached by the former Burney-Harris head coach and a coach from the former Athens High. Players said this arrangement was working out well. As of the first week in February the team was undefeated and ranked among the top ten teams in the state.

The baseball team will have a black head coach.

Policies For Transition

The city of Athens and its schools have been free of major demonstrations since last May. The newly-named Clarke Central High School opened in September, 1970, without any disruptive incidents. Principal Hight said that many parents thought that the black and white students would never get along together. "Some parents believed the school would be blown off the map. It hasn't been. This doesn't mean we've done everything right. We've made some mistakes. But we have kept things together."

School officials have made some policy decisions that have resolved problems which continue to plague schools in other southern communities. For example, the dress code in effect this year in Clarke County schools permits considerable personal freedom in selecting the length of one's hair and the style of one's clothing. In roaming the halls and campus one sees many white students decked out in hippie-style outfits and black students with the most outstanding kinds of Afros and matching attire.

The playing of "Dixie", which has terrorized band directors and high school principals at other schools, is no problem at Clarke Central because the band stopped playing it a year before the schools were consolidated. Superintendent McDaniel says he likes it and considers it a fine song, "But," he explained, "we would prefer not to use it if it's going to offend some of our students and to cause dissension. We believe that helping students to get a good education is more important than stubborn adherence to tradition just for stubborness' sake."

One long-haired student, a member of the high school band who takes a great deal of pride in what he terms the progressive attitude of band members ("We've never had any problems admitting blacks"), said that band members themselves decided 'Dixie' wasn't worth playing if it got people all up tight." He found continued use of the song by the University of Georgia band rather juvenile. "They still play it at all the games. I wish they would grow up and realize they're living in the 20th century. They should set an example for us, not the other way around."

With the assistance of faculty members from the Department of Education at the University of Georgia, the high school is training some 17 students to work in biracial teams to lead "sensitivity sessions" on the dynamics of black-white relations with selected groups of junior high students. Initial meetings with student groups met mixed results. However, most students on the teams thought the meetings were worthwhile, but that the number of students involved was too small. What was needed, they felt, were many more school-sponsored opportunities for students to talk frankly and openly with each other about racial problems.

One student-initiated effort at promoting better understanding among students and between students and school administrators was the formation this year of a new club called "Union for Student Equality" (U-S-E).

The organization was started by a group of 10th grade students at the Burney-Harris building for the purposes of protecting the rights of students, acting as a mediator between students and faculty, and bringing students together on a social basis. USE has sponsored some community events, such as a Christmas party for Headstart children. It is trying to enlarge its membership and to secure financial assistance from HEW under the emergency school desegregation programs.

One of the more ominous new policies at the high school is the deployment of a half dozen security guards. They are all young men, uniformed, armed with a can of Mace for "self-defense". School officials claim they are there to guard against outside bullies and troublemakers. If this were the only reason they were there, one might expect to find them stationed only at the building entrances. But they in fact are found throughout the building.

Walter Allen, the black assistant principal at the high school, said that he at first had serious reservations about hiring the guards, primarily because of the potentially bad image they might have for black students. "I remember all too well," he said, "what, historically, policemen have done to me and most other black people. But now since they've been here for a while, they seem to be working out."

Student opinion of the guards is far from unanimous. Many students said they "didn't mind the guards being there", but thought they were unnecessary. Some black students said they got along well with the guards "except for one or two who try too much to assert their authority . . . ." Other students said the guards were needed to prevent incidents of extortion and bullying in the halls. Still other students expressed strong resentment of the guard's presence and felt they contributed to a repressive and tense atmosphere. However, barring a flagrant discourtesy or indiscretion by the guards, it appeared unlikely that their presence would precipitate a major incident.

The number of school-sponsored social activities at Clarke Central has been reduced considerably. The traditional fall homecoming dance was cancelled and only one other social event—a Christmas dance—has been attempted. The latter dance flopped partly because students considered ticket prices too high and partly because black students disliked the band.

School officials are proceeding cautiously in the area of social activities apparently to avoid a major incident of violence which would provoke an outcry from the white community. But many students expressed an interest in a greatly expanded social calendar. Students generally seemed much less apprehensive about the potential for trouble than did school officials and parents. One white student leader said school administrators could take necessary precautions against violence and could do much more to encourage antagonistic white and black students to cooperate in seeing that social functions were kept peaceful.

A black member of the student council offered this advice:

The thing that would help our school now more than anything else would be for the administration to stop worrying about the black and the white and to start worrying about students . . . Treat everybody as students because that's what they are, really . . . and the situation would work out, but they just don't believe it. [emphasis supplied]

Interviewed for this report during the first week in February, high school officials readily agreed that an expanded social program was highly desirable. Principal Hight said, "It is now imperative that the school sponsor more social activities. Students are growing tired of administrators using 'integration' as a crutch for not doing anything. Everyone is much more accustomed to integration now and there's no reason why we can't hold generally all of the activities that the schools sponsored before they merged."

Student Reflections

Given the encouragement and opportunity, a vast majority of black and white students probably could do much more to relieve resentment and mistrust. The following experience of one black high school senior suggests the possibilities:

We were in this class together, another black guy and I, and we got into a discussion with white kids about the demonstrations of last spring.

Some of the white kids thought we did it because we were violent, and didn't like them and didn't like anything about them.

But we explained why we demonstrated. It wasn't for any reason of violence, not to cause violence. But that's the way it turned out . . . we had to demonstrate anyway.

We explained [to the white students] how we really thought about things. We sort of made them see the light, to see how we really felt. It wasn't that we didn't like them, but it was a cause we were fighting for.

Things won't get better until blacks and whites get to know each other as friends. That's what it takes.

The black seniors also articulated a determination to secure on a permanent basis the fundamental rights, respect, and civilities due them as American citizens.

One student, reflecting on part of the meaning of his heritage said:

I think some of the older white folks think that stuff [white domination] is still going to happen. But, I don't believe it's going to come about anymore . . . because I'd rather be dead than do what my foreparents did . . . .

When some whites come up to me now and, you know, try to holler at me and say do this, do that, demanding like, I want to retaliate . . . because I've heard many times before what my grandmother went through, and I just don't want to go through that. It's heartbreaking to know what she had to go through.

Another student:

> My mother and father, they tried to put me down, told me I was going to get in trouble because I talk a whole lot, speak my mind . . . but I say what I think because I don't mind. I told them that Martin Luther King said, 'If you don't have a cause worth dying for, you're not a man' and that's what I tell them . . .
>
> That's what they [white people] want Negroes to do anyway. Sit back and don't say anything. That's what happened to our parents. They were afraid to speak up . . . .

A third student, referring to the demotion of black teachers and principals when desegregation occurs:

> The Negro, he's been taking it for so long . . . he's tired, he's not going to take it anymore.

The Future in Athens

A biracial committee, consisting of students and faculty from the former Athens and Burney-Harris high schools, was set up three months before the April, 1970, protests to devise a mutually satisfactory way of implementing the desegregation plan. But one student, a member of the committee, reported,

> Students at Athens High wanted to be on it mainly because it was a big deal, a prestige thing, but they weren't really interested in communicating with the black students or in understanding how they really felt about having to give up their school . . . . Students' feelings should have had top priority, but they didn't.

Another observer who was involved in these early meetings also blamed black students from Burney-Harris for not taking advantage of this initial opportunity to express their opinions. "They gave us no indication of how they really felt or what they really wanted. Some of them didn't even attend some of the meetings because of basketball games . . . "

Rev. Frank Hutchison, however, white minister of the Athens United Presbyterian Church, sees the events of last spring as a logical consequence of a culmination of bigotry and ignorance on the part of much of the white community: "A lot of white people either didn't know or didn't care about the feelings of the black people, adults and students, who had strong emotional ties to their high school . . . ."

Many school and city officials in Athens do not deny that what happened last spring has made the white community more attentive to voices from the black community. The crucial issue, however, is whether the white community will be more responsive to the needs of the black community.

In the aftermath of the demonstrations several leaders in the black community spoke out against the failure of the "old Athens establishment" and the city administration to show any kind of genuine concern for the poor and problems of poverty. "The black people have not been heard," said Mrs. John T. (Jessie) Barnet. "There's a terrible lack of communications. The city seems blind to proverty."[5] When asked in [5]Athens Banner Herald, May 31, 1970.

January, 1971, if the situation had improved, Mrs. Barnet replied, "Maybe it's a little bit better, but we'll just have to wait and see what happens. . . . "

Mrs. Miriam Moore is a black woman who has been quite skeptical of the concern of many white Athenians for the black community. (She calls herself a "pure-blooded Athenian" because she was born in the house where she still lives.) But Mrs. Moore sees some progress in Athens, particularly as reflected in the greater interest city officials have shown in the Athens Model City program.

Another reason for a slightly more optimistic outlook, Mrs. Moore said, is the election of 26-year-old Edward Turner to the Athens city council. He is the first black man to serve since the days of Reconstruction.[6] Turner sees a major benefit of his election as giving the black community an official voice for communicating with city officials. He said he has little indication that the city will make significant improvements in programs affecting the black community. "There's not much hope in one vote out of nine, but at least the black community will have a voice that they've never had before."

Turner emphasized that the problems in Athens involve " . . . not just improving the educational system, but raising immediately the socio-economic status of most of the students' parents. Athens needs a lot more decent job and housing opportunities for its black residents."[7]

One outgrowth of the demonstrations last spring was the establishment of the United Free Press, a mimeographed monthly newspaper published by a group of black and white citizens in an effort to fill a communications gap between the black and white communities. Founders of the paper say it was established " . . . due in large part to the apparent unwillingness of local newspapers and radio stations to report certain kinds of news, especially news which reflects discontent with the manner in which the public business of Athens is conducted."[8]

The paper has received a warm welcome in the black community and among students. Many black residents said the paper serves a very useful function in discussing events that the " . . . two establishment Athens dailies wouldn't touch." Continued publication of the United Free Press should make social injustices in Clarke County more difficult to ignore.[9]

One cannot responsibly predict that the school system will be free of major disturbances during the remainder of this school year. In Athens as in many other American communities, meaningful communication

---

[6]Turner was elected from Athens' First Ward where 800 whites and 1175 blacks are registered. He defeated the white incumbent 645-571 in a runoff election after receiving the highest vote in a 3-man primary race.

[7]Only 8 per cent of the black labor force in Clarke County hold jobs classified officially as "white collar" positions, compared with 58.1 per cent of the white work force in these positions. 53.1 per cent of the county's blacks work in "service" jobs, compared with only 7.2 per cent of the white work force.

[8]United Free Press June 1, 1970, p. 1.

[9]In its second issue, (June 7, 1970) the Free Press noted "some improvement" in the "establishment" papers' coverage of events concerning the black community. Such improvements included a special eight-page feature section on "Black Athens: Triumph and Tragedy," wherein some black leaders were given an opportunity to express their ideas in public.

between white and black residents was breeched by a history of enforced patterns of racial segregation and discrimination. The legacy of that history continues to be a considerable amount of resentment, frustration, and mutual suspicion. But, through the physical desegregation of their educational system, the people of both races in Clarke County have created new significant possibilities for ending the destructive legacy and correcting past injustices.

Having taken this initial step towards giving all students, for the first time, an equal educational opportunity, school officials may find more time and resources to invest in expanding and revising the total educational program. The situation is now at the point where students and school officials can begin to confront problems more sophisticated and complex than simply placing black and white students in the same classrooms and buildings. The remaining problems, particularly at the high school and junior high schools, require a more energetic attack on feelings of mistrust, resentment, and social isolation. The present challenge is to create good-will, espirit d' corps, a situation where everyone feels that they are welcomed and "a part of the team."

Clarke County has the potential for operating one of the highest quality integrated school systems in the country. During the last decade its citizens consistently supported increased local spending for education.[10] Yet, only a small percentage of the county's available financial resources have been tapped. For example, local school revenue for 1967-68 represented only 2.2 per cent of the county's effective buying income of $131.8 million. Less than one per cent of the total property value of the county is being spent annually for school purposes. The people of Clarke County as a whole clearly have the ability to provide the additional financial support which will be necessary to maintain and improve their public education program.

Hopefully, there are enough people in the county who have achieved sufficient freedom from their personal prejudices and who have enough pride, determination, and patience to complete the social transformation they have initiated. Hopefully, enough people appreciate the progress that has been made and recognize the much greater progress that needs to be made so that Clarke County residents may provide, sooner than the people in many other communities, an opportunity for their children to learn to live together, acknowledging and developing the differences and similarities of their respective southern cultures.

---

[10]Total current expenditures for 1968-69 were approximately 90 per cent greater than expenditures for 1964-65.

WHITE FLIGHT:

THE SEGREGATION ACADEMY MOVEMENT

By Kitty Terjen

The rapidly developing segregation academy movement in the South is an anomaly in the history of private education. Unlike parochial schools and the better private preparatory schools founded earlier in the century, the segregation academy tends to be academically inferior—accredited neither by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools nor by the states in which they operate. Although this year there is evidence that many private academies are moving from make-shift quarters into new prefab buildings, the caliber of teachers (many of whom came out of retirement to teach) remains sub-standard and the curriculum offerings, at best, are pale imitations of what is offered in the public schools.

Many of these new schools, with their underlying philosophy of "Never!", are a warping influence on the children who attend. Even aside from the implications of removing children to a segregated situation in a democratic country, it is important to note that many of these schools are motivated by an extreme right-wing philosophy which, in the name of "patriotism" and "quality education," is a perversion of the nation's ideals.

Private School Enrollment

For the 1970-71 school year, the Southern Regional Council estimates that 450,000 to 500,000 students attend private segregated schools in the 11-state South. Many of these are older private schools, not founded for the purposes of segregation but still without Negro students; others are the new segregation academies.

The Council estimated in October, 1969, that 300,000 students were enrolled in segregated private schools. After the Supreme Court's decision in October, 1969, to integrate schools "at once," the Council revised its figures upward to 400,000 students, based primarily on reports of the virtual abandonment by whites of the public schools in some areas of Mississippi and Louisiana. Since that time some whites have returned to the public schools and many of the older private schools have begun to integrate. The estimate of 450,000 to 500,000 students enrolled, therefore, represents an attempt to reflect these subtle shifts but tends to conceal the dramatic growth of the newer segregation academies. There is ample evidence that existing academies are adding grades and increasing enrollments and that a great many new academies were opened for the first time this fall.

Sources of information about the number of newer schools are fragmentary and in many cases uncertain. SRC estimates are based on the latest state records available, as well as HEW estimates and news stories.

State departments of education do not keep up with the phenomenal growth and do not usually separate the various categories of private schools. HEW estimates have proved inaccurately low. Despite SRC recommendations last year for better public records on the private school movement, up-to-date and accurate information is still not available.

State-By-State

Following is a brief state-by-state report on private school activity in the South last year:

—Alabama: The latest figures available from the state department of education are for the year 1968-69, when 39, 214 pupils reportedly were enrolled in 191 private schools of all types (including post-secondary) in the state. The only up-to-date figures available on this state are those provided by Allen Cleveland (an Auburn University graduate student), who made a survey of the non-sectarian private schools in the state last spring. He found, by interviewing school superintendents, that as of April, 1970, there were 83 non-sectarian private schools in operation in the state and that 43 would open in September, 1970. After his survey was made, Cleveland discovered an additional 20 schools which planned to open in the fall of 1970, bringing the total of new schools this year to about 65.

"I anticipated in April that 20,500 pupils would attend private schools in September. My guess now is that it is closer to 35,000," Mr. Cleveland said in January. He added that his survey did not include private schools set up in churches to avoid segregation and he indicated there were a large number of schools so situated in Alabama.

The survey, which Mr. Cleveland conducted as part of his Ph.D. dissertation at Auburn University, indicates that private school enrollment in the state has more than doubled since 1964. In addition, his study concludes that in many instances the newer the school, the lower its enrollment and tuition the more likely it is to be lacking certain elements which constitute "quality education."

—Arkansas: The department of education was having trouble keeping up with the growth of private education as a whole in the state so it quit keeping statistics in 1968. However, the Arkansas Gazette reported that enrollment in segregation academies—not counting older private schools and parochial schools—rose from 405 in 1969 to 2,348 in 1970. The number of such schools tripled during the year.

—Florida: This state has traditionally had a greater percentage of its school-age population enrolled in private schools than have other states in the South, but it was not believed until last year that there was any significant enrollment in segregation academies. Newspaper reports in the last year, however, reveal that there is an academy movement in that state and it is growing. During 1969-70 there were 396 private schools of all types in Florida with a total enrollment of 109,478 students. The state department has made a conservative estimate of five per cent growth this year.

—Georgia: No official statistics are kept, but an unofficial state department survey, which is incomplete, suggests that this year there are 224 private schools in the state, 144 more than there were in 1967. Enrollment this year is estimated to be 50,078 students, an increase of almost 40,000 since 1967.

—Louisiana: According to the state department of education, 165,000 students are enrolled in private schools this year, 12,380 more than the previous year and 15,152 more than 1964. The growth in Louisiana is exceptionally large but it does not show up clearly in the figures because of a concurrent drop in parochial school enrollment which is part of a national trend due to rising costs and shrinking financial support of Catholic schools. (Louisiana has a larger Catholic population than any other Southern state.)

—Mississippi: The most dramatic and most publicized growth of the academy movement has occurred in this state. This year, according to state figures, 62,676 pupils are enrolled, an increase of 43,278 students since 1964. State figures on the number of private schools are contradictory. This year the state reports 197 private schools in operation, although last year it reported 256 such schools. Newspapers document a continued growth from 1969, so an estimate of 275-300 schools would probably be accurate for the current school year.

—North Carolina: This is one of the few Southern states which attempts to keep full and current records on the private schools within its boundaries. It even has a paid coordinator of non-public schools. North Carolina has witnessed a steadily increasing private school enrollment, from 18,721 students in 1964 to 36,470 students in 1970-71, an increase of approximately 18,000. Eighty-one private schools have been created in the state since 1964, 31 in the last year.

—South Carolina: The department of education estimates that 35,000 students are enrolled in private schools this year, 9,000 more than last year and approximately 17,000 more than in 1964. The number of private schools also has risen sharply, from a reported 78 in 1964 (there were 48 in 1954) to 139 in 1969-70. The membership in the segregationist South Carolina Independent School Association has risen to 60 member schools this year, compared with 31 in mid-1969. Officials of that organization say there are many more operating in the state which are too inferior in quality to be members.

—Tennessee: The state does not keep private school statistics (except for those few—37 in 1969-70—which voluntarily request state approval) and public school enrollment figures show no significant decrease this year. Observers at the Race Relations Information Center in Nashville feel the segregation academy movement in Tennessee has been limited.

—Texas: The state department of education did not respond to SRC inquiries in time for inclusion in this report. HEW estimates that this year 57,000 are enrolled in private schools, a drop of almost 4,000 from the previous year. This drop probably reflects declining parochial school enrollment, which is large in this state, and growth of segregated private education, if any, is not reflected.

—Virginia: The Old Dominion, a pioneer in the academy movement (Prince Edward Academy in Farmville has provided a model for other states), reports 56,304 Virginia residents enrolled in private schools this year, an increase of 5,847 from the previous year. The busing issue in Richmond and Norfolk has contributed to this increase.

IRS and the Academies

The signal event in the life of the new "segregation academy" movement during the past year, aside from its continued spread, was the Internal Revenue Service's decision on July 10 that it "can no longer legally justify allowing tax-exempt status to private schools which practice racial discrimination nor can it treat gifts to such schools as charitable deductions for income tax purposes." At first glance this new policy seemed a victory for civil rights advocates who had long argued for an end to indirect public subsidy, through the tax system, of private segregated schools organized deliberately to avoid public school desegregation. However, as the first favorable rulings were announced under the new policy, it became painfully clear that the IRS, in accepting "good faith" statements by the schools themselves as to whether they discriminate, was defeating its own stated policy.

According to Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Randolph Thrower (who since then has resigned from his position) the IRS is issuing favorable rulings "based on representations of fact made to us in writing by responsible officers of the school setting forth its admission policy and the publication of this to the public." He continued, in testimony before the Senate Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity in August: "Our whole basis of tax administration in this country . . . is based on trust. We assume a voluntary compliance . . . ."

To assume "voluntary compliance" on the part of Southern segregationists is to ignore realities that by now should be second nature to any federal official involved in civil rights enforcement. In the South, a simple statement by a private school that it is open to all regardless of race obviously will not be sufficient.

As of December 30, 1970, six months after announcement of the new policy, the IRS had not initiated revocation of the tax-exempt status of any of the estimated 17,000 to 18,000 private schools in the nation which already had tax-exempt status outstanding. (In Mississippi, the exemptions of 30 such schools were suspended, but this was under court order in the case of Green vs. Kennedy and Thrower.) Nor has the Southern Regional Council been able to ascertain that any of the 136 private school applications pending with the IRS as of July 10, 1970, have received unfavorable rulings.

Information and the Public

In an interview in December, Stuart Patt, an IRS spokesman, declined to say whether IRS had made even one unfavorable ruling outside the Mississippi cases. "We don't make announcements on that," he said. "As long as schools are not exempt, they are taxpayers entitled to the same privileges under the law as all taxpayers . . . . We are prohibited by law from disclosing the affairs of a taxpayer."

This interpretation was rejected by the U. S. District Court of the District of Columbia when it ordered the IRS to make public the names of the 30 schools under its jurisdiction whose tax exemptions were suspended. Many believe that all such IRS rulings, favorable or unfavorable, are matters of public record.

The subject of private schools at the IRS is "so sensitive that we've been cautioned to follow correct procedures," Mrs. June Norris, acting chief of the rulings section, Exempt Organizations Branch, told a researcher who inquired about such information for this report. This "sensitivity" has led to equivocation by some members of the IRS bureaucracy. For example Mr. Patt declined to supply an SRC researcher the list of 136 schools whose applications for tax exemption IRS Commissioner Thrower said were pending July 10, 1970. "Until they receive the exemptions, we can't disclose anything about them," Patt said. However, the IRS did supply the Senate Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity a list of 137 private schools with applications pending as of August 7, 1970, and the list was published in the record of the hearings which are available to the public.

To further confuse matters, the IRS, after announcing in Washington the names of the first seven schools which received favorable rulings, began with the eighth favorable ruling to make announcements only at the district-office level. There are 58 districts. Furthermore, rulings on the 17,000 to 18,000 private schools with exemptions outstanding will be made at the district level, according to Terry Gastell of the IRS Public Information Office in Washington. He said he did not think the names of schools approved or disapproved on review would be available in Washington. "We will probably have some statistics," he said.

The IRS, then, is giving no assurances at this time that information regarding any of its rulings, favorable or unfavorable, will be made available to the public generally. Without such information a meaningful evaluation of the effects of the new IRS policy on private school tax exemption will be all but impossible.

Favorable Rulings

As of December 2, 1970, a total of 58 private schools had been granted advance assurance of tax exemption by the IRS. The Southern Regional Council was able to obtain a copy of this list from the IRS in Washington. Of those schools granted favorable rulings, nine were in Mississippi and under jurisdiction of the federal court in the Green case. (Eight of these schools are awaiting decision by the court on an appeal by the plaintiffs, who contend that the schools, despite their declaration that they have a non-discriminatory admissions policy, are "part of a system of private schools operated on a racially segregated basis as an alternative to white students seeking to avoid desegregated public schools." The ninth school, the Saints Academy in Lexington, is integrated and its exemption was not challenged by the plaintiffs.)

Of the 49 private schools outside Mississippi which have been granted tax exemption, one school, the Pinewood Christian Academy in Claxton, Ga., does not appear on the list of 137 private schools with applications pending August 7 (as listed in the committee hearings). Nor were the names of the first seven schools which received IRS approval on July 19 on the list supplied to the Equal Educational Opportunity Committee by the IRS. It is very difficult, therefore, to determine whether the IRS is presently issuing rulings only on those schools whose applications were pending at the time of the policy change or whether the IRS is adding, and approving, private schools. Furthermore, current IRS policy makes it impossible to determine which schools with applications pending, if any, have received unfavorable rulings.

Violations

Shortly after the first six IRS exemptions were announced, Mrs. Ruby Martin of the Washington Research Project testified before the Senate Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity that at least three of the six private schools granted exemption fit "the classic pattern of the segregation academy." At later hearings before this committee, the IRS commissioner said: "We have not at this time made an effort to determine the motivation for the formation of the seven schools about which you specifically requested." Adding that decisions were "prospective" and that the IRS was giving all schools ample opportunity to "conform," Thrower refused to be convinced that a school which was organized to avoid public school desegregation and which remained segregated should be judged on those grounds. "I am not willing," he said, "to make the assumption that assurances given us in writing by the leaders of any institution will represent a farce and a fraud. If any are, we want that called to our attention."

Sen. Walter F. Mondale, chairman of the committee, called to Thrower's attention the following evidence provided by Robert Valder of the Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.:

> . . . . The information contained below was obtained by Mr. Ernest Johnson, a black resident of Alabama . . . .
>
> Mr. Johnson went to Newnan, Ga., at my request to obtain certain information about Heritage School on July 31 and August 1, 1970. Mr. Johnson first talked to two black residents of Newnan who wish to remain anonymous. One of the residents told Mr. Johnson that the Newnan City Council, in a meeting during the summer of 1969, had discussed methods of 'keeping the niggers out of' the Heritage School. One method discussed during that meeting was to charge excessively high tuition.
>
> In order to get the most complete information possible, I had asked Mr. Johnson to attempt to obtain an application form for this school. Accordingly, Mr. Johnson decided to ask a black parent to go to the office of this school and say that she was thinking about enrolling one of her children in the school. She refused because she said she had seen an article in the local paper during the summer of 1969 which stated that this school was for 'whites only.' Mr. Johnson went to the local newspaper office in an attempt to locate that article, but was told that newspapers were not retained in that office for that length of time. Mr. Johnson then went to the school's office and talked to Mr. George H. Keller Jr. who is headmaster.

Mr. Johnson told Mr. Keller that he was thinking about enrolling his child in this school and would like to obtain an application form and any other relevant information. Mr. Keller told Mr. Johnson that at the present time no Negroes had applied to enroll their children in the school but that Mr. Johnson could make such an application if he had $750.00 'in your ass pocket.' Mr. Keller did give Mr. Johnson an application form and information about tuition costs. Mr. Johnson said Mr. Keller's general demeanor towards him was 'nasty and hostile.'

Mr. Keller also told Mr. Johnson that if his children were enrolled they would have to be 'clean and decent.'

Enclosed is a copy of the application form for this school. It should be noted that references are required; obviously such a requirement would act as a deterrent should any black person have the desire to attempt to enroll his child in this school . . . .

Enclosed are Xeroxed copies of clippings from the Newnan Times-Herald. The clipping dated July 9, 1970, does not state that this school is open to blacks. One of the clippings dated July 16, 1970, does make such an indication. The implication being that suddenly this school became open to black students . . . .

Commissioner Thrower rejected the deeply distrubing allegations in Mr. Johnson's report. He preferred to believe that the Heritage officials were acting in good faith. To the knowledge of SRC, the IRS has not yet investigated the Legal Defense Fund's complaints against the Heritage School.

While Thrower testified that he would welcome information from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, HEW Secretary Elliot Richardson later said that the burden of monitoring private schools will be on private citizens. He said Southerners who feel the private schools are discriminating can complain to the IRS or file suit.

Enforcement

The Southern Regional Council recently discovered that five of the six private schools in South Carolina which have been granted tax exemption as of December 2 are members of the segregationist South Carolina Independent School Association. The sixth school, the Union Academy, received advice at its inception from Dr. T. E. Wannamaker, a hero of the white Citizens Councils and a founder of the South Carolina association, which has been closely aligned with the Citizens Councils organization. The Union Academy, according to one of its board members, intends to join the association in the near future.

One of the first schools to be granted exemption by the IRS under its policy is the Gaffney Day School. As early as 1966 this school was listed as a member of the South Carolina association and it is on record with the IRS as having "applied for membership in the South Carolina Independent School Association and this will be the accrediting agency." When the Gaffney School first appeared on the membership roster of the South Carolina association, Dr. Wannamaker, then president of the group, told the Columbia State and Record (July 10, 1966): "We're here because we have convictions—and we're going to stay. It's not token integration we're concerned about, but the effects mass integration will have on our schools in the future . . . . The immediate concern is this heavy ratio, the future concern is amalgamation of the races which takes three generations." In the past Dr. Wannamaker has indicated he believes in the inherent inferiority of Negroes and on one occasion he told the Washington Post: "I'm an old-time conservative. I believe it's heredity first and environment second. Many (Negroes) are little more than field hands."

The South Carolina Independent School Association's close relationship with the white Citizens Councils often has been kept in the background. As early as February, 1966, an article by Dr. Wannamaker entitled "Private Schools—Developments in South Carolina," appeared in The Citizen, the monthly publication of the Citizens Council, and his picture was on the cover. In June, 1969, William J. Simmons, administrator of the Citizens Council, told a New York Times reporter that "there are about 24 (private schools) in South Carolina, where the council-sponsored school system is called the Independent School Association . . . ." Later that year Mr. Simmons attended the annual convention of the South Carolina association at Hilton Head as an "observer." The Columbia State on December 15, 1969, reported: "The soft-spoken, easy-talking Mississippian said forthrightly that he isn't much impressed by some private school-men who emphasize the need for quality education. He said, matter-of-factly, the root is school integration."

The five schools in South Carolina which have been granted favorable rulings by the IRS, despite their membership in an association which has linked arms with the white Citizens Councils and which in earlier days espoused segregation openly but which now couches its beliefs in terms of "quality education", are:

> The Gaffney School, Gaffney; Holly Hill Academy, Holly Hill; Thomas Heyward Academy, Ridgeland; Coastal Academy; Myrtle Beach; Thomas Hart Academy, Hartsville.

(The sixth school, Union Academy, which received a favorable ruling from the IRS, plans to join the South Carolina association in the near future.)

Because of the new IRS policy, all these schools now have publicly espoused a non-discriminatory admissions policy and published it in a local newspaper (to satisfy an IRS requirement), something not all members of the South Carolina association are sure they are willing to do, even hypocritically. Hillyer Rudisill III, a ranking official in the South Carolina association, recently said he is wary of publishing a statement on non-discrimination in the local newspaper and then claiming that no qualified Negro has applied. Even that would be "capitulation" to the federal government, in his view. "If you said there were no qualified Negro applicants, some Yankee psychologist would come down and say the tests are culturally biased," he said.

Sentiments like these suggest the real spirit of the segregation academy movement. Commissioner Thrower, however, did not consider them relevant. It is his judgment that the IRS exemption rulings should be based only on officially published statements. This policy ignores the cynicism of the statements and the fact that they are designed to placate the IRS. "This policy," Thrower told the Senate Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity, "makes available to all children, without regard to race, private education in the country which has the benefit of tax exemption. What we are assuring is availability, not attendance." Paper assurances, of course, do not insure availability and the IRS, in a recent attempt to recoup some of its credibility on the subject, told Atlanta Journal education editor Junie Brown that the July 10 ruling does not apply to such areas as "testing, grade requirements, high tuition and other technicalities to try to keep Negro students out while still proclaiming an open-door policy." Nor, obviously, does the IRS consider, as it hands out favorable rulings, the social and economic pressures of the white community—not to mention outright violence—which might face Negroes attempting to enroll their children in a private school in the South.

The Green Case

The ugly reality of the situation seems to have entirely escaped the Internal Revenue Service, but it has not escaped the plaintiffs in the Green case, who argued in December before the U. S. District Court in the District of Columbia that "the name of the game is paper compliance" to obtain tax-exempt status. The specific issue now before the court involves the eight schools in Mississippi which were granted favorable tax rulings by the IRS last fall. All eight have officially declared that they will accept applications from black pupils, but in none are blacks actually enrolled. One reason for this, an IRS lawyer argued, was that "none have applied."

The Green case is significant because it has ordered the IRS to "first affirmatively determine . . . that a school . . . is not a part of a system of private schools operated on a racially segregated basis as an alternative to white students seeking to avoid desegregated public schools." The judges, according to the Washington Post, "have made it clear that they were not entirely satisfied with IRS action to date." If the court requires the IRS to go beyond paper compliance in Mississippi, it will surely be forced to do so in the rest of the country. ("Or else Jim Eastland would scream," noted Frank Parker, who is lawyer for the plaintiffs.) If so, then surely most of the 57 favorable rulings issued as of December 2, 1970, would have to be rescinded.

Schools With Favorable Rulings Outstanding

According to IRS sources, a review of the estimated 17,000 to 18,000 private schools in the country with favorable tax rulings outstanding is still in process. "We really don't know very much about the admissions policy of these schools," IRS Spokesman Stuart Patt said. "We have sent out a questionnaire form to all schools we could possibly pick off our lists." Patt said the due date for return of these questionnaires was December 30, 1970. "Until the examinations branch has all of these questionnaires back and goes through them, we won't be able to undertake a full-scale examination in this area," he said. He added that no tax exemptions for private schools approved in previous years had been revoked as of December 30, 1970.

Unless the court intervenes, the IRS will probably continue its farcical acceptance of the written word. There is no evidence that the IRS has yet conducted field examinations or considered the racial constituency of the student body (an earlier criterion announced by the IRS, but later dropped from the record) of a private school seeking tax exemption. All evidence points toward satisfaction with the present policy.

Despite the IRS's new policy on private schools, the government is continuing its indirect subsidy of segregated private schools by granting favorable rulings to schools which hypocritically announce an open-door policy. Its announced position is that if a school's tax-exempt status is revoked, gifts or contributions made to it before the revocation will not be affected. A school already might have received its major capital gifts before adverse action is taken in Washington. Thus, on the strength of bad judgments by IRS in the initial phase, some schools that are not eligible for an exemption will have received the benefit of one at the most crucial stage of their development. While approximately 85 per cent of the private schools' operating costs can be met by tuition and other fees, funds for capital improvements are almost totally dependent upon contributions.

As a letter to the editor of the New York Times (August 2, 1970) suggests: "By such action these schools would be able to assure their contributors that the deductibility of their contributions would not be in question. After the buildings have been completed and the buses have been bought out of tax deductible contributions, the effect of a revocation is not harsh since the daily operating costs may be satisfied through tuition payments.

"If the administration is sincere in its aim to prevent the formation of tax-exempt segregated schools, it should ask the IRS to point out that a deliberate misrepresentation in a tax exemption application constitutes a crime, with a maximum penalty of a fine of $5,000 and three years imprisonment."

Effect on Public Education

While the proportion of students enrolled in all private schools in the South is still below the national average, the growth of private school enrollments in some areas has had an undermining effect on the public schools. The South, a region which traditionally has been at the bottom in virtually every aspect of public education, is again being victimized by its own racial fears. Because of the private school movement, many areas are seeing a return to separate-but-unequal education. According to the latest figures from the National Education Association, four Southern states show a significant drop in public school enrollment this year:

State	1969/70	1970/71	Loss
Alabama	825,072	803,507	—21,565
Louisiana	853,766	842,365	−11,401
Mississippi	575,284	534,395	−40,889
South Carolina	648,182	646,100	− 2,082

In many areas within these states the public school systems are becoming all-black. In many of these instances the school boards remain under the control of whites who are sending their children to private schools. Instances of the transfer or gift of public school property and materials to private schools have been alleged. State revenue to public schools, usually based on average daily attendance, has decreased with white flight and evidence is accumulating that local bond issues for public schools in several Southern states are being voted down because of the move to the academies.

The problem compounds itself. As black enrollment increases, achievement test scores begin to drop, reflecting centuries of educational abuse Negroes have suffered in segregated schools and a segregated society. Negro drop-out rates increase because the public school system in the South is still, generally, a white middle-class institution which does not effectively serve its new constituents. White parents became more and more reluctant to send their children to schools as the percentage of blacks in a school increases and the benefits of an integrated education are lost to all. The present institutional framework of public education is generating trouble and unless effective solutions are created, there is a grave danger that public education in many parts of the South will disintegrate.

Because the segregation academy movement is a prime factor in this depressing state of education in the region, it is imperative that all publicly-supported encouragement of segregated private schools—by tax exemptions, free lunches, etc.—be withdrawn at once. Further, to insure an educated populace for the future, minimal standards of quality should be required of all private schools for the safety and well-being of all.

BLACK STUDENTS SPEAK:

THEY'RE LOOKING TO US AS EXAMPLES

(The following is from a tape recording of a discussion by four black high school seniors who are in their first year at a fully integrated school in a small southern city. It is not necessarily representative of all problems or ranges of opinion among southern students. But it does suggest the concrete reality of a situation about which adults have done so much abstracting and generalizing. And it reflects that which in all southern young people needs only encouragement and honest adult leadership for the making of a better South and better America.)

FIRST STUDENT: You know it may not seem important to some people. But to us—you know we had been going to [all-black school] for three years—and to go to another school and lose all our identity wouldn't seem right to us. Because you know we had more pride in our school than to just go lose it. So we wanted our school colors—you know not all of them—but consolidated. We wanted part of our colors to be there, too. I mean they really sort of played our school color out. They had more of theirs than ours. They just gave a few stripes. [laughter]

SECOND STUDENT: They just had a little stripe of gold [on football uniforms]. All the rest of it was [formerly predominantly white school] colors. For them it was just like last year—only instead of having a little white stripe they had a little gold stripe.

THIRD STUDENT: Football. That's where most of the problems come from—football. The Negro students and the coaching staff—how we were treated over there. . . . They criticized our coaches—about how we played ball. Yet still we had the best players—most of the best players out there on the field were Negroes.

FOURTH STUDENT: Our head coach was assistant B-team coach and our head line coach was really assistant C-team coach and our one black coach on the varsity was—they always sent him down on the end with the leftovers. . . . The head coach [of the B-team] just started coaching this year.

THIRD STUDENT: I think they should change the whole coaching staff. As long as you have Negro players the kinds of things that happened this year will go on happening after the coach acted like he did this year.

FOURTH STUDENT: Rather than get a black head coach, they should get a fair head coach. Get a man that's qualified. He doesn't have to be black to be qualified. Someone who can deal with both black and white ball players.

FIRST STUDENT: Someone who would treat one player as he would treat another.

SECOND STUDENT: [The present coach] will be back next year. But I don't think he should. They should get a coach who is fair to all players.

FIRST STUDENT: What his problem is—he is the authority over there at school.

THIRD STUDENT: He runs everything.

FIRST STUDENT: What he says—he tells the principal what to do. He can tell anyone what to do over there because you know—they consider him as a god because, you know, he had a pretty good season—winning teams, you know. So he thinks everything should go his way. And the principal lets him have his way.

THIRD STUDENT: On the basketball team it seems as though to me they [white and black co-coaches] try to do half-way right. If they make a decision they try to show that both of them discussed it and made the decision together. . . . The basketball situation is a lot better than the football situation [even though the white co-coach is, in effect, in charge of both the girls' and boys' teams]. Not just because we have more black players out there—even though the black players we have out there—they are the best.

FIRST STUDENT: [A big difference in the new school situation this year] is that the higher authorities expect you to change. You know—you've been going to a black school for twelve years and they expect you to change your ways, your traditions and everything, you know—even your language. They expect you to change this in a year . . . You can change a little. But there's no reason to change totally. The teachers—they're all right. They don't try to be so rough. Just a few do.

FOURTH STUDENT: The principal and assistant principal, they'll get you in the office and the first thing they'll tell you is—you're supposed to be setting an example. You can't be with all the other black students out there. You got to walk this way. You got to talk this way. I told him one day, I'm on the student council and he going to tell me I couldn't be with those people. I told him they were the ones who elected me. For me to turn my back now—In other words they want you to be white. I mean they want me—if some trouble comes about—to tell 'em to be cool. Don't boycott. Go along with it. I know it's wrong. But go along with it. I don't believe in it.

SECOND STUDENT: They always tell us they're looking to us as examples. But we got to live with our color. They don't have to live with our color. They don't. We grew up with them. For us to go out there and change—uh-uh—ain't no way. They talk about you got to set an example. Don't do what you see everybody else doing. They want you to stay out from around ones they think cause a whole lot of trouble. We got a little old place out there [in front of the school]. A lot of Negroes hang out there. They don't want you to hang out there. That's a bad group. You know it's mostly hippies and Negroes hang out there in front. I been with 'em all my life. I can't change in one year. . . . If a Negro don't come to school and they happen to see him on campus, he gets suspended. They've thrown out a lot of them, and the majority was Negro. . . . The Negroes and hippies get along very well.

FIRST STUDENT: They sort of had a reason for putting [security guards] in—consolidation, integration and all. They don't bug me. The majority are white. Some people say they bug them—they try to say they're like policemen or cops or something. But I don't think it should bug them. If you don't do wrong, they don't have anything to do.

FOURTH STUDENT: You have to give it to them. Some of them go out of the way to be nice to you. One of them, white, when he sees a black person, he says, "Brother—brother . . ." You can talk to them. . . . We get along with them. Black people do. But like I say, those hippies and some of the white people, they don't like them. . . .

THIRD STUDENT: They're just trying to do a job. I think it's good to have them over there . . .

I get along with most of the white kids. In football, we got along all right. They didn't get mad or anything while we were out there on the field. But now after football season is over with—we're just like somebody who just walked onto the schoolyard. When we were football players, they thought something of us.

FIRST STUDENT: The young black students—they can get along with the young white students. The young black students, they have a rather different idea towards older white people. I mean you can't—maybe it's just a generation gap or something like that . . . But the young white students, they sort of understand some parts of how we act.

SECOND STUDENT: All the while we were playing football, all the white football players—they only spoke to Negro football players. You know, seems like there were just a few who would speak to a Negro they didn't play football with. If they would see me coming down the hall, they'd speak. But if you didn't play no football they wouldn't have nothing to do with you. Then when football season was over—don't none of 'em speak to us. It don't make me no difference but—they say we're integrated, but we are not because when you go over there, you've got the blacks in one group, you've got the hippies in one group, you've got the whites in one group. You may find a few whites and blacks together. But mostly you got the whites and hippies and blacks . . . I ain't going to die over them not talking to me—but if you're going to integrate you ought to go over there and be together on things. I try to get along with them. We went over there trying to make the thing work. We gave them a lot. We went over there, we had to go by their rules. . . .

You know we used to have dances. Well, they cut that out. We like to go to dances. [The town] is pretty dead nowadays. You don't have anywhere to go. Now we can't have a dance because somebody's going to get to fighting. That's the first thing they bring up.

FOURTH STUDENT: If they're going to fight, they'll fight anyhow. We are over there all day—we go to school together.

THIRD STUDENT: So why shouldn't we be able to go over there to a dance? We didn't have no homecoming court or anything. We go to school all day with them. Why shouldn't we be able to socialize with them at a dance? . . .

Anything they have over there, it looks like they try to eliminate a lot of Negroes from being in it, anyway.

FIRST STUDENT: If they're going to have integration over there, seems as though they should want the blacks and whites to get together. But seems like they try to keep us apart. I don't know what they think. I guess they think we can't be together.

FOURTH STUDENT: He [the principal] argued with me about assembly programs. We were going to have a black history program and [one on] Martin Luther King's assassination. He was afraid any time we get in there together there's going to be an all-out battle. We had one program, and he was afraid Negroes and whites were going to get to fighting then. Nobody didn't get in a fight. It was just like anything else. I told him one day, "What you trying to hide? If we go fight, you might as well get it over with. Let 'em fight." He dodged around all the issues, you know. . . .

FIRST STUDENT: The school year is almost half-way over, and we haven't had even two fights over to the school yet between black and white. I mean why do they try to avoid the issue? If the blacks want to fight, they'll fight. We're just like they [whites] are. I mean they try to label us as violent and all that. We are just like they are. We have brains.

THIRD STUDENT: I think that what we did last year, going over there protesting—that helped a lot. I bet you they weren't going to change the colors and all. Because they think that Negroes, we don't think about anything. That we would just go over there and give in to what they already had over there. We had traditions just like they did.

FOURTH STUDENT: The principal admitted himself if it hadn't been for those demonstrations, they weren't going to change anything. . . .

FIRST STUDENT: You know you're not going to have many white people taking that [black history] course. I like the class myself. It reminds me of last year. When I go in there, it's mostly Negroes. Three hippies go in there. It's just like a regular [all-black school] class for me. I feel right with it. They say they don't have any class books for Negro history. . . .

THIRD STUDENT: They're doing things to bring about demonstrations over at that school.

FOURTH STUDENT: If they keep on, it's kind of like a steam pot. If you keep it on the stove the pressure builds, the top will blow off. . . . They should just show they aren't scared of us. Like they feel like we are wild, going to fight . . . . Give me a chance. They say, you know, hot weather—

we're supposed to riot and tear up in hot weather. That's the way black people are. That's what they believe, I guess. But if all along we had been having dances—you know, the more you become familiar with people the less it will be. Like going to school with them—you know, you don't notice white people too much. The first day you really noticed 'em—but now it's just common. If we had dances with 'em, it'd be common if we kept doing it.

FIRST STUDENT: I think they should have a dance and just see how it worked out with the Negroes and the whites. You can't hide from things. They going be thinking about the same thing we are right now. They're making it bad for themselves. For example—if you have a friend that's a white friend—if you made friends with him, you know and socialized with him, if something were to happen you wouldn't want to take it out on your friend—because he's a friend, too. He's just your friend. But I mean if you don't socialize with 'em or anything like that and he's just around, he may get hurt just like the rest of 'em. If you socialize, well, you know, you don't have any problems. If you're separate—like we're all-black and you're all-white—if something comes up, you don't care who gets hurt. . . .

THIRD STUDENT: When we started demonstrating, we didn't start off by going straight to violence. We went over there and tried to talk to the principal, and get a meeting going and everything. They tried to run us out.

[The most of violence that occurred in the demonstrations was by police during mass arrests. Some black students were involved in window breaking.]

FOURTH STUDENT: We had been meeting for two or three months and we couldn't find anything. No changes had been made; no attempt to make any changes had been made. . . . We tried to tell [an assistant principal] and he just ran us out. He literally ran us out from over there. After that there wasn't anything else to do but this other thing. Demonstrating worked better than talking.

FIRST STUDENT: Some people say you can't solve anything by violence. We didn't intend to solve it by violence. It wasn't going to be in a violent way but the stuff just kept building up and building up. We didn't try violence, but that's the way it turned out.

THIRD STUDENT: Like they say you can't handle things by violence, and they over there fighting in the war, trying to solve it by violence. . . You see that talking isn't getting you anywhere. You can't talk your way out of everything. You have to fight your way out sometimes. [laughter] . . .

The same thing will come about next year. They talk about building a new school. When they build a new school, they got to find a way. So why not be looking for it now. They wait 'til the last minute and then they go drop something down on your shoulders. And you're supposed to take that and go on with it. . . .

They get us and try to talk with us individually. We can't tell what everybody's going to be thinking about out there in the student body. The principal and all have got to get the students together and talk about solving problems. They can't just get some of the folks. . . .

FOURTH STUDENT: [The principal] is not the main problem. You know I talk to him a lot. I kind of feel sorry for him really. I think he's just scared. You know, he's trying to keep his school together so the people in this community won't get on him—because, you know, they got on him last year. I told him, "You ought to face the problem," you know, but he just don't want to face the problem. He tries to stay in the middle. The middle of the road is not the best answer. . . . Do it fairly. Go on and face the problem and let it go.

FIRST STUDENT: [A black assistant principal] is a pretty good guy. He tries to work with everybody. He don't just try to work with blacks and not work with whites. He tries to work with white and black, and you know, get us all together. He's not trying to be separatist or anything like that.

FOURTH STUDENT: The situation at that school would be worse if it weren't for [the same assistant principal] because, you know, he understands. He tries to understand you and he listens to the problem. He's helping not just white and not just black; he's helping the whole student body.

THIRD STUDENT: The white students and the black students trust him more than they do anybody else over there. . . .

They try to keep dodging. . . . I don't think it'll be any better myself. You try to be friends with the whites. Now you might be a friend with some that go to classes with you. But some of 'em you can't meet—they don't get a chance to see or anything.

FOURTH STUDENT: We get along with the white students. It's just the older people. I don't know—they've got the wrong—I don't know where their ideas come from.

THIRD STUDENT: If someone started now and when it comes to the students that come behind us someone would help try to bring it along again. It would keep building up and then one day it would be all right and everyone would be human beings.

FIRST STUDENT: If they keep us separated things are going to remain the same. It's going to be just like when they first started integration if they keep us separated. But if we mingle and become more understanding toward each other, why things could be better.

SECOND STUDENT: A lot of people say if it hadn't been for the football team, for the football, with Negroes going out there and getting along with the whites, and going along with it, things would have been all messed up. The way I look at it, they're going to have to get a better coach if they going to want this thing to work out.

THIRD STUDENT: If [the present coach] had been [in an integrated situation] three years ago, he wouldn't be there today. The students that were before us wouldn't stand for this. They think that we are violent, but the students that came before us . . . would have turned it out a long time ago.

FIRST STUDENT: Time . . . time solves a whole lot, you know. The students that were before us—some of them have told us they don't want to associate with whites and they don't want whites to associate with them. But time changes. We want to, you know, get together. Things can't go just separated all the time. But then—they hadn't experienced being with whites, whites with blacks, you know. They were just apathetic. They just didn't care about nothing. We do care. We want things to go on right.

THIRD STUDENT: We was young when we first started. . . . You can't teach an old dog new tricks. When we was young, we had a chance to associate with some white teachers. They talked to us. . . .

SECOND STUDENT: They think they can tell the Negro anything and he'll go along with it. But they're wrong. These Negroes, they've got to the point where they don't want to take no more foolishness. You've been through it so long that you've done got tired of it. Don't want to take it no more. Out there on the field, when the coach hollers at us, that's the white man, he's been hollering at us all the time. . . .

FOURTH STUDENT: On a football team, you're going to get hollered at and if you deserve it. . . . I don't mind.

THIRD STUDENT: If you're black and you're not super, you don't get to play.

THIRD STUDENT: I think it's more the older whites than the younger whites. I get along with them. I've got more white friends—whites that I speak to.

FIRST STUDENT: You know my grandmother is 93 years old and you know she's kicking about pretty good. She tells me about what she used to go through, how she used to try to make a living. Compared to now, it was hard. I sort of think, you know, how could people treat people that way?

FOURTH STUDENT: You never will get total integration. You know that. But we're in there together. I figure if they'd put somebody eighteen or twenty years old in there as assistant principal and let 'em go on you know the school would be all right. People are people—I don't care. I don't say there'll be total integration. But I can live with you just as long as you'll live with me. Just like those people at school. We can live with them. We get along well with them.

FIRST STUDENT: You take a Martian and an Earthman, and they get together—you don't expect them to do the same thing. That's the way with Negroes and whites. You can't expect them to talk the same, dance the same. . . . Talk, dance, think.

THIRD STUDENT: All these things they're doing [at school]—some Negroes are looking at it. It won't take a whole group of folks to do it. If some Negroes get together and . . . . start something . . . then everybody's going to join in with it. I mean why shouldn't I help? If some Negroes get together and say, "I'm just fed up"—that's what happened over to the school last year. Everybody just started talking and the hall filled up and everything. . . . It won't be planned or anything; it'll just happen.

SECOND STUDENT: If it keeps going on like it's going now, there's going to be some trouble. If they keep ducking and dodging and going on like it is, just like the man says, it's going to get hot after awhile . . .

They're trying to hide [from] social life . . . Going out to dances and things with white people. . . .

FOURTH STUDENT: Our Negro principal [last year] is a principal now in a night school. . . . We were trying to help him. If he had stuck with us he might have been a principal or assistant principal [at the integrated school]. We would like to see our principal get a good job.

THIRD STUDENT: Like our coach. He was the head coach and has fallen back to assistant coach. . . .

FOURTH STUDENT: How does [the principal] feel now? I'd leave this town. . . Money helps. But my pride—being a man—that's what we're trying to get away from—these black men who . . . aren't men. They're "boy" you know—that's why they call them boys all the time. That's what we're getting away from. We want to be men.

FIRST STUDENT: If they don't want to talk with you, don't want to associate with you, don't want to say anything—and you go up to them and say something, and they'll walk on off. . . . That sort of gets me. I can't see why they think they are so much superior. . . .

THIRD STUDENT: Now my sister, she's real small. She probably doesn't think much about it [integration]. She's in the fifth grade. She gets along with the whites all right. They call her and she has friends. My little nephew, he brings white friends home, and he goes over there sometimes. The young folk get along all right.

FOURTH STUDENT: They've been going together all along. It's nothing new. . . .

March Status Report

of the

SCHOOL DESEGREGATION PROJECT

For the last five weeks, the activities and resources of the School Desegregation Project have been concentrated in five (5) states: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and South Carolina. The project activities in these states are outlined below.

Alabama:

Birmingham Southern and Daniel Payne Colleges in Birmingham, Alabama, are the focal points of the School Desegregation Project. During the past few weeks, several organizational/orientation meetings were held on the respective campuses to recruit and sensitize students to the needs and problems directly or indirectly confronting Alabama youth (secondary schools) in the desegregated situation. Follow-up training and strategy-building assistance will be provided for these volunteers on Saturday, March 28, 1971 in Birmingham, Alabama.

In addition to establishing pilot projects on the respective college campuses in Birmingham, representatives of the School Desegregation Project participated in a Voter Education Project-American Friends Service Committee-Southern Regional Council-sponsored planning meeting of students and student affiliates to ascertain student interest in pulling together a statewide youth conference to deal with the eighteen-year-old vote; school desegregation; and, other youth-related problems. Through participation in this, and the follow-up meeting planned for March 28, 1971 in Montgomery, at least forty students will have been introduced to the aims and objectives of the School Desegregation Project and its activities.

With the assistance of the Black Student's Association, pilot projects have been initiated on the Auburn University campus. Follow-up meetings will be held with these interested students in early April.

During the last week in March, Leon Hall, project coordinator of the School Desegregation Project will spend a week touring the state of Alabama, meeting with student groups (high school and college) to get a clearer picture of what's happening with students in the state and to introduce the project. This tour will culminate in the Montgomery conference on March 28th.

Florida:

The School Desegregation Project is presently exploring the possibility of cooperation/coordination with the three-thousand member Student Concern Organization which has already established an intra-state regional communication/volunteer framework for promoting youth-oriented projects. The project participated in the Southwest Regional Student Concern Conference in an attempt to facilitate and enhance this coordination/cooperation. At least thirty-five youth/youth affiliates attended the conference.

Tentative commitments were received from members of the Florida Consortium on Education to serve in resource capacities. Additionally, the project has been introduced in Miami, Fort Lauderdale, Tampa and Tallahassee with organizational efforts proceeding on the campuses of Florida State University and Miami-Dade Junior College.

Georgia:

The Georgia pilot project continues to be based at Mercer College in Macon, Georgia. In an effort to promote on-campus participation, the project members have been holding weekly orientation/training meetings. The project's field coordinator participated in one of these sessions, held in conjunction with a graduate educational psychology class. Approximately sixty people of varied professions participated.

The Mercer volunteers have initiated contacts with other colleges in the state in an attempt to initiate and organize a statewide communications network. Follow-up visits to these campuses are scheduled throughout April.

Through field activities, primarily centered in Columbus,

Augusta, Macon and on-campus recruitment, the Mercer pilot project has reached at least one-hundred students in the past two months. More specifically, project members in Columbus, Georgia are assisting in the development of a Cooperative Grocery Store.

Mississippi:

Pilot projects in Mississippi are based at Jackson State, Tougaloo, and Millsaps Colleges in Jackson, Mississippi. Eight Tougaloo students are engaged in follow-up activities in their respective home communities and in the compilation of their findings into one report. These activities are based upon the information and insight gathered through participation in the five-week interim project.

The coordinators at Millsaps College have held several meetings during the past two weeks. Strategy-building/training sessions are scheduled with the project coordinators for the first week in April.

In addition to these activities, the School Desegregation Project participated in an NEA-sponsored planning session geared towards the initiation and promotion of a Mississippi Educational Conference in early April and helped to initiate a supportive tutorial program for recently re-instated students in Coffeeville, Mississippi.

South Carolina:

At least five organizational meetings have been held at the University of South Carolina - three within the last four weeks. Through the efforts of the School Desegregation Project, at least eighty students have been introduced to the project of which five are now serving as campus coordinators.

For the past few weeks, the field activities of the School Desegregation Project have been focused upon incidents and activities at the J. W. Kennan High School in Columbus. Last week, a potentially volatile racial situation was averted, in part, through the efforts of the project coordinator and the project team at Kennan High through their initiation of a dialogue session among some of the key parties involved.

The project also ran a strategy-building/orientation workshop in Aiken, South Carolina for approximately sixty high school students. Strategies for making administrators and teachers sensitive and responsive to the needs and problems of students were discussed.

Richard Gergel, one of the student coordinators at J. W. Kennan High School, recently contributed an article to NEW SOUTH entitled: "School Desegregation - A Student View."

Other Activities:

In addition to the activities in the states outlined earlier, the School Desegregation Project was represented at a regional youth conference at Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. The project participated in and will continue to participate in the planning, development and implementation of the youth portion of the Virginia Council on Human Relation's annual meeting format. The project has also been invited to participate in the forthcoming YWCA Institute on Racism and Education in Charlotte, North Carolina on April 16-18.

DECADE OF FAILURE

I: The Making of a Revolution

A. Brown decision: crucial in shaping quest for black freedom.

1. Often forget--now in xera of ambivalence & doubt--central role it played in defining nature of race problem in U.S., and way in which problem had to be resolved.

2. Central to freedom struggle before WWII: general acceptance of framework of segregation, under rubric of sep. but equal

(a) acceptance by white liberals: make separate equal
(b) Negro leadership: whatever fundamental beliefs, adopt pragmatic strategy: hit at points of least resistance.
(c) upshot: general posture assumed by reformist groups in race relations: pursue goal of freedom without serious challenge to segregation.

3. Search for new directions begins gradually

(a) 1930's: basis laid w. spread of scientific lit. on race, national criticism of "system", widespread reform ferment: but practical results few.

(b) World War Two: democracy v. racism; ferment among black leaders, esp. in North

(c) heightening of racial tensions: seg. apperxs more clearly than ever before as symbol of oppression

B. NAACP & Origins of Brown

1. Central role of NAACP

2. Legal attack provided focus for issue

3. Strategy: force court to examine real meaning of separate but equal dictum: never done before since Plessy

4. Dual significance of strategy:

(a) highlighted specific inequities in public education

(b) sharpened perception of nature of assumptions & practices of racial discrimination undergirding society as a whole

(c) hence: contributed powerful, specific evidence to drive home two points (i) pretensions to equal education of separated races a monstrous sham; (ii) spirit of racism infecting education central to all aspects of Am. life.

5. Enlightenment, piecemeal, through the case record:

(a) Missouri ex rel Gaines v. Canada (1938): black law students sent out of state for law school

(b) Sipuel v. Board of Regents of the University of Oklahoma (1948): not good enough to defer admission because black law school is soon to be established.

(c) McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents (1950): discrimination within graduate school of education not permissible.

(d) Sweatt v. Painter (1950): Comes closer than any previous case to saying separate can't be equal -- tho, like others, principle itself isn't struck down.

C.J. Vinson:

"In terms of number of the faculty, variety of courses and opportunity for specialization, size of the student body, scope of the library, availability of law review and similar activities, the University of Texas Law School possesses to a far greater degree those qualities which are incapable of objective measurement but which make for greatness in a law school. Such qualities...include reputation of the faculty, experience of the administration, position and influence of the alumni, standing in the community, traditions and prestige. It is difficult to believe that one who had a free choice between these law schools would consider the question close."

C. The Brown Decision

1. Combination of cases: S.C., Va., Del., Kansas, [D.C. sep. case]

2. Argument, 1952. Decision: May 17, 1954.

3. NAACP brief: Thurgood Marshall

(a) tangible inequality exists or being approached

(b) beyond that: seg. itself source of inequality

4. Principal points:

(a) segregation on basis of race "generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone."

(b) qu. w. approval finding in Kansas case: "Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect on the colored children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group...."

(c) "We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

5. Larger significance:

(a) segregation incompatible w. dem. ideology of nation

(b) segregation incompatible w. achievement of freedom & equality of blacks

(c) hence: issue of segregation now moves to center of concern of civil rights movement: specifically in education, more generally as acid test to be applied in other areas.

II: Right Without a Remedy: The Problem of Enforcement.

A. Query: What was to be meaning of new decision? What wd. happen to great victory won by Negro leadership?

1. Perspective of 1971: failure & ~~xxxxix~~ chaos in wake of decision bred bitterness, disillusionment, alienation: loss of faith in the very constitutional processes black and white leaders of '54 most heavily depended on.

2. Larger question: how are major social changes brought about? Study of school desegregation in South one of best case studies.

B. Next two lectures will be concerned with some of the fundamental psychological, ideological, and educational issues raised by the history of the struggle for school deseg. All of these were profoundly influenced by the record of chaos and failure in the first decade -- hence survey & comment on that record in this first lecture.

C. Part of story--and major source of eventual alienation--is record of fed govt's failure to support Ct's decision w. both moral commitment & exec-legis enforcement policies.

1. Brown I: postpone implementation; Brown II, May, 31/1955: district courts ordered "to take such proceedings and enter such orders and decrees consistent with this opinion as are necessary and proper to admit to public schools on a racially non-discriminatory basis with all deliberate speed the parties to these cases."

(a) year's delay: to prepare for compliance hurdles

(b) court traditionally lacks means of enforcing its decrees: depends on consensus backed by legislation & exec. dept. action: point vividly illustrated after 54 with huge burden on district judges, many of whom were unsympathetic.

(c) case-by-case approach insured snail's like pace: Brown II applied, strictly, only to original litigants: pattern of future: no compliance except after individual case litigation

(d) w. no follow-up momentum fm fed govt--no justice dpt suits, no legislative requirements, no muscle fm. the president--nearly all work of enforcement performed by a private agency: L.D.F.

2. In this situation, record of compliance not surprising:

(a) border states (where seg required by law): Md., Ky., Mo., Del., Okla., W.Va. & D.C. moved w. degree of good faith in desegregating schools (e.g., in 1955-56 329 of their 908 school districts w b. students had some measure of desegregation.)

(b) Southern states -- 11 states of old Confederacy - a dif. story:

School Year	DesegStates	Blacks in Deseg Schools	New States Deseg
1954-55	2	.001	Tex, Ark
1955-56	3	.115	Tenn
1956-57	4	.144	N.C.
1957-58	4	.151	-
1958-59	5	.132	Va.
1959-60	6	.160	Fla.
1960-61	7	.162	La.
1961-62	8	.241	Ga.
1962-63	8	.453	-
1963-64	10	1.17	Ala., S.C.
1964-65	11	2.25	Miss.

(c) ten years after Brown I were more black students in segregated schools than had been in 1954.

3. Legislative support fm Congress: recurrent requests; consistent refusals. Section 5 of 14th Amendment provided basis; not acted on until 1964: ten years before national conscience sufficiently shocked to underwrite positive legislation.

D. Presidential neutrality: Eisenhower. Throughout years in office kept his own counsel. Refused to endorse rightness of Brown decision, and spoke of opposition in South more in terms of extenuation than of rebuke.

1. Asked about his reaction to 1956 Southern Manifesto:

"Now, the first thing about the manifesto is this: that they say they are going to use every legal means. No one in any reasonable position anywhere has talked nullification, because--and there would be a place where we get to a very bad spot for the simple reason that I am sworn to defend and uphold the Constitution of the United States and, of course, I can never abandon or refuse to carry out my own duty.

"But let us remember that the Supreme Court itself talked about emotionalism in this question, and it was for that reason that it said 'progress must be gradual.'"

Reminded that several state legislatures had expressly talked of nullification, Ike responded:

"Now this is what I say: there are adequate means of determining all of these factors. The Supreme Court has issued its own operational directives and delegated power to the district courts.

"I expect that we are going to make progress, and the Supreme Court itself said it does not expect revolutionary action suddenly executed.

"We will make progress, and I am not going to attempt to tell you how it is going to be done."

X

2. Lacking in moral leadership, Eisenhower also failed to act at critical junctures.

   (a) Mansfield, 1956: South learns defiance is possible

   (b) Clinton, 1956: South learns price of compliance is heavy: no aid frm. fed. gov't.

   (c) some argue was slight momentum up to fall of '56; point to leveling off thereafter (until Kennedy administration) and cite Mansfield-Clinton episodes as crucial.

E. Major achievement of Eisenhower years--only real advance in quest for school deseg: breaking the back of the massive resistance movement.

1. Moot question as to whether massive resistance was inevitable: arguments that it cd. have gone the other way, if ct. had not granted delay; if enforcement had been firmer. Clear, in any case, w/o cong or presidential leadership agnst it, massive resistance virtually inevitable.

2. Is clear, though, that m.r. broken, not by Eisenhower--dramatic though Little Rock was, was Sup Ct., not sending of troops, that turned the tide.

3. Court--cautious though it was--played a fairly consistent role in these early years.

   (a) generally accepted plans that showed token compliance--as in case of N.C.

   (b) did not accept plans--as in case of Va.--that refused any compliance at all.

   (c) thus: was striking down, in 1958 & 1959 of massive resistance legislation that ended one era and opened up another.

F. Tokenism and a national consensus: 1958-1964

1. Actual desegregation in new era largely symbolic

(a) not until 1963 that as many as 1% of blacks in deseg. schools

(b) not until 1964 that some measure of desegregation achieved in all southern states.

2. Imp. changes in attitudes did follow collapse of m.r.

(a) gradual forging of a national consensus for integration

(b) steady increase in South of acceptance of rightness, in principle, of desegregation

3. These changes came about because of

(a) awareness of futility of passive resistance

(b) increasing effectiveness of xxxx propaganda for equal treatment

(c) election of JFK: a president willing to

i. articulate the national consensus

ii. commit the executive branch to vigorous enforcement methods avoided by his predecessor -- withal slowly & only in response to pressures

(d) eventual congressional action--in form of Civil Rights Act of 1964--which Act was passed only as a consequence of the bestiality of Birmingham and the assassination of JFK.

4. Primary, overriding cause of change: the Negro Revolt

(a) nb: LDF all along had been major instrument for implementing the Supreme Court decision

(b) now--esp after 1 Feb 1960--Negro revolt (non-violent civil disobedience, directed at all phases of racism) led by SNCC and SCLC became the primary force in changing national thought & forcing executive action and congressional legislation.

i. demonstrations shattered racist myths and bared the full dimensions of the bedrock of racism of southern society

ii. violence of southern reaction, contrasted with steadfastness and idealism of Negro revolt (w. heroic qualities of courage and self-sacrifice), provided the traumatic shock treatment needed to

(a) jostle the national conscience
(b) stiffen the will of the President
(c) embarass the Congress into action

5. Summary, then: a decade in which there was a right without a remedy; such remedy as there was, was provided by a private agency; then, a broadened revolt whose major success lay in heightening the perception of the moral issues involved, and causing at least the beginning of a movement toward compliance. By 1964, however, the reality of school desegregation was a reality of overwhelming tokenism.

III: Violence & Intimidation: The Recalcitrance of the South

A. Failure of enforcement policies of federal gov't provide context w/in wh. must appraise meaning of resistance of South to deseg.

1. Common to say fed. policies cd. hardly have succeeded no matter what they were -- given determination of white South to resist.

(a) will not examine this proposition (it is, in any case, an "iffy" one not susceptible of proof)

(b) can say, tho, that there is evidence to suggest the contrary.

2. Look at matter differently: whatever results cd. or cd. not have been w. dif. policies facts are two:

(a) policies were not different

(b) enforcement was not obtained

3. Is genuine historical validity in starting from those two points: in order to examine consequence of those facts.

B. Southern resistance to deseg. seldom analyzed in its relationship to fed. policy -- too often the other way around. try this perspective.

1. Full story of the Southern resistance too large to summarize here (and many parts of it will be used in subsequent lectures, when talk about actual operation of deseg. in the schools)

(a) clear, tho, that virtually every conceivable means of resistance was tried: ~~illegal,illegal~~ legal & illegal; violent & nonviolent; ingenious & simple minded

(b) clear, too, that South missed a rare historic opportunity: the opportunity to prove that it had learned the lesson of its long history of living with ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ suffering and oppression: to show that the burden it had borne in the past--so dif. fm the n'nl experience--cd. be a source of wisdom and humanity that might enlighten the rest of the nation.

(c) Instead of seizing the moment, South turned the crisis into one of sorriest moments in its history -- a history filled with many sorry moments

(d) not just that leadership failed; or that money and energy used to fight deseg. set back educational progress; or that violence erupted & people were maimed and killed--these were bad enough. Perhaps worse, though, were these:

i. the delicate balance--historic--between hate & tolerance was totally skewed: South became a land of explicit hate and fear

ii. the hate and the fear had a heavy toll on whites & blacks alike, making it far more difficult to respond positively when the day of tokenism wd. be passed, when schools wd. in fact be desegregated.

iii. was this spiritual malaise, perhaps more than anything else, that poisened the quest for integration. (and will trace this out, along its several courses, in next two lectures)

2. At the time--esp in early 60's, at height of direct action phase of c.r. movement--the n'nl consensus for integration was built on a dual premise:

(a) the nobility of the Negro revolt, in contrast to

(b) the uniquely evil character of the white South

3. Was a false premise: true that, for that time, the manifestation of evil was uniquely a southern phenomenon. Was not true, though, that the responsibility for that manifestation was uniquely southern.

(a) here importance of lack of commitment of federal policy: that lack was a reflection of the weakness of a national will

i. Northern outrage, for most part, was directed at Southern resistance, not at absence of federal commitment

(b) thus, can argue that weakness of federal commitment and excess of southern resistance were part of a national pattern that traced back to the racism of the country as a whole

i. hence: decade of failure was much more complex than simply a story of the bad guys against the good guys -- was deeply embedded in the national experience itself. -- and that was what was so depressing about it.

C. Conclusion: how, then, do we judge the first decade?

1. At the end of the decade--1964--favorable judgments were common.

(a) die-hard southern resistance appeared to be broken: mass hysteria had receded.

(b) The Civil Rights Act of 1964 seemed to promise vigorous enforcement of school desegregation (although, as cynics noted, the North was left off the hook)

(c) the national consensus appeared safe. (LBJ "We Shall Overcome")

(d) truly remarkable surface changes had taken place in race relations: and the public accommodations and employment sections of the 1964CRA promised greater ones--with more substance--to come

(e) In short, to many, seemed that a decade of frustration marked by modest progress against overwhelming odds was about to give way to a new era of unprecedented progress.

2. Less favorable judgments - perhaps easier to see now ~~that~~ than they were in 1964. To many black Americans who had borne the brunt of the real fight (as well as to many young and idealistic whites who joined the movement) it seemed that

(a) ten years of saying "never" in the South cd. be equated with the "eventually, but not now" posture of the nation
"Some of you, but not all of you"

(b) the sense that the failure was a national one--not a uniquely southern one--wd. grow -- and its primary toll wd. be in undermining the commitment of the previously committed -- in engendering the sense of alienation from and disillusionment with ~~[illegible]~~ the nation as a whole --a sense of alienation and disillusionment that informed much of what was to happen in the coming years.

Tragedy of Tokenism

4:23

Introduction: Last night's lecture

Main point's of first lecture

1. Brown decision in 1954 declared seg. in pub. schools unconstitutional – but this "right" established – a right to an integrated education – was a right w/o a remedy

   (a) Court – w. "all deliberate speed" formula – proceeded cautiously: and had to, because it had no support from cong or pres.

   (b) Pres. failed to mold policy or assume moral leadership

   (c) Cong. failed to pass supportive legislation.

2. Results: worse than snail's like pace

   1963: first yr. in wh. as many as 1% b. in desegr sch.

   1964: first yr. in wh. desegr – in some measure – present in all sou. states.

3. Main point:

   This failure of enforcement not fault of south alone: —
   ~~as massive & bitter as S. resistance was – it was~~ not ascribabable solely to the massive, bitter resistance of sou. segregationists.

   Instead: failure of fed. gov't to attempt vigorous policy of enforcement must be explained also as a function of a subtle, but pervasive racism that infected the nation as a whole.

4. Tonight – w. this bg in mind – I want to examine the nature & consequences of the fabric of tokenism that resulted from this national failure. — and I want to begin – want to make that examination after saying something about the pioneer students themselves – the young people who were the "tokens" in the era of tokenism.

recent opening for mobile & classm. Place p.5

THE TRAGEDY OF TOKENISM

I: The Pioneers

A. NAACE implemented the Brown decision; what of the children who went to the schools?

1. How do we evaluate the experience of the children, black (but white, too) in the first years of tokenism?

2. What were children like? What kinds of experiences did they have? What ~~xxxxxxxx~~ significance does their experience have for the future history of school desegregation?

3. Too often forget, in quarrels over desegregation, that schools are for children (or at least, they should be) and that the Negro demand for the end of school segregation was first of all a demand for the intellectual and spiritual liberation of the black children in the schools.

(a) Segregation, Justice Warren sd. in Brown, "generates a feeling of inferiority...that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone."

(b) did desegregation--has desegregation--done anything about this? (larger answer to this question in next lecture)

B. First: the pioneers, as Coles writes, fit "no set pattern." came from many different backgrounds; but did, as a group, play a unique role.

1. Modern history had no precedent for the part black children played in the movement for school desegregation--and in the larger civil rights movement: their direct involvement to change institutions & practices of an adult world

(a) were not "used" by adults (as many charged): e.g., ~~1~~ 1/2 of children who initiated Atlanta's token deseg. in 1961 had difficult time getting parental consent

(b) nor were they psychologically "disturbed"; on contrary, as studies of Coles & others have shown, the sense of purposefulness--the feeling that they could play a personal, significant part in tearing down an oppressive system & creating a liberating one greatly contributed to their healthy and creative psychological development

(c) many of them felt, because of the constraints on their parents, that they were their race's first truly independent spokesmen

(d) --and the students in the desegregated schools were influenced by, were part of, the ~~xxxxx~~ spirit that informed the larger civil rights movement in the South in those days.

John Lewis recently to PW:

> There was this very strong feeling we could change the hard-core segregationist attitudes and feelings. There were just a great many young people who believed in that hope--what we later came to calle the beloved community. It was a moral, religious-type movement. This came through in the mass meetings or preparing for a demonstration and in the demonstrations."

C. Some students & teadhers & experiences: case studies.

1. Some pioneers supported by elders--as in case of Sally, one of children who desegregated N.O. school system, who drew heavily on her grandmother's spirit when she met the hate & violence of the mobs. Grandmother was asked how they remained calm; why they didn't leave, go back to family in Miss.

   "If we run away, we'll fool ourselves; you can't run away from being a colored man. It don't make any difference where you go--you has the same problem, one way or another."

   Then asked if she thought those problems in any way comparable to those faced by white people., e.g., the whites who were resisting the mob's will, defying its boycott, keeping their children in school with Sally:

   "Yes," she replied firmly, "we is all the same under God, so we has the same problems; but colored folk has special ones, too. It's the same being colored as white, but it's different being colored, too." Then she repeated the words, nodding her agreement with them, "It's the same, but it's different."

2. One of the ways in which "it's different" made clear by a 15-yr-old black student named John Washington who was in first small group of blacks that desegregated Atlanta schools in 1961 (and only black in his school)

   Coles went with him to a basketball game where John was the only Negro in the audience. Afterwards they were threatened by a heckling crowd. Coles remarked, "I don't know how you can take that sort of treatment; I really don't." Washington replied: "You don't know how I can take it because you haven't ever had to take it."

   Then went on, and in remarks indicated something of how he saw his new role: "You see, when I grew up I had to learn to expect that kind of treatment; and I got it, so many times I hate to remember and count them. Well, now I'm getting it again, but it's sweet pain this time, because whatever they may say to me or however they try to hurt me, I know that just by sticking it out I'm going to help end the whole system of segregation; and that can make you go through anything."

   Day after he graduated, remarked: "That school glued me together; it made me stronger than I ever thought I could be, and so now I don't think I'll be able to forget what happened. I'll probably be different for the rest of my life."

3. John Washington one of many described by Coles who became something more than they had been before they became pioneers.

(a) case of youngster named Ruby, in N.O. who became, at first, frightened by a white woman who promised to ~~xxx~~ poison her--so frightened she completely changed her eating habits, wanting only processed foods, wh. cdn't be poisoned; but Ruby & her family eventually straightened problem out, and Ruby came to cope--and more--with her situation.

(b) Coles assesses the situation in general & the response of the pioneers & their parents:

"Whatever Ruby and her father may think about race and poverty, a series of historical changes eventually became for them a trial and a chance for personal effort and advance, or collapse and disaster. I have not shirked reporting Ruby's symptoms, or those of her race's older leaders. Yet it must be said that under grave stress she and they have somehow done more than persist, more than endure. They have prevailed in the way that Faulkner knew they would by summoning every bit of their humanity in the face of every effort made to deny any of it to them. In so doing they have become more than they were, more than they themselves thought they were, and perhaps more than anyone watching them can quite put to word: bearers and makers of tradition; children who in a moment--call it existential, call it historical, call it psychological--took what they had from the past, in their minds, out of their homes, and made of all those possessions something else: a change in the world, and in themselves, too."

~~xx~~

D. Experiences of these & other students--whole pioneer experience in the desegregated schools--had its effects on whites & on interracial relationships.

1. Negro girl, in early days, in a desegregated high school in a small town:

"If you get friendly with a poor white, really get acquainted, you find them more easy to be friends with than the rich whites. . . . A white girl at school got married and another white girl came up to me down town to talk about it, about her picture in the paper and all, and she introduced her mother to me after we had talked. Her mother had been listening and she could tell we were together about things, and she was all right. She was nice. I wish more children would introduce their parents. . . . I used to never smile at a white person. Now I can--and mean it."

2. Which raises question of relationship of education to prejudice:

   (a) standard doctrine among many intellectuals that prejudice declines in proportion to rise of education

   (b) one study--by Matthews & Brothro--purported to show a positve correlation, then concluded sadly that outlook was dim since fairly high levels of education in whites was required to get rid of prejudice substantially.

   (c) most southern historians know falsity of this proposition; and any good psychiatrist cd. puncture it.

   (d) one wonders, for example, how the social scientist wd. have interpreted this finding from an inquiry about attitudes in Atlanta toward integrated housing. A distinctly under educated white lady commented:

   "Sure . . . we got niggers all around. Niggers on this side, niggers on that side, niggers across the street and over yonder, niggers around the corner both ways. They taken over the place."

   Query: how was it working out?

   "Just fine! You couldn't ask for nicer neighbors. We don't have no trouble. They all nice people."

3. Which points up role & power of actual experience in influencing people--esp. people who don't deal in abstractions, but form judgments on basis of what they feel, touch, hear.

   (a) case of George Simmons, a reasonably bright, high school senior in Georgia, from a poor south-Georgia family. Professed to know the nigras, and have nothing against them.

   (b) His school newly desegregated; George filled with anger and confusion. Said he didn't blame the "few nigger kids who are going to come over to our schools, though I have no use for them because they're spies, paid by the NAACP."

   (c) George had sense of being victimized--his senior year being ruined. One of Negroes in his class--Louis--attractive, well dressed, bright. George watched her closely, and became increasingly perceptive about the hard time she was having--yet he joined his friends in tormenting & insuling her.

   (d) Two months after school started he learned she was planning to go to college. By Feb. he talked about how smart she was, without envy or bitterness. He saw her then as a victim of integration. By Easter was beginning to feel sorry about the way he & his friends had treated her. In April he picked up a notebook she had dropped, before he remembered not to.

(3) By the end of the year he & his friends were admitting that they felt sorry for Lois, were sitting beside her, & working with her in the lab. In crisis over ~~graduating~~ graduation ~~graduating~~ exercises George thought he would volunteer to sit beside her. When school year ended he summed up his feelings this way: "we still don't want nigras with us in school; but...I'll have them with me in college, right here in Georgia, so it's a fact of life I've got to live with. I don't like the other one /the other student/ but I'd walk beside Lois any day."

4. For the younger children, on whom the incubus of race prejudice had not had time to weigh so heavily as on George, the early days of desegregation produced stories like the one told by a nervous white couple:

their little 3rd grade son came home the second day from the integrated school to tell what a fine friend he had made in his class. Was the friend white or colored, they eventually asked him. "I don't know," the boy answered. "I forgot to ask him."

E. This was the promise of integration - as it was of the civil rights movement as a whole - in the late 'fifties, but esp. the first half of the 'sixties:

1. A promise of people reaching out to each other, forging common bonds, laying the basis for real education, coming close to dissolving the curse of separateness that damned the region.

2. But: it was only a promise - an indication of what might be - of what could be; not of what was in any general or characteristic sense.

3. What was clear was that thousands of people--most of them black and most of them young--had made the commitments and the sacrifices to try to enlighten and humanize the South and the nation

4. The tragedy ~~of the mid-sixties~~ was that the South and the Nation did not beyond in the measure deserved by the pioneers, but, instead, in the name of a national commitment to integration and under the guise of a program to end segregation came close to institutionalizing a double form of tokenism -- ~~xxxxxxxx~~ physical, or material, tokenism; and a tokenism of the spirit.

II: Token Compliance: Freedom of Choice.

A. What I have called "physical" tokenism--the policy of carefully limiting the number of black students in any "white" school--became the characteristic pattern of desegregation in the late fifties, in the wake of the collapse of massive resistance.

1. The widening arc & undiminished force of the civil rights movement--culminating in the Birmingham demonstrations (May '63)--forced the drafting x of a new & apparently far-reaching civil rights act.

2. Assassination of JFK in November helped materially--and that is a sad commentary on the Congress--in gaining passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

3. In terms of school desegregation law, was the most important event since the Brown decision, 10 years earlier.

B. Civil Rights Act of 1964: chief provision re school deseg.

1. Title IV: (a) authorized establishment of technical assistance centers (called only on request) and (b) authorized Atty Genl to file suits seeking to compel deseg.

2. Title VI--most imp: here committed exec. to positive adm. action.

(a) fund cut-off for schools not in compliance

(b) HEW now to establish "guidelines" for deseg.

3. Comment: potentially powerful device: courts now to be relieved of impossible burden, w. HEW overseeing deseg; statutory authty--for 1st time--backing Brown decision; NAACP no longer, if Act fully utilized, having to carry full burden of litigation.

(a) consternation in South--like, but not as durable, Brown reaction

C. Guidelines: effectivenss of new policy wd. depend on extent to wh HEW & Courts, working in concert, wd. insist on dismantling the dual system. Story complicated, but essential facts these:

1. Drew up guidelines in '65; revised in '66: (power now greater than had been in '64, w. passage of Elementary and Secondary Education Act -- wh. pumped huge sums into sou. schools)

2. Guidelines permitted, as one means of satisfying requirements, "freedom-of-choice" plans to eliminate deseg; this was its fatal flaw.

(a) freedom-of-choice plans adopted overwhelmingly - all dists. in Ala., Miss., & S.C. had them; 83% in Ga. -- also, most of court-ordered districts had them -- ct. not yet ready to diasllow them.

(b) freedom-of-choice, in fact, was another sham: Com. On Civil Rights came down hard on it, and on HEW permitting it, in 1967 report.

(c) sometimes didn't work: McMillan story

3. Why freedom-of-choice produced so little deseg & what was wrong with it

   (a) intimidation of blacks: thru violence &/or ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ econ. coercion

   (b) harassment by white students

   (c) obstruction by school officials

   (d) did not eliminate "racial identity" of schools: placed entire burden of transfer on black students and parents, rather than on public officials -- these, in essence, were its cheif deficiencies.

4. Statistical results, given this timid beginning, hardly surprising. Pace did quicken, but in 1968--4 yrs. after passage of act--overwhelming majty of black students in all-black schools.

   (a) 1964 = 2.25%
   (b) 1965 = 6.1
   (c) 1966 =16.9
   (d) 1967
   (e) 1968 =32.0

D. The war against tokenism: finally began in earnest in late 1966, with assaults both from the Supreme Court & H.E.W. — detail right line

1. Successive court decisions (at Circuit Level), beginning w. U.S. v. Jefferson County (Ala), Dec, 1966; "...the law imposes an absolute duty to..disestablish segregation. And an absolute duty to integrate. . . . Racial mixing of students is a high priority educational goal...."

2. Meanwhile, HEW began to act vigorously, witholding funds, making stern demands:

   (a) early in '68 set September 1969 as absolute deadline for total disestablishment of dual school system

   (b) except for majority-black districts, which had until 1970

3. Movement capped by Supreme Court decision: Green v. New Kent County, Va. (May 27, 1968)

   (a) "...delays are no longer tolerable"

   (b) "The burden on a school board today is to come forward with a plan that promises realistically to work, and promises realistically to work now."

   (c) unitary school systems must be established "without a 'white' school and a 'Negro' school, but just schools."

4. Summary: By end of '68--on eve of Richard Nixon's assumption of power--the feds appeared on the verge of bringing about, in the next school year, a near-end to the dual system.

   (a) had policy continued, wd. have been great problems--many of which we now have--still remaining

   (b) but outlook was ~~good~~ reasonably good, esp. since both HEW & Justice had committed civil rights people at work in them (Ruby in D.C. at OOR; Rilling in Atlanta.)

   (c) tragedy, though, was that Nixon adm., in part as price for southern support, spoiled the commitment with a blatant retreat in '69 (wh. we will look at in last lecture.)

III: Spiritual Tokenism.

A. Token admission of blacks to "white" schools had inevitable & tragic impact on spirit of integration movement; and was part of much larger pattern that profoundly altered course of old civil rights movement in last half of '60's.

   1. At root of souring ~~[illegible]~~ of old movement: black conviction--conviction of many blacks, as Carmichael put in in '66: integration as defined by white liberals an instrument for maintaining both power & values of white community

   2. Reverse side of which was lack of power & loss of identity of bl. community

B. Carmichael analysis of c.r. mvmnt bared defects of essential part (not whole of) c.r. mvmnt.

   1. Goal of mvnt: destruction of overt symbols of white superiority & the imposed limitations on the black community.

   2. Method of mvmnt: a liason between a powerful white community and a dependent black one

   3. Strategy of mvmnt: an approached that played on conscience of powerful white community, followed up w. formation of liberal coalitions designed to infuluence n'nl legis. & n'nl social patterns.

   4. This model/ a/c Carmichael, riddled w. defects:

      (a) existing structure perpetuated by siphoning off "acceptable" Negroes into surrounding middle-class white community: the process of tokenism

      (b) only a small, select group of Negroes affected by fruits of movement.

      (c) Negroes in movement dependent on financial support of white groups: hence vulnerable to their influence & domination

      (d) basic to all: this form of tokenism & integration based on assumption nothing of intrinsic value in Negro community.

5. Urged, then, new departure (wh. was often misunderstood by emotional reaction to slogan "black power") - wh. new departure did not so much reject integration as an ultimate goal, as redefine its meaning; or, better: given it a clear, ~~m~~ valid definition.

   (a) integration - to be worthy of pursuit - had to be integration of the black community as a community into n'nl life & economy.

   (b) to make this a possibility, blacks had first to develop collective community power & elevate black leadership responsible "not to the white press and power structure, but to the /black/ community."

6. In sum: Charmiachical, as he called for new departure in '66 & '67:

   (a) rejected individualized integration because it was not an antidote to institutionalized racism.

   (b) offered in its place a program that focused on building, independent of white influence & control, sources of collective black pride & black strength.

C. Implications for issue of school integration clear enough:

1. Tokenism comes to be seen not just as a consequence of overt, explicit racism of southern white segregationists.

2. Seen as woven into design of liberal white proponents of integration, in and out of gov't, as well as in Sup. Ct. decrees.

   (a) only "selected" blacks admitted to "white" schools

   (b) students ~~in~~ so "integrated" then to assume customs, ideas, modes of behavior of dominant "white" school

   (c) carried to logical conclusion such a program wd. end in obliteration of black identity.

3. But was an alternative possibility for schoolintegration mvmnt.

   (a) integration wd. be valid goal when became 2-way integration: when blacks cd. go to school w. whites w/o sacrificing something of themselves; when whites wd. go to school w. blacks w/o sense that they were making a sacrifice.

   out (b) in real sense what was being sd, tho w. wider implications & perhaps deeper understanding, was something like what. Sup Ct itself wd. come to say in May of '68 in Kent case: there shd. be no white schools, no Negro schools, just schools.

D. The larger ramifications of B.P. movement:

1. Its dynamics tended to undercut & confuse the n'nl consensus for integration

2. W/in civil rights movement itself, bitterness surfaced & quarrels ensued ~~&xxxxxxx~~ & falling outs were inevitable.

(a) John Lewis, SNCC chairman defeated by Carmichael: "It's no longer my movement," he said during the Meredith Mardh, and he left SNCC soon thereafter. "They had forced all the whites to leave," he remarked later. "And most of the blacks just couldn't stay. I tried to stay--but just couldn't. The things they espoused---"

i. but remained in movmnt on own terms -SRC - VEP, etc. real b, now flowering

(b) Kenneth B. Clark, bl. psychiatrist whose scholarship had played imp. role in Brown decision & in mvmnt - an authy on school integration, reacted early. Sd. in '68:

"..the black-power movement is essentially a racist movement which basically rejects the goals of integration and somehow attempts to seek racial justice through an intensification of racial ~~xxxx~~ segregation."

this he lamented because, as he wrote, "the present level of criminal inefficiency of the public schools is absolutely intolerable and must be remedied." Such remedying "is an integral part of an effective and serious program of public school desegregation. This is a job for all concerned and committed Americans."

(c) MLK: on horns of a dilemma: had, more than any other black leader, personified the integration movement.

(a) moved fairly rapidly to his own style of accommodation of new spirit: programs for strengthening black & poor; expressing agreement w. many parts of doctrine.

(b) in essence, accepting much of underlying concern of b.p. mvmnt - and, on other hand, trying to infuse into it his unshakable faith in ~~xxxxxxx~~ nonviolence and the creative force of love.

(c) Julius Lester, among many others, understood this. "All the whites wanted to know was if Black Power was anti-white and if it meant killing white folks," he remarked. "Dr. King, a good and honest man, did not condemn Black Power outright, but sought to temper it with love."

3. Among whites--b.p. mvmnt produced disarray, confusion, and retreat (wh. will touch on next time, only mention here)

(a) many liberals--w. wounded sensibilities--feal under attack, become petulant or inactive

(b) many student radicals--once great supporters of movement--shelve integration issue for others they consider more imp.--the total restructuring ofAm. society.

~~E. Some consequences & the aftermath in the South:~~

~~1. B.P. analysis of dynamics of tokenism--and of racism implicit in that tokenism--went brilliantly to heart of matter. But what it~~

E. Some consequences: and the aftermath in the South.

1. B.P. analysis of dynamics of tokenism--and of racism implicity in that tokenism--went brilliantly to heart of things. But what it never really grappled w - and MLK was struggling w. at death - was this:

   (a) how to keep alive & vivid the sense of commonness of humanity, along w. separate identities

   (b) tragedy of tokenism was that it made this the number one problem for advocates of school integration in the South in the late '60s and the 70's.

2. In ~~South~~ South, while quarrels ~~of~~ over b.p. (w/in black community as well as between blacks and whites) modified profoundly the character of the school integration movement they seemed, on balance, to have strengthened, rather than weakened it

   (a) South--of all regions of country--thus seemed perhaps more likely, in 70's--to achieve, or approximate, the dual aims symbolized by the programs of Carmichael & King. ~~than~~

   (b) relatively few ~~influential~~ blacks, compared w. rest of nation, went the route of doctrinaire separation: militancy, yes; and much harsher indictments of whites, yes--including their old friends in the movement: but issue of "separation" never became a ~~real one.~~ dominant one.

   (c) relatively fewer white veterans of c.r. mvmnt were alienated or scared off; relativelyfewer of them retreated

   (d) and: most imp. of all to this subject: the goal of school integration, almost more than any of the other goals of the earlier c.r. mvmnt, remained, into the 70's, a top priority for black militants as well as southern liberals.

3. Tokenism had taken a heavy toll; and its insidious influence might yet spoil the dream of the young pioneers who had sacrificed so much to tear down the twin burdens of separateness and ~~of~~ oppression. But, the hope remained, at the beginning of the new decade, that it ~~might~~ could be otherwise. Will assess the prospects in final lecture.

#

III: The Retreat from Equality

SUMMARY:

First lecture: analyzed the record of failure of the first 10 yrs after the B. decision & ascribed that failure to a pervasive racism that was characteristic of all of America, north as well as South

Second lecture: ~~surveyed some of the consequences~~ began w. a review of the commitment, character, and sacrifices of the young blacks who led the struggle for desseg — and then commented on the ~~inverted~~ tragedy of tokenism that was the nation's response to their commitment and their sacrifice.

Tonight:

describe & offer some interpretation of the trends of school desseg. hist. in South of the last few yrs. & offer some thoughts on the ~~future~~ prospects of that history in the future.

Begin by describing the way in which the great majority of the schools of the South finally became desegregated — how the era of "physical tokenism" finally began to be phased out then — ~~as~~ describe the way in which the new "unitary" system is operating — and assess the prospects for the achievement of genuine integration.

2

THE RETREAT FROM EQUALITY

I. The Nixon' Administration's Dilemma & Retreat

A. Administrative policy & court position, reviewed last time, reasonably firm & reasonably clear when Nixon took office: he was saddled with court decisions & HEW announced policies ~~approximat~~ opposite to those of his political commitments.

1. Court (Green): disestablish dual system: no white schools, no negro schools, just schools.

2. HEW--vigorously cutting off funds & applying pressure: deadline set--Sep '69 final date for all save majty-black districts; Sep '70 for those.

3. Nixon's appeal in South in campaign: clear hope that he wd. somehow be able to reverse this momentum

(a) South only region that gave him a majty: his con. stance on race & schools central to this

(b) once in office, his so-called "southern strategy" designed to (i) build up Rep party in South; (ii) undercut strength of Wallace forces: this required retreat from fullcommitment to school deseg. Strom Thurmond influence strong

B. The Retreat Begins: 1969.

1. Adm. policy statement: 7/3/69: issued jointly by HEW Secy & Atty Genl. blurred w. calculated ambiguities:

(a) tried to avoid saying Sep '69 deadline being extended

(b) knowledeable reading, however, led to conclusion deseg. effort was to be relaxed: future events proved correctness of this reading.

(c) strategy, as unfolded in summer of '69, in statements, suits brought, and HEW policy announcements: relaxation of federal pressure; abandonment of HEW fund cutoffs; and return to case-by-case litigation as major weapon for enforcing compliance.

2. Showdown came in Mississippi: Alexander v. Holmes County

(a) 8/28/69 5th Circuit Court, in case deal w. several Miss. dists., permitted delay beyond Sep. for disestablishing dual system: Adm. joined Miss. in requesting the delay

(b) pol. repurcussions keen: revolt among Justice Dept. lawers aganst Atty Genl Mitchell--charging retreat fm. goals of Brown.--resignations & memo of protest

(c) civil rights advocates--tho hardened to setbacks, esp. outraged by developments

(d) on other side, pressures on Pres. intense: Sen John Stennis (D-Miss) chmn Armed Forces Comm, threatened to drop adm's precariously poised Defense Appropriation

Feb.	20	S
	21	S
	22	M
	23	Tu
	24	W
	25	Th
	26	F	DAVE SHANNON
	27	S
	28	S
Mar.	1	M
	2	Tu
	3	W
	4	Th
	5	F
	6	S
	7	S
	8	M
	9	Tu
	10	W
	11	Th
	12	F
	13	S
	14	S
	15	M
	16	Tu
	17	W
	18	Th
	19	F
	20	S
	21	S
	22	M
	23	Tu
	24	W
	25	Th
	26	F
	27	S
	28	S
	29	M
	30	Tu
	31	W
April	1	Th
	2	F
	3	S
	4	S.	Blaise due in Barlow
	5	M.
6-7-	8	M-	Clellan Lectures

bill, halfway to passage, unless the "heat" was taken off Mississippi.

3. LDF immediately asked for appeal to Sup. Ct., wh. heard arguments on 10/23/69.

(a) Jerris Leonard, Asst. Atty Genl for Civil Rights, appeared for gov't & became first spokesman of justice dept. ever to ask for postponement of compliance w. Brown decision.

(b) less than 4 weeks before the argument, ~~Nixon~~ on Sep 26, Nixon sd. at a press conference: "It seems to me that there are two extreme groups. There are those who want instant integration and those who want segregation forever. I believe that we need to have a middle course between these two extremes. That is the course on which we are embarked. I think it is correct."

(c) Court ruled on 10/29/69: reversed decision of 5th Circuit; remanded case w. order for desegregation forthwith.

i. key part of ~~xxx~~ decision had wide ramifications--most imp. decision, perhaps, since Brown.
Justice Burger--Nixon's appointee to succeed Warren & to bring more conservative balance to court--wrote for a unamimous court that "all deliberate speed...is no longer constitutionally permissible. . . . The obligation of every school district is to terminate dual systems at once and to operate now and hereafter only unitary schools." -- became known as the "integrate now, litigate later" decision

ii. ramifications of decision critical: much hung in balance. if had retreated in Miss., demands for delay wd. have poured in frm. elsewhere; on other hand, decision for prompt compliance -- and esp. explicit reversal of all deliberate speed doctrine -- wd. now form basis for all school deseg. litigation in south.

(d) and the President? had sd. on Sep. 26 that those who want "instant integration" were extremist. ~~Less than~~ A month later, by his own definition, "every member of the Supreme Court was an extremist, including the new Chief Justice whom the President had just appointed presumably in part because of his conservative attitudes on race relations. . . ."(Bardolph)

4. Judgments of Administration:

(a) Civil Rights Commission: Federal Enforcement of School Desegregation

(b) SRC: The Federal Retreat

5. Problem of 1970 -

Fed. Retreat joined by weakening civil consensus.

MONDAY

6:30 - 7:30 : Coffee, Paper, Bkfst
7:30 - 8:15 : Reading
8:15 - 8:45 : Gareth to School
8:45 - 4:15 : Write (home)
4:15 - 5:10 : Swim
5:10 - 5:40 : Supper
5:40 - 7:15 : Whip Lesson
7:15 - 9:45 : Write

TUESDAY

6:30 - 7:30 Coffee, Paper, Bkfst
7:30 - 8:15 Reading
8:15 - 8:45 To School & Work
8:45 - 4:30 office
4:30 - 5:00 Drive home & to Pool
5:00 - 6:00 Swim
6:00 - 10:00 Supper, PTA

WEDNESDAY

6:30 - 7:30 Coffee, Paper, Bkfst
7:30 - 8:15 Reading
8:15 - 8:45 To School & Work
8:45 - 4:35 office
4:35 - 5:00 To Held's & Pool
5:00 - 6:00 Swim
6:00 - 10:00 TBA

THURSDAY

6:30 - 7:30 : Coffee, Paper, Bkfst
7:30 - 8:15 : Reading
8:15 - 8:45 : To School & Work
8:45 - 4:45 : office
4:45 - 5:05 To Pool
5:05 - 5:55 Swim
5:55 - 6:40 Supper
6:40 - 10:15 Reading Lesson

FRIDAY

7:30 - 8:00 Dress, Bkfst
8:00 - 8:45 Reading
8:45 - 9:00 To Work
9:00 - 3:15 office
3:15 - 3:45 To Pool
3:45 - 4:30 Swim
4:30 - 6:00 Work/Reading
6:00 — TBA

SATURDAY

C. The Retreat in 1970: Dilemmas posed by the Alexander decision

1. School deseg in Miss & other places in wake of Alexander--second semester

2. Pressure for more extensive "disestablishment": focus on Charlotte & ~~xxxxx~~ issue of busing

3. President's policy statement: March. In essence: ~~xgxxx~~ for full commitment to desegregation; agnst principal means of bringing it about. Sanctity of neighborhood school; opposition to busing.

4. HEW & Justice operate w/in restricted bounds spring & summer '70.

5. October cases:

(a) uniqueness of Charlotte & Athens: administration's opposition

(b) Mobile -- decisions pending in all 3.

D. School opening: extent of deseg: result of earlier momentum & cts.

1. Adm. misleading re. districts: 97% dists. desegregated; 90.5% students in deseg. districts

2. Actual extent of deseg: Jan. 1971 figures--estimates.

II. The "Unitary" system: How Desegregation operates today w/ for first time, majty of students in desegregated situations.

A. First: ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ have reached a new stage in history of school deseg. In sense, phase one is now on verge of being completed--phase of bringing about physical deseg of schools:

1. Many basic civil rights--assignment--problems remain: enough to keep legions of monitors & activists busy for long time

2. Many issues as yet unresolved--esp. degree to wh. busing may be used; degree to wh. "segregated" schools will be permitted in "desegregated" districts. (Groschelle interview)

3. Still: main focus of future must be on what some now call "quality integrated education"

B. Problems are formidable--as can see fm. brief inventory of the kinds of abuses that have attended the spread of desegregation.

1. Classroom segregation: 273/467 districts

2. Closing down/downgrading black schools. controversy reflection of racism. but not always done.

3. Demotion & dismissal of black principals & teachers

4. In-School Discrimination: organizations, homecoming courts, symbols and songs (Rebel-Dixie). ~~Butler High - Ayres editorial~~

C. Tensions produced by in-school discrimination have caused most of confrontations & violence -- and has been much more than n'n is aware

1. Dixie issue as example: Butler High; schoolmen's attitudes / Ayres.

13 2. Earle, Ark: ~~example~~ prototype of the worst

3. Other examples of repression & violence:

(a) Coffeville, Miss.

(b) East Tallahatchie, Miss.

(c) Bogalusa, La.

(d) Jacksonville, Fla.

(e) South Iredell/South Rowan

(f) Wilmington, N.C.

(g) Vance/Warren County, N.C.

4. SRC warning in March

Positive Side: Recent history does give hope

(1) whites in south accept deseg. as fact of life: that, is major social change.

(2) blacks in South - in gr. majority - continue to believe in deseg — & are working more effectively for it than ever before.

(3) Deseg. - in scores of places - is working; real integration a genuine reality or possibility. "whatever is, can be."

Need to review a few instances in which it is working: we learn from good as well as bad.

INSERT P. 5

Integration "sou. style" — what does it mean? does it have a chance? Prospects reasonable for school society in wh. "quality integrated education" can be a reality.

<1> Role of students: SDB: need to tap them. — they are fresh to the situation — have fewer hang ups — optimism among many

<2> Role of grass-roots community groups: hard-nose by experience — yet optimistic because sense — for first time — a measure of power coming to them. — And concept of "community control" as understood by sou. c.a. people means of quality integrated ed.

Retreat - 5

good examples

1. If violence has been present in many, peace has been characteristic of most
2. If exclusion has been characteristic of many, acceptance & a measure of mutual respect has been characteristic of most.

(19) 3. Southern Nash perhaps typical of a characteristic pattern. — (read fm. sch. report)

(INSERT)

What is the meaning of integration "southern style"?

The South, historically, has been a foil and a counterpoint for national moods and national images. Throughout most of our history ~~it has been~~ the South ~~that~~ has borne the burden of shaming the national claim of a republic of equals, embarassing the boast that we are a land of opportunity, and giving the lie to that pledge which says we are "one nation .... indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

In recent years — especially since the escalation of the war in Vietnam — the old and comforting myths of American innocence and virtue ~~has~~ has crumbled under the weight of harsh realities and the nation today seems to have lost a sense of destiny, seems ~~riddled~~ consumed with a sense of frustration, defeat, poverty and injustice — those very qualities that once were believed to be ~~uniquely~~ curses unique to the South. ~~unique curses of Southern phenomena the South~~.

It would be one of the ~~greatest~~ crowning ironies of American history if — in the 1970's — the South's historic role as foil and counterpoint to national mood and images should be to show that black and white people — the children of the South — might truly begin a common history of understanding and mutual respect; might, out of the terrible realities that have both bound and separated them, find the wisdom and the ~~humanity to prevail over~~ courage to let their humanity prevail.

In the spring of 1971 no responsible person can offer assurances that the South will play this role. All one can do is recognize ~~the possibility~~ its genuine ~~possibility and make a commitment to honor the sacrifices~~ and the vision ~~of the pioneers who fought for it gave dearly for it by a commitment to make it the reality it has the chance to be.~~ possibility and honor the sacrifices and the vision of the pioneers who gave dearly for it by ~~making~~ embracing a commitment to make it the reality it has a chance to be.

[for Mobile and Clemson] possibility

The Union Postal Clerk & Postal Transport Journal

AUGUST, 1969

Postal Corporation Myths Exploded

Charge that Postal Corporation is Anti-Labor Gimmick Leveled In Congressional Testimony by UFPC

Chairman Dulski hears Corporation testimony.

Meany, Filbey and Nilan present authoritative labor view.

FRANCIS S. FILBEY,
Editor

PATRICK J. NILAN,
Associate Editor

EDITORIALS

BUCKET OF WORMS

The Administration's bill, H.R. 11750, to convert the Post Office Department into a self-sustaining corporation is turning out to be a real bucket of worms.

On the basis of the devastating testimony last month by President Filbey and Legislative Director Nilan exposing hitherto obscure provisions of the legislation it's hard to pinpoint which section is the crawliest.

* * *

For openers, how about Section 805?

It's entitled: "Policy on Compensation and Benefits." Supposedly, it's designed to "protect" the comparability principle.

Under existing Federal policy established by the Salary Reform Act of 1962 postal and Federal wages are to be raised to and maintained at levels comparable with rates for the same kind of work in private enterprise.

H.R. 11750 says, however, that postal wages and benefits shall be comparable to the same kind of work "in the non-Federal sectors of the economy."

If ever there was a "sleeper" tucked away in a seemingly favorable provision this is it!

By changing "private enterprise" to the "non-Federal sector" the bill automatically brings into the comparability picture some nine million state and local governmental employes who—in Pat Nilan's words—are themselves struggling to achieve enough pay to raise them above subsistence or to make their jobs worthwhile.

The selective addition of such jobs to the existing "mix" for purposes of computation could only further depress the wage averages on which comparability is based.

It's not enough that the process has already been distored, misinterpreted and misapplied. Now someone wants to grind down the wage structure even more. Who? Why?

Perhaps the Administration has seen a vision of that "slow sort of country" described by the Red Queen for Alice In Wonderland where "it takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place—if you want to get somewhere else you must run twice as fast as that!"

* * *

Or take the TVA concept itself—that cherished illusion through which the postal service could suddenly deliver the mail as cheaply as TVA makes power.

Where are the precedents? How do you compare a pushbutton mechanism based on nearly $3 billions worth of dams, generators and steam plants with an organism like the Post Office where the bulk of the work has to be achieved by human labor? As the UFPC pointed out to Congress, such comparisons are neither realistic nor relevant. It's like comparing apples and oranges.

Or take the whole myth of corporate know-how. Is it really all that infallible? Among the 500 largest corporations in America 133 lost money last year and 237 were losers the year before.

* * *

And why, suddenly, must postal unions be made subject to the punitive provisions of such anti-labor laws as the Taft-Hartley Act or the reporting and disclosure provisions of the Landrum-Griffin Act?

Those laws were created to cope with abuses by free unions in the private sector of the economy—abuses which have never been charged to postal unions or to any Federal unions, so far as we know.

There is absolutely no historical justification in the postal service for this sort of sneaky, meanspirited Big Business bias.

But even that is not the main objection. The whole concept of these punitive laws is rooted in the availability of the strike as a last resort mechanism for labor in equalizing the balance of power with management. They presuppose the right to strike.

Where is that right in H.R. 11750?

* * *

There is more—much more. We are asked, for example, to renounce our civil service status while remaining chained by the Hatch Act in second class citizenship. President Filbey calls that provision as obnoxious to him as the inability to strike.

There's really only one answer to this blunderbuss bill. And that's H.R. 4 which would in fact reform the postal service, provide real collective bargaining by law, and truly serve the needs of the public and their postal employes without engineering the most gigantic giveaway of taxpayers' assets in the history of the U.S.

Let YOUR congressmen know it!

Postal Corporation Hit As Anti-Labor Gimmick

UFPC Explodes Big Business Myths

THE MYTH that a postal corporation can solve all the problems of the Post Office Department was exploded last month on Capitol Hill by the United Federation of Postal Clerks.

In the process National Legislative Director Patrick J. Nilan and President Francis S. Filbey also laid bare, one by one, a whole series of repressive anti-labor provisions hidden away in the proposed legislation.

The two Fed leaders spent the morning of July 29 before the full House Post Office and Civil Service Committee delivering the most devastating attack thus far mounted against H.R. 11750.

They destroyed the heretofore unchallenged claim that a postal corporation could be run like TVA, asserting that it was like trying to compare apples and oranges. They revealed provisions which, by devaluing the basis for figuring comparability, would severely erode postal pay and benefits.

They attacked efforts to bring postal employes under existing punitive anti-union laws without equalizing the bargaining power of labor with management. They pinpointed how the bill stacks the cards against unions by limiting labor's right to demand binding arbitration.

They decried the failure of the legislation to extend full political action rights to employes even while removing them from the civil service. They attacked propaganda efforts within the Post Office Department itself to falsely create the impression that a union shop would automatically result from passage of the bill.

In short, the UFPC stripped away the flesh from the bones of H.R. 11750 and revealed it for what it is: an effort by Big Business to bamboozle the public into sacrificing the fundamental concept of public service for a speculative gimmick that no one is really sure will work.

At the same time, the UFPC came out foursquare for postal reform within the existing structure of the Department through H.R. 4 sponsored by the Chairman of the Post Office Committee, Rep. Thaddeus J. Dulski (D-N.Y.).

Here is the complete text of the 12,000-word presentation by Mr. Nilan and President Filbey:

The Other Side Of the Coin...

We are publishing here the complete text of the testimony prepared by National Legislative Director Patrick J. Nilan in opposition to the proposed postal corporation bill, H.R. 11750.

Although it runs to more than 12,000 words, the full testimony is being printed as a service to the members so they may be provided with all the reasons why the UFPC is unalterably opposed to the corporation in the form proposed by the Administration.

The wealth of detail thus provided can be used in whole or in part by officers of Locals and Auxiliaries and by State officers to help combat on their home grounds the flood of pro-corporation propaganda being cranked out by the Post Office Department and its Big Business ally, the well-heeled "Citizens Committee for Postal Reform, Inc.," in Washington.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

For the record, I am Patrick J. Nilan, National Legislative Director of the United Federation of Postal Clerks, AFL-CIO. I am very pleased to appear before this Committee with our National President Francis S. Filbey in regard to "Postal Reform" legislation presently pending before this Committee. We speak in behalf of the nation's 304,000 postal clerks for whom we are the Exclusive national representative for labor-management relations with the Post Office Department.

We will also discuss H.R. 4 introduced by the distinguished Chairman of this Committee, the Honorable Thaddeus J. Dulski, which we endorse with several amendments which we will propose and also to express our opposition to the so-called "Postal Corporation" bill, H.R. 11750.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, in recent weeks we have been hearing rumors with increased regularity—and believe me, that's exactly what they are, rumors—that the postal employe unions were becoming more friendly and amenable to the postal corporation concept as proposed in the legislation, H.R. 11750, submitted to the 91st Congress by President Richard M. Nixon and Postmaster General Winton M. Blount.

To the best of our knowledge, Mr. Chairman, nothing could be further from the truth. We understand every postal employe organization has publicly, and most of them before this Committee, stated emphatic opposition to the postal corporation and H.R. 11750.

Certainly President Filbey and

I can state without fear of any contradiction that the United Federation of Postal Clerks is unalterably opposed to H.R. 11750 and endorses H.R. 4 with amendment. In our considered judgment, most of the major provisions of H.R. 11750 and the postal corporation can be, and basically are, provided for in the "Postal Reform Act of 1969" sponsored by Chairman Dulski as H.R. 4.

No postal employe union could, in good conscience (nor would it be worthy of its basic mission and responsibility to protect the best interests of its members and their families) permit itself to be stripped naked of legislative and organizational strength by possible enactment of the postal corporation bill, H.R. 11750. In this statement, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we will document our opposition to H.R. 11750 and our endorsement of H.R. 4.

First, we want to commend the Chairman and this Committee for the patience and perserverance you have demonstrated during the past two months of hearings on this most important, and yet controversial, subject. Certainly your intense desire to seek out the truth concerning this question, as well as determining where the best interests of the American public, the postal service and postal workers lie, is indicative of your dedication, not only as elected Representatives of your own constituents but all of our citizens throughout the 50 states.

We make this statement, Mr. Chairman, to all Members of this Committee regardless of whether they support the postal reform approach of H.R. 4 or are proponents of the H.R. 11750 postal corporation concept. No one can ever accuse any Member of this Committee of not making every effort to objectively and responsibly weigh the pluses and minuses of the two paths which lie ahead in your sincere efforts to correct the problems which plague the postal service and its dedicated postal workers.

In preparing this statement we have made every effort to avoid being repetitious or overlapping the testimony of previous witnesses in expressing our support of H.R. 4 and opposition to H.R. 11750. Rather, we will try to address ourselves more specifically to those aspects of this general subject of "Postal Reform" which we believe have been underplayed in testimony of other witnesses and which we believe are of considerably more significance than alluded to previously before this Committee.

President "Stu" Filbey (left) and Legislative Director Pat Nilan flank Rep. Dominick V. Daniels (D-N.J.) moments before the corporation hearing began for a chat about labor-management by law which Mr. Daniels is sponsoring through H.R. 4803.

TVA CHALLENGED

We begin by challenging those who would have you believe that the proposed postal corporation could be structured as "another TVA" and be equally or more successful in providing an improved postal service to the entire American public than even TVA is in providing its commodity to only a segment—and really a comparatively small segment—of the American public.

From the very beginning of the advancement and promotion of the government corporation as a structural form for the postal service, the phrase "like TVA" has been commonplace. It has been repeated regularly. Its use has been apparently to denote unqualified sanction. It has become almost a sacred cow.

However, is this a valid comparison? Is the analogy appropriate, realistic? We think not. And it's about time, we think, that the air be cleared on this point. That the real and basic differences between TVA and the proposed postal corporation be pointed out; that the lack of similarities be made clear. It's like comparing apples and oranges.

Descriptively, what two kinds of economic units are we considering? One is a sprawling giant, employing three-quarters of a million people, offering a variety of services to the public throughout the entire United States. The other is a geographically concentrated unit, employing less than 20,000 people, using tremendous amounts of capital equipment to serve a limited area without dealing at all with the American public and selling only one thing for money—electric power.

TVA IS CAPITAL INTENSIVE. Its 19,600 employes work in conjunction with fixed assets valued at $2,886,942,000. This is a ratio of $147,000 of fixed assets per employe.

THE POSTAL SERVICE IS LABOR INTENSIVE. Its 725,000 employes work in conjunction with fixed assets valued at $1,178,522,000. This is a ratio of $1,620 of fixed assets per employe. In TVA the value of steam production plants alone is $1,499,000,000.

TVA employes in the Tennessee Valley, where they are dwarfed by giant dams, hydroelectric generators and steam-electric plants, never have to even see the public. Many of them are administrators, engineers and other kinds of technicians. Only 5,000 of them start at a salary of less than $6,800, according to The Budget of the United States Government, FY 1968.

In the postal service, 540,000 employes start at a salary considerably less than $6800. Many of them, like postal clerks, are skilled technicians of a different kind. All of them deal with the public, many of them directly. Their employer, the postal service, deals with the public all the time.

Productivity comparisons between TVA and the postal service today are not realistic or relevant. This is always the case when a "capital-intensive" unit is compared with a "labor-intensive" one. Additional units of output can easily be produced by capital equipment and other fixed assets of the type used by TVA. The increased output on a per-man-hour or per-man-year basis will tend to be very great. In a labor-intensive unit, especially of the service type, output increases without increased employment are much more difficult to achieve. Relatively low productivity increases are the rule, not the exception.

In the case of TVA, it has large, modern generating transmission and distribution facilities of the most efficient design. Additional power can be easily generated using the installed capacity. The same holds true for the transmission and distribution of power.

Productivity in the postal service will be considered later in this statement. Suffice it to say for now that Robert R. Nathan Associates, Inc., in its report to the President's Commission on Postal Organization (the "Kappel Commission Report", Volume I, Appendix C, p.115) relates, "Compared with the productivity performance of the total economy or the manufacturing sector, the post office has not done well, but with respect to more comparable sectors—trade, finance, and services—the performance of the post office is favorable." (emphasis added)

We believe we have demonstrated that TVA is very much unlike what a government postal corporation would be like, and that includes very specifically in terms of the kinds of problems its management would be called upon to manage and solve.

However, why not use some other government corporations as examples? Admittedly, they are not as exciting or effective in projecting a pervasive structure of efficiency which would extend itself over time. TVA was apparently chosen as a reflection of what a government postal service corporation would be like because of its world-recognized success and a degree of glamour its imposing structures effuse in marked contrast to the raging rivers and desolate valleys it enriched.

Other government corporations are just as successful, we maintain, even though their missions are less stirring. However, they are almost entirely financial-like institutions: Commodity Credit Corporation, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, Export-Import Bank of the United States, Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, Federal National Mortgage Association, Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, Banks for Cooperatives, and the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation. Additional United States Government Corporations are the Panama Canal Company, United States Housing Authority and Federal Prison Industries.

NO PRECEDENTS EXIST.

NOT ONE of the Government-owned corporations is like the proposed postal service corporation, in terms of its mission, activities, jurisdiction or type of management structure. There is . . . nothing . . . like . . . it . . . as . . . a . . . precedent!

A Government postal service corporation would be new, untried, and experimental. There is no valid analogy for it. And what works for TVA, or even General Motors (with its decentralization of management in divisions) may very well NOT work for the postal service with its long history of SERVICE to the American people as a priority performed within a Federal department structure controlled by the Congress.

Many of the government-owned corporations receive direct Federal subsidy, and in most cases benefit from various forms of other subsidies.

TVA itself has not been economically self-sufficient. It has benefitted from appropriation and subsidy. "TVA's varied programs have been financed with Congressional appropriations, revenues from the sale of power and fertilizer, and proceeds from the sale of bonds. Some property, principally Wilson Dam and the fertilizer works at Muscle Shoals, was transferred to TVA from other Federal agencies." These quotes come from Facts About TVA Operations published by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

It goes on, "The power program finances its operating expense from power revenues and its construction costs from revenues and proceeds from the sale of bonds. However, until the mid-1950s most of the money to finance construction of dams and steam plants came from appropriations. . . . The fertilizer, agricultural, and munitions program has used revenues from the sale of fertilizer and chemical products to meet a part of its operating expense but has required appropriations for both operating expense and construction costs. Other TVA programs, including navigation, flood control, forestry and tributary watershed projects have depended almost entirely upon appropriations both for operations and construction." (emphasis added)

The Federal appropriation for TVA in the years 1966 to 1968 ranged from $59 million to $61 million. The Federal Government's investment in the Muscle Shoals properties, subsequently transferred to TVA, was $100,000,000 up to 1918.

Let us consider TVA at the time of its origin, in 1933. It was not created out of Government agency, as the proposed postal service corporation would be. It came from the other end of the spectrum. TVA "came in" where private enterprise with its corporate structure, working in conjunction with state and local governments, could not do the job, in many attempts going back a hundred years. So, after the produce-for-profit corporation approach failed, the Federal Government came to the rescue.

A typical Government agency was not created to administer it; a less drastic change to a government-owned corporation was a feasible transition. However, "those who drafted the TVA Act visualized that agency as something approaching a Federal department of natural resources for the Tennessee Valley." (Encyclopedia Britannica)

An important fact to note is that TVA BEGAN as a Government corporation. It did not have a long history of working relationships and personal service to the American public to abandon. It did not have employes, or a management, or prior guidance from Congress. Everything began anew.

In the postal service it is different, as there has been a long history of working relationships, as well as providing the most personal service to the American public which we can think of during the entire history of our great nation. Labor and management have both looked to Congress when they needed help; and Congress has always been responsive to both, while at the same time giving priority to the mission of the Department in serving the American people. Surely, the mechanism has not worked perfectly. Problems have arisen and some of them persist. That's why some reform, particularly that proposed by H.R. 4, by Chairman Dulski, is needed today. But we most respectfully suggest to this Committee and to the Congress, "Let's not throw out the baby with the bath water."

As Kappel Commission member George Meany, distinguished president of the AFL-CIO, was quoted in the Commission's report, after recognizing the need for modernizing the postal system and improving the working conditions and job opportunities. "However, the status of the Post Office as a Cabinet Department has a positive value that should not be discarded lightly." And we certainly agree!

SUCCESS NOT GUARANTEED

There appears to be among the proponents of the postal service corporation a clear and definite presumption that it would succeed. This is not necessarily so. If the mission of the Department is to give the public the kinds of service it has been given in the past at reasonable rates, the corporation could succeed in economic profit-and-loss terms and still fail the American public. However, even if the corporation could fulfill a generally accepted concept of its mission, it could still fail economically. There is absolutely no guarantee of success. No such undertaking of this nature, size and scope has been attempted before.

And it is most important to remember that if a postal corporation should be established, it would be extremely difficult, if not totally impossible, to retreat back to the Post Office Department's structure and postal service, as we know it today.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we have only to look at U. S. industry's "top 500" to learn that typically good aggressive management does not always succeed. As revealed in Fortune, May 1969, among the nation's top 500 industrial firms ranked in terms of dollar sales from General Motors and AT&T on down, there were thirteen industrial giants which actually lost money. Included in this group were Allis-Chalmers, Swift, Falstaff Brewing, Celanese, Fairchild Hiller and American Machine and Foundry.

One hundred and thirty-three firms showed decline in profits as did 237 the year before. And we can be sure that these "losers" and "decliners" were managed by some of the top managerial talent in the country for whom some complex variables turned awry. Certainly among them were many who received salaries of at least $60,000 a year, the salary suggested for the hired manager of the proposed postal service corporation, and probably even two or three times this $60,000 figure. Perhaps among them is a future manager of the postal service corporation? ?

Certainly such a manager would inherit a traditional loser. Saying is easier than doing when it comes to making a postal service a profitable corporation which would completely rid itself of so-called "deficits." So it may be that such a manager would face an insurmountable task. The Post Office could be a continuing profit-and-loss statement loser; historically, in terms of service to the American people, we believe it has been a success! All the postal service really needs are some of the reforms such as are embodied in H.R. 4, to help it do a better job for the American public, and also provide postal employes and their unions with an equitable and responsible system of collective bargaining.

REASONING EXAMINED

Let us examine the reasoning of the Kappel Commission whose recommendations form the basis of H.R. 11750. The Commission's recommendation that the Post Office Department be removed from the President's Cabinet and reorganized as a non-profit, government-owned corporation was a businessman's recommendation which would have natural appeal to the present Administration, and a very special appeal to the newly-appointed Postmaster General Winton M. Blount, formerly president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, as Richard J. Willey related in his article in the Spring 1969 issue of Public Interest.

Legislative Director Pat Nilan goes over the 12,000-word text of his anti-corporation testimony with President "Stu" Filbey at the witness table in front of the House Post Office & Civil Service Committee.

It also had appeal to Congressmen and Senators who interpreted it as a "rational" solution to the postal problems that have been plaguing them and the Congress for years, we add. We are not suggesting they are trying to "get out from under." But, we know it simply will not operate in the dream-like way they think it will.

For example, we say that the claim, made by some members of this Committee and other proponents of H.R. 11750, in speaking to the unions and employes, that "You can't lose—you'll keep what you have and go upward from there" is medicine we simply cannot swallow. It's sugar-coated, even though it can be explained so logically and sincerely. It's simply bait on the hook, just waiting for us to bite, and we'll tell you why.

First, "You are assured of retaining what you have," as has been stated by Postmaster General Blount, members of his staff who testified before you, and also members of this Committee, is not compatible with "would be determined by collective bargaining."

As the collective bargaining representative for the nation's 304,000 postal clerks, I suppose it could be possible (although not probable) we may want to trade away something we already have. However, what is most important, is that we may be forced into a position where we have to give up something we already have acquired for the benefit of our members. We must not be naive about something as important as the bargaining relationship which would exist within the postal service corporation concept. We could very easily be forced into a dilemma of deciding between the lesser of two evils. Postal Management has already told us that it will be very "hard-nosed" at the bargaining table.

Now, please don't misunderstand; we are not saying here and now that we would mind this—IF there would be equality at the bargaining table. And we think, very definitely, that there would not be!

FIRST ANNOUNCEMENT

The first official announcement of the position of the United Federation of Postal Clerks on the subject of the Postal Service Corporation was enunciated by our union's national president, Francis S. Filbey, on May 28 of this year, when he stated:

"Nobody, not the President, not the Postmaster General, nor the postal unions, can guarantee that the 'total postal reform' proposed by H.R. 11750 will really achieve all the rosy results predicted.

"As far as postal clerks are concerned, we are not impressed with the Postmaster General's promise that the proposed new law will give us extensive bargaining rights and binding arbitration of deadlocked negotiations—but not the right to strike! At first blush it sounds persuasive; but we don't fancy the prospect of bargaining for wage increases that will be paid out of postal rate increases while an embittered public watches over our shoulders. We don't fancy the idea of sitting naked at the bargaining table without the ultimate right to withhold our labor!

"We don't fancy the idea of being semi-private employes without the right to participate politically in the life of our country. In fact, the continuation of our 'second-class' political status would be as bothersome to me as would the inability to strike.

"The United Federation of Postal Clerks wants better service for the public as much or more than the public wants it. We certainly want capital improvements even more than the public wants them. And we certainly want better working conditions and better wages at least the equal of similar jobs in private industry.

"We think it is possible to achieve these goals through legislative reform within the existing framework and without violence to the concept of public service. But if the Congress in its wisdom should decree otherwise, it must face the certainty that postal employes will demand the right to strike and the right to political freedom as a birthright and as a matter of fundamental labor-management equity!"

President Filbey's May 28 statement on the proposed postal corporation was a reflection of the United Federation of Postal Clerks' resolution adopted at our last national convention in August 1968. This resolution expresses the official position of our union as ordered by 1500 delegates at our 1968 convention. The text of the resolving clauses of this resolution is included in this part of our statement for the information of this Committee.

RESOLVED: That this convention of the UFPC go on record as opposing and directing its officers to oppose any transfer of the Post Office Department to a postal corporation, unless

1. The necessary tools, including the right to strike, available to employes in the private sector, be provided for postal employes in the corporation.
2. Guarantees of binding third-party arbitration be included in the labor-management procedures established for the corporation.
3. Legislative guarantees be given to the general public of the United States that the present quality and extent of Postal Service will not only be maintained but improved, regardless of whether or not such service would be a profitable operation, such requirement be predicated on the first purpose of the Post Office, whether administered under a Cabinet Officer or corporation, is to provide for service to all of the citizens of the United States without regard to their geographic location, their accessibility to postal plant operation, or the economic status of the patrons served.

And Mr. Chairman and Members of this distinguished Committee, we have also added a 4th prerequisite to any possible consideration of the Postal Corporation concept by the United Federation of Postal Clerks, namely; insistence that postal clerks and other postal employes be restored to "First-Class" citizenship and be given complete unrestricted political freedom. WE WANT TO BE "UN-HATCHED" FROM THE HATCH POLITICAL ACTIVITIES ACT OF AUGUST 2, 1939.

Our major objection to H.R. 11750 must be in relation to portions of "Chapter 8—PERSONNEL." The provisions of this Chapter are totally unacceptable to the United Federation of Postal Clerks, and certainly are in marked contrast to Chapter 47 of Title VII in the Postal Reform legislation H.R. 4, sponsored by Chairman Dulski. The collective bargaining proposed by Chairman Dulski in H.R. 4 for postal employe unions is much more realistic and responsive to the collective bargaining needs of postal employe unions, particularly with an amendment substituting the provisions of H.R. 4803 for all of Title VII. An amended Title VII provides true union recognition in Mr. Dulski's legislation. However, we will discuss collective bargaining under H.R. 4 later in this statement.

PUNITIVE LAWS

Sections 807-808, inclusive, of H.R. 11750, propose to bring postal employes and their unions under the provisions of the (Taft-Hartley) Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended in Section 807. We will also be included under the (Landrum-Griffin) Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, "to the extent not inconsistent with the provisions of this Title," for governing labor-management relations in a new postal service proposed by H.R. 11750.

Section 808 provides procedures including a totally inadequate and unacceptable form of binding arbitration for adjusting disputes between labor and management in the Postal Service, including such matters as questions of interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreements, and the settlement of impasses in negotiations between the parties.

Section 809 establishes a "Postal Disputes Panel" composed of nine members, three of whom are to be appointed by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Director, three by the American Arbitration Association and three by the other six. Also included in section 9 (h) of the bill is the provision amending the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, so as to exclude the new postal service from the exemption for Government Corporations which is presently contained in that Act.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, when we were engaged in drafting legislation to provide an effective system of collective bargaining and labor-management relations in the postal service, we gave consideration to utilizing the framework of the National Labor Relations Act for this purpose. We determined, however, that the collective bargaining framework sanctioned and fostered under the Act was very different from the system of collective negotiations that presently prevail in the Federal and Postal Service. To strengthen the existing system, we decided to draft legislation specifically appropriate for the Postal Service, rather than try to utilize the system provided for under the National Labor Relations Act.

We were very gratified when Chairman Dulski included our proposals for labor-management relations and collective bargaining in the postal service within the structure of H.R. 4, as Chapter 47. We also appreciated Congressman Dominick V. Daniels, a member of this Committee introducing H.R. 4803, differing only slightly from provisions in Chapter 47 of H.R. 4. I am sure it will interest the Committee to know that almost 100 members of the 91st Congress are cosponsoring postal employe labor-management relations legislation similar to H.R. 4803 and the provisions in Chapter 47 of H.R. 4.

INAPPROPRIATE THRUST

Referring again to the main thrust of sections 807-809 of H.R. 11750, it appears to us that the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts are mechanisms to deal with problems and disputes in labor-management relations in the private sector and really are inappropriate to deal with such problems and disputes in the postal service as indicated by most provisions of these Acts.

The Taft-Hartley Act, for example, provides for unit determinations that could be very disruptive of the pattern of organization and collective bargaining that has developed over the years in the Postal Service, and that has been giving strong impetus by Executive Order 10988. Regardless of the many difficulties and deficiencies that exist in connection with the administration of that Order, there is no question that the Order itself has undoubtedly given strong and effective support to such organization and collective bargaining in the postal service. The postal labor-management and collective bargaining recognition provided in H.R. 4, are basically concerned with extensions of Executive Order 10988, and this is a most important reason why we support the H.R. 4 legislation.

Similar observations appear to be appropriate with respect to the applicability of unfair labor practice provisions and the provisions applicable to selection of bargaining representatives contained in the Taft-Hartley Act. These provisions either have no application to, or do not deal with, situations that arise in government or quasi-government employment such as would exist in the new postal service.

Also, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, in the absence of evidence of any abuses, for example, in the internal management of government unions, or in the election of officers of such unions, or the administration of trusteeships over local units of such unions, there likewise appears to be little justification for subjecting our unions to all of the detailed requirements and prohibitions contained in the Landrum-Griffin Act.

However, in our opinion, the principal difficulty in applying the provisions of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts to labor-management relations in a governmental or quasi-governmental agency, such as the new postal service, lies in the fact that these Acts PRE-SUPPOSE THE AVAILABILITY OF THE STRIKE AS THE LAST RESORT MECHANISM FOR EQUALIZING THE BARGAINING POWER OF LABOR WITH THAT OF MANAGEMENT.

This mechanism, of course, simply does not exist in government service, and undoubtedly would not exist in quasi-governmental instrumentality that would have charge of administering the postal service, notwithstanding the ambiguity surrounding this question growing out of the language contained in section 209 of H.R. 11750. There is a possibility, of course, that selective provisions of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts could appropriately be made applicable to the new postal service. However, this would require most careful and detailed study and analysis. In my opinion, however, Mr. Chairman, the blunderbuss way in which H.R. 11750 proposes to bring postal employes under these Acts simply will not work and could work great injustices upon our postal employes, as well as their respective postal unions.

L-M HODGE-PODGE

In my judgment, analysis of the labor-management relations provisions of H.R. 11750 makes clear that the Act provides a veritable hodge-podge of rights and duties, benefits and liabilities and informal and ritualistic procedures to govern labor-management relations in the so-called new Postal Service. That this should be the case is particularly striking, in view of the fact that there are in existence other government-owned instrumentalities, such as the TVA and The Bonneville Administration which provide somewhat more meaningful patterns for labor-management relations in government corporations which could have been used for the new Postal Service.

The important thing we see, in regard to H.R. 11750, is that neither in the bill itself, nor in the analysis of the bill, nor the message of the President submitting the legislation to Congress is there any explanation given as to why needed reforms in operation of the Post Office Department could not be achieved within the existing framework of that Department. Various proposals for such changes which are clearly preferable to those proposed in H.R. 11750 are pending before this Committee in H.R. 4, which would provide for modernization of the existing postal establishment, to provide for efficient and economical postal service, and to improve employe-management relations in the postal service.

Without compulsory arbitration and the right to strike, in addition to the many other obvious failings of the proposed employe and union sections in Chapter 8, of H.R. 11750, is it any wonder we endorse and support H.R. 4 with the postal employe labor-management relations provisions of H.R. 4803 substituted for Title VII?

Is it any wonder, we prefer the Congress of the United States to continue legislating in the areas of wages and fringe benefits rather than the postal worker and his union being left naked at the bargaining table as proposed by the "Postal Service Act." H.R. 11750, which would:

(1) Take postal employes out from under the protection of the Civil Service System and establish a different and questionable new system of postal service employment.

(2) PLACE wages, annual and sick leave, life insurance and health benefit programs, as well as all other "bread and butter" issues on a collective bargaining table at which postal workers and their unions would not (and never could) sit down at as an "equal" with management and most important, without ANY of the accepted bargaining weapons such as the right to withhold its labor and compulsory arbitration.

The disputes settlement procedure of H.R. 11750, as spelled out in Section 808, does not and will not provide satisfactory resolution of disputes, as far as the United Federation of Postal Clerks is concerned. The disputes settlement procedure would permit either party in the case of a collective bargaining impasse to request that the matter be referred to a permanent nine-member "Postal Disputes Panel." However, the Panel may "refrain from action pending further negotiation." As a result, the parties would have to go back to the bargaining table.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, we are totally in favor of bargaining to finality, of course; so, in good faith, with the issue at impasse remaining unchanged, we would bargain to finality again, and again. But there must come a time when the impasse must be recognized as such. Frankly, we have been deadlocked with the Post Office Department on many, many occasions in the past, and I assume will continue to be in the future, without any final resolution. And I can assure you that this is a most fruitless, exasperating, discouraging and unrewarding experience.

According to Section 808, the Panel can "take action" by prescribing: (1) mediation of "any or all of the issues" by itself or by a designated mediation panel; (2) factfinding of any or all of the issues by itself or a designated factfinding panel, or (3) recommendations on any or all of the issues by itself or a designated panel.

WHAT PANEL?

We have some most serious and disturbing questions about how these functional panels would be chosen and what in fact is meant by "the Panel", because Section 809 explains that with respect to each dispute there will be designated a 3-member panel which shall act in the name of "Postal Disputes Panel." The members of the three-member panel are to be "chosen in such manner as to preclude advanced knowledge of its membership by either the postal service or the bargaining agent."

We ask, would the chairman choose them? Would they be chosen by ballot? Or by telephone conference, as the Panel members would probably be geographically scattered, serving part-time because the Panel's jurisdiction would apply to "disputes or impasses arising in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement" (Section 808 c), which negotiation would take place at most once a year, and probably every two years.

Also, the chairman of the Panel would play a critical role in the handling of each dispute, especially if he chooses the three-member panel "which shall act with respect to each dispute." Would the three-member panel have the dispute referred to it at the very beginning, before even the decision is made to take action or refrain from action. Probably so, we think. Or would the nine-member Panel assemble, to dismiss six of its number?

We cannot help but conclude that the Panel would definitely be a part of the management power structure. Former Postmaster General John A. Gronouski shared our conclusion in his statement to this Committee on Chairman Thaddeus J. Dulski (D-N.Y.) of the House Post Office Committee (right) checks a point in the UFPC's anti-corporation testimony offered by President Filbey and Legislative Director Nilan.

July 22, when he said he could not support H.R. 11750 because of Section 808, "for the simple reason that however impartially the disputes panel is chosen, the postal workers and their leaders will probably regard it as a part of management."

Surely the persons named to the Panel would be erudite, just and honorable men. But all such men do have orientations and philosophies. Former United Nations Ambassador, Justice of the Supreme Court, and Secretary of Labor Arthur Goldberg, as well as University of Chicago Economics Professor Milton Friedman, are erudite, just and honorable men; however their orientation and philosophies, which would guide their actions were they designated as members of the Panel, are considerably different.

To consider further the disputes handling procedure as prescribed in Section 808, the Panel, having already taken action which could have been critical in solving the dispute through mediation, factfinding or recommendation, if the impasse still exists "shall notify the parties whether it will take jurisdiction over any or all of the issues in dispute." It seems to us that considerable jurisdiction has already been taken!

Another serious question is concerned with the failure of the Panel to take jurisdiction which means a continuation of the status quo, which is defined to mean "a continuation of the relevant practice." We suggest, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, that this would be another tremendous and continuing victory for management! If there was ever a history of relevant practices developed over time, under a government management rights doctrine — practices that need changing—it is in the Post Office Department!

STATUS QUO PROTECTED

If the Panel takes jurisdiction it "may recommend to the parties ways and means by which the parties may seek agreement." The Panel already did this through specific ways and means—mediation, factfinding or recommendations. Would these ways and means be in the form of strong suggestions or subtle ultimatums. The composition and operation of the Panel, both highly uncertain variables, would determine this.

If the parties continue to fail to reach agreement, the Panel has another opportunity to "relinquish jurisdiction." The status quo, which has built into it only what management has agreed to in the past, would prevail.

Another alternative available to the Panel is to refer the matter to arbitration, and, at the same time, "frame the language of the issue or issues to be arbitrated." The postal employe union cannot call upon arbitration as a matter of right; that is, the judgment of a third party as a solution to a bargaining impasse. Arbitration may finally be permitted as a last attempt, but this would be dependent on the grace and good judgment of the three-member Panel ONLY, after a long, frustrating and repetitive process of bargaining to finality.

As former Postmaster General Gronouski said in his statement before you, "The procedure established through the Disputes Panel clearly denies the postal worker and his union the right to demand binding arbitration as a matter of right. In short, the worker is denied an ultimate weapon in those cases when collective bargaining, mediation and factfinding fail to provide an answer to dispute."

Binding arbitration should be available at the request of either party. Certainly, the parties should bargain long and hard. But, having done this, what else is there to do in the face of continuing impasse but call upon a mutually acceptable third party to decide the matter. We accept this procedure, Mr. Chairman, in the labor-management and collective bargaining procedures provided in Title VII, Chapter 47 of H.R. 4, and we sincerely believe that either party, labor or management, should be able to independently introduce arbitration as the means of final settlement. However, and obviously, H.R. 11750 does not provide this basic and absolute need to accomplish true and equitable collective bargaining.

A REAL SLEEPER

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we also have very strong and serious disagreement with the language in Section 805 of H.R. 11750, entitled, "Policy on Compensation and Benefits." In fact, the language contained therein would appear to open the door to the subversion of the entire salary and benefits "package" which Congress has developed over the years for postal employes. Paragraph 805, states, "It shall be the policy of the postal service to maintain compensation and benefits for all employes on a standard of comparability to the compensation and benefits paid for comparable levels of work in the non-Federal sectors of the economy." The change from current policy is so obvious it is not really proper to even call it a "sleeper," but if there is one it is the word "non-Federal." Quite frankly, we are surprised that no one has yet, in the extensive hearings which have already been held, directed attention and discussion to this reference which appears to us as an attempted far-reaching change in policy.

According to current policy, prescribed by the "Salary Reform Act of 1962," postal employes, as well as other Federal employes are to achieve and maintain salary comparability "with private enterprise salary rates for the same levels of work."

Making postal employe salaries and benefits comparable to those attached to comparable levels of work in the non-Federal sectors could certainly lead to severe erosion and deterioration of those salaries and benefits. The point I am making, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, is that "non-Federal" could bring onto the comparability scene nine million state and local government employes. Unfortunately, many of the state and local government employes are themselves struggling to achieve a compensation and benefits package enticing enough to keep them in their jobs, or if they do not have job mobility, remunerative enough to keep them above subsistence.

Using their salaries and benefits in the computation of "comparability" in our opinion would be a severe backward step. Certainly such a policy would retard upward movement and serve as a drag to the postal employe. The tendency would be for state and local government salaries and benefits to lead; although much more properly the Federal Government should demonstrate leadership, not only to state and local governments but to private industry as well.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we shudder to think of what this would do to the already distorted, misinterpreted and misapplied comparability process. Obviously, additional jobs, from the state and local government portions of the non-Federal sectors, would have to be selected and added to the "mix." Some person or persons instrumental in the original drafting of the bill certainly must attach considerable significance to this language and policy change, and we consider this the real "sleeper" within Section 805 of H.R. 11750.

In its implementation there had to be a belief that its effect, when the state and local jobs are properly "weighted," will not be great enough to make the result intolerable. The change in language obviously was deliberate and certainly must reflect some reasoning or intent. It is our sincere hope that any need for such a change will be made academic with the passage of H.R. 4, in preference to H.R. 11750.

UNION SHOP DISTORTION

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we would like to touch briefly on another item that has been receiving considerable recognition in the public press, as well as by this Committee in its discussions with Postmaster General Blount and members of his staff during the hearings and this is the question of the "Union Shop" under the proposed Postal Service Act. We believe it is important, in this regard, to sharply differentiate between what would be possible under a Postal Service Act and what would be permitted, insofar as the "Union Shop" is concerned. It is one thing to say that such an item would be subject to the collective bargaining process under H.R. 11750, but quite another to say that it would have even a prayer of being negotiated through the collective bargaining process under the Postal Service Corporation.

Certainly, the July-August 1969 edition of Postal Life, the company organ of the Post Office Department which is mailed to each and every one of the 750,000 postal employes, deliberatelly distorted the possibility of negotiating a union shop under the proposed corporation act.

On page 11 of the Department's publication, the question was asked, "Will the union shop be permitted?" The answer was—"Yes." Once again, it is up to the collective bargaining process, but, of course, it will be subject to state laws governing such matters. This type of propaganda, now directed to the captive audience of 750,000 postal employes, would lead the average postal worker to believe that the proposed Postal Service Act would automatically provide the "Union Shop."

Of course, nothing is further from the truth, and the answer really should have started off by stating, NO, and then gone on to say, "unless your union, which does not have the compulsory arbitration weapon let alone the right to strike, can negotiate it through the collective bargaining process." This is a typical example of what we mean when we say that "We would be naked at the bargaining table" without the right to strike, and certainly without even the right of compulsory arbitration on the main questions with which our union is concerned.

If we need anything further to convince us that, at least the present Administration in proposing the Postal Corporation Act would never agree to the union shop for employe unions within the Postal Service, all we have to do is refer to the recent statement by Dr. Arthur F. Burns, Counselor to President Richard M. Nixon, who responded to a complaint by the National Right-to-Work Committee that the Administration might agree to a union shop in the expected, but often delayed, labor-management Executive Order of the President. Dr. Burns reassured the National Right-to-Work Committee, on behalf of President Richard M. Nixon, that, "Certainly, each employe of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government must have the right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist the labor organization or refrain from any such activity." (emphasis ours)

We respectfully suggest that with the background of Postmaster General Winton M. Blount as the immediate past president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which has historically and aggressively opposed the "union shop" in private industry and supported the so-called "Right-to-Work" statutes in some states of this great country, that certainly and realistically postal employe unions could have no expectation or hope that a "union shop" would be negotiated under a Postal Service Corporation which has been proposed by this Administration.

In the course of these hearings on Postal Reform, increased mechanization in a new structure has been advanced as an answer to what is thought to be a relatively low productivity rate of postal service. Needed mechanization can as well be introduced and utilized within the "Postal Reform" framework which would be established by H.R. 4.

The Kappel Commission Report reveals (Vol. 1, Appendix C, p. 115) that there is great difficulty in measuring productivity in the Postal Service. It states that of the two productivity indexes used, one differs by more than 100 per cent from the other, to "highlight the problems of measuring productivity in the post office." Quality-of-service changes cannot be identified and excluded. "It is sufficient to say that we have indications of productivity performance in the post office, but no more."

MACHINES NO PANACEA

The Report relates further that productivity can be improved through mechanization and through leveling the peak load. "We should like to emphasize, however, that there is a strong consensus that mechanization is not a panacea for the postal productivity problem (emphasis ours). It should be only one facet of a multi-pronged effort, another element of which would be improvement in management and management techniques." (Vol. 1, p. 138.)

We remind you that productivity increases are relatively difficult to achieve in a labor-intensive industry. Further, in comparison with the trade, finance and service sectors of the economy, "the performance of the post office is favorable." Using one of the two indexes considered by the Kappel Commission, post office productivity is greater than that of both the finance and service sectors of the economy.

As examples of kinds of mechanization in the post office which fall short of expectations and of common but naive conceptions we consider briefly the letter-sorting machine and the optical scanner, the former of which utilizes 12 keyboard operators and the latter of which replaces the operators. The standard literature states that the letter-sorting machine can sort at speeds up to 36,000 letters per hour. HOWEVER, when allowances are made for down time, unemployed time, and machine cleanout, and output is divided by a full complement of workers required to utilize the machine, the machine distribution rate is approximately 25 pieces per minute per employe.

We are convinced, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, that our postal clerks distributing mail manually can do as well—and do without this $125,000 piece of equipment.

The optical scanner, or the optical character reader, as it is officially called, is designed to scan the envelope, find the address block, single out and extract the relevant information which is sent to a directory, which in turn sends it to a central electronic logic unit which identifies the proper distribution bin to which the letter is directed by the letter-sorting machine to which the scanner is attached. All this is to be done at the machine's speed of 36,000 pieces per hour, using no operators, only supervisory and auxiliary personnel.

However, the scanner can "read" only machine-printed mail so there MUST be a pre-sort. Then, its reading ability is limited by degraded print, unusual address block formats, misplaced inserts, patterned and colored backgrounds, and erroneous and nonstandard spellings and abbreviations. We have been advised that the net result is that only approximately 25 per cent of the machine printed pre-sorted mail is machine readable! As a matter of fact, a total of ONLY ten optical scanners have been declared to be operational in eight installations by the Post Office Department.

PROBLEMS INHERENT

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, in further challenge to H.R. 11750, and the Postal Corporation concept, let us examine the reasoning of the Kappel Commission, which concluded that the Postal Service should be run more like a business. In fact, it concluded that piece-meal changes in the present structure would not be effective enough to do the reform job thought necessary. The Commission concluded that the existing problems and their causes were inherent in the postal service's departmental structure, that a wholesale change, a complete reorganization, was necessary.

Think for a moment of the subtle psychology applied here. Postal problems are being attributed to the organization form; no blame has to be placed on postal officials or employes, or even the Congress. The structure is to blame, not the people who guide it or work in it.

We point out, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, that in the business-versus-government-department controversy, the criteria of each should be examined. The businessman is concerned with efficiency, economy and productivity, as is the current Post Office Deparment, but the businessman must always place them first and foremost. "Service" can be expressed only in terms of dollars, a profit. According to the businessman's rule of thumb, a service will be offered only as long as it covers its marginal or incremental cost:

And this is a very important point which second and third class mailers recognize, we feel sure. It can be stated that the Postal Service has a vast structure primarily for the purpose of delivering first class mail. Beyond this mission, the fixed assets and organizational structure—the institution—can be used to handle other classes of mail on an incremental cost coverage basis. In other words, as long as incremental or marginal cost is covered by incremental or marginal revenue, the service is considered to be "paid for." This is the businessman's approach, the "economic man" concept. Its application in the postal service, in typical businessman style, will extend the subsidization of second and third class mailers by permitting the first class mail users to pay for the Postal Service's fixed or institutional costs. SOUND BUSINESS?—WE THINK NOT!

BIG BOYS CAN'T LOSE

Further, to the degree that second and third class rates would be increased, the smaller, the less efficient, the marginal firm would be driven out of business. So, the large mailers can't lose. They can continue to benefit greatly from rates which do not make them pay for the fixed, or even all the variable costs related to servicing of their mail; or, they can watch their competition wither away under the financial strain of increased mailing rates.

We are not attempting to propose a solution, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee. We do not believe it is our responsibility to do so. Someone else is caught on the horns of this dilemma. It has been the Congress, and we sincerely and respectfully believe it should continue to be the Congress.

Within the Department and agency structure, decisions are made in Congress and the Executive Branch by persons who must consider economic as well as political criteria. Primary consideration necessarily must, and rightly so, be given to the welfare of the country as a whole, even though the economic cost may be great. In a democracy, varied and differing interests of groups and individuals must be collectively represented, many times with very inefficient results from an economic or businessman's point of view.

One need only look at the loopholes of tax legislation and the considerable controversy plaguing the Congress, the Administration, as well as the citizens of this great country for stark recognition of this fact. As Mr. Richard J. Willey relates in his previously mentioned article (and it's his comment) that because partisan loyalty is often at least as important as expertise in the administration of public policy, many department and agency appointments remain in the political realm. In summary, a department cannot be administered like a business because, in true democratic tradition, national, group and partisan interests often take realistic and practical precedence over questions of economy and expertise.

The critical question is: Should the Postal Service be run as a business? The Kappel Commission thinks so, but its composition, mostly businessmen, would have a built-in disposition to so conclude. Some witnesses appearing in these hearings think so, but they applied mainly economic criteria.

If they are mistaken and the Post Office does not perform essentially a business function, then a department structure is the proper one, despite inherent deficiencies. It is true that many presumed deficiencies appear to be something else when seen from a non-businessman's point of view. For example, fantastic billion dollar "deficits" are accepted features of Departments and agencies within Government. Yet the so-called "deficit" is approximately 1 billion dollars within the Post Office Department, approximately half of which is considered not as a deficit item but rather as a public service item. We suggest by comparsion that the Post Office Department provides good service to the American public at a minimum or nominal cost.

SERVICE REAFFIRMED

The United Federation of Postal Clerks as a service organization sincerely and honestly believes that the Postal Service should not be run as a profit-making or even as a break-even business. Historically the Congress has reaffirmed the service nature of the Post Office Department's mission. Witness after witness parading to this table to appear before you has recognized this constitutionally provided service role for the Post Office Department. Yet there were some who subordinated it to a calculating businessman's judgment.

We maintain that with a corporate-type businessman at the helm, there would not be adequate guarantees established or implemented that traditional and needed service would be maintained at all in some cases, or at reasonable cost in others. The phrases in H.R. 11750 relative to service such as "as it may deem appropriate" (Section 202), "as nearly as practicable" (Section 401, a.), and "consistent with reasonable economies of postal operations" would give a businessman, flanked by his cost-and-revenue curve economists, far too much latitude.

Some people would be hurt. The public would be hurt. And we believe that the public and the American people, in general, who always let you know when their Postal Service is impaired, restrained, or withdrawn, should be the prime concern in this matter.

Much has been written about dissatisfaction with the Postal Service—by mailers who have much at stake, we must add. How much dissatisfaction there really is we don't know. We are not suggesting the "Big Lie" technique is being applied—that is, tell people something often enough and they will begin to believe it—but we do believe that most citizens would not be preoccupied, or even think about, Postal Service problems. As one distinguished Member of your Committee related, constituents in his district are writing to him, asking him what Postal Service problems are being referred to in the newspaper and magazine articles.

Basically, the citizens of this country want their rights and interests in postal matters protected. In something as important as this, in something as important to the commercial, financial and personal interests of all the people, we ask you now—who is the best guardian of these interests, the Congress, with its traditional responsibilities—or a business corporation, with its necessary and well-known motivations?

LACK OF CONFIDENCE

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we must indicate considerable concern regarding those who would have us accept the postal corporation on the premise that we would be able to improve the economic, financial and "fringe benefit" lot of our Postal Clerk membership. Certainly the events of the past few months when spokesmen for this Administration have testified on numerous occasions before this Committee as well as subcommittees of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service concerning employe legislation, leave us completely void of any confidence that if the present postal administrators were a part of the Postal Corporation Board of Directors or Disputes Panel that we would be able to improve these areas of economic status for our membership and their families.

Spokesmen for this Administration, which has proposed the Postal Corporation Act, H.R. 11750, testified vigorously and aggressively in April before the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Postal Operations in complete and total opposition to H.R. 4803 and the establishment of Postal Employe Labor-Management Relations by law. Subsequently, spokesmen for the Administration have testified in opposition to the nominal employe benefits provided in H.R. 9825, the retirement legislation which last week was approved by the House of Representatives.

Spokesmen and top officials for this Administration have testified before the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and the other body in opposition to any increase in the Government's contribution to the Federal employe health benefit plans.

Certainly the testimony by Postmaster General Winton M. Blount, and that of Civil Service Commissioner Robert E. Hampton as well as Deputy Director of the Bureau of the Budget Phillip L. Hughes before the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Compensation on June 16-17, confirmed our complete lack of confidence in this Administration, including the Postal Administration, to equitably and currently adjust Postal Clerks' and other postal workers' salaries consistent with demonstrated need and equity.

I am sure some Members of this Committee will recall Postmaster General Blount opposed any salary increase for postal workers until at least July, 1970; opposed any increase in the 10 percent night differential payment for postal employes even though the 10 percent differential was enacted in 1928, more than 40 years ago; opposed shortening of the period of service necessary to reach the highest pay step in the postal workers' salary levels as well as any additional salary recognition for longevity purposes.

REASONS EXAMINED

Mr. Chairman, in our opinion, there can be only one of two reasons why this Postal Administration as well as the Nixon Administration, generally, have opposed all beneficial employe legislation during this First Session of the 91st Congress. This very Administration which is so aggressively seeking the enactment of H.R. 11750 and promising postal employes considerable improvements in wages, fringe benefits, and working conditions through such a corporation could be vigorously opposing Congressional action on pending employe benefit legislation as a club over our heads to force through the Postal Corporation concept. If this actually is the case, we can only assure this Administration and officials of the Post Office Department that they certainly do not understand or want to understand the thinking of either our 304,000 postal clerks throughout the country or that of the leadership of the United Federation of Postal Clerks representing the largest group of postal employes within the postal establishment.

However, if this is not the reason why the present Administration is so vigorously opposing any and all employes' salary or fringe benefit legislation, then the only other possible answer is, that this Administration does not believe there is any need to improve the wages or fringe benefits or even working conditions of postal employes. Therefore, this is the real reason why spokesmen for the Administration have been vigorously and continuing opposing the enactment of any and all employe legislation by this Congress.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, obviously and realistically, the United Federation of Postal Clerks cannot and will not accept either of these reasons for not improving the collective well-being of the postal clerk and all other postal workers. If there is any way to solidify our ranks in opposition to the postal corporation concept—if any such solidification is necessary—all the Post Office Department and the Nixon Administration have to do is to continue doing everything possible to oppose beneficial employe legislation pending before this Congress.

Let there be no mistake, if Administration pressures should continue or accelerate in opposition to our legislative program in the 91st Congress, they certainly may be assured our opposition will equally accelerate and become more aggressive in our efforts to defeat the postal corporation recommendation as proposed in H.R. 11750 by President Richard M. Nixon and Postmaster General Winton M. Blount.

NO ARBITRARY DECISION

The United Federation of Postal Clerks, Mr. Chairman, was the last postal employe organization to officially announce its opposition to the postal corporation concept as proposed in H.R. 11750. Our union did not take this position until June 19, as we refrained from arbitrarily opposing the postal corporation concept in order that we might do the following things: (1) Carefully examine the legislative proposal. (2) Consider testimony by the Post Office Department before this distinguished Committee as well as Subcommittees of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. (3) Afford the Post Office Department officials and other proponents of the postal corporation concept an opportunity to meet with us and explain their proposition in detail as well as permit us an opportunity to discuss alternate proposals. (4) Observe and analyze the reaction of the Post Office Department to our own legislative program in the area of salary adjustments for postal clerks.

It was only after each of these endeavors was accomplished as well as discussing the legislation with our legal counsel, did we conclude that we must actively oppose enactment of H.R. 11750.

Our union opposes the postal corporation concept as outlined in H.R. 11750 for the following reasons: (1) It does not meet the criteria established by our National Convention in August, 1968—in that it does not propose that postal employes be granted the right to strike. (2) It does not grant the United Federation of Postal Clerks the right to binding arbitration on our own initiative. (3) It does not propose that we be given true comparability both in the area of wages and fringe benefits with employes in the private sector prior to becoming employes of the postal corporation.

We are also opposed to H.R. 11750 because it would definitely link pay increases to postal rate increases, thus making postal employes the only large group of Federal employes whose wages and fringe benefits would depend upon the ability of the corporation to pay from receipts or force the American public to pay increased fees for mail service. Also contributing to our decision to oppose H.R. 11750 was the failure of the Postmaster General to give any consideration to the fact that even after the proposed meager 4.1% pay increase which postal clerks received as of July 12, 1969, that we are still more than $800 behind our counterparts in the private sector as of 13 months earlier in June of 1968, to say nothing of the astronomical skyrocketing in the cost of living which has occurred since June, 1968, 5.5 percent according to the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index for June, 1969, released July 23.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, and after due and careful consideration of H.R. 11750 as well as H.R. 4, the United Federation of Postal Clerks reaffirms its endorsement of H.R. 4 with several amendments which we will offer at this point and emphatically and categorically opposes the enactment of H.R. 11750 or any similar postal corporation act.

H.R. 4 SUPPORTED

As I am sure you have noted, the main thrust of our testimony has been in opposition to the postal corporation as outlined in H.R. 11750; although, we consistently refer to our support of Chairman Dulski's bill, H.R. 4, as we move through our statement. We support and endorse H.R. 4, and honestly believe that any and all "postal reform" necessary can be accomplished within the legislation sponsored by Chairman Dulski and entitled, "Postal Reform Act of 1969."

However, Mr. Chairman, we offer two suggested amendments to H.R. 4 and respectfully request this Committee to include the necessary language changes in H.R. 4 to accomplish these amendments.

First, we suggest that Title II, concerned with appointment of postmasters, be amended with the language from H.R. 6959, also sponsored by Chairman Dulski, which is necessary to establish the eligibility and appointment criteria provided on page 2 of H.R. 6959 from lines 3 through 14. It is possible that Title II of H.R. 4 intends to accomplish the same purposes as this language in H.R. 6959. However, we suggest that it would be more appropriate to specifically define the selection and eligibility requirements related to competitive examinations as well as the appointment procedures in Subsection 2 (as extensions of the language in Title II).

We also suggest a further amendment in Title II, Section 3311, "Method of Appointment," to provide that appointment method 1, as provided in H.R. 6959, would read as follows: "(1) By selection of the best qualified career regular employe with not less than five years of continuous career postal service in the installation where the vacancy occurs and in accordance with provisions of Title V, governing appointments in the competitive service, of qualified employes serving under career appointments in the Postal Field Service."

We urge this Committee to accomplish these language changes in order that the best qualified career employe in a post office where the vacancy exists will at least have the opportunity for appointment to a postmaster vacancy. We would like to believe this is the intent of Chairman Dulski and hopefully will be the intent of this Committee when final language of this legislation is considered by the Committee.

EARLIER VIEWS CITED

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, on April 23, 1969, the United Federation of Postal Clerks testified before the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Postal Operations under the chairmanship of the honorable Robert N. C. Nix in support of H.R. 4803 to establish postal employe labor-management relations by law. Chairman Nix held extensive hearings over a period of 2 months concerning postal employe labor-management legislation, including H.R. 4803, and then concluded the hearings the latter part of June. H.R. 4803 is practically identical with Chapter 47 of Title VII of H.R. 4 and proposes to establish postal employe labor-management relations and collective bargaining by law.

We suggest, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, that you consult with our good friend, Congressman Nix, and request Mr. Nix as Chairman of the Postal Operations Subcommittee and Members of his Committee to make the hearing record available to the full Committee in support of enactment of Title VII of H.R. 4 with an amendment to substitute all provisions presently provided in Title VII of H.R. 4.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we cannot urge too strongly that union recognition, labor-management relations and collective bargaining for postal employes and their unions be included as an integral part of H.R. 4 and any final legislative draft proposing to establish "Postal Reform" within the postal establishment. Labor-management by law is an absolute must for postal employes during the First Session of the 91st Congress. We are confident our testimony on April 23, 1969, will convince you of the necessity to enact this legislation into law at the earliest possible date.

We shall be very happy to provide all Members of this Committee with copies of our statement presented on April 23, to the Postal Operations Subcommittee in support of H.R. 4803.

We believe and hope you also are convinced that Postal Reform even as provided in H.R. 4 would be meaningless and totally unrealistic if it does not recognize the absolute need for postal employes and their unions to have recognition, collective bargaining, and meaningful labor-management relations with the Post Office Department through Federal statute. We shall certainly cooperate with this Committee and the very capable Members of the staff concerning the labor-management proposals presently in H.R. 4, and our request to substitute the total provisions of H.R. 4803 by amending the existing Title VII.

FINAL THOUGHT

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, before we conclude our testimony, we believe it is appropriate to state for the record that it has not been our intention in presenting this statement in opposition to H.R. 11750 and the postal corporation this morning to in any way question the sincerity, dedication or genuine concern of all sponsors of the proposed "Postal Service Act," particularly Postmaster General Winton M. Blount and his staff.

While we would have preferred consultation with Postmaster General Blount concerning the "Postal Service Act" during the period it was being drafted, rather than after it was introduced in this Congress as H.R. 11750 —we have appreciated the numerous briefing and discussion sessions which Mr. Blount and his staff have participated in with officers of the United Federation of Postal Clerks concerning "Postal Reform" legislation.

These meeting have been informative and helpful as have been other meetings between Postmaster Blount and our National leadership on different questions of considerable impor-

(Continued on page 20)

EXHIBIT A

GOVERNMENT-OWNED CORPORATIONS*

Federal Intermediate Credit Banks (established 1923): Formerly entirely Government-owned, these are now owned in part by production credit associations and other financing institutions. The twelve banks comprising the system make loans to, and discount agricultural paper for, production credit associations. State and national banks, agricultural credit corporations, livestock loan companies, and similar lending groups.

Banks for Cooperatives (1933): Establish to provide a permanent source of credit on a sound business basis to farmer cooperatives, twelve district banks lend to cooperatives. These presently own all capital stock in six of the banks and are purchasing stock in others. As their investment grows, Government-owned capital will be repaid.

Commodity Credit Corporation (1933): Capitalized at $100 million, CCC finances price support and production stabilization programs. To encourage production adjustments and maintain farm income, payments are made for diverting cropland from production of stipulated commodities to conserving uses. Commodities acquired under price support programs are disposed of through domestic and export sales, transfers to other Government agencies, and donations for domestic and foreign welfare use (including the Food For Peace Program).

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (1933): Designed to insure the deposits of all banks eligible to become insured under the law, FDIC functions to prevent loss to depositors of insured banks, up to the insured limit, and to prevent the development or continuance of unsafe or unsound bank practices or violations of law.

Tennessee Valley Authority (1933): TVA built and operates a series of dams on the Tennessee River and its larger tributaries which are harnessed to produce electricity which is sold wholesale to some 160 local electric systems. It also maintains a continuous 9-foot draft channel for navigation for the 650-mile length of the Tennessee River main stream, and provides services and facilities for outdoor recreation areas.

Federal Prison Industries (1934): Established to provide employment for all physically fit inmates of Federal penal institutions.

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (1934): Established to insure the safety of savings up to $15,000 for each investor's account in Federal savings and loan associations and State-chartered associations and cooperative banks which apply and are approved.

Export-Import Bank of the United States (1935): Operates to aid in financing and facilitating exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the U.S. and any foreign country or its nationals or agencies.

United States Housing Authority (1937): A complex of individual Federal housing corporations created "to assist States in remedying unsafe and unsanitary housing conditions and acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low incomes."

Federal Crop Insurance Corporation (1938): Charging variable premium rates in various parts of the country to participating farmers, the Corporation provides indemnity against losses due to crop failures (from weather, insects, disease, etc.) up to 75 per cent of the average yield.

Federal National Mortgage Association (1948): Performs, through the medium of two corporate structures, the following program functions for the Department of HUD: provision of supplementary assistance to the secondary market for insured and guaranteed mortgages, provision of special assistance in financing eligible types of federally underwritten mortgages, and management and liquidation of the portfolio of mortgages held by FNMA under the enabling act, including management of the Government Mortgage Liquidation Trust, Small Business Obligations Trust, Federal Assets Liquidation Trust, and Federal Assets Financing Trust.

Panama Canal Company (1948): The Panama Canal Company, known as the Panama Railroad Company prior to July 1, 1951, was reincorporated by the act of June 29, 1948, as an agency and instrumentality of the United States, for the purpose of maintaining and operating the Panama Canal and of conducting business operations incident to such activities and incident to the civil government of the Canal Zone. The company now maintains and operates the Panama Canal and facilities related to the Canal, including a railroad; the cargo docks and piers and harbor terminal facilities; an oil handling plant; commissary stores, including cold storage plants; electric power, water, and telephone systems; procurement and storehouse facilities; motor transportation service; a printing plant; restaurants, theaters, bowling alleys, and miscellaneous merchandising activities; marine and general repair shops; and an empolyes' housing system.

Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation (1954): Established to consummate arrangements with its Canadian counterpart relative to construction and operation of the Seaway, to finance the U.S. share of the Seaway cost on a self-liquidating basis, to negotiate with Canada for an agreement on tolls, and to encourage the development of traffic maximum utilization of the Seaway.

CONGRESSIONAL DIGEST; Washington, D. C.; March 1969

UNION SAYS: NO CUTS IN RURAL POSTAL SERVICES

7 1969

THE POST

NEWSPAPER OF THE UNION OF POST OFFICE WORKERS; London

VOLUME 73 No. 15 OCTOBER 11, 1969

THE BIRTH of a baby is usually a matter for celebration, with the proud parents indulging in the time-honoured custom of "wetting the baby's head". But from what one can gather the Viscount Hall took his parental responsibilities rather differently when, last week, he attended at the birth of the new Post Office Corporation.

Dispensing with the traditional formalities the noble Dad launched his new baby with a new technique. He substituted "wetting the baby's head" with "patting the baby's head". – The only trouble was that he patted the baby Post Office straight between the eyes with a sixteen-pound sledge-hammer. Not once, but twice!

First wallop – the threat to "do a Beeching" on the postal service and cut services to Britain's rural communities.

Second wallop – his reported statement (The Times of October 3), "Letters are on the way out".

It is hard to believe that the Chairman has not yet realised that he has taken over a public service. If, however, in his Brave New World euphoria it has escaped his notice we will repeat it:

"The Post Office is a public service."

In this context the Union of Post Office Workers interprets the word "public" as meaning the whole of the British community, not just those who live in towns and cities. In the matter of public service we do not believe that the service we produce should be made available to the public we serve purely on the basis of where they happen to live.

Will resist

Britain's rural communities are as an essential part of our nation as the urban ones, and to suggest that their ability to send and receive letters may depend upon their geographical location is to completely misunderstand what is meant by public service.

The Union of Post Office Workers will resist any attempt to cut Post Office rural services.

We are prepared to co-operate to the utmost to make the new Corporation an efficient and profitable enterprise.

In our view, and we have stated this before, the postal service can best be made more efficient and profitable by the utilisation of new methods and techniques in the fields of mechanisation and automation. But in this regard the Post Office's performance has been woefully inadequate.

More than a decade ago the mechanisation/automation of the postal service was fanfared as the new age. Letters, untouched by human hands, were to flow into and out of machine-filled sorting offices at unheard of rates –At least that's what the fancy brochures said.

That's practically all we got – the brochures. More than ten years later not one fully mechanised sorting office is in production. There's been too much talk about the postal tomorrow, and not enough action about the postal today.

A pity

It is capital for the development of the new methods and techniques the postal business needs, not the cutting back of its service to its rural customers. That is the philosophy of defeat and despair – and it's done nothing for the morale of postal employees that the first reported public utterance of the Chairman of the new dynamic Corporation seems to ally him with the negativists.

It is a pity too that Lord Hall chose to confide in everyone else about his bright new tomorrow without even mentioning a word of it to those thousands of men and women who have invested their lives in making, and maintaining, the British Postal Service the best in the world.

He did, however, speak to Post Office staff – in a reported £30,000 worth of advertisement in the national press. (The new-look Post Office Circular?) In a declaration writ large he said:

"Close concern for our customers will be our first priority as we meet the future with speed and efficiency."

Which customers? The ones who live in towns and cities, or the ones who live in rural communities? Our rural customers need the "close concern" of a Postal Beeching like they need a hole in the head. And to tell them that their [illegible] in which the they may be rendered incommunicado hardly seems to be consonant with speed and efficiency.

Whilst we are on the subject of the future if "Letters are on the way out", what substitute is proposed for the 11,000,000,000 letters which the British Post Office handles annually? – Every home (except rural ones of course), shop or office hooked up to a vast communications computer complex?

It may be true that, in what is called the communications explosion, the rapidly evolving techniques of data transmission will enable computer to communicate with computer, and so build up a national network for the transmission of information. But a lot more Chairmen will come and go before an acceptable technology is developed, (both in terms of practicality and economics), which will invalidate those 11,000 million letters.

Public servants

In the meantime, whilst not wishing to carp at visions of the future, the facts of the present are that postal mechanisation is years in arrears and at least 79,000 people are still waiting to get a telephone exchange connection in their homes, shops, or offices – let alone a computer connection. And when they have done so, after a five-year and £2,000 million spending programme, only one person in 7 of the population will be "on the telephone".

Point taken?

The Union of Post Office Workers has long since promised its support and co-operation in the introduction of new methods of working, mechanised or automatised, aimed at improving the efficiency and profitability of the Post Office.

That support and co-operation does not extend to the denial of Post Office services to our rural communities, and, we repeat, we will resist any such move.

Our members may have ceased to be Civil Servants. They have not ceased to be public servants, and that means to the whole of the British public – urban and rural alike.

H.B.

FRANCIS S. FILBEY,
Editor

PATRICK J. NILAN,
Associate Editor

EDITORIALS

POSTAL REFORM

The form in which Postal Reform will take shape is of paramount importance to every postal employe. Over and above its effects upon employes, however, is also the impact it will have on the various segments of the American public.

We know the "bugs" that are in H.R. 11750, the Postal Corporation Concept being so assiduously pressed by the Department and the Nixon Administration, but we wonder if the general public knows about the "bugs" in the proposal that could adversely affect them. We rather suspect that too many of them have swallowed the story handed out by the Department, the Chamber of Commerce and far too many segments of the news media.

* * *

Every means has been used to sell the idea that the Corporation Concept is the panacea for all the ills that allegedly exist in the Postal Service.

We say allegedly exist because we are closer to the actual conditions than are any of the proponents of the Corporation Concept.

We know that there are many ways in which the Postal Service can be improved, but we do not subscribe to the scare stories that are being circulated.

Recently the President of the United States was alleged to have said that the Postal Service was collapsing. Even while this alleged allegation was being made our Postal Service handled better than two-hundred million pieces of mail on the day before, the same day, and on each succeeding day. This seems to us to be a far cry from collapse.

Even while these allegations were being given the full treatment by the press and other means of mass media, little attention was being given by these same people to what was happening to the telephone service of this country. Lately, however, we have seen some segments of the press begin to point out the failures which are occurring in the telephone system.

Some of the same dailies that would have us believe that all the ills of the Postal Service will be cured by the Corporation Concept are now pointing out the failures of an existing corporation, also in the field of communications.

It should also be noted that the distinguished chairman of the Kappel Commission was at one time President of the corporation whose shortcomings are now beginning to be publicized.

* * *

Possibly the Congress should be considering making a government department of the private corporation, rather than considering making a public corporation of the Postal Service.

If a private corporation operating on the profit making concept is failing to provide good service, what makes people believe that a government corporation operating on the break-even concept will do any better?

In a business whose costs are better than 80% for labor alone, how is the break-even point to be reached unless the public is charged greater fees for the services or the employees are to continue to be paid sub-standard wages? We will match the efficiency of the postal clerk against the efficiency of his counterpart in the private sector and continue to hope that some day his wages will match those paid to his counterpart.

Let us pray that the people's representatives, the Congress, will give us Postal Reform in a form free of the "bugs" and in the best interest of good postal service at a reasonable cost, and performed by civil service postal employees.

We, the United Federation of Postal Clerks, share with you the approval of Postmaster General Blount's efforts to remove politics from promotions in the postal service, most particularly from the appointment of postmasters. For far too long we have watched political hacks receive appointments as postmasters solely on the basis of who they knew rather than on what they know about operating a post office. Depending on the size of the post office, dedicated, long-time, career employes—yes, even post office clerks—have not only been denied the promotion but additionally have been forced to train the political hack. Complete elimination of politics from postmaster appointments is meaningless unless it is coupled with a mandate that first consideration shall be given to postal employes already on the rolls.

The only difficulty we encounter in the new program is its failure to provide some avenue of review for the employes in a post office where the decision is made that none of them are qualified for the appointment. We have the same problem in promotions below the level of postmaster, in that passed-over employes are not permitted to have a higher authority review the relative qualifications. It does us little good to remove partisan politics if we still leave personal preference as the guide line. Additional advancement opportunities can also be created by more frequent and more realistic reevaluation of existing positions. This is necessary to keep current with the changes brought about by the increased use of mechanization.

So, in summation we would say that while additional promotional opportunities are extremely desirable and, in fact, necessary if we are to retain our long-time employes, it is equally necessary that these same employes be assured of complete impartiality in the promotional system.

Concluding, I would only add that all of the foregoing can be accomplished in the present framework of the Department and we should move ahead even while the matter of the form of Postal Reform is being debated and ultimately decided by the Congress.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

I recently had a letter sent me Air Mail, Special Delivery from Brooklyn, N. Y., to Miami, Fla., where I was vacationing.

The letter was mailed Wednesday afternoon from Brooklyn at about 3:00 P.M. It reached the Miami post office at 6:00 A.M., Thursday the next day and was delivered to my hotel at 8:00 A.M., the same day. You can't ask for better service than this and you won't get it, not even from a certain telegraph service which is a private corporation. Believe me, I've tried.

Now, let me tell you something about that Special Delivery letter that arrived at my hotel at 8:00 A.M. It took that room clerk 6 hours to get that single piece of mail (which, of course, included a $1.00 tip) to my room which was 60 feet away. He candidly admitted it was laying in the office since 8:00 A.M., that morning. If that is the best that private industry can do with one piece of mail, let alone 80 billion pieces, I want no part of a private corporation or whatever name it goes by, with its systematic system of gratuities and handouts for important pieces of mail.

Anyone who says postal service is poor is nothing but a contemptible liar. I have nothing but praise for it, along with millions of our citizens.

David Rosen
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Postal Corporation Loses First Round

The UFPC and its supporters have won the opening round in the great legislative struggle to achieve postal reform within the existing framework of the Post Office Department.

In executive session on September 23 the full House Post Office & Civil Service Committee voted to start "marking up" reform legislation.

As their vehicle, they chose H.R. 4, sponsored by the Committee Chairman Thaddeus Dulski (D-N.Y.) over H.R. 11750, the Administration's postal corporation bill.

It must be quickly added, however, that the decision was only a technicality still subject to either complete reversal or to some form of compromise by which the corporation concept can be substituted.

In fact a move for such a substitution was pressed by Rep. Morris K. Udall (D-Ariz.) which was ruled out of order although a parliamentary appeal could still be taken since the committee immediately adjourned thereafter.

As Legislative Director Patrick J. Nilan points out, the issue is still "wide open and anything can happen." More than ever, he said, letters from our members to their congressmen are needed.

Nonetheless, even if only temporary, it was a victory. As Congressman Dulski said: "I am grateful for the support of the committee in voting to take up my bill as the vehicle on which we can work towards developing meaningful postal reform. It is important to emphasize at this point, however, that today's actions were fundamentally procedural. We have a long way to go before we will work out all the details and many members, including myself, will have important amendments to offer . . ."

Nilan predicted that backers of the postal corporation scheme will now re-double their efforts. Hence, he said, supporting letters to the members of the committee in favor of H.R. 4 are still urgently needed.

United Federation of Postal Clerks, AFL-CIO

FEDERATION BUILDING, 817 14TH STREET, N.W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

STATEMENT OF
PATRICK J. NILAN, LEGISLATIVE DIRECTOR
UNITED FEDERATION OF POSTAL CLERKS, AFL-CIO
ON POSTAL MODERNIZATION
BEFORE THE
COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE
UNITED STATES SENATE

NOVEMBER 25, 1969

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

For the record, I am Patrick J. Nilan, National Legislative Director of the United Federation of Postal Clerks, AFL-CIO. I am very pleased to appear before this Committee with our National President Francis S. Filbey in regard to modernization of the postal establishment.

We speak in behalf of the nation's 304,000 postal clerks for whom we are the Exclusive national representative for labor-management relations with the Post Office Department. Our membership in the postal clerk craft is employed in post offices in 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, and Guam.

We understand the hearings by this distinguished Committee are basically concerned with the development of legislation to improve and modernize the postal service—and NOT specific legislation proposing to convert the postal establishment to a public corporation as such—is presently before the Committee.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, our postal clerk union has long been on record in appearances before this Committee and other Committees of the Congress in pursuit of these very same goals. We commend Chairman Gale McGee and the Committee for the continuing and objective analysis of postal service operations and related problems, including the well-being of all postal employees.

Mr. Chairman, since there is no specific bill being considered by this Committee, and since there are two different kinds of postal reform bills pending before the other body, namely a postal modernization and reform bill, H.R. 4, and legislation proposing to convert the present postal establishment to a public corporation, H.R. 11750, we will refer to these bills in our testimony as we develop our support for the postal reform H.R. 4, approach and explain our reasons for total opposition to the postal corporation H.R. 11750 concept.

The legislation, H.R.4, would modernize and improve the postal system within the present framework of the postal establishment and includes important and essential postal employee labor-management provisions similar to S. 309, sponsored in the 91st Congress by Senator Ralph Yarborough, a distinguished Member of this Committee. H.R. 11750 proposes the new and controversial postal corporation concept of President Richard M. Nixon and Postmaster General Winton M. Blount with totally unacceptable labor-management provisions for postal workers and their unions.

President Filbey and I can state that the United Federation of Postal Clerks is unalterably opposed to the H.R. 11750 corporation plan and endorses the H.R. 4 approach, with some amendments. In our considered judgment, most of the major provisions of H.R. 11750 and the postal corporation can be, and basically are, provided for in the "Postal Reform Act of 1969" known as H.R. 4.

No postal employee union could, in good conscience (nor would it be worthy of its basic mission and responsibility to protect the best interests of its members and their families) permit itself to be stripped naked of legislative and organizational strength by possible enactment of the postal corporation bill, H.R. 11750. In this statement, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we will document our opposition to the corporation concept and our endorsement of modernizing and improving the postal service within its present basic structure.

We begin, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, by challenging those who would have you believe that the proposed postal corporation could be structured as "another TVA" and be equally or more successful in providing an improved postal service to the entire American public than even TVA is in providing its commodity to only a segment—and really a comparatively small segment—of the American public.

From the very beginning of the advancement and promotion of the government corporation as a structural form for the postal service, the phrase "like TVA" has been commonplace. It has been repeated regularly. Its use has been apparently to denote unqualified sanction. It has been almost a sacred cow.

However, is this a valid comparison? Is the analogy appropriate, realistic ? We think not. And its about time, we think, that the air be cleared on this point. That the real and basic differences between TVA and the proposed postal corporation be pointed out; that the lack of similarities be made clear.

Descriptively, what two kinds of economic units are we considering ? One is a sprawling giant, employing three-quarters of a million people, offering a variety of services to the public throughout the entire United States. The other is a geographically concentrated unit, employing less than 20,000 people, using tremendous amounts of capital equipment to serve a limited area without dealing at all with the American public and selling only one thing for money—electric power.

TVA IS CAPITAL-INTENSIVE. Its 19,600 employees work in conjunction with fixed assets valued at $2,886,942,000. This is a ratio of $147,000 of fixed assets per employee.

THE POSTAL SERVICE IS LABOR-INTENSIVE. Its 725,000 employees work in conjunction with fixed assets valued at $1,178,522,000. This is a ratio of $1620 of fixed assets per employee. In TVA the value of steam production plants alone is $1,499,000,000.

TVA employees in the Tennessee Valley, where they are dwarfed by giant dams, hydroelectric generators and steam-electric plants, never have to even see the public. Many of them are administrators, engineers and other kinds of technicians. Only 5,000 of them start at a salary of less than $6800, according to The Budget of the United States Government, FY 1968.

In the postal service, 540,000 employees start at a salary considerably less than $6800. Many of them, like postal clerks, are skilled technicians of a different kind. All of them deal with the public, many of them directly. Their employer, the postal service, deals with the public all the time.

Productivity comparisons between TVA and the postal service today are not realistic or relevant. This is always the case when a "capital-intensive" unit is compared with a "labor-intensive" one. Additional units of output can easily be produced by capital equipment and other fixed assets of the typed used by TVA. The increased output on a per-man-hour or per-man-year basis will tend to be very great. In a labor-intensive unit, especially of the service type, output increases without increased employment are much more difficult to achieve. Relatively low productivity increases are the rule, not the exception.

In the case of TVA, it has large, modern generating, transmission and distribution facilities of the most efficient design. Additional power can be easily generated using the installed capacity. The same holds true for the transmission and distribution of power.

Productivity in the postal service will be considered later in this statement. Suffice it to say for now that Robert R. Nathan Associates, Inc., in its report to the President's Commission on Postal Organization (the "Kappel Commission Report", Volume I, Appendix C, p.115) relates, "Compared with the productivity performance of the total economy or the manufacturing sector, the post office has not done well, but with respect to more comparable sectors—trade, finance, and services—the performance of the post office is favorable." (emphasis added)

We believe we have demonstrated that TVA is very much unlike what a government postal corporation would be like, and that includes very specifically in terms of the kinds of problems its management would be called upon to manage and solve.

However, why not use some other government corporations as examples? Admittedly, they are not as exciting or effective in projecting a pervasive structure of efficiency which would extend itself over time. TVA was apprently chosen as a reflection of what a government postal service corporation would be like because of its world-recognized success and a degree of glamour its imposing structures effuse in marked contrast to the raging rivers and desolate valleys it enriched.

Other government corporations are just as successful, we maintain, even though their missions are less stirring. However, they are almost entirely financial-like institutions: Commodity Credit Corporation, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, Export—Import Bank of the United States, Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, Federal National Mortgage Association, Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, Banks for Cooperatives, and the St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation. Additional United States Government Corporations are the Panama Canal Company, United States Housing Authority and Federal Prison Industries.

A summary of the nature of Government-owned corporations is provided as Exhibit A at the conclusion of this statement.

NOT ONE of the Government-owned corporations is like the proposed postal service corporation, in terms of its mission, activities, jurisdiction or type of management structure. There is....nothing....like....it....as....a....precedent !

A Government postal service corporation would be new, untried, and experimental. There is no valid analogy for it. And what works for TVA, or even General Motors (with its decentralization of management in divisions) may very well NOT work for the postal service with its long history of SERVICE to the American people as a priority performed within a Federal department structure controlled by the Congress.

Many of the government-owned corporations receive direct Federal subsidy, and in most cases benefit from various forms of other subsidies.

TVA itself has not been economically self-sufficient. It has benefitted from appropriation and subsidy. "TVA's varied programs have been financed with Congressional appropriations, revenues from the sale of power and fertilizer, and proceeds from the sale of bonds. Some property, principally Wilson Dam and the fertilizer works at Muscle Shoals, was transferred to TVA from other Federal agencies." These quotes come from Facts About TVA Operations published by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

It goes on, "The power program finances its operating expense from power revenues and its construction costs from revenues and proceeds from the sale of bonds. However, until the mid-1950s most of the money to finance construction of dams and steam plants came from appropriations . . . The fertilizer, agricultural, and munitions program has used revenues from the sale of fertilizer and chemical products to meet a part of its operating expense but has required appropriations for both operating expense and construction costs. Other TVA programs, including navigation, flood control, forestry and tributary watershed projects have depended almost entirely upon appropriations both for operations and construction." (emphasis added)

The Federal appropriation for TVA in the years 1966 to 1968 ranged from $59 million to $61 million. The Federal Government's investment in the Muscle Shoal properties, subsequently transferred to TVA, was $100,000,000 up to 1918.

Let us consider TVA at the time of its origin, in 1933. It was not created out of Government agency, as the proposed postal service corporation would be. It came from the other end of the spectrum. TVA "came in" where private enterprise with its corporate structure, working in conjunction with state and local governments, could not do the job, in many attempts going back a hundred years. So, after the produce-for-profit corporation approach failed, the Federal Government came to the rescue.

A typical Government agency was not created to administer it; a less drastic change to a government-owned corporation was a feasible transition. However, "those who drafted the TVA Act visualized that agency as something approaching a Federal department of natural resources for the Tennessee Valley." (Encyclopedia Britannica)

An important fact to note is that TVA BEGAN as a Government corporation. It did not have a long history of working relationships and personal service to the American public to abandon. It did not have employees,or a management, or prior guidance from Congress. Everything began anew.

In the postal service it is different, as there has been a long history of working relationships, as well as providing the most personal service to the American public which we can think of during the entire history of our great nation. Labor and management have both looked to Congress when they needed help; and Congress has always been responsive to both, while at the same time giving priority to the mission of the Department in serving the American people. Surely, the mechanism has not worked perfectly. Problems have arisen and some of them persist. That's why reform and improved modernization is needed in the postal service today. But we most respectfully suggest to this Committee and to the Congress, "Let's not throw out the baby with the bath water."

As Kappel Commission member George Meany, distinguished president of the AFL-CIO, was quoted in the Commission's report, after recognizing a need for modernizing the postal system and improving the working conditions and job opportunities, "However, the status of the Post Office as a Cabinet Department has a positive value that should not be discarded lightly." And we certain agree !

There appears to be among the proponents of the postal service corporation a clear and definite presumption that it would succeed. This is not necessarily so. If the mission of the Department is to give the public the kinds of service it has been given in the past at reasonable rates, the corporation could succeed in economic profit-and-loss terms and still fail the American public. However, even if the corporation could fulfill a generally accepted concept of its mission, it could still fail economically. There is absolutely no guarantee of success. No such undertaking of this nature, size and scope has been attempted before. And it is most important to remember that if a postal corporation should be established, it would be extremely difficult, if not totally impossible, to retreat back to the Post Office Department's structure and postal service, as we know it today.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we have only to look at U. S. industry's "top 500" to learn that typically good aggressive management does not always succeed. As revealed in Fortune, May 1969, among the nation's top 500 industrial firms ranked in terms of dollar sales from General Motors and AT&T on down, were thirteen industrial giants which actually lost money. Included in this group were Allis-Chalmers, Swift, Falstaff Brewing, Celanese, Fairchild Hiller and American Machine and Foundry.

One hundred and thirty-three firms showed decline in profits as did 237 the year before. And we can be sure that these "losers" and "decliners" were managed by some of the top managerial talent in the country for whom some complex variables turned awry. Certainly among them were many who received salaries of at least $60,000 a year, the salary suggested for the hired manager of the proposed postal service corporation, and probably even two or three times this $60,000 figure. Perhaps among them is a future manager of the postal service corporation ? ?

Certainly such a manager would inherit a traditional loser. Saying is easier than doing when it comes to making a postal service a profitable corporation which would completely rid itself of so-called "deficits". So it may be that such a manager would face an insurmountable task. The Post Office could be a continuing profit-and-loss statement loser; historically, in terms of service to the American people, we believe it has been a success ! All the postal service really needs are some of the reforms such as are embodied in H.R.4, to help it do a better job for the American public, and also provide postal employees and their unions with an equitable and responsible system of collective bargaining.

Let us examine the reasoning of the Kappel Commission whose recommendations form the basis of H.R.11750. The Commission's recommendation that the Post Office Department be removed from the President's Cabinet and reorganized as a non-profit, government-owned corporation was a businessman's recommendation which would have natural appeal to the present Administration, and a very special appeal to the newly-appointed Postmaster General Winton M. Blount, formerly president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, as Richard J. Willey related in his article in the Spring 1969 issue of Public Interest.

It also had appeal to Congressmen and Senators who interpreted it as a "rational" solution to the postal problems that have been plaguing them and the Congress for years, we add. We are not suggesting they are trying to "get out from under." But, we know it simply will not operate in the dream-like way they think it will.

For example, we say that the claim, made by sponsors of the postal corporation and other proponents of H.R.11750, in speaking to the unions and employees, that "You can't lose—you'll keep what you have and go upward from there" is medicine we simply cannot swallow.

It's sugar-coated, even though it can be explained so logically and sincerely. It's simply bait on the hook, just waiting for us to bite, and we'll tell you why.

First, "You are assured of retaining what you have," as has been stated by Postmaster General Blount, members of his staff and others who have spoken in favor of the postal corporation is not compatible with "would be determined by collective bargaining."

As the collective bargaining representative for the nation's 304,000 postal clerks, I suppose it could be possible (although not probable) we may want to trade away something we already have. However, what is most important, is that we may be forced into a position where we have to give up something we already have acquired for the benefit of our members. We must not be naive about something as important as the bargaining relationship which would exist within the postal service corporation concept. We could very easily be forced into a dilemma of deciding between the lesser of two evils. Postal Management has already told us that it will be very "hard-nosed" at the bargaining table.

Now, please don't misunderstand; we are not saying here and now that we would mind this—IF there would be equality at the bargaining table. And we think, very definitely, that there would not be !

The first official announcement of the position of the United Federation of Postal Clerks on the subject of the Postal Service Corporation was enunciated by our union's national president, Francis S. Filbey, on May 28 of this year, when he stated:

> "Nobody, not the President, not the Postmaster General, nor the postal unions, can guarantee that the 'total postal reform' proposed by H.R.11750 will really achieve all the rosy results predicted.

"As far as postal clerks are concerned, we are not impressed with the Postmaster General's promise that the proposed new law will give us extensive bargaining rights and binding arbitration of deadlocked negotiations—but not the right to strike ! At first blush it sounds persuasive; but we don't fancy the prospect of bargaining for wage increases that will be paid out of postal rate increases while an embittered public watches over our shoulders. We don't fancy the idea of sitting naked at the bargaining table without the ultimate right to withhold our labor !

"We don't fancy the idea of being semi-private employees without the right to participate politically in the life of our country. In fact, the continuation of our 'second-class' political status would be as bothersome to me as would the inability to strike.

"The United Federation of Postal Clerks wants better service for the public as much or more than the public wants it. We certainly want capital improvements even more than the public wants them. And we certainly want better working conditions and better wages at least the equal of similar jobs in private industry.

"We think it is possible to achieve these goals through legislative reform within the existing framework and without violence to the concept of public service. But if the Congress in its wisdom should decree otherwise, it must face the certainty that postal employees will demand the right to strike and the right to political freedom as a birthright and as a matter of fundamental labor-management equity !"

President Filbey's May 28 statement on the proposed postal corporation was a reflection of the United Federation of Postal Clerks' resolution adopted at our last national convention in August 1968. This resolution expresses the official position of our union as ordered by 1500 delegates at our 1968 convention. The text of this resolution is included in this part of our statement for the information of this Committee.

RESOLUTION APPROVED BY NATIONAL CONVENTION
UNITED FEDERATION OF POSTAL CLERKS (AFL-CIO)
AUGUST 15, 1968--MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

WHEREAS: The President's Commission on Postal Organization has recognized in its report that the United States Post Office facesa crisis, that each year it slips further behind the rest of the economy in service, in efficiency and meeting its responsibility as an employer, and

WHEREAS: It is noted that the Commission has included some laudable objectives, all of which, including the improved service desires, are possible within the existing organization structure of the Post Office Department, and

WHEREAS: there is no assurance that the history of establishing a rate structure for services by corporations in the private sector will not be repeated as the corporation approaches the rate establishing procedure contemplated and, therefore, there is justifiable apprehension that in the language of the report postal rates might be contingent upon cost of service and value to those served, and

WHEREAS: the Commission's recommendation with regard to the employe-management regulations and the limited negotiating opportunities suggests, but does not guarantee, binding third-party arbitration, and

WHEREAS: the President's Commission has seen fit to recommend that postal employes be subject to bargaining for wages and working conditions similar to those in the private sector, it has not seen fit to provide for postal employes the weapons to secure those benefits at the bargaining table, therefore be it

RESOLVED: That this convention of the UFPC go on record as opposing and directing its officers to oppose any transfer of the Post Office Department to a postal corporation, unless

1. The necessary tools, including the right to strike, available to employes in the private sector, be provided for postal employes in the corporation.

2. Guarantees of binding third-party arbitration be included in the labor-management procedures established for the corporation.

3. Legislative guarantees be given to the general public of the United States that the present quality and extent of Postal Service will not only be maintained but improved, regardless of whether or not such service would be a profitable operation, such requirement be predicated on the concept that the first purpose of the Post Office, whether administered under a Cabinet Officer or corporation, is to provide for service to all of the citizens of the United States without regard to their geographic location, their accessibility to postal plant operation, or the economic status of the patrons served.

And Mr. Chairman and Members of this distinguished Committee, we have also added a 4th prerequisite to any possible consideration of the Postal Corporation concept by the United Federation of Postal Clerks, namely; insistence that postal clerks and other postal employees be restored to "First-Class" citizenship and be given complete unrestricted political freedom. We want to be "unhatched" from the Hatch Political Activities Act of August 2, 1939.

Our major objection to H.R.11750 must be in relation to portions of "Chapter 8—PERSONNEL". The provisions of this Chapter are totally unacceptable to the United Federation of Postal Clerks, and certainly are in marked contrast to Chapter 47 of Title VII in the Postal Reform legislation, H.R.4, and S.309 sponsored by Senator Ralph Yarborough. The collective bargaining proposed in H.R. 4 and S. 309 for postal employee unions is much more realistic and responsive to the collective bargaining needs of postal employee unions than provisions of the H.R. 11750 corporation proposal.

Sections 807-808, inclusive, of H.R.11750, propose to bring postal employees and their unions under the provisions of the (Taft-Hartley) Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended in Section 807. We will also be included under the (Landrum-Griffin) Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, "to the extent not inconsistent with the provisions of this Title," for governing labor-management relations in a new postal service proposed by H.R.11750.

Section 808 provides procedures including a totally inadequate and unacceptable form of binding arbitration for adjusting disputes between labor and management in the Postal Service, including such matters as questions of interpretation or application of collective bargaining agreements, and the settlement of impasses in negotiations between the parties.

Section 809 establishes a "Postal Disputes Panel" composed of nine members, three of whom are to be appointed by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Director, three by the American Arbitration Association and three by the other six. Also included in section 9 (h) of the bill is the provision amending the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, so as to exclude the new postal service from the exemption for Government Corporations which is presently contained in that Act.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, when we were engaged in drafting legislation to provide an effective system of collective bargaining and labor-management relations in the postal service, we gave consideration to utilizing the framework of the National Labor Relations Act for this purpose. We determined, however, that the collective bargaining framework sanctioned and fostered under the Act was very different from the system of collective negotiations that presently prevail in the Federal and Postal Service. To strengthen the existing system, we decided to draft legislation specifically appropriate for the Postal Service, rather than try to utilize the system provided for under the National Labor Relations Act.

Senator Ralph Yarborough introduced S.309 earlier this year which reflects the Federation's proposals for labor-management relations and collective bargaining in the postal service. Since that time eight other United States Senators have joined with Senator Yarborough in sponsoring S.309, including Senators Fred Harris, William W. Proxmire, Frank E. Moss, James B. Allen, Gaylord Nelson, Hugh Scott, Richard S. Schweiker, and Frank Church. I am sure it will interest the Committee to know that almost 100 members of the Senate and House so far in the 91st Congress have co-sponsored postal employee labor-management relations legislation similar to S.309 and companion bill H.R.4803 in the House. The provisions in Chapter 47 of H.R. 4, the postal reform bill in the House of Representatives, are similar to S. 309 and H.R. 4803.

Referring again to the main thrust of sections 807-809 of H.R.11750, it appears to us that the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts are mechanisms to deal with problems and disputes in labor-management relations in the private sector and really are inappropriate to deal with such problems and disputes in the postal service as indicated by most provisions of these Acts.

The Taft-Hartley Act, for example, provides for unit determinations that could be very disruptive of the pattern of organization and collective bargaining that has developed over the years in the Postal Service, and that had been given strong impetus by Executive Order 10988. Regardless of the many difficulties and deficiences that exist in connection with the administration of that Order, there is no question that the Order itself has undoubtedly given strong and effective bargaining in the Postal Service. The postal labor-management and collective bargaining recognition provided in S.309, are basically concerned with extensions of Executive Order 10988, and this is a most important reason why we support postal reform legislation.

Similar observations appear to be appropriate with respect to the applicability of unfair labor practice provisions and the provisions applicable to selection of bargaining representatives contained in the Taft-Hartley Act. These provisions either have no application to, or do not deal with, situations that arise in government or quasi-government employment such as would exist in the new postal service.

Also, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, in the absence of evidence of any abuses, for example, in the internal management of government unions, or in the election of officers of such unions, or the administration of trusteeships over local units of such unions, there likewise appears to be little justification for subjecting our unions to all of the detailed requirements and prohibitions contained in the Landrum-Griffin Act.

However, in our opinion, the principal difficulty in applying the provisions of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts to labor-management relations in a governmental or quasi-governmental agency, such as the new postal service, lies in the fact that these Acts pre-suppose the availability of the strike as the last-resort mechanism for equalizing the bargaining power of labor with that of management.

This mechanism, of course, simply does not exist in government service, and undoubtedly would not exist in quasi-governmental instrumentality that would have charge of administering the postal service, notwithstanding the ambiguity surrounding this question growing out of the language contained in section 209 of H.R.11750. There is a possibility, of course, that selective provisions of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts could appropriately be made applicable to the new postal service. However, this would require most careful and detailed study and analysis. In my opinion, however, Mr. Chairman, the blunderbuss way in which H.R.11750 proposes to bring postal employees under these Acts simply will not work and could work great injustices upon our postal employees, as well as their respective postal unions.

In my judgment, analysis of the labor-management relations provisions of H.R.11750 makes clear that the Act provides a veritable hodge-podge of rights and duties, benefits and liabilities and informal and ritualistic procedures to govern labor-management relations in the so-called new Postal Service. That this should be the case is particularly striking, in view of the fact that there are in existence other government-owned instrumentalities, such as the TVA and The Bonneville Administration which provide somewhat more meaningful patterns for labor-management relations in government corporations which could have been used for the new Postal Service.

The important thing we see, in regard to H.R.11750, is that neither in the bill itself, nor in the analysis of the bill, nor the message of the President submitting the legislation to Congress is there any explanation given as to why needed reforms in operation of the Post Office Department could not be achieved within the existing framework of that Department. Various proposals for such changes which are clearly preferable to those proposed in the corporation bill, H.R. 11750, are included in the reform bill, H.R.4, and would provide for modernization of the existing postal establishment, to provide for efficient and economical postal service, and to improve employee-management relations in the postal service.

Without compulsory arbitration and the right to strike, in addition to the many other obvious failings of the proposed employee and union sections in Chapter 8, of H.R. 11750, is it any wonder we endorse, in lieu of the corporation labor-management provisions, legislation such as S. 309 to provide postal workers and their unions with true collective bargaining and recognition?

Is it any wonder, we prefer the Congress of the United States to continue legislating in the areas of wages and fringe benefits rather than the postal worker and his union being left naked at the bargaining table as proposed by the "Postal Service Act," H.R.11750, which would:

(1) Take postal employees out from under the protection of the Civil Service System and establish a different and questionable new system of postal service employment.

(2) Place wages, annual and sick leave, life insurance and health benefit programs, as well as all other "bread and butter" issues on a collective bargaining table at which postal workers and their unions would not (and never could) set down at as an "equal" with management and most important, without ANY of the accepted bargaining weapons such as the right to withhold its labor and compulsory arbitration.

The disputes settlement procedure of H.R.11750, as spelled out in Section 808, does not and will not provide satisfactory resolution of disputes, as far as the United Federation of Postal Clerks is concerned. The disputes settlement procedure would permit either party in the case of a collective bargaining impasse to request that the matter be referred to a permanent nine-member "Postal Disputes Panel." However, the Panel may "refrain from action pending further negotiation." As a result, the parties would have to go back to the bargaining table.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, we are totally in favor of bargaining to finality, of course; so, in good faith, with the issue at impasse remaining unchanged, we would bargain to finality again, and again. But there must come a time when the impasse must be recognized as such. Frankly, we have been deadlocked with the Post Office Department on many, many occasions in the past, and I assume will continue to be in the future, without any final resolution. And I can assure you that this is a most fruitless, exasperating, discouraging and unrewarding experience.

According to Section 808, the Panel can "take action" by prescribing: (1) mediation of "any or all of the issues" by itself or by a designated mediation panel; (2) factfinding of any or all of the issues by itself or a designated factfinding panel, or (3) recommendations on any or all of the issues by itself or a designated panel.

We have some most serious and disturbing questions about how these functional panels would be chosen and what in fact is meant by "the Panel", because Section 809 explains that with respect to each dispute there will be designated a 3-member panel which shall act in the name of "Postal Disputes Panel." The members of the three-member panel are to be "chosen in such manner as to preclude advanced knowledge of its membership by either the postal service or the bargaining agent."

We ask, would the chairman choose them ? Would they be chosen by ballot ? Or by telephone conference, as the Panel members would probably be geographically scattered, serving part-time because the Panel's jurisdiction would apply to "disputes or impasses arising in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement" (Section 808 c), which negotiation would take place at most once a year, and probably every two years.

Also, the chairman of the Panel would play a critical role in the handling of each dispute, especially if he chooses the three-member panel "which shall act with respect to each dispute." Would the three-member panel have the dispute referred to it at the very beginning, before even the decision is made to take action or refrain from action. Probably so, we think. Or would the nine-member Panel assemble, to dismiss six of its number ?

We cannot help but conclude that the Panel would definitely be a part of the management power structure. Former Postmaster General John A. Gronouski shared our conclusion on this point in a statement to the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on July 22, 1969, when he said that with Section 808 remaining as it is he could not support H.R.11750 "for the simple reason that however impartially the disputes panel is chosen, the postal workers and their leaders will probably regard it as a part of management."

Surely the persons named to the Panel would be erudite, just and honorable men. But such men do have orientations and philosophies. Former United Nations Ambassador, Justice of the Supreme Court, and Secretary of Labor, Arthur Goldberg, as well as University of Chicago Economics Professor Milton Friedman, are erudite, just and honorable men; however their orientation and philosophies, which would guide their actions were they designated as members of the Panel, are considerably different.

To consider further the disputes handling procedure as prescribed in Section 808, the Panel, having already taken action which could have been critical in solving the dispute through mediation, factfinding or recommendation, if the impasse still exists "shall notify the parties whether it will take jurisdiction over any or all of the issues in dispute." It seems to us that considerable jurisdiction has already been taken !

Another serious question is concerned with the failure of the Panel to take jurisdiction which means a continuation of the status quo, which is defined to mean "a continuation of the relevant practice." We suggest, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, that this would be another tremendous and continuing victory for management ! If there was ever a history of relevant practices developed over time, under a government management rights doctrine —practices that need changing—it is in the Post Office Department !

If the Panel takes jurisdiction it "may recommend to the parties ways and means by which the parties may seek agreement." The Panel already did this through specific ways and means—mediation, factfinding or recommendations. Would these ways and means be in the form of strong suggestions or subtle ultimatums. The composition and operation of the Panel, both highly uncertain variables, would determine this.

If the parties continue to fail to reach agreement, the Panel has another opportunity to "relinquish jurisdiction."

The status quo, which has built into it only what management has agreed to in the past, would prevail.

Another alternative available to the Panel is to refer the matter to arbitration, and, at the same time, "frame the language of the issue or issues to be arbitrated." The postal employee union cannot call upon arbitration as a matter of right; that is, the judgment of a third party as a solution to a bargaining impasse. Arbitration may finally be permitted as a last attempt, but this would be dependent on the grace and good judgment of the three-member Panel ONLY, after a long, frustrating and repetitive process of bargaining to finality.

As former Postmaster General Gronouski said in his statement before you, "The procedure established through the Disputes Panel clearly denies the postal worker and his union the right to demand binding arbitration as a matter of right. In short, the worker is denied an ultimate weapon in those cases when collective bargaining, mediation and factfinding fail to provide an answer to dispute."

Binding arbitration should be available at the request of either party. Certainly, the parties should bargain long and hard. But, having done this, what else is there to do in the face of continuing impasse but call upon a mutually acceptable third party to decide the matter. We accept this procedure, Mr. Chairman, in the labor-management and collective bargaining procedures provided in S. 309 and the postal reform bill, H.R.4, and we sincerely believe that either party, labor or management, should be able to independently introduce arbitration as the means of final settlement. However, and obviously, H.R. 11750 does not provide this basic and absolute need to accomplish true and equitable collective bargaining.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we also have very strong and serious disagreement with the language in Section 805 of H.R.11750, entitled, "Policy on Compensation and Benefits." In fact, the language contained therein would appear to open the door to the subversion of the entire salary and benefits "package" which Congress has developed over the years for postal employees. Paragraph 805, states,"It shall be the policy of the postal service to maintain compensation and benefits for all employees on a standard of comparability to the compensation and benefits paid for comparable levels of work in the non-Federal sectors of the economy." The change from current policy is so obvious it is not really proper to even call it a "sleeper," but if there is one it is the word "non-Federal." Quite frankly, we are surprised that no one has yet, in the extensive hearings which have already been held, directed attention and discussion to this reference which appears to us as an attempted far-reaching change in policy.

According to current policy, prescribed by the "Salary Reform Act of 1962," postal employees, as well as other Federal employees are to achieve and maintain salary comparability "with private enterprise salary rates for the same levels of work."

Making postal employee salaries and benefits comparable to those attached to comparable levels of work in the non-Federal sectors could certainly lead to severe erosion and deterioration of those salaries and benefits. The point I am making, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, is that "non-Federal" could bring onto the comparability scene nine million state and local government employees. Unfortunately, many of the state and local government employees are themselves struggling to achieve a compensation and benefits package enticing enough to keep them in their jobs, or if they do not have job mobility, remunerative enough to keep them above subsistence.

Using their salaries and benefits in the computation of "comparability" in our opinion would be a severe backward step. Certainly such a policy would retard upward movement and serve as a drag to the postal employee. The tendency would be for state and local government salaries and benefits to lead; although much more properly the Federal Government should demonstrate leadership, not only to state and local governments but to private industry as well.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we shudder to think of what this would do to the already distorted, misinterpreted and misapplied comparability process. Obviously, additional jobs, from the state and local government portions of the non-Federal sectors, would have to be selected and added to the "mix". Some person or persons instrumental in the original drafting of the bill certainly must attach considerable significance to this language and policy change, and we consider this the real "sleeper" within Section 805 of H.R.11750.

In its implementation there had to be a belief that its effect, when the state and local jobs are properly "weighted", will not be great enough to make the result intolerable. The change in language obviously was deliberate and certainly must reflect some reasoning or intent. It is our sincere hope that any need for such a change will be made academic with the passage of H.R.4, in preference to H.R.11750.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we would like to touch briefly on another item that has been receiving considerable recognition in the public press, as well as by Postmaster General Blount and other persons speaking in favor of the Postal Corporation during recent hearings and this the question of the "Union Shop" under the proposed Postal Service Act. We believe it is important, in this regard, to sharply differentiate between what would be possible under a Postal Service Act and what would be permitted, insofar as the "Union Shop" is concerned. It is one thing to say that such an item would be subject to the collective bargaining process under H.R.11750, but quite another to say that it would have even a prayer of being negotiated through the collective bargaining process under the Postal Service Corporation.

Certainly, the July-August 1969 edition of Postal Life, the company organ of the Post Office Department which is mailed to each and every one of the 750,000 postal employees, deliberately distorted the possibility of negotiating a union shop under the proposed corporation act.

On page 11 of the Department's publication, the question was asked, "Will the union shop be permitted?" The answer was--"Yes." Once again, it is up to the collective bargaining process, but, of course, it will be subject to state laws governing such matters." This type of propaganda, now directed to the captive audience of 750,000 postal employees, would lead the average postal worker to believe that the proposed Postal Service Act would automatically provide the "Union Shop".

Of course, nothing is further from the truth, and the answer really should have started off by stating, NO, and then gone on to say, "unless your union, which does not have the compulsory arbitration weapon let alone the right to strike, can negotiate it through the collective bargaining process." This is a typical example of what we mean when we say that "We would be naked at the bargaining table" without the right to strike, and certainly without even the right of compulsory arbitration on the main questions with which our union is concerned.

If we need anything further to convince us that, at least the present Administration which is proposing the Postal Corporation Act would never agree to the union shop for employee unions within the Postal Service, all we have to do is refer to the statement by Dr. Arthur F. Burns, Counselor to President Richard M. Nixon, who responded to a complaint by the National Right-to-Work Committee that the Administration might agree to a union shop in the expected, but often delayed, labor-management Executive Order of the President. Dr. Burns reassured the National Right-to-Work Committee, on behalf of President Richard M. Nixon, that, "Certainly, each employee of the Executive Branch of the Federal Government must have the right, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, to form, join, and assist the labor organization or refrain from any such activity." (emphasis ours)

We respectfully suggest that with the background of Postmaster General Winton M. Blount as the immediate past president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which has historically and agressively opposed the "union shop" in private industry and supported the so-called "Right-to-Work" statutes in some states of this great country, that certainly and realistically postal employee unions could have no expectation or hope that a "union shop" would be negotiated under a Postal Service Corporation which has been proposed by this Administration.

In the course of these hearings on Postal Reform, increased mechanization in a new structure has been advanced as an answer to what is thought to be a relatively low productivity rate of postal service. We maintain that mechanization is not only answerable through a postal corporation, as the Kappel Commission Report suggests, but needed mechanization can as well be introduced and utilized within the "Postal Reform" framework which would be established by legislation similar to H.R. 4, with amendments.

The Kappel Commission Report reveals (Vol.1, Appendix C, p.115) that there is great difficulty in measuring productivity in the Postal Service. It states that of the two productivity indexes used, one differs by more than 100 per cent from the other, to "highlight the problems of measuring productivity in the post office." Quality-of-service changes cannot be identified and excluded. "It is sufficient to say that we have indications of productivity performance in the post office, but no more."

The Report relates further that productivity can be improved through mechanization and through leveling the peak load. "We should like to emphasize, however, that there is a strong concensus that mechanization is not a panacea for the postal productivity problem. (emphasis ours) It should be only one facet of a multi-pronged effort, another element of which would be improvement in management and management technicques." (Vol.1, p.138)

We remind you that productivity increases are relatively difficult to achieve in a labor-intensive industry. Further, in comparison with the trade, finance and service sectors of the economy, "the performance of the post office is favorable." Using one of the two indexes considered by the Kappel Commission, post office productivity is greater than that of both the finance and service sectors of the economy.

As examples of kinds of mechanization in the post office which fall short of expectations and of common but naive conceptions we consider briefly the letter-sorting machine and the optical scanner, the former of which utilizes 12 keyboard operators and the latter of which replaces the operators. The standard literature states that the letter-sorting machine can sort at speeds up to 36,000 letters per hour. HOWEVER, when allowances are made for down time, unemployed time, and machine cleanout, and output is divided by a full complement of workers required to utilize the machine, the machine distribution rate is approximately 25 pieces per minute per employee. We are convinced, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, that our postal clerks distributing mail manually can do as well—and do without this $125,000 piece of equipment.

The optical scanner, or the optical character reader, as it is officially called, is designed to scan the envelope, find the address block, single out and extract the relevant information which is sent to a directory, which in turn sends it to a central electronic logic unit which identifies the proper distribution bin to which the letter is directed by the letter-sorting machine to which the scanner is attached. All this is to be done at the machine's speed of 36,000 pieces per hour, using no operators, only supervisory and auxiliary personnel.

However, the scanner can "read" only machine-printed mail so there MUST be a pre-sort. Then, its reading ability is limited by degraded print, unusual address block formats, misplaced inserts, patterned and colored backgrounds, and erroneous and non-standard spellings and abbreviations. We have been advised that the net result is that only approximately 25 per cent of the machine printed pre-sorted mail is machine readable ! As a matter of fact, a total of ONLY ten optical scanners have been declared to be operational in eight installations by the Post Office Department.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, in further challenge to H.R.11750, and the Postal Corporation concept, let us examine the reasoning of the Kappel Commission, which concluded that the Postal Service should be run more like a business. In fact, it concluded that piece-meal changes in the present structure would not be effective enough to do the reform job thought necessary. The Commission concluded that the existing problems and their causes were inherent in the postal service's departmental structure, that a wholesale change, a complete reorganization, was necessary.

Think for a moment of the subtle psychology applied here. Postal problems are being attributed to the organization form; no blame has to be placed on postal officials or employees, or even the Congress. The structure is to blame, not the people who guide it or work in it.

We point out, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, that in the business-versus-government-department controversy, the criteria of each should be examined. The businessman is concerned with efficiency, economy and productivity, as is the current Post Office Department, but the businessman must always place them first and foremost. "Service" can be expressed only in terms of dollars, a profit. According to the businessman's rule of thumb, a service will be offered only as long as it covers its marginal or incremental cost.

And this is a very important point which second and third class mailers recognize, we feel sure. It can be stated that the Postal Service has a vast structure primarily for the purpose of delivering first class mail. Beyond this mission, the fixed assets and organizational structure—the institution—can be used to handle other classes of mail on an incremental cost coverage basis. In other words, as long as incremental or marginal cost is covered by incremental or marginal revenue, the service is considered to be "paid for." This is the businessman's approach, the "economic man" concept. Its application in the postal service, in typical businessman style, will extend the subsidization of second and third class mailers by permitting the first class mail users to pay for the Postal Service's fixed or institutional costs. SOUND BUSINESS?—WE THINK NOT!

Further, to the degree that second and third class rates would be increased, the smaller, the less efficient, the marginal firm would be driven out of business. So, the large mailers can't lose. They can continue to benefit greatly from rates which do not make them pay for the fixed, or even all the variable costs related to servicing of their mail; or, they can watch their competition wither away under the financial strain of increased mailing rates.

We are not attempting to propose a solution, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee. We do not believe it is our responsiblity to do so. Someone else is caught on the horns of this dilemma. It has been the Congress, and we sincerely and respectfully believe it should continue to be the Congress.

Within the Department and agency structure, decisions are made in Congress and the Executive Branch by persons who must consider economic as well as political criteria. Primary consideration necessarily must, and rightly so, be given to the welfare of the country as a whole, even though the economic cost may be great. In a democracy, varied and differing interests of groups and individuals must be collectively represented, many times with very inefficient results from an economic or businessman's point of view.

One need only look at the loopholes of tax legislation and the considerable controversy plaguing the Congress, the Administration, as well as the citizens of this great country for stark recognition of this fact. As Mr. Richard J. Willey relates in his previously mentioned article (and its his comment) that because partisan loyalty is often at least as important as expertise in the administration of public policy, many department and agency appointments remain in the political realm. In summary, a department cannot be administered like a business because, in true democratic tradition, national, group and partisan interests often take realistic and practical precedence over questions of economy and expertise.

The critical question is: Should the Postal Service be run as a business? The Kappel Commission thinks so, but its composition, mostly businessmen, would have a built-in disposition to so conclude. Some witnesses appearing in these hearings think so, but they applied mainly economic criteria.

If they are mistaken and the Post Office does not perform essentially a business function, then a department structure is the proper one, despite inherent deficiencies. It is true that many presumed deficiencies appear to be something else when seen from a non-businessman's point of view. For example, fantastic billion dollar "deficits" are accepted features of Departments and agencies within Government. Yet the so-called "deficit" is approximately 1 billion dollars within the Post Office Department, approximately half of which is considered not as a deficit item but rather as a public service item. We suggest by comparsion that the Post Office Department provides good service to the American public at a minimum or nominal cost.

The United Federation of Postal Clerks as a service organization sincerely and honestly believes that the Postal Service should not be run as a profit-making or even as a break-even business. Historically the Congress has reaffirmed the service nature of the Post Office Department's mission. Witness after witness parading to this table to appear before you has recognized this constitutionally provided service role for the Post Office Department. Yet there were some who subordinated it to a calculating businessman's judgment.

We maintain that with a corporate-type businessman at the helm, there would not be adequate guarantees established or implemented that traditional and needed service would be maintained at all in some cases, or at reasonable cost in others. The phrases in H.R. 11750 relative to service such as "as it may deem appropriate" (Section 202), "as nearly as practicable" (Section 401,a.), and "consistent with reasonable economies of postal operations" would give a businessman, flanked by his cost-and-revenue curve economists, far too much latitude.

Some people would be hurt. The public would be hurt. And we believe that the public and the American people, in general, who always let you know when their Postal Service is impaired, restrained, or withdrawn, should be the prime concern in this matter.

Much has been written about dissatisfaction with the Postal Service—by mailers who have much at stake, we must add. How much dissatisfaction there really is we don't know. We are not suggesting the "Big Lie" technique is being applied—that is, tell people something often enough and they will begin to believe it—but we do believe that most citizens would not be preoccupied, or even think about, Postal Service problems. As one distinguished Member of your Committee related, constituents in his district are writing to him, asking him what Postal Service problems are being referred to in the newspaper and magazine articles.

Basically, the citizens of this country want their rights and interests in postal matters protected. In something as important as this, in something as important to the commercial, financial and personal interests of all the people, we ask you now—who is the best guardian of these interests, the Congress, with its traditional responsibilities—or a business corporation, with its necessary and well-known motivations?

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we believe it is also important to note that the Kappel Commission specifically recognized three general areas which opponents of the transfer of postal management to Government corporation might base their opposition on. We believe these three points are important enough to be included in our statement at this point, and to make certain they are brought directly to the attention of all Members of this distinguished Committee. These references are taken from the Kappel Commission Report (Vol. 1, pages 201-202).

(1) Reduced Congressional Control. The Goverment Corporation would by design and objective be economically self-sufficient. It would be free to make independent decisions concerning facilities, appointments, details of service, and use of expenditures. In the hands of a strong manager and Policy Board, the Government Corporation could act and exercise its power with very little Congressional restraint. The ultimate Congressional power to change the charter or to abolish the Corporation would be extremely difficult to employ, especially in the face of the power and influence that the Corporation might enjoy.

(2) Reluctance to Accept Economic Influence. The corporate form implies the view that economic criteria should weigh heavily in operation of the postal service in the public interest. Even though provision could be made for subsidy and special services for certain classes of users, and though provision could be made by policy for maintaining "uneconomic" services, economic criteria would weigh more heavily than at present in designing services and rates and committing resources. It would be very difficult to continue to pay a large part of the cost of Postal Service from general revenues as is done at present. Opponents might argue that the Postal Service is a Government service that should not be governed as strongly by economic standards.

(3) Risk to Individual Interests. Formation of a Government Corporation to run the postal system under only general Congressional review could mean that the links of major users to Congress would be less direct, that employee organizations would relinquish their strong bonds with Congress, and that members of Congress would give up strong influence over local postal matters. These changes would mean risks; the changes would entail the possibility of personal losses to some parties in the system; the offsetting advantages to these parties might be less clear and certain. Thus, these parties might be inclined to resist change to the corporate form.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we must also indicate considerable concern regarding those who would have us accept the postal corporation on the premise that we would be able to improve the economic, financial and "fringe benefit" lot of our Postal Clerk membership. Certainly the events of the past few months when spokesmen for this Administration have testified on numerous ocassions before this Committee as well as subcommittees of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service concerning employee legislation, leave us completely void of any confidence that if the present postal administers were a part of the Postal Corporation Board of Directors or Disputes Panel that we would be able to improve these areas of economic status for our membership and their families.

Spokesmen for this Administration, which has proposed the Postal Corporation Act, H.R. 11750, testified vigorously and aggressively in April before the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Postal Operations in complete and total opposition to H.R. 4803 and the establishment of Postal Employee Labor-Management Relations by law. Subsequently, spokesmen for the Administration have testified in opposition to the nominal employee benefits provided in H.R. 9825, the retirement legislation which last week was approved by the House of Representatives.

Spokesmen and top officials for this Administration have testified before the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and the other body in opposition to any increase in the Government's contribution to the Federal employee health benefit plans.

Certainly the testimony by Postmaster General Winton M. Blount, and that of Civil Service Commissioner Robert E. Hampton as well as Deputy Director of the Bureau of the Budget Phillip L. Hughes before the House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee on Compensation on June 16-17, confirmed our complete lack of confidence in this Administration, including the Postal Administration, to equitably and currently adjust Postal Clerks' and other postal workers' salaries consistent with demonistrated need and equity. I am sure some Members of this Committee are aware Postmaster General Blount opposed any salary increase for postal workers until at least July, 1970; opposed any increase in the 10 percent night differential payment for postal employees even though the 10 percent differential was enacted in 1928, more than 40 years ago; opposed shortening of the period of service necessary to reach the highest pay step in the postal workers' salary levels as well as any additional salary recognition for longevity purposes.

Mr. Chairman, in our opinion, there can be only one of two reasons why this Postal Administration as well as the Nixon Administration, generally, have opposed all beneficial employee legislation during this First Session of the 91st Congress. This very Administration which is so aggressively seeking the enactment of H.R. 11750 and promising postal employees considerable improvements in wages, fringe benefits, and working conditions through such a corporation could be vigorously opposing Congressional action on pending employee benefit legislation as a club over our heads to force through the Postal Corporation concept. If this actually is the case, we can only assure this Administration and officials of the Post Office Department that they certainly do not understand or want to understand the thinking of either our 304,000 postal clerks throughout the country or that of the leadership of the United Federation of Postal Clerks representing the largest group of postal employees within the postal establishment.

However, if this is not the reason why the present Administration is so vigorously opposing any and all employees' salary or fringe benefit legislation, then the only other possible answer is, that this Administration does not believe there is any need to improve the wages or fringe benefits or even working conditions of postal employees. Therefore, this is the real reason why spokesmen for the Administration have been vigorously and continuing opposing the enactment of any and all employee legislation by this Congress.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, obviously and realistically, the United Federation of Postal Clerks cannot and will not accept either of these reasons for not improving the collective well-being of the postal clerk and all other postal workers. If there is any way to solidify our ranks in opposition to the postal corporation concept—if any such solidification is necessary—all the Post Office Department and the Nixon Administration have to do is to continue doing everything possible to oppose beneficial employee legislation pending before this Congress. Let there be no mistake, if Administration pressures should continue or accelerate in opposition to our legislative program in the 91st Congress, they certainly may be assured our opposition will equally accelerate and become more aggressive in our efforts to defeat the postal corporation recommendation as proposed by President Richard M. Nixon and Postmaster General Winton M. Blount.

The United Federation of Postal Clerks, Mr. Chairman, was the last postal employee organization to officially announce its opposition to the postal corporation concept as proposed in early May. Our union did not take this position until June 19, as we refrained from arbitrarily opposing the postal corporation concept in order that we might do the following things: (1) Carefully examine the legislative proposal. (2) Consider testimony by the Post Office Department before this distinguished Committee as well as Subcommittees of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. (3) Afford the Post Office Department officials and other proponents of the postal corporation concept an opportunity to meet with us and explain their proposition in detail as well as permit us an opportunity to discuss alternate proposals. (4) Observe and analyze the reaction of the Post Office Department to our own legislative program in the area of salary adjustments for postal clerks.

It was only after each of these endeavors was accomplished as well as discussing the legislation with our legal counsel, did we conclude that we must actively oppose enactment of H.R. 11750.

Our union opposes the postal corporation concept as outlined in H.R. 11750 for the following reasons: (1) It does not meet the criteria established by our National Convention in August, 1968— in that it does not propose that postal employees be grant the right to strike. (2) It does not grant the United Federation of Postal Clerks the right to binding arbitration on our own initiative. (3) It does not propose that we be given true comparability both in the area of wages and fringe benefits with employees in the private sector prior to becoming employees of the postal corporation.

We are also opposed to H.R. 11750 because it would definitely link pay increases to postal rate increases, thus making postal employees the only large group of Federal employees whose wages and fringe benefits would depend upon the ability of the corporation to pay from receipts or force the American public to pay increased fees for mail service. Also contributing to our decision to oppose H.R. 11750 was the failure of the Postmaster General to give any consideration to the fact that even after the proposed meager 4.1% pay increase which postal clerks received as of July 12, 1969, that we are still more than $800 behind our counterparts in the private sector as of 13 months earlier in June of 1968, to say nothing of the astronomical skyrocketing in the cost of living which has occurred since June, 1968, 7.0 percent according to the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index for September 1969.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, and after due and careful consideration of H.R. 11750, as well as H.R.4, the United Federation of Postal Clerks reaffirms its endorsement of postal reform legislation similar to H.R. 4, with amendments, and emphatically and categorically opposes the enactment of H.R.11750 or any similar postal corporation act.

As I am sure you have noted, the main thrust of our testimony has been in opposition to the postal corporation as outlined in H.R.11750; although we do refer to our support of the postal modernization and reform legislation similar to H.R.4, as we move through our statement. We honestly believe that any and all "postal reform" necessary can be accomplished within the existing Post Office Department structure and appropriate Congressional action on related legislation.

Mr. Chairman, as we conclude this statement, we must propose that this Committee, in drafting postal modernization and reform legislation, insist that appropriate language be included requiring the Postmaster General in making appointments to vacant postmaster and rural letter carrier positions to give first precedence for such appointments to career employees within the post office where such vacancies occur.

We hope this Committee will recognize that approximately 97 per cent of all postal clerks start and finish their employment (after 30 or 40 years) in the same pay level. There are comparatively few opportunities to aspire to more responsible and better paying positions within the postal service, and therefore clerks and other qualified career postal employees should be given the first opportunity for appointment to vacant postmaster and rural letter carrier positions within their respective post offices.

We believe, and hope you do also, that postal reform and modernization within the postal service would be meaningless and totally unrealistic if it does not provide for postal employees and their unions to have recognition, collective bargaining and productive labor-management relations with postal management through Federal statute. It is our sincere hope this Committee will include the provisions of S. 309 in legislation resulting from these hearings and the Senate and Congress will subsequently enact postal modernization and reform within the existing post office Department structure.

We regret it has been necessary to acquaint the Members of the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with our firm opposition to the postal corporation scheme by referring to H.R.11750, and our support of postal modernization and reform as proposed in H.R. 4, with substantive amendments—both pieces of legislation being introduced in the other body. However, we believe this was the best possible approach under the circumstances, with no specific legislation proposing similar postal reorganization plans pending before this distinguished Committee.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, the United Federation of Postal Clerks is particularly appreciative that NO postal corporation bill similar to H.R.11750 has been sponsored in the United States Senate by a Member of this Committee, and I don't believe by any other Member of the United States Senate either. It is our sincere hope that NO such postal corporation bill will be proposed by this Committee, but rather total modernization and reform within the existing Department establishment will result from the tremendous hearings and labor of this respected Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, for your patience and most kind consideration of our detailed and comprehensive statement. President Filbey and I will be very happy to respond to any and all questions which the Committee may desire to ask us concerning our statement. If we can be helpful in any other way concerning this most important legislation, we shall be happy to cooperate to the best of our ability.

Again, thank you.

EXHIBIT A

GOVERNMENT-OWNED CORPORATIONS*

Federal Intermediate Credit Banks (established 1923): Formerly entirely Government-owned, these are now owned in part by production credit associations and other financing institutions. The twelve banks comprising the system make loans to, and discount agricultural paper for, production credit associations, State and national banks, agricultural credit corporations, livestock loan companies, and similar lending groups.

Banks for Cooperatives (1933): Established to provide a permanent source of credit on a sound business basis to farmer cooperatives, twelve district banks lend to cooperatives. These presently own all capital stock in six of the banks and are purchasing stock in others. As their investment grows, Government-owned capital will be repaid.

Commodity Credit Corporation (1933): Capitalized at $100 million, CCC finances price support and production stabilization programs. To encourage production adjustments and maintain farm income, payments are made for diverting cropland from production of stipulated commodities to conserving uses. Commodities acquired under price support programs are disposed of through domestic and export sales, transfers to other Government agencies, and donations for domestic and foreign welfare use (including the Food For Peace Program).

Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (1933): Designed to insure the deposits of all banks eligible to become insured under the law, FDIC functions to prevent loss to depositors of insured banks, up to the insured limit, and to prevent the development or continuance of unsafe or unsound bank practices or violations of law.

Tennessee Valley Authority (1933): TVA built and operates a series of dams on the Tennessee River and its larger tributaries which are harnessed to produce electricity which is sold wholesale to some 160 local electric systems. It also maintains a continuous 9-foot draft channel for navigation for the 650-mile length of the Tennessee River main stream, and provides services and facilities for outdoor recreation areas.

Federal Prison Industries (1934): Established to provide employment for all physically fit inmates of Federal penal institutions.

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (1934): Established to insure the safety of savings up to $15,000 for each investor's account in Federal savings and loan associations and State-chartered associations and cooperative banks which apply and are approved.

Export-Import Bank of the United States (1935): Operates to aid in financing and facilitating exports and imports and the exchange of commodities between the U. S. and any foreign country or its nationals or agencies.

United States Housing Authority (1937): A complex of individual Federal housing corporations created "to assist States in remedying unsafe and unsanitary housing conditions and acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low incomes."

Federal Crop Insurance Corporation (1938): Charging variable premium rates in various parts of the country to participating farmers, the Corporation provides indemnity against losses due to crop failures (from weather, insects, disease, etc.) up to 75 per cent of the average yield.

Federal National Mortgage Association (1948): Performs, through the medium of two corporate structures, the following program functions for the Department of HUD: provision of supplementary assistance to the secondary market for insured and guaranteed mortgages, provision of special assistance in financing eligible types of federally underwritten mortgages, and management and liquidation of the portfolio of mortgages held by FNMA under the enabling act, including management of the Government Mortgage Liquidation Trust, Small Business Obligations Trust, Federal Assets Liquidation Trust, and Federal Assets Financing Trust.

Panama Canal Company (1948): The Panama Canal Company, known as the Panama Railroad Company prior to July 1, 1951, was reincorporated by the act of June 29, 1948, as an agency and instrumentality of the United States, for the purpose of maintaining and operating the Panama Canal and of conducting business operations incident to such activities and incident to the civil government of the Canal Zone. The company now maintains and operates the Panama Canal and facilities related to the Canal, including a railroad; the cargo docks and piers and harbor terminal facilities; an oil handling plant; commissary stores, including cold storage plants; electric power, water, and telephone systems; procurement and storehouse facilities; motor transportation services; a printing plant; restaurants, theaters, bowling alleys, and miscellaneous merchandising activities; marine and general repair shops; and an employees' housing system.

Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation (1954): Established to consummate arrangements with its Canadian counterpart relative to construction and operation of the Seaway, to finance the U. S. share of the Seaway cost on a self-liquidating basis, to negotiate with Canada for an agreement on tolls, and to encourage the development of traffic and maximum utilization of the Seaway.

*CONGRESSIONAL DIGEST; Washington, D. C.; March 1969

Postal & Clerk

NOVEMBER, 1969

Still Trying to Complete the Menu...!

United Federation of Postal Clerks, AFL-CIO

FEDERATION BUILDING, 817 14TH STREET, N.W., WASHINGTON 5, D. C.

December 5, 1969

Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emory:

Enclosed are some materials on the subject of postal reform. But a whole file you didn't expect!

The basic item is the UFPC testimony before the House committee (Post Office and Civil Service) on July 29, which was printed in the August issue of our publication. Xerox copies of the relevant pages are enclosed. (At the hearing I sat to the right of Legislative Director Nilan, but was "cropped" from the photo for publication. Such is the life of the non-political animal!)

The enclosed statement made before the Senate committee is nearly identical to the one made before the House, except for the introduction and closing.

Any comments you may have to make I'd be pleased to read.

I enjoyed the visit I had with you at the Local 189 Winter Meeting here in Washington the weekend of November 21, and look forward to the next time we may chance to meet.

Best wishes and personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

Walt

Walter Froh
Staff Economist and Industrial Engineer

WF/fmf
Enclosures

December 9, 1969

Mr. Walter Froh
Staff Economist and
Industrial Engineer
United Federation of Postal Clerks, AFL-CIO
Federation Building, 817 14th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Walt:

I too enjoyed getting to see you again in Washington.

Thanks for sending the materials on the United Federation of Postal Clerks position on various matters of "postal reform." I have not had a chance to look at them yet.

Under separate cover I will send you a few of our publications in case they prove to be of interest to you personally and organizationally.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV/km

1971 Series

Explore both sides of today's explosive issues in management-employee relations in
PUBLIC EMPLOYEE RELATIONS LIBRARY

Authoritative, practical information
on labor relations for management and employee representatives

Public Personnel Association
1313 East 60th Street · Chicago, Illinois 60637

communication consultation negotiation

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE RELATIONS LIBRARY

PERL gives you continuing professional coverage of a critical public service

Employee organizations in the public service—federal, state, and municipal—are the fastest growing unions in the United States. Their influence is prodigious, presenting to the public service a whole new set of problems and possibilities that must be resolved to the benefit of both employees and the public they serve. For the background needed to think and act responsibly in this area, government managers and employee representatives alike turn to the Public Employee Relations Library. There is no comparable source.

The PERL Plan

PERL, a service of the Public Personnel Association, solicits, publishes, and distributes studies and factual reports on all aspects of employee-management relations in government. Books are prepared on assignment on topics chosen by the Association for timeliness and relevance.

PERL subscribers sign up annually for the year's issues, which come to them postpaid, right off press. Other PERL readers with specialized interests within the field buy specific issues from the Library.

The PERL Content

Case studies and contracts, policies and theories, procedures and techniques make the Library both practical and thought provoking. PERL presents the findings and the views of experts in the field—including representatives of employee organizations—on a wide range of topics important in labor-management relations. A number of studies are devoted to bargaining: preliminaries, procedures, laws, implementation of agreements. Others explore grievance procedures, strikes, labor contracts, benefit costs, management training for labor relations. Some studies focus on particular labor groups—teachers, policemen, firemen, municipal employees—or particular levels of public service in the United States, Canada, or another country.

Selected bibliographies in each book draw together related writings on the topic under discussion.

The PERL Look

Each book, paperbound, 8½″ x 11″, is identified on the cover as a PERL issue, numbered, and punched for insertion in a standard three-ring binder. Books, typeset and printed on quality stock, have been designed for convenience and attractiveness. Pages are uncrowded and easy on the eyes, with wide margins for note-taking. Each study is short enough to be read in one sitting.

e area—government-employee relations

PERL Extras

A special binder stamped with the PERL cover design is supplied with each year's subscription or with an order for five or more individual issues. A cumulative index is issued periodically to subscribers.

New Low Prices

You can acquire all PERL issues, 1—30, at substantial savings. See the other side for a complete list of studies with prices.

Bonus for Subscribers

PERL subscribers can also purchase other PPA books on labor relations at a 30 percent discount. The order form, on the reverse, carries a list of books and prices.

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE RELATIONS LIBR
THE ANATOMY OF A COMPREHENSIVE EMPLOYEE RELATIONS PROGRAM
PUBLIC PERSONNEL ASSOCIATION
PEOPLE
PHILOSOPHY RELATIONS PUBLIC SERVICE

PERL PUBLIC EMPLOYEE RELATIONS LIBRARY

Now you can purchase all 30 issues described below for $125—a savings of $100 over the per-copy price. Or choose any 5 iss

1. Rethinking the Philosophy of Employee Relations in the Public Service by Frank P. Zeidler and others. Discusses the need for a new and realistic view of employee relations in the public service, cites Canadian experience, and gives advice on stabilizing union-management relations. SBN 87373-100-X

2. Handling Employee Grievances, Robert E. Holmes, Editor. Covers the causes and prevention of grievances, legal aspects of handling grievances, mediation and arbitration procedures, and ways to secure acceptance of grievance procedures. SBN 87373-101-8

3. The How-to of Collective Bargaining by Paul M. Berthoud and others. Gives advice on preparing for collective bargaining, tells management how to conduct itself at the bargaining table, discusses the importance of communications in collective bargaining and the solution of impasses. SBN 87373-102-6

4. Pioneer Collective Bargaining Laws for Public Employees, Richard L. Salik, Editor. Provides summaries and texts of collective bargaining laws in Connecticut (both teachers and municipal employees), Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, and Wisconsin (both municipal and state employee acts). SBN 87373-103-4

5. When School Districts Bargain by Myron Lieberman and Thomas H. Patten. Describes developments in the teacher collective bargaining field and presents a case study of a training program in collective bargaining for school administrators. Includes texts of several teacher-bargaining statutes and a teacher contract from a large public school system. SBN 87373-104-2

6. Canadian Trailblazer: The New Collective Bargaining Law by B. V. H. Schneider. Describes important features of the collective bargaining law for Canadian federal employees and provides the complete text of the law. SBN 87373-105-0

7. Strikes and Solutions by Eric Polisar. Discusses the right of public employees to strike, covering such subjects as sovereignty and provision of essential services, with special reference to experience in New York State under the "Taylor Law." Includes texts of statutory strike prohibitions from the various states. SBN 87373-106-9

8. Labor Contract Clauses by Mary L. Hennessy. Illustrates subjects frequently covered in public employee contracts, styles of writing, and commonly used phrases from contracts covering various kinds of employees. Cautions in drafting contract language are included. SBN 87373-107-7

9. Counseling Employees by Jack H. Pockrass. Discusses the importance of having a counseling program for employees, describes the relationship between counseling and communications, and summarizes counseling methods and media. SBN 87373-108-5

10. The Right to Meet and Confer—Laws and Policies, Richard L. Salik, Editor. Provides summaries and texts of laws mandating the meet-and-confer approach to employee relations and evaluates experience with those laws. Texts of laws and policies from California, Michigan, Minnesota, and Hawaii are included. SBN 87373-109-3

11. The Anatomy of a Comprehensive Employee Relations Program by Lew Fay. Discusses the entire range of activities involved in a comprehensive employee-relations program and provides suggestions for improving the program. SBN 87373-111-5

12. Upgrading the Supervisor's Labor Relations Skills by Kenneth G. Nachreiner and G. Thomas Bull. Describes the content of a training course in labor relations for the first-line supervisor and gives examples of materials that can be used in the training program. SBN 87373-112-3

13. Drafting the Public Sector Labor Agreement by R. Theodore Clark, Jr. Provides an analysis of a typical union contract in the public sector showing what are the desirable and undesirable features of the various provisions. Also contains a general discussion on drafting the labor agreement. SBN 87373-113-1

14. Making the Collective Bargaining Agreement Work by Robert D. Krause and others. Presents case histories of the administration of collective bargaining agreements in Hartford, Connecticut, Vancouver, British Columbia, and a federal installation. Points out lessons that have been learned. SBN 87373-114-X

15. Employee Relations in the Academic Setting by James A. Craft and others. Contains essays discussing the role of the principal in negotiations, the internal dynamics of local education associations, and dilemmas relating to sovereignty and the delegation of power. SBN 87373-115-8

16. Getting Ready to Bargain by Foster B. Roser and others. Discusses the importance of a well-organized personnel program to successful collective bargaining, the need for expertise in all phases of the bargaining process, the importance of keeping the public informed, and other matters. SBN 87373-116-6

17. A New Challenge: The Disadvantaged by Margaret Bush Wilson and others. Discusses the problem of employing the disadvantaged with respect to such matters as need for personnel policy changes, the public policy issues involved, restructuring of jobs, and the need for establishing good relationships with the public and with other employees. SBN 87373-117-4

18. Police Collective Bargaining by M. W. Aussieker, Jr. Gives a history of police collective bargaining, discusses the reasons why policemen join unions, describes the various unions active among the police, and points out some structural questions in police collective bargaining. SBN 87373-118-2

19. Pricing Employee Benefits by Robert W. and Barbara Brattin Coppock and others. Shows how to compute employee benefit costs and points out the need for making comparisons with other employers. Also discusses the importance of showing employees what benefits cost and the importance of benefit-cost studies for management decision-making. SBN 87373-119-0

20. Six Strike Stories, Keith Ocheltree, Editor. Presents case studies of six public employee strikes, with commentary pointing out the lessons to be learned from each case. A general essay on public employee strikes is also included. SBN 87373-120-4 ues for $25 and save $12.50.

21. Public Personnel Administration: Critique and Credo by Robert W. Galloway. Discusses the public personnel function in terms of its various clienteles and the forces with which it has to deal; considers its role as a part of the overall management function; stresses the need for the personnel operation to relate itself to the goals of the organizations. SBN 87373-121-2

22. Behavioral Science Approaches to Employee Relations by William B. Eddy, James V. Spotts, and others. Presents groups of studies illustrating behavioral science views of conflict situations and possible approaches to the management of conflict in labor relations. SBN 87373-122-0

23. New Roles for Public Officials in Labor Relations by Frank P. Zeidler. Presents a concise statement of the roles to be played by public officials as they discharge their new responsibilities in labor relations. Designed to help legislators and administrators clarify their thinking. SBN 87373-123-9

24. The Common Law of the Shop by Robert G. Polasek. Demonstrates how the use of a single umpire to settle grievances has resulted in the emergence of a uniform approach to problems—a common law of the work place. SBN 87373-124-7

25. Negotiated Grievance Procedures in Public Employment by James P. Begin and Joseph C. Ullman. Results of a study of grievance procedures established as a result of collective negotiation between public employee unions and public employers. SBN 87373-125-5

26. The Union View of Public Management's Responsibility in Collective Bargaining by C. A. Edwards and others. Presents the answers of seven prominent union and association officials to important questions in public employee labor relations, including management rights, role of the legislature, appropriateness of the lockout, role of the civil service commission. SBN 87373-126-3

27. Collective Public Employee Relations in Australia by Milton Derber. Examines important aspects of public employee negotiation as practiced in Australia, with particular reference to the system of arbitration developed there. Focuses on eight major questions in public employee collective bargaining. SBN 87373-127-1

28. New Horizons in Public Employee Bargaining by C. S. J. McKelvey and others. Discusses new approaches to bargaining in the public service, including multi-employer bargaining and organizational development (OD); presents a case study of an attempt at multi-employer bargaining. SBN 87373-128-X

29. Fact Finding in the Public Sector—A Case Study by Wayne F. Anderson, R. Theodore Clark, Jr., and John T. Weise. A case study involving firemen's pay. Provides a discussion of the important issues; includes exhibits furnished by both sides, post-hearing briefs of the two sides, and the findings and recommendations of the board. SBN 87373-129-8

30. Labor Relations Source Book by Richard V. Solano. A guide to sources of information helpful to those involved in public employee labor relations, including local, statewide, and national groups. SBN 87373-130-1

Subscribe now to the

1971 Series

In preparation for publication in 1971 are important studies on:

the effect of collective bargaining on the merit system policy for public management-employee relations day-to-day management-employee organization relationships role of the regulatory agency in public employee collective bargaining public employee bargaining overseas

ORDER FORM

To Public Personnel Association • 1313 East 60th Street • Chicago, Illinois 60637

☐ Yes, send the 1971 PERL subscription series, five issues, Nos. 31–35, at $30.00.

To Subscribers of Nos. 31–35: Any additional issues of PERL published before December 31, 1971, will be sent automatically and billed at $6.00 per copy. Regular per-copy price is $7.50.

☐ Thirty issues Send all the PERL issues 1–30 at the special low price of $125.00.

☐ Five issues Of the 1–30 issues of PERL send the following five issues specially priced at $25.00: No. ___ No. ___ No. ___ No. ___ No. ___

☐ Fewer than five issues Send individual issues of PERL at $7.50 each: No. ___ No. ___ No. ___ No. ___

Other Public Personnel Association Publications on Labor Relations

A 30% discount is allowed to PERL subscribers.
Additional discounts for quantities: 2 copies, no discount; 3-5 copies, 5%; 6 or more copies, 10%.

	Quantity	List Price	PERL Subscriber Price
Coping with Public Employee Strikes 1970		$ 6.95	$4.87
Management-Employee Relations in the Public Service 1969		11.95	8.37
Public Management at the Bargaining Table 1967		11.95	8.37
Questions & Answers on Public Employee Negotiation 1967		8.95	6.27
Collective Bargaining in the Public Service: Theory and Practice 1967		7.00	4.90
Task Force Report on State and Local Government Labor Relations 1967		5.00	3.50
1970 Supplement to Task Force Report		5.50	3.85
1969 Supplement to Task Force Report		3.50	2.45
1968 Supplement to Task Force Report		3.00	2.10
A Digest of Provincial Labor Laws Governing Provincial and Municipal Employees in Canada 1966		6.00	4.20

Send to

Total amount of order: $

Name and title

Organization

Street address

Room no.

City

State or Province

Zip code

☐ I am a PERL Subscriber. ☐ Bill me. ☐ Bill my organization. Purchase Order No. _____

QUALIFIED EXPERTS CITE THESE FLAWS IN A POSTAL CORPORATION . . .

"If the corporation were established, as proposed, on a rigid break-even basis, with participation by Congress in the rate-making process diluted almost to the vanishing point, and with the proposed bond issue authority, the result would be that rates for all classes of mail would have to go up as much as 100%. We have seen what has happened to the parcel post system as the result of giving rate-making power to the Executive Branch rather than to Congress . . . the whole system is on the verge of being wrecked."

—J. Edward Day, Postmaster General of the United States, 1961-1963

"The philosophy of the Administration is that the postal service is not sufficiently governmental for postal employes to continue to have all the rights and protections of government employes, but that it is sufficiently governmental for postal workers to continue subject to most of the restrictions and disabilities of government employes. They are, to some extent, to have the worst of both worlds."

—George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO and a member of the Kappel Commission

"The (bargaining) procedure that would be established through a Disputes Panel clearly denies the postal worker and his union the right to demand binding arbitration as a matter of right. In short, the worker is denied an ultimate weapon in those cases when collective bargaining, mediation and fact-finding fail to provide an answer to dispute.

—John A. Gronouski, Postmaster General of the United States, 1963-1965

"Not one of the existing Government-owned corporations is like the proposed postal corporation in terms of its missions, activities, jurisdiction or type of management structure. There is just nothing like it as a precedent. A postal corporation would be new, untried, experimental. There is no valid analogy for it. And what works for TWA or even General Motors may very well not work for the postal service with its long history of service to the American people as a priority performed within a Federal department structure controlled by Congress."

—Francis S. Filbey, President, the United Federation of Postal Clerks

THE
UNITED FEDERATION
OF
POSTAL CLERKS
AFL-CIO

PLACE
STAMP
HERE

TO NATIONAL POSTAL FORUM III

The United Federation of Postal Clerks requested the privilege of participating in the question and answer panel on the Postal Reform Act. Inasmuch as this request was denied by the Post Office Department, we must use this means of advising you of our viewpoint on this most important matter.

Senator Ralph Yarborough from Texas has stated:

"I NEVER SAW AS MANY BUGS UNDER ONE PILE OF CHIPS AS IN THE CORPORATION DEAL!!!"

HERE ARE A FEW POSTAL CORPORATION BUGS!

SOME YOU CAN SEE . . . SOME YOU CAN'T SEE . . . SOME ARE BURIED IN THE WOODWORK BUT THEY WILL ALL WORK THEIR WAY OUT IF THE POSTAL CORPORATION BILL IS PASSED!!!

"PROFIT BUG"

Historically, the Post Office has provided SERVICE to the American People and in this it has been a SUCCESS!! Profits should no more be expected than from the Defense Department. Presently the Post Office also does a service by hiring many handicapped and retarded . . . if the goal is to be to make a profit who will fill this void??? Or will a corporation simply go to Congress and request special appropriations.

***** ***** *****

"WAGE BUG"

The Corporation plan states that employees will be able to BARGAIN for wage increases under that plan. Take a look at what has been the attitude of the people with whom employee unions would be bargaining. INVARIABLY POST OFFICE DEPT. OFFICIALS have testified before Congress AGAINST pay increases for rank and file postal employees. THEIR ATTITUDE IS ON RECORD! What justice could employees expect if they were at the mercy of Corporation officials (without the right to strike) and could not petition Congress????

***** ***** *****

"EFFICIENCY BUG"

The assumption that a corporation would automatically succeed is not necessarily so. If the public is to be given the kinds of service it has been given in the past at reasonable rates, there is absolutely no guarantee that it could be an economic success . . . once a corporation were established, it would be difficult, if not totally impossible, to retreat back to the postal service as we know it.

***** ***** *****

"ARBITRATION BUG"

The corporation plan does not give unilateral access to compulsory arbitration nor is there the availability of a strike as the last resort mechanism for equalizing the bargaining power of labor with that of management. HR 4, with an amendment to substitute HR 4803 for Title VII, could do far more to establish meaningful labor-management relations under the present organization.

***** ***** *****

"SEMANTICS BUG"

Employees have been told they will keep all of their present benefits and "go upwards from there". HOWEVER, what the bill says if one reads it is that all retirement benefits, pay, leave and other rights will be carried over into the Postal Service "until changed by the Postal Service". What kind of a guarantee would this be?????

***** ***** *****

"RATES BUG"

No doubt this bug will grow bigger and bigger!!!!! If the corporation is to show a profit in five years this money can come from only one place . . . an increase in the rates the patrons pay for services. This bug will GROW!!!!!!

***** ***** *****

"TVA BUG"

A favorite comparison by proponents of the plan is to say the Postal Service will be "like TVA". This is completely invalid. . . . TVA has less than 20,000 employees with an investment of $147,000 per employee while the Post Office has 725,000 employees with $1620 fixed assets per employee.

***** ***** *****

A CORPORATION IS NOT A PANACEA FOR THE POST OFFICE ILLS . . . REFORM CAN AND SHOULD BE ACCOMPLISHED BY PASSAGE OF HR 4 WITH AMENDMENTS!!!!!

Christopher

October 28, 1965

Mr. Paul R. Christopher
Regional Director
AFL-CIO
216 Flatiron Building
Knoxville, Tennessee

Dear Paul:

It was a real pleasure to see you in Atlanta recently. I am still intrigued by your suggestion of a training program for persons interested in eaching stewards and would like to pursue this matter further.

How many people, realistically, could we anticipate having in such a program? It would be good to have about twenty, but I would think that any number over ten -- of people really likely to carry through -- would justify the time and energy it would take. I would like to see the materials which you have developed and, of course, I have a number of my own.

What level of participant would you expect in the group? Union staff? Local union officers? Education chairmen for locals? How many hours of instruction should we allow for? As many as twenty or more? Could people meet for a period of a week either half days or evenings or would we need to meet over a series of weekends? Could we charge a modest fee to cover out-of-pocket expenses? Who would be the official sponsor of the group? Would it be just an informal group of locals, or staff men, or would the central body be interested?

The basic instructional program of materials and teachers could be worked out here. I would need assistance, however, on local arrangements -- meeting place, projector, notices, etc. We would have to determine who could absorb the cost of these items as well.

I would be happy to see some such program started prior to Christmas if that is possible. If not my own schedule is such that it should wait until sometime in February.

Paul, if you feel we have enough to chew on and that some of the answers are available, I could come into Knoxville between now and the SRC annual meeting to do the spade work with you and others you suggest on getting a program started.

Let me hear from you as soon as you can. Perhaps a phone call would make it possible to pin down a date.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:js

May 9, 1966

Mr. Paul R. Christopher
Regional Director, AFL-CIO
216 Flatiron Building
Knoxville, Tennessee

Dear Paul:

I attempted to reach R. E. Shadix, Southeast Regional Director, The Building and Construction Trades Department, AFL-CIO, to offer my services for his conference on May 11-12 as you requested. Due to both of our travel schedules, I was unable to talk with him personally but I left a long message with his wife which I hope he will be able to understand.

Since I have not heard from him I gather that it is uncomfortable for him to make use of a third party. I do wish I could have had personal contact with him because I would be more than happy to offer my assistance even in the matter of the mechanics of setting up his program.

Please feel free to pass on other such suggestions where you think I might be of assistance.

Best personal wishes.

Sincerely,

EFV

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

REGION NO. 8. PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER. DIRECTOR
216 FLATIRON BUILDING
705 BROADWAY, N. E.
KNOXVILLE 17, TENNESSEE
524-7481-2

May 10, 1966

Dr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

Thanks very much for your letter of May 9, explaining your difficulty in complying with my request that you contact Mr. R. E. Shadix, Southeastern Regional Director of the Building and Construction Trades Department of AFL-CIO, to offer your services in helping make plans for the then scheduled conference on May 11-12, 1966.

You may be at ease. The conference was postponed.

I had talked to Bob Shadix by telephone several weeks ago about this conference and he was anxious to arrange an interesting and really worthwhile program. I discussed the idea of some workshops, with the entire delegation being broken down and assigned to smaller groups, with reporters, on some basic problems related to organizing, NLRB procedures, public relations, relationships with the various U. S. Department of Labor agencies and enforcement of Davis-Bacon, relations with industrial type labor organizations, participation in the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee program, COPE, etc.

Before this conference is re-scheduled, I am sure I will have talked to Bob again, and will have him get in touch with you. I hope you can help him set up a better program than is usually the case with our Building Trades affiliates. There is a vast organizing job to be done in the southern states, even if we talk only of heavy commercial construction. There is practically no organization in the residential construction industry. The Building Trades in too many metropolitan centers are inclined to be isolationists within the labor movement and there needs to be some educational work of the most elemental nature.

Sincerely,

Paul

Paul R. Christopher
AFL-CIO Region VIII Director

PRC:lr
oeiu 144 afl-cio
CC: Wm. L. Kircher, R. E. Shadix,
L. F. Shipman, Carey E. Haigler

Address list work TR Source of info

Please have Emory via telephone & notify of contact

R.E. Shadix (See letter to Christopher 5/6/66)
Southeastern Regional Director
Building & Construction Trades Dept. AFL-CIO
3160 Lake Ave
Hapeville, Ga. Phone 766-9410

and offer to assist in planning needed workshops in a south-wide conference in Atlanta on May 11-12 of Building Trades Unions.

—

Shadix phoned me for this kind of help and I don't have the time to do more than orally advise by long distance.

Emory should tell Shadix that I recommended this gesture. Shadix is an O.K. guy, but knows virtually nothing about setting up a 2-day conference which incorporates work-shops, reporters, general follow-up discussions, etc.

—

We need the support of Building Trades Unions and I can't imagine a better opportunity to reach ~~[illegible]~~ some of our most reactionary union leaders.

Paul

X 363

Assoc. Dean of School Bus Ateri

13 September 1966

Mr. Paul Christopher, Director
Region VIII, AFL-CIO
216 Flatiron Building
705 Broadway, N.E.
Knoxville, Tennessee

Dear Paul:

In the rush of yesterday's meeting I should have checked my calendar. I forgot completely that I will be going to Mobile in the early afternoon on Friday, September 16. The development committee's meeting will be in SRC's office and will begin at 10 informally and 11 o'clock formally.

Were you planning to come into town early? If so would it be convenient for you to meet Al and me at 9:00? Is there any chance that you will be on Thursday evening?

I am sorry for the slip, but please let me know what you would like to do.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
LaborPProgram

EFV:jb

Air Mail

Special Delivery

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

GEORGE MEANY
PRESIDENT

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
SECRETARY-TREASURER

REGION NO. 8. PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, DIRECTOR
216 FLATIRON BUILDING
705 BROADWAY, N. E.
KNOXVILLE 17, TENNESSEE
524-7481-2

14 September 1966

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

What you say in your letter of September 13, which came this morning via air mail special delivery, is appreciated. I have done the same thing - make commitments before consulting my calendar and then find that I can't do what I thought I could do.

I am sorry my schedule is so tight that I cannot come down to Atlanta tomorrow night, but I have an 8:00 P.M. meeting which will last until 10:00 o'clock, and this is too late to get a plane down tomorrow night. Right now I am on the waiting list for a seat on the morning Delta flight to Atlanta, and may have to drive if confirmation does not come through by tomorrow night. The plane would get me to the office about 10:00 A.M. Friday, and if I leave Knoxville by car around 6:00 A.M. it will be about 10:30 before I can get into the office.

So it looks like we had better not count on getting together Friday. When you mention Mobile in your letter I can't help but think that I would have known had you mentioned it Monday, because I knew from Barney Weeks' newsletter that you were among the instructors booked for his weekend institute there, which starts Friday night.

Tell Al Kehrer hello for me and by your word he will know I had hoped to get a chance to talk with him. Maybe we can do it no earlier, but I shall look forward to being with both of you at the annual meeting in November.

Sincerely,

Paul

Paul R. Christopher
Director, Region VIII, AFL-CIO

PRC:me